that if I might by one only word subuert the errorres of all heretickes, I would not refuse to enter into what peril or bāger soeuer it were.* When his bookes were condēned, he said: wherefore haue you cōdemned those books, when as you haue not proued by any one Article, that they are cōtrary to the scriptures or Articles of faith? And moreouer, what iniury is this y^t you do to me, that you haue cōdēned these bookes written in the Bohemian tounge, which you neuer saw, neither yet read? And oftētimes looking vp vnto heauē, he prayed.

Whē the sentence and iudgement was ended,* kneeling downe vpon his knees, he said: Lord Iesu Christ, forgeue mine enimies, by whome thou knowest that I am falsely accused, and that they haue vsed false witnes and slanders against me: forgeue them I say, for thy great mercies sake. This his praier and oration the greater part, and specially the chiefe of the Priests did deride and mocke.

At the last,* the seuen Bishops which were chosen out to disgrace him of his priesthood, commanded him to put on the garments pertaining vnto priesthood, which thyng when he had done, vntill he came to the putting on of the Albe, he called to his remembraunce the white vesture which Herode put vpon Iesus Christ to mock him withall. So likewise in al other things he did comfort himselfe by the example of Christ. When he had now put on all his priestly vestures, the Bishops exhorted him that he should yet alter and change his minde and purpose, and prouide for his honour and safegard. Then he (according as y^e maner of the ceremony is) going vp to the top of the scaffold, being full of teares, hee spake vnto the people in this sort.

These Lords and Bishops do exhort and counsell mee, that I should heere confesse before you all that I haue erred, the which thing to do, if it were such as might be done with the infamy and reproch of anye man, they might peraduenture easily perswade me therunto: but now truly I am in the sight of the lord my God, without whose great ignominy, and grudge of mine owne conscience, I can by no meanes do that which they require of mee. For I doo well knowe,* that I neuer taught any of those thinges which they haue falsly alledged against mee, but I haue alwayes preached, taught, written, and thought contrary thereunto. With what countenance then should I behold the heauens? with what face should I looke vpon them, whome I haue taught, where of there is a great number, if thorough me it should come to passe that those things which they haue hetherto knowne to bee most certaine and sure, should now be made vncertaine? Should I by this my example astonish or trouble so manye soules, so manye consciences, endewed with the most firme and certaine knowledge of the Scriptures, and Gospell of our Lord Iesu Christ and his most pure doctrine, armed against all the assaults of Satan? I will neuer do it, neither commit any such kinde of offence, that I shoulde seeme more to esteeme this vile carcas appoynted vnto death, then their health and saluation. At this most godly worde he was forced againe to heare by the consent of the Bishops, that hee did obstinately and maliciously perseuere in his pernicious and wicked errorres.

Then he was commanded to come downe to the execution of his iudgement, and in his comming downe, one of the seauen Bishops afore rehearsed, firste tooke awaye the chalice from him which he helde in his hand,* saieng: O cursed Iudas, why hast thou forsakē the counsell & waies of peace, and hast counsailed with the Iewes? we take away frō thee this chalice of thy saluation. But Iohn Hus receiued this curse in this maner: but I trust vnto God the father omnipotent, and my Lorde Iesus Christ, for whose sake I do suffer these things, that hee will not take away the chalice of his redemption, but haue a stedfast and firme hope that this day I shall drinke thereof in his kingdome. Then followed the other Bishops in order, which euery one of them tooke away the vestiments from him, which they had put on, eche one of them geuing hym their curse. Whereunto Iohn Hus answered, that hee did willingly embrace and beare those blasphemies for the name of the Lord Iesus Christ. At the last they came to the rasing of his shauen crowne. But before the Bishops would go in hand with it, there was a great contention betweene them, with what instrument it should be done, with a rasour, or with a paire of sheares.

In the meane season,* Iohn Hus turning himselfe toward the Emperour, saide: I maruell that forsomuch as they be all of like cruell minde and stomacke, yet they can not agree vpon their kinde of crueltie. Notwithstanding, at the last they agreed to cut off the skinne of the crowne of his head with a paire of sheares. And when they had done that, they added these words: now hath the Church Page 624 taken away all her ornaments and priuilegies from hym. Now there resteth nothing else, but that he be deliuered ouer vnto the secular power. But before they did that, there yet remained another knacke of reproch. For they caused to be made a certaine crowne of paper,* almost a cubite deepe, in the which were painted three deuils of wonderfull ougly shape, and this title set ouer their heads, Heresiarcha. The which when he saw, he sayde: My Lord Iesus Christ for my sake did weare a crowne of thorne: why should not I then for his sake againe weare thys light crowne, be it neuer so ignominious? Truly I will do it, and that willingly. When it was set vpon his head, the Bishops saide: now we commit thy soule vnto the deuill.* But I, sayde Iohn Husse (lifting his eies vp towards the heauens) doo commit my spirite into thy handes: O Lord Iesu Christ, vnto thee I commend my spirit which thou hast redeemed. These contumelious opprobries thus ended, the Bishops turning themselues towards the Emperour, said: This most sacred Synode of Constance, leaueth now Iohn Husse, which hath no more any office, or to do in the Church of God, vnto the ciuill iudgement and power. Then the Emperour commaunded Lodouicus Duke of Bauaria, which stode before him in his robes, holding the golden apple with the crosse in his hande, that he should receiue Iohn Husse of the Byshops, and deliuer him vnto them which should do the execution. By whome, as hee was led to the place of execution, before the Church doores hee sawe his bookes burning, whereat hee smiled and laughed. And all men that he passed by,* he exhorted, not to thinke that he should dye for any error or heresie, but only for the hatred and ill will of his aduersaries, which had charged him wyth most false and vniust crime. All the whole Citie in a maner being in armour, followed him.

The place appointed for the execution, was before the gate Gorlebian, betweene the gardens and the gates of the suburbs. When as Iohn Husse was come thether, kneeling downe vpon his knees, and lifting his •ies vp vnto heauen, he praied, and saide certaine Psalmes, and specially the 50. and 31. Psalmes. And they which stode by, heard him oftentimes in his praier, with a merrie and chearefull countenance repeate this vers• Into thy hands, O Lord,* I commend my spirit, &c. Which th•g when the lay people beheld which stood next vnto him, they said: what he hath done afore, wee knowe not, but now wee see and heare that hee doth speake and pray very deuoutely and godly. Othersome wished that he had a Confessor. There was a certaine Priest by, sitting on horsebacke in a greene gowne drawne about with red silke, which said, he ought not to be heard,* because he is an hereticke. Yet notwithstanding whilest he was in prison, he was both confessed, and also absolved by a certaine Doctour, a Monke, as Hus himselfe doth witnes in a certaine Epistle which he wrote vnto his frendes out of prison.* Thus Christ raigneth vnknowne vnto the world, euen in y^e middest of his enimies. In the meane time whilest he praied, as he bowed his necke backward to looke vppward vnto heauen, the crowne of paper fell off from his head vpon the ground. Then one of the souldiours taking it vp againe, said: let vs put it againe vpon his head, that he may bee burned with his maisters the diuels whome he hath serued.

When as by the commandement of the tormentours, he was risen vp frō the place of his praier, with a loud voice he saide: Lord Iesu Christ assist and help me, that with a constant and pacient mind, by thy most gracious helpe, I may beare & suffer this cruel & ignominious death, wherunto I am condemned for the preaching of thy most holie Gospel and word. Then as before, he declared the cause of his death vnto the people. In y^e meane season the hangmā stripped him of his garments, and turning his hands behinde his backe, tied him fast vnto the stake with ropes that were made wet.* And where as by chance he was turned towards the East, certain cried out that he should not looke towards the East, for he was an heretick: so he was turned towards the West. Then was his necke tied with a chaine vnto the stake, the which chaine when he beheld, smiling he said, that he woulde willingly receiue the same chaine for Iesu Christes sake, whom he knew was bound with a farre worse chaine. Under his feete they set two fagots, admixing straw withall, and so likewise frō the feete vp to the chin, he was inclosed in rounde aboute with wood.* But before the wood was set on fire, Lodouicus Duke of Bauaria, with another Gentleman with hym, whiche was the sonne of Clement, came and exhorted Iohn Hus, that he would yet be mindfull of his safegard, and renounce his errours. To whome he saide, what errour should I renounce, when as I knowe my selfe giltye of none? For, as for those things which are falsly alledged agaynst mee, I knowe that I neuer did so much as once thinke them, much lesse preach them. For thys Page 625 was the principall ende and purpose of my doctrine, that I might teach all men penaunce and remission of sinnes,* according to the verity of the Gospel of Iesus Christ, and the exposition of the holy Doctours: wherefore wyth a chearefull minde and courage I am heere ready to suffer death. When he had spoken these words, they left him, and shaking hands together they departed.

Then was the fire kindled, and Iohn Hus began to sing with a loud voice, Iesu Christ the sonne of the liuing God haue mercy vpon me. And when he began to say the same the third time, the winde droue the flame so vpon his face, that it choked him. Yet notwithstanding he mooued a while after, by the space that a man might almost say three times the Lordes prayer. When all the wood was burned and consumed, the vpper parte of the body was left hanging in the chaine, the which they throwe downe stake and all, and making a newe fire burned it, the heade being first cut in small gobbets, that it might the sooner be consumed vnto ashes. The heart, which was founde amongst the bowels,* being well beaten with stauies and clubbes, was at last pricked vppon a sharpe sticke, and roasted at a fire a parte vntill it was consumed. Then with great diligence gathering the ashes together, they cast them into the riuer of Rhene, that the least remnaunt of the ashes of that man shoulde not be left vppon the earth, whose memorie notwythstanding can not be abolished out of the minds of the godly, neither by fire, neither by water, neither by anye kinde of torment.

I know very well that these things are very ••lenderly wrytten of me as touching the labours of thys most holy Martyr Iohn Hus,* with whome the labors of Hercules are not to be compared. For that auncient Hercules slew a few monsters: but this our Hercules with a moste stout and valiant courage hath subdued euen the worlde it selfe, the mother of all monsters and cruell beastes. Thys story were worthy some other kind of more curious handling, but for so muche as I cannot otherwise perfourme it my selfe, I haue endeouored according to the ve•y truth, as the thing was in deede, to commend tho same vnto al godly mindes: neither haue I heard it reported by others, but I my selfe was present at the doing of all these things, and as I was able I haue put them in wryting, that by thys my labour, and indeuor howsoeuer it were. I might preserue the memory of this holy man and excellent Doctour of the Euangelicall truth.

*What was the name of this author which wrote thys story, it is not here expressed. Cochleus in his 2. boke contra Hussitas, supposeth his name to be Ioannes Pizibram, a Bohemian. Who afterward succeeding in the place of I. Hus at Prage, at last is thought to relent to the Papists.

This godly seruaunt and Martyr of Christ was condemned by the cruel councel, and burned at Constance an. 1415. about the moneth of Iuly.

Howe grieuously this death of Iohn Hus was taken among the nobles of Boheme and of Morauia, heereafter (Christ willing) shall appeare by their letters which they sent vnto the councell, & by the letters of Sigismund the king of Romaines, wrytten vnto them. Wherin he laboureth, all that he can, to purge and excuse himselfe, of Husses death. All be it he was not altogether free from that cruell fact, and innocent frō that bloud: yet notwithstanding hee pretendeth in words so to wipe away that blot from hym, that the greatest part of that crime seemeth to rest vpon the bloody prelates of that councel,* as the wordes of the king do purport in forme as followeth.

INterea (inquit) nobis adhuc in partibus Rheni existentibus, peruenit ad Constantiam &c i.*In the meane time as we were about the coastes of Rhene, Iohn Hus went to Constance, and there was arrested, as is not to you vnknown. Who if he had first resorted vnto vs, & had gone with vs vp to the Coūcel, perhaps it had bene otherwise with him. And God knoweth, what grieffe and sorrowe it was to our heart, to see it so to fall out, as with no wordes can be well expressed. Whereof all the Bohemians, which were there present, can beare vs witnesse, seeing and beholding howe carefull and sollicitous we were in labouring for him: In so much that wee many times with anger and furie departed out of the Councell: and not onely out of the Councell, but also went out of the City of Cōstance taking his part, vnto such time as the rulers of the Councell sending vnto vs, sayde: That if wee woulde not permit them to prosecute that, which right required in the Councell, what should they then do in the place. Whereupon thus we thought with our selues, that here was nothing els for vs more to doe, nor yet to speake in this case, for asmuche as the whole Councell otherwise had ben dissolued. Where is to be noted moreouer, that in Constance the same time there was not one clearke, or two, but there were Ambassadors for all kinges and princes in Christendome, especially since the time that (Petrus de Luna geuing ouer) all those kinges and princes which tooke his part, came to vs: so that whatsoeuer good was to be done, it was nowe to be passed in this present Councell. &c. Ex Epist. Imper. Sigismundi. ad Nobiles. &c.

By this it may appeare that the Emperour as partly ashamed and sory of that which was done, wold gladly haue cleared himselfe therof, and haue washed hys handes with Pilate: yet he coule not so cleare himselfe, but that a great portion of that murder remained in him to be noted, and well worthy of reprehension: as may both appeare by his last words spoken in the Councel to I. Hus, whereof Iohn Hus in his Epistles complaineth,* wryting to certaine of his friendes in Bohemia in his 33. Epistle, as by hys wordes may appeare here following.

I Desire you yet againe for the loue of God,*that the Lordes of Boheme ioyning together, will desire the king for finall audience to be geuen me. For so muche as he alone saide to me in the Councell, that they shoulde geue me audience shortly, and that I shoulde aunswer for my selfe briefly in wryting: it will be to hys great confusion, if he shall not perfourme that which he hath spoken. But I feare that worde of his will be as firme and sure, as the other was concerning my safeconducte graunted by him. Certaine there were in Bohemia, which willed mee to beware of hys safeconducte. And other sayde: he will sure geue you to your ennemies. And the Lord Mikest Dweky told me before M. Iessenitz, saying: Maister, know it for certaine you shalbe condemned. And this I suppose he spake, knowing before the intētion of the king. I hoped well that hee had bene well affected toward the lawe of God and trueth, and had therein good intelligence: nowe I conceiue that he is not greatly skilfull nor so prudently circumspecte in himselfe.*He condemned me before mine ennemies did. Who, if it had pleased him, might haue kept the moderation of Pilat the Gentile, which sayde: I finde no cause in this man: or at least if hee had sayde but thus: beholde I haue geuen him his safeconducte safely to returne And if hee will not abide the decision of the councell, I will send him home to the king of Boheme, with youre sentence & attestations, that he with his cleargie may iudge him. But nowe I heare by the relation of Henry Leffl, and of other, that he will ordaine for me sufficient audience: And if I will not submit my selfe to the iudgement of the councel, he wil send me safe, the contrary way. &c.

This Iohn Hus being in prison, wrote diuers treatises, as of the commaundements, of the Lordes prayer, of mortal sinne, of matrimony, of the knowledge and loue of God, of 3. ennemies of mankinde, the world, the flesh, and the deuill, of penance, of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of the Lord: of the sufficiencie of the lawe of God to rule the church. &c. He wrote also diuers Epistles and letters to the Lordes and to his friendes of Boheme: And in hys wrytings did foreshewe many things before to come, touching y^r reformation of the Church: and seemeth in the prison to haue had diuers propheticall reuelations shewed to him of God. Certaine of which his letters, and predictions, I thought here vnderneath to insert, in such sort, as neither in reciting all I will ouercharge the volume too much: nor yet in reciting of none, I will be so brief, but that the reader may haue some taste, and take some profit of the Christian wrytings and doings of this blessed man: Firste beginning, with the letter of the Lorde Clum, concerning the safeconduct of Iohn Hus.

TO all and singulare that shall see and heare these presentes, I Iohn de Clum doe it to vnderstande, howe maister Iohn Hus Bacheler of diuinitie, vnder the safeconduicte and protection of the renowned prince and Lorde Sigismund of Romaines semper Augustus, and king of Hungarie. &c. My gracious Lorde, and vnder the protection, defence, and safegarde of the holy Empire of Rome, hauing the letters patent of the said my Lorde king of Romaines. &c. came vnto Constance to render a full counte of hys faith in publicke audience to al that would require the same. This the saide M. Iohn Hus, in this Imperiall Citie of Constance, vnder the safeconduct of the said my Lord king of Romaines, hath bene and yet is deteined. And although the Pope with the Cardinales haue bene seriously required, by solemne Ambassadors of the sayd my Lord king of Romaines. &c. in the kings name & behalfe, that the said maister Iohn Hus should be set at libertye, and be restored vnto me, yet notwithstanding, they haue and yet do refuse Page 626 hitherto to set him at liberty, to the great cōtempt & derogation of the safeconduct of the king, & of the safegard and protection of the Empire or Emperial maiestie. Wherefore I Iohn aforesaide in the name of the king, do here publish and make it known, that the apprehending and deteining of the sayde M. Iohn Hus, was done wholly against the wil of the fornamed king of Romaines my Lord, seeing it is done in the contempt of the safeconduite of hys subiects, and of the protection of the Empire, because that the sayde my Lord was then absent farre from Constance, and if he had ben there present, woulde neuer haue permitted the same. And when hee shall come, it is to be doubted of no man, but that hee for this great iniury, and contempt of this safeconduite done to him & to the Empire, wil greuously be molested for the same.

In this instrument aboue prefixed note (gentle reader) 3. things.

First, the goodnes of this gentle Lord Iohn de Clum, being so feruent and zelous in the cause of Iohn Husse, or rather in the cause of Christ.

Secondly, the safeconduct graunted vnto the sayde I. Hus, vnder the faith and protection of the Emperor, and of the Empire.

Thirdly, here is to be sene the contempt and rebellion of these proud prelates in disobeying the authority of their high Magistrate, who contrary to his safeconduct geuen, and the mind of the Emperor, did arest and imprison this good man, before the comming of the sayd Emperor, & before that Iohn Hus was heard. Let vs nowe, as we haue promised, adioyne some of the epistles of this godly man.

An Epistle of Iohn Hus, vnto the people of Prage in his owne vulgare speeche.

*GRace and peace from our Lorde Iesus Christ, that you being deliuered from sinne, may walke in his grace, and may growe in all modesty and vertue, and after this may enioy eternall life.

Derely beloued, I beseeche you which walke after the law of God, that you cast not away the care of the saluatiō of your soules, whē as you hearing the word of God, are premonished wisely to vnderstand that you be not deceiued by fals apostles: which do not reprehend the sinnes of men, but rather doe extenuate and diminish them: which flatter the priests, and doe not shewe to the people their offences which magnify themselves boast their own workes, and maruelously extol their owne worthines: but follow not Christ in his humility, in pouerty, in the crosse and other manifold afflictions. Of whome our merciful sauour did premonish vs before, saying: false Christes and fals Prophets shal rise, and shall deceiue many. And when he had forewarned his welbeloued disciples he said vnto them: beware and take hede of false Prophets, which come to you in shepes clothing, but inwardly are rauening wolues: ye shal know them by their fruits. And truth it is, that the faithful of Christ haue much neede diligently to beware, and take hede vnto themselves. For as our sauour himselfe doth say: the elect also, if it were possible, shalbe brought into error. Wherefore my welbeloued, be circumspect and watchful, that ye be not circumuented with the crafty trains of the deuil. And the more circumspect ye ought to be, for that antichrist laboureth the more to trouble you. The last iudgement is nere at hande death shal swallow vp many, but to the electe children of God, the kingdome of God draweth nere, because for them he gaue his own body Feare not death, loue together one an other, perseuere in vnderstanding the good wil of God without ceasing. Let the terrible & horrible day of iudgement, be alwaies before your eies, that you sinne not: and also the ioy of eternal life, wherunto you must endeuer. Furthermore, let the passion of our sauoure be neuer out of youre minds: that you may bear with him & for him gladly, whatsoever shalbe laid vpon you. For if you shal consider well in your mindes his crosse & afflictions, nothing shalbe greuous vnto you, & patiently you shal geue place to tribulations, cursings, rebukes, stripes, and prisonment, and shal not dout to geue your liues moreouer for his holy truth, if nede require. Knowe ye welbeloued that antichrist being stirred vp against you, deuisset diuers persecutions. And many he hath not hurte, no not the least heire of their heads, as by mine owne example I can testify, although hee hath ben vehemently incensed against me. Wherefore I desire you all, with your praiers to make intercessiō for me to the lord, to geue me intelligence, sufferance, pat•ence and constancie, that I neuer swarue from his diuine verity. He hath brought me now to Constance. In all my iourney openly and manifestly, I haue not feared to vtter my name as becommeth the seruant of God. In no place I kept my selfe secrete, nor vsed any dissimulation. But neuer did I finde in any place more pestilent and manifest ennemies then at Constance. Which enemies neither should I haue had there, had it not ben for certain of our owne Bohemians, hypocrites & deceiuers, who for benefits receiued and stirred vp with couetousnes, with boasting and bragging haue perswaded the people that I wēt about to seduce them out of the right way. But I am in good hope that through the mercy of our God, and by your prayers I shall persiste strongly in the immutable veritie of God, vnto the last breath. Finally, I wold not haue you ignorāt, that wheras euery one here is put in his office, I only as an outcast am neglected. &c. I cōmend you to the merciful Lord Iesu Christ, our true God, and the sonne of the immaculate virgin Mary, which hath redeemed vs by his moste bitter death, without all our merites, from eternall paines, from the thraldome of the Deuill, and from sinne.

From Constance, the yere of our Lord. 1415.

An other letter of Iohn Hus to his benefactours.

MY gracious benefactours and defendours of the truthe,* I exhort you by the bowels of Iesus Christ, that now ye setting aside the vanities of this present world, will giue your seruice to the eternall king, Christ the Lord. Trust not in Princes nor in the sonnes of men, in whome there is no health. For the sonnes of men are dissemblers and disceitfull. To day they erre, to morrowe they pearish, but God remaineth for euer. Who hath his seruants, not for any neede he hath of them, but for their owne profite: vnto whō he performeth that, which he promiseth, & fulfilleth that which he purposeth to geue. He casteth of no faithful seruant from him, for he sayth: where I am there also shal my seruāt be. And that Lorde maketh euery seruaunt of his to be the Lorde of all his possession, geuing himselfe vnto him, and with himselfe, all thinges: that without all tediousnesse, feare, and without al defect, he may possesse all thinges, reioycing with all Saintes in ioy infinite. O happie is that seruaunt, whome, when the Lorde shall come, hee shall finde watching. Happy is the seruaunt which shall receiue that king of glory with ioy. Wherefore, well beloued Lordes, and benefactours, serue you that king in feare: which shall bring you, as I trust, nowe to Boheme at this present, by his grace in health, and hereafter, to eternal life of glory. Fare ye wel: For I think that this is the last letter that I shall write to you: who to morrowe, as I suppose, shall be purged in hope of Iesu Christ, throughe bitter death, from my sinnes. The things that happened to me this night, I am not able to wryte. Sigismund hath done all things wyth mee disceitfully, God forgeue him and onely for your sakes. You also heard the sentence which he awarded against me. I pray you haue no suspicion of faithfull Vitus.

An other letter to the Lord Iohn de Clum.

MOste gracious benefactour in Christe Iesu,* dearely beloued, yet I reioyce not a little, that by the grace of God I maye wryte vnto your honour. By your letter, which I receaued yesterday, I vnderstand, first how the iniquitie of the great strompet, that is, of the malignaunt congregation (whereof mention is made in the Apocalips) is detected and shall be more detected. Wyth the which strumpet the kinges of the earth doe commit fornication, fornicating spiritually from Christe, and as is there sayde, sliding back from the truth, and consenting to the lies of antichrist, thoroughe his seduction and thoroughe feare, or thoroughe hope of confederacie, for getting of worldly honour. Secondly I perceaued by your letter, how the enemies of the truth, begin nowe to be troubled. Thirdly, I perceiued the feruent constancie of your charitie; wherewith you professe the truth boldly. Fourthly, with ioy I perceiued that you minde now to geue ouer the vanity and the painefull service of this present world, and to serue the Lorde Iesus Christ quietly at home. Whome to serue, is to raign, as Gregory sayeth. Whome he that serueth faithfully, hath Christe Iesus himselfe in the kingdome of heauen to minister vnto him, as hee himselfe sayeth▪ Blessed is that seruaunt, whome when the Lorde shall come, he shall finde waking, and so doing. Verely I say vnto you that hee rising, shall girde himselfe, and shall minister to him. This do not •he kinges of this worlde to their seruauntes: whome onely they doe loue so long as they are profitable and necessary for their commodities &c.

Another Epistle of Iohn Hus, wherein he declareth why God suffreth not his to perish, bringing diuers examples, wherwith he doth comfort and confirme both himselfe and other.

THE Lord God be with you. Many causes there were, welbeloued in God my deare frends, which moued me to thinke that those letters were the last, which before I sent vnto you, lookinge that same time for instāt death. But now vnderstanding the same to be deferred, I take it for great cōfort vnto me, that I haue some le•ser more to talke with you by letters: & therefore I write again to you, to declare & testify at least, my gratitude & mindfull duty toward you. And as touching death, God doth know why he doeth defer it both to me and to my welbeloued brother M. Hier. who I trust will die holily and without blame: and do know also that he doth, and suffereth now more valiauntly, then I my selfe a wretched sinner. God hath geuen vs a long time, that we myghte call to memorie our sinnes the better, and repent for the same more feruently. Hee hath graunted vs time, that our longe and greate temptation shuld put away our greuous sinnes, & bring the more Page 627 consolation. He hath geuen vs time, wherein we should remember the horrible rebukes of our mercifull king and Lorde Iesus, and shoulde ponder his cruell death, and so more patiently myght learne to beare our afflictions.* And moreouer that we might kepe in remembraunce, how that the ioyes of the life to come, are not geuen after the ioyes of this world immediatly, but through many tribula•ions the Saints haue entred into the kingdō of heauen. For some of them haue bene cutte and chopt all to peeces, some their eies bored through, some sodde: some rosted, some slaine aliue, some buried quicke, stoned, crucified, grineded betwixt mill stones, drawne & hailed hither and thither vnto execution, drowned in waters, strangled and hanged, torne in pieces, vexed wyth rebukes before their death, pined in prisons, & afflicted in bands. And who is able to recite all the tormentes and suffringes of the holy Saintes, which they suffered vnder the olde and newe Testament for the verity of God: namely those which haue at any time rebuked the malice of the priestes, or haue preached against their wickednesse. And it will be a meruaile if any man now also shall escape vnpunished, who so euer dare boldly resist the wickednesse and peruersity, especially of those priests, which can abide no correction. And I am glad that they are compelled now to reade my bookes, in the which, their malice is somewhat described: and I know they haue reade the same more exactly and diligently, then the holy Gospell, seeking therein to finde out errours.

Geuen at Constance vppon Thursday, the 28. day of Iune. An. 1415.

Another letter of Iohn Hus, wherein he rehearseth what iniuries he receiued of the Councel, and of the deputies.

*IF my letter be not sent yet to Boheme, keepe it and send it not, for hurt may come thereof, &c.

Item, if the king doe aske who ought to be my iudge, since that the Councel neither did call me, nor did cite me, neither was I euer accused before the Councell, and yet the Councell hath imprisoned me, and hath appoynted their proctor against me.

Item, I desire you right noble and gracious Lord Iohn, if audience shall be geuen me, that the king will be there present himselfe, and that I may haue a place appoynted neare vnto him, that he may heare me well and vnderstand what I say: and that you also with the Lord Henry, and with Lord Wenselaus and other mo, if you may, will be present, and heare what the Lorde Iesus Christ my procuratour and aduocate, and most gracious iudge, will put in my mouth to speake, that whether I liue or die, you may be true and vpright witnesses with me, least lying lips shall say heereafter that I swarued away from the truth which I haue preached.

Item, know you that before witnesses and notaries in the prison, I desired the commissioners that they would depute vnto me a proctor and an aduocate, who promised so to do, and afterward would not performe it. Wherefore I haue committed my selfe to the Lorde Iesus Christ that he will be my procuratour and aduocate and iudge of my cause.

Item, know you, that they haue as I suppose no other quarell against mee, but onely this, that I stooode against the Popes Bull, which Pope Iohn sent downe to Boheme,* to sanctifie warre wyth the signe of the crosse & full remission of sinnes, to all them which would take the holy crosse to fight for the patrimonie of the Romish church against Ladislaus king of Naples, and they haue mine owne wryting which was read against me, and I do acknowledge it to be mine. Secondly, they haue also against me, that I haue cōtinued so long in excommunication, and yet did take vppon mee to minister in the church and say Masse Thirdly they haue against me, because I did appeale from the Pope to Christ. For they reade my appeale before me, in the which with a willing minde, smiling I confessed before them all to be mine. Fourthly, because I left a certaine letter behind me, which was read in the church of Bethleem, the which letter my aduersaries haue very euill fauouredly translated and sinisterly expounded, in the which I did wryte that I went out without a safeconducte. Whereunto you your selues can say and beare me recorde, that I in my going out, had no safe conducte of the Pope, neither yet did knowe whether you should goe out with me when I wrote that letter.

Item, if audience may be geuen to me, and that after the same audience the king would suffer me not to be returned againe into prison, but that I may haue your counsels & others my frends: and if it may please God that I may say some thing to my soueraigne Lord the king, for the behalfe of Christianitie, and for hys owne profite. &c.

Another letter of Iohn Hus, wherein he confirmeth the Bohemians, and describeth the wickednesse of that Counsell.*

Iohn Husse in hope the seruaunt of GOD, to all faythfull in Boheme, which loue the Lord, greetying thorough the grace of GOD.

It commeth in my mynde, wherein I must needes admonish you, that be the faythfull and beloued of the Lord, how that the Councell of Constance beyng full of pride,* auarice, and all abomination, hath condemned my bookes written in the Boheme tounge, for hereticall, whiche bookes they neuer saw, nor neuer heard them read: And if they had heard them, yet they could not vnderstād the same, being some Italians, some Frenchmen, some Britaines, some Spanyardes, Germanes, with other people of other nations moe: vnlesse peraduenture Iohn Bishop of Litomishe vnderstoode them, whiche was present in that Councell, and certaine other Bohemians, and Priestes whiche are agaynst me, and labour all they may how to deprauie both the veritie of God,* and the honesty of our cuntry of Boheme: Which I iudge in the hope of GOD, to be a Godly land, right well geuen to the true knowledge of the Fayth, for that it doth so greatly desire the word of GOD, and honest maners. And if you were here at Constance, ye should see the greeuous abomination of this Councell, which they call so holy, and such as can not erre. Of the which Councell I haue heard it by the Swechers reported, that the Citie of Constance is not able in 30. yeares to be purged of those wicked abhominations in that Coucell committed. And all be offended almost with that Councell, beyng sore greeued to behold such execrable thynges perpetrate in the same.

When I stode first to aunswere before myne aduersaries, seyng all thynges there done with no order, and hearyng them also outrageously crying out, I sayd playnely vnto them, that I looked for more honest behauour, and better order and discipline, in that Councell. Then the chief Cardinall aunswered, sayest thou so? but in the tower thou spakest more modestly. To whome, sayd I: * in the Tower no man cryed out agaynst me, where as now all doe rage agaynst me. My faythfull and beloued in Christ, be not afrayde with their sentence in condemnyng my bookes. They shall bee scattered hether and thether abroad, like light Butterfleis, and their Statutes, shall endure as Spiderwebbes. They went about to shake my constancie from the veritie of Christ: but they could not ouercome the vertue of God in me. They would not reason with the scriptures against me, as diuers honourable Lordes can wnesse with me, which being ready to suffer contumely for the trueth of God, tooke my part stoutly; namely Lorde Wenceslaus de Duba, and Lorde Iohn de Clum: for they were let in by king Sigismund into the Councell. * And when I sayde, that I was desirous to be instructed, if I did in any thing erre, then they heard the chiefe Cardinall aunswere againe: because thou wouldest be informed, there is no remedy, but that thou must first reuoke thy doctrine, according to the determination of 50. Bachelers of Diuinitie appoynted. O high instruction.

After like maner S. Katherine also shoulde haue denied and reuoked the veritie of God and faith in Christ, because the 50. maisters likewise did withstand her: which notwithstanding, that good virgine would neuer doe, * standing in her faith vnto death: But shee did winne those her maisters vnto Christ, when as I can not win these my maisters by any meanes. These things I thought good to wryte vnto you, that you might knowe howe they haue ouercome me, with no grounded Scripture nor with any reason: but onely did assay with terrours and disceits to perswade me to reuoke and to abiure. But our mercifull God, whose lawe I haue magnified, was and is with me, and I trust, so will continue, and will kepe me in his grace vnto death. Wrytten at Constance after the feast of Iohn Baptist, in prison and in bandes, daily looking for death, although for the secrete iudgements of God, I dare not say whether this be my last Epistle: for nowe also almighty God is able to deliuer me.

Another letter of Iohn Hus, wherin he comforteth his frendes and willeth them not to be troubled for the condemnyng of his bookes: and also declareth the wickednesse of the Clergy.

MAister Iohn Husse, in hope the seruaunt of God, to all the faythfull which loue him and his statutes, wisheth the truth and grace of God.

Beloued, I thought it needefull to warne you that you should not feare or bee discouraged because the aduersaries haue decreed that my bookes shall be burnt. Remember how the Israelites burned the preachynges of the Prophet Ieremy and yet they could not auoyde the thynges that were Prophecied of in them. * For after they were burnt, the Lord commaunded to write the same Prophecie agayne, and that larger: which was also done. For Ieremie sittying in prison spake, and Baruch which was ready at his hand, wrote. This is written either in the 35. or 45. chapter of the Vision of Ieremie. It is also written in the bookes of the Machabees, that the wicked did burne the law of God, and killed them that had the same. Agayne, vnder the new Testament, they burned the Saintes,* with the bookes of the law of God. The Cardinals condemned and committed to fire certaine of S. Gregories bookes, & had burnt thē all if they had not ben preserued of God by the meanes of Peter, Gregories minister. Hauing these things before your eyes, take heede least through feare, you omit Page 628 to read my bookes, and deliuer them to the aduersaries to bee brent. Remember the sayings of our mercifull sauour, by whych he forewarneth vs. Math. 24. There shall be (sayeth he) before the day of iudgement, great tribulation, such as was not from the beginning, vntill this day, neither shall be afterwarde: So that euen the elect of God shoulde be deceiued if it were possible. But for their sakes, those dayes shal be shortened. Whē you remēber these things (beloued) be not afraid, for I trust in God that that schoole of Antichrist shall be afraide of you, and suffer you to be in quiet, neither shall the Councell of Constance extende to Bohemia For I thinke,* that many of them, which are of the Councell, shall die before they shall get from you my bookes And they shall departe from the Councel and be scattred abroad, throughout the partes of the world, like storkes, and then they shall knowe when winter commeth, what they did in sommer. Consider that they haue adiudged their heade the Pope worthy of death, for many horrible factes that he hath done.* Go to now: Aunswer to this you preachers which preach that the Pope is the God of the earth, that he may as the Lawyers say, make sale of the holy things: that he is the head of the whole holy Church in verity wel gouerning the same: that he is the heart of the Church in quickening the same spiritually: that hee is the well spring from the which floweth all vertue and goodnesse: that he is the sonne of the holy church: that hee is the safe refuge to which euery Christian mā ought to flie for succour. Beholde now that head is cutte off with the sworde, now the God of the earth is bound, now his sinnes are declared openly, now that well spring is dried vppe, that sunne darkened, that heart is plucked out and throwne away, least that any man should seeke succour thereat. The Councell hath condemned that head, and that for this offence, because hee tooke money for indulgences, Bishoppricks and other such like. But they condemned hym by order of iudgement, which were themselues the buiers and sellers of the same marchandise. There was present Iohn Byshop of Lytomissia, who went twise about to buy the bishoprike of Prage, but others preuented him.* O wicked men, why did they not first cast out the beame out of their owne eyes? These men haue accursed and cōdemned the seller, but they themselues which were the buiers and consenters to the bargaine, are without daunger. What shall I say that they doe vse in this maner of buying and selling at home in their owne countreis? For at Constance there is one Bishop that bought,* & another which sold, and the Pope for allowing of both their factes, tooke bribes of both sides. It came so to passe in Bohemia also as you knowe. I woulde that in that Councell God had sayde, he that amongst you is without sinne, let him geue the sentence against Pope Iohn: Then surely they had gone all out of the Councel house, one after another. Why did they bowe the knee to him alwaies, before this his fall, kisse hys feete, and call him the most holy father, seeing they saw apparantly before, that he was an hereticke, that hee was a mankiller, that he was a wicked sinner? all which things now they haue found in him.* Why did the Cardinals chuse him to be Pope, knowing before that he had killed the holy Father? Why suffered they him to meddle with holy thinges, in bearing the office of the Popedome? for to this ende they are his counsailours, that they shoulde admonish him of that which is right. Are not they themselues as guiltie of these faults as he? seeing that they accōuted these things vices in him, and were partakers of some of them themselues? why durst no man lay ought to his charge, before he had fledde from Constance, but assone as the secular power, by the sufferaunce of God, laide holde vpon him, then, and neuer afore, they conspired altogether that he shoulde not liue any longer. Surely, euen as at this day is the malice, the abhominatiō and filthinesse of Antichrist reuealed in the Pope and others of this Councell.

*Nowe the faithfull seruaunts of God may vnderstande what our sauour Christ meant by this saying: when you shal see the abhominatiō of desolation, which is spoken of Daniel. &c. who so can vnderstand it, &c. Surely these be great abhominatiōs, pride, couetousnesse, symonie, sitting in a solitarie place, that is to say, in a dignitie voide of goodnesse, of humilitie, and other vertues: as we do now clearely see in those that are constituted in any office and dignitie. O howe acceptable a thing should it be (if time would suffer me) to disclose their wicked actes, which are nowe apparant, *that the faithfull seruaunts of God might knowe them? I trust in God that he wil send after me, those that shall be more valiant: and there are aliue at this day, that shall make more manifest the malice of Antichrist. and shall geue their liues to the death, for the truth of our Lord Iesus Christ: who shall geue both to you and me the ioyes of life euerlasting. This Epistle was written vppon S. Iohn Baptistes day in prison and in colde yrons, I hauing thys meditation with my selfe, that Iohn was beheaded in his prisone and bondes, for the worde of God.

Another letter of Iohn Hus.

Iohn Husse in hope the seruant of God to all the faithfull at Boheme, which loue the Lord, wisheth to stand and die in the grace of God, and at last to attaine to eternall life. Amen.

Ye that beare rule ouer other and be rich, and ye also that be poore, well be loued and faithfull in God, I beseeche you, and admonish you all, that ye will be obedient vnto God, make muche of his worde, and gladly hearing the same, will humbly perfourme that which yee heare. I beseeche you sticke fast to the veritie of Gods worde, which I haue written and preached vnto you out of his lawe, and the Sermons of his Saintes. Also I desire you if any man either in publicke Sermon or in priuate talke heard of me any thing, or haue read any thing written by me which is againste the verity of God, that he do not follow the same. Albeit I do not finde my conscience guiltie that I euer haue spoken or wrytten any such thing amongst you.

I desire you moreouer if any man at any time haue noted any leuitie either in my talke or in my conditions, that he doe not follow the same: but pray to God for me, to pardon me that sinne of lightnes. I pray you that ye wil loue your priests and ministers which be of honest behauiour, to prefer and honor them before others: namely such priests as trauaile in the worde of God. I pray you take hede to your selues and beware of malitious and deceitful men, and especially of these wicked priests, of whom our Sauour doth speake that they are vnder shepes clothing, & inwardly are rauening wolues. I pray suche as be rulers & superiors, to behaue them selues gently towards their poore inferiours, and to rule them iustly. I beseeche the citizens that they will walke euery man in his degree, and vocation with an vpright conscience. The Artificers also I beseeche, that they will exercise their occupations diligently, and vse them with the feare of God. I beseeche the seruauntes, that they wil serue their maisters faithfully. And likewise the scholemaisters I beseeche, that they liuing honestly, will bryng vp their Scholers vertuously, and to teach them faythfully: First to learne to feare GOD: then for the glory of GOD and the publicke vtilitie of the common wealth, and their owne health, and not for auarice or for worldly honor, to employ their myndes to honest Artes. I beseech the Studentes of the Vniuersitie and all Scholes, in all honest thynges to obey their Maisters, and to follow them, and that with all diligence, they will study to be profitable both to the setting forth of the glory of God, and to the soules health as well of themselues, as of other men. Together I beseech and pray you all, that you will yeld most hartly thanks to the right honorable Lordes,* the Lord Wencelaus de Duba, Lord Iohn de Clum, Lord Henry Lumlouio, Lord Vilem Zagecio, Lord Nicholas and other Lordes of Boheme, of Morauia and Polony: that their diligence towards me, may bee gratefull to all good men: because that they like valiaunt champions of Gods trueth, haue oftentimes set themselues agaynst the whole Councell for my deliuerance, contendyng and standyng agaynst the same to the vttermost of their power: but especially Lord Wencelaus de Duba, and Lord Iohn de Clum. What so euer they shall report vnto you, geue credite vnto them: for they were in the Councell when I there aunswered many. They know who they were of Bohemia, and how many false and slaunderous thynges they brought in agaynst me, and that Councell cryed out agaynst me, and how I also aunswered to all thynges wherof I was demaunded. I beseech you also that ye will pray for the kyng of Romaines, and for your kyng, and for his wife your Queene, that God of his mercy would abide with thē and with you, both now and henceforth in euerlastyng life. Amen.

This Epistle I haue writtē to you out of prison and in bandes, lookyng the next day after the writyng hereof, for the sentence of the Councell vpon my death, hauyng a full trust that he will not leaue me, neither suffer me to deny his truth and to reuoke the errours, whiche false witnesses maliciously haue deuised agaynst me. How mercyfully the Lord GOD hath dealt with me, and was with me in maruailous temptations, ye shall know, when as hereafter by the helpe of Christ, we shall all meete together in the ioye of the world to come. As concernyng M. Hierome my dearly beloued brother and fellow, I heare no other but that he is remayning in straight bandes, lookyng for death as I doe: and that for the fayth which he valiauntly mainteyned amongst the Bohemians, our cruell enemies of Boheme, haue geuen vs into the power and handes of other enemies, and into bandes. I beseech you pray to God for them.

Moreouer I beseech you, namely you of Prage, that we will loue the temple of Bethleem, and prouide so long as God shall permit, that the word of God may be preached in the same For, because of that place, the Deuill is angry, and agaynst the same place he hath stirred vp Priestes and Canons, perceiuyng that in that place his kyngdome should be disturbed and diminished. I trust in GOD that he will keepe that holy Church so long as it shall please him, and in the same shall geue greater encrease of his worde by other, then he hath done by me a weake vessell. I beseech you also that ye will loue together, and withholdyng no man from the hearyng of Gods word, ye will prouide and take care that good men be not oppressed by any force and violence.

Written at Constance, the yeare of our Lord. 1415.

An other right godly letter of Iohn Hus, to a certaine priest admonishing him of his office, and exhorting him to be faithfull: worthy to be red of all Ministers.

THe peace of our Lorde Iesus Christ. &c. My deare brother be diligent in preaching the Gospel, and do the worke of a good Euangelist: neglect not your vocation: labour like a blessed souldiour of Christ. First liue godly and holily. Secondly, teach faithfully and truely. Thirdly, be an example to other in well doing, that you be not reprehended in your sayings: correct vice and set forth vertue. To euill liuers threaten eternall punishmēt: but to those that be faithfull and godly, set forth the comforts of eternall ioy. Preach cōtinually, but be short and fruitfull, prudētly vnderstanding, & discretly dispēsing the holy Scriptures. Neuer affirme or maintaine those things that be vncertaine and doubtfull, least that your aduersaries take holde vpon you, which reioyce in deprauing their brethren, whereby they may bring the ministers of God into contempt. Exhort men to the confession of their faith, and to the communion of both kindes, both of the body & bloud of Christ, wherby such as do repent earnestly of their sinnes, may the more often come to the holy communion. And I warne you that you enter into no tauernes with ghestes, & be not a cōmon cōpany keper. For the more a preacher keepeth him frō the company of men, the more he is regarded. All be it, deny not yet your helpe and diligence, where soeuer you may profite other. Against fleshlye lust preache continuallye all that euer you can: For that is the raging beast, which deuoureth men, for whom the flesh of Christ did suffer. Wherefore my heartily beloued, I beseech you to flie fornication: for where as a man woulde most profite and doe good, there this vice vseth most to lurke. In any case flie the company of yong women, and beleue not their deuotion: For S. Austen sayth, the more deuout she is, the more proclieue to wantonnesse, and vnder the pretence of religion, the snare and venome of fornication lurketh. And this knowe my welbeloued, that the conuersation with them, subuerteth many, whome the conuersation of this worlde coulde neuer blemish nor beguile. Admit no womē into your house, for what cause, so euer it be, and haue not much talke with them otherwise, for auoiding of offence. Finally, howsoever you do, feare God and keepe his precepts: so shall you walke wisely, and shall not pearish: so shall you subdue the flesh, contemne the world, and ouercome the deuill: so shall you put on God, finde life, and confirme other, and shall crowne your selfe wyth the crowne of glory, the which the iust iudge shall geue you. Amen.

This letter of Iohn Hus conteineth a confession of the infirmitie of mans flesh: Howe weake it is, and repugnant against the spirite. Wherein he also exhorteth to perseuere constantly in the truth.

HHealth be to you from Iesus Christ. &c. My deare frend, knowe that Palletz came to me to perswade me that I shuld not feare the shame of abiuration, but to consider the good which thereof will come. To whome I sayd, that the shame of condemnation and burning is greater then to abiure and why shuld I feare then that shame? But I pray you tel me plainly your minde. Presuppose that such articles were laid to you, which you knewe your selfe not to be true: what would you do in that case? Would you abiure? Who aunswered. The case is sore, & began to weepe. Many other things wee spake which I did reprehende Michael de Causis, was some times before the prison with the deputies. And when I was wyth the deputies, thus I heard him speake vnto the keepers: Wee by the grace of God wil burne this hereticke shortly: for whose cause I haue spent many Florenes. But yet vnderstand that I wryte not this to the intent to reuenge mee of him, for that I haue committed to God, and pray to God for him with all my heart.

Yet I exhort you again, to be circumspect about our letters: for Michael hath taken suche order that none shall be suffered to come into the prisone: * no not yet the keepers wrues are permitted to come to me. O holy God, howe largely doth Antichrist extend his power and crueltie? But I trust that hys power shall be shortned, and his iniquitie shalbe detected more & more amongst the faithfull people.

Almighty God shal confirme the hearts of his faithful, whom he hath chosen before the costitution of the world, that they may receiue the eminall crowne of glory. And let Antichrist rage as much as he wil, yet he shal not preuaile against Christ, which shal destroy him with the spirite of his mouth, as the Apostle sayeth: And $\langle \diamond \rangle$ shall the creature be deliuered out of seruitude or corruptions into the libertie of the glorye of the sonnes of God, as sayeth the Apostle in the wordes following: we also wythin oure selues doe grone, waiting for the adoption of the sonnes of God, the redemption of our body.

I am greatly comforted in those wordes of our Sauour• happy be you when men shall hate you and shall separte you, and shall rebuke you, and shall cast out your name as execrable, for the sonne of man. Reioyce and be glad, for beholde, great is your rewarde in heauen, Luke 6. O worthy, yea O most worthy consolation, which not to vnderstande, but to practise in time of tribulation, is a hard lesson.

This rule saint Iames with the other Apostles, did well vnderstand, which saieth: count it exceeding ioy my brethren, when yee shall fall into diuers tentations, knowing that the probation of your faith woorketh patience: let patience haue her perfecte worke. For certainly it is a great matter for a man to reioyce in trouble, and to take it for ioy to be in diuers temptations. A light matter it is to speake it and to expounde it: but a great matter to fulfill it: For why, our most patient and most valiaunt champion him selfe, * knowing that hee shoulde rise againe the thirde day, ouercomming his ennemies by his death, and redeeming from damnation his electe after his last Supper was troubled in spirite and sayde: My soule is heauie vnto death. Of whom also the Gospell sayeth, that hee began to feare, to be sadde and heauie. Who being then in an agonie, was confirmed of the Aungell, and his sweat was like the droppes of bloud falling vpon the ground. And yet he notwithstanding, being so troubled, sayde to his disciples: let not your hearts be troubled, neither feare the crueltie of them that persecute you: for you shall haue me with you alwaies, that you may ouercome the tyranny of your persecutours. Whereupon those his souldiours, looking vppon the Prince and king of glory, sustained great conflictcs. They passed throughe fire and water and were saued, and receiued the crowne of the Lord God, of the which S. Iames in his canonicall Epistle, sayeth. Blessed is the man that suffereth temptation, for when he shall be proued, he shall receaue the crowne of life, which God hathe promised to them that loue him. Of this crowne I trust stedfastly the Lord wil make mee partaker also with you, which be the feruent sealers of the trueth, and with all them which stedfastly and constantly doe loue the Lord Iesus Christ, which suffred for vs, leauing to vs example that we should follow his steppes. It behooued him to suffer, as hee sayeth: and vs also it behooued to suffer, that the members may suffer together with the head. For he sayeth: If any man will come after mee, let him denie himselfe and take vp hys crosse and followe me.

O most mercyfull Christ,* draw vs weake creatures after thee, for except thou shouldst draw vs, we are not able to follow thee. Geue vs a strong spirite, that it may be ready, and although the flesh be feeble, yet let thy grace goe before vs, goe with vs, and follow vs: for without thee we can do nothyng, and much lesse enter into the cruell death for thy sake. Geue vs that prompt and ready spirite, a bold hart, an vpright fayth, a firme hope and perfect charitie, that we may geue our lyues paciently and ioyfully for thy names sake. Amen. Written in prison and in bondes in the Vigill of holy S. Iohn the Baptist, who beyng in prison and in bondes for the rebuking of wickednesse, was beheaded.

Among diuers other letters of Iohn Hus, which he wrote to the great consolation of others: I thought also here to intermixt an other certaine godly letter writtē out of England, by a faythfull Scholler of Wickleffe, as appeareth, vnto Iohn Hus and the Bohemians, which for the zealous affectiō therein cōteined, seemeth not vnworthy to be read.

A letter to Iohn Hus, and to the Bohemians from London.

GReetyng, and whatsoeuer can be deuised more sweete, in the bowels of Christ Iesu.*_

My dearly beloued in the Lord, whom I loue in the trueth, and not I onely, but also all they that haue the knowledge of the trueth, whiche abyde in you, and shall be with you through the grace of GOD for euermore: I reioysed aboue measure, when our beloued brethren came and gaue testimony vnto vs of your trueth, and how you walke in the trueth. I haue heard brethren, how sharply Antichrist persecuteth you, in vexyng the faithfull seruauntes of Christ with diuers and straunge kyndes of afflictions. And surely no maruaile, if amongst you (since it is so almost all the world ouer) the law of Christ be too too greuously impugned, and that redde Dragon hauyng so many heades (of whom it is spoken in the Apocalyps) haue now vomited out of his mouth that great floud, by whiche he goeth about to swallow vp the woman: but the most gracious God will deliuer for euer his onely and most faythfull spouse Let vs therefore cofort our selues in the Lord our God, and in his vnmeasurable goodnes, hopyng strongly in him which will not suffer those that loue him, to be vnmercifully defrauded of any their purpose, if we according to our duety, shall loue him with all our hart: for aduersitie should by no meanes preuaile ouer vs, if there were no iniquitie raignyng in vs. Let therefore no tribulation or sorrow for Christs cause, discourage vs, knowing this for a surety, that whosoever the Lord vouchsafeth to receaue to be his childrē, those he scourgeth: For so the mercifull father will haue them Page 630 tried in this miserable life by persecutions, that afterwarde hee may spare them. For the golde that this high artificer hath chosen, he purgeth and trieth in this fire, that he may afterwarde lay it vp in his pure treasurie. For we see that the time which we shall abide here, is short and transitory: the life which we hope for after this, is blessed and euerlasting. Therefore whilst we haue time, let vs take paine, that we may enter into that rest. What other thyng do we see in this brickle life, then sorow, heauinesse and sadnesse, and that which is most greuous of all to the faithfull, too much abusing and contempt of the lawe of the Lord. Let vs therefore endeuoure our selues as much as we may, to lay holde of the things that are eternall and abiding, despising in our mindes

all transitory and fraile things. Let vs consider the holy fellowship of our fathers that haue gone before vs. Let vs consider the Saints of the olde and newe Testament.* Did they not passe through this sea of tribulation and persecution? were not some of them cut in peces, other some stoned, & others of them killed with the sword? Some others of them went about in pelts and goates skinnes, as the Apostle to the Hebrues witnesseth. Surely they all walked straight wayes, following the steppes of Christ, which sayde, he that ministreth vnto me, let him follow me, whether so euer I go. &c. Therefore let vs also, which haue so noble examples geuen vs of the Saintes that went before vs, laying away as much as in vs lyeth, the heauy burden, and the yoke of sinne which compasseth vs about, runne forward through patience, to the battaile that is set before vs, fixing our eyes vpon the author of faith, and Iesus the finisher of the same: who seeing the ioy that was set before hym, suffred the paines of the crosse, despising death. Let vs call vpon him, which suffred suche reproche against himselfe of sinners, that we be not wearied, fainting in our hearts, but that we may heartely pray for helpe of the Lorde, and may fight against his aduersary Antichrist: that we may loue his law, and not be deceitfull labourers, but that we may deale faithfully in all things, according to that, that God hath vouchsafed to geue vs, and that wee may labour diligently in the Lordes cause vnder hope of an euerlasting reward. Behold therefore brother Hus, most dea•ly beloued in Christe, although in face vnknownen to me, yet not in faith and loue (for distance of places cannot separate those whom the loue of Christ doth effectually knit together) be comforted in the grace which is geuen vnto thee, labour like a good souldiour of Christ Iesus, preach, be instant in word and in example, and call as many as thou canst, to the way of truth: for the truth of the gospel is not to be kept in silence because of friuolous censures and thunderboltes of Antichrist. And therefore to the vttermost of thy power strengthen thou and confirme the members of Christ, whych are weakened by the deuil: and if the Lord wil vouchsafe it, Antichrist shall shortly come to an end. And there is one thing wherein I do greatly reioyce, that in your realm and in other places, God hath stirred vp the harts of some men that they can gladly suffer for the word of God, imprisonment, banishment and death.

Further, beloued I knowe not what to wryte vnto you, but I confesse that I could wish to powre out my whole heart, if thereby I might comfort you in the lawe of the Lorde. Also I salute from the bottome of my heart, all the faithfull louers of the law of the Lord, and specially Iacobellus your coadiutor in the gospell, requiring that he will pray vnto the Lorde for me in the Vniuersall church of Iesus Christ. And the God of peace which hath raised from the dead the shepheard of the sheepe, the mighty Lorde Iesus Christ, make you apt in all goodnesse to doe his will, working in you that which may be pleasant in his sight. All your friendes salute you which haue heard of your constancie. I would desire also to see your letters wrytten backe to vs, for knowe yee that they shall greatly comfort vs.

At London

by your seruaunt, desiring to be fellow with you in your labors Ricus Wiceewitze, priest vnworthy.

An other letter of Iohn Hus to his friendes of Boheme.

THE Lord God be with you. I loue the counsaile of the Lorde, aboue gold and precious stone. Wherefore I trust in the mercy of Iesus Christ, that he wil geue me his spirit to stand in his truth.

Pray to the Lord, for the spirit is ready and the flesh is weake The Lord almighty be the eternal reward vnto my Lords, which constantly, firmly and faithfully do stand for righteousnes: to whom the Lorde God shall geue in the kingdome of Boheme, to knowe the truth. For the following of which truth, necessary it is that they returne againe into Boheme, setting apart all vaine glory, & following not a mortall and miserable king, but the king of glory which geueth eternall life.

O howe comfortable was the geuing of the hande of Lorde Iohn de Clum vnto me, which was not ashamed to reache foorth his hand to me a wretche, and such an abiecte hereticke, lying in fetters of yron, and cried out vpon all men. Nowe peradventure I shall not speake much hereafter with you: Therefore salute in time as you shall see them, all the faithfull of Boheme.

Palletz came to me into prisone.* His salutation in my vehement infirmitye, was this before the Commissaries, that there hath not risen a more perillous hereticke since Christ was borne, then was Wickliffe and I. Also he sayd that al such as came to heare my talke, were infected with this heresie, to thinke that the substance of bread remained in the sacrament of the altare. To whome I answered and sayd: O maister, what a grievous salutation haue you geuen me? and how greatly do you sinne? Behold I shal die, or peradventure to morow shall be burnt. And what rewarde shall be recompenced to you in Boheme for your labour?

This thing peradventure I shoulde not haue wrytten, least I might seeme to hate him. I haue alwayes had this in my heart, trust not in princes. &c. And againe, cursed be the man whiche trusteth in man, and maketh flesh to be his arme. For Gods sake be you circumspecte how you stand and how you returne Carie no letters with you. Directe your bookes not all by one, but diuersly by diuers frendes.

Knowe this for certaine,* that I haue had great conflictes by dreames, in such sort as I had much a doe to refraine from crying out. For I dreamed of the Popes escape before he went. And after the Lord Iohn had told me therof, immediately in the night it was told me that the Pope shuld returne to you again. And afterward also I dreamed of the apprehēding of maister Hierome, although not in ful maner as it was done. Al the prisonments, whether and howe I am caryed, were opened to mee before, although not fully after the same fourme and circumstance. Many serpents oftentimes appeared vnto me hauing heads also in their taile: but none of them could bite me, and many other things more.

These thinges I wryte, not esteeming my selfe as a prophet, or that I extoll my selfe, but onely to signifie vnto you what temptations I had in body and also in mind, and what great feare I had,* least I shoulde transgresse the commaundement of the Lord Iesus Christ. Nowe I remember with my selfe the wordes of maister Hierome which sayde, that if I shoulde come to the Councell, hee thoughte I shoulde neuer returne home againe. In like maner there was a good and godly man, a tailor,* which taking his leaue of me at Prage, spake to me in these words: God be wyth you (said he) for I thinke verely, my deare and good maister Iohn, that you shall not returne again to vs with your life. The king, not of Hungarie, but of heauen, rewarde you with all goodnes, for the faithfull doctrine which I at your hands haue receiued. &c.

And shortly after the writing hereof, he sendeth also vnto them an other propheticall vision of his to be expounded, touching the reformation of the church, written in his 44. Epistle: the contentes whereof be these.

An other letter of Iohn Hus, sent to the Lord Iohn de Clum.

I Pray you expound to me the dreame of thys nyght. I sawe how that in my churche of Bethleem; they came to rase and put out all the images of Christ, and did put them out. The next day after I arose and sawe many painters, which painted and made more fairer Images & many more then I had done before: which Images I was very glad and ioyfull to behold. And the painters wyth much people about them, sayde, let the bishops and priestes come now, *& put vs out these pictures. Which being done, much people seemed to me in Bethleem to reioyce, and I with them. And I awaking therewith, felt my selfe to laugh. &c.

This vision Lorde Iohn de Clum, and Iohn Hus himselfe in his booke of Epistles in the 45. Epist. semeth to expounde, and applyeth these Images of Christ vnto the preaching of Christ and of his lyfe. The which preachyng and doctrine of Christ, though the Pope and his Cardinals should extinguish in him, yet did he foresee & declare, that the time should come, wherin the same doctrine shuld be reuyned againe by others, so plenteously, that the pope with al his power, shuld not be able to preuaile against it. Thus much as cōcerning this visiō of Iohn Hus. Wherunto doth wel accord the Prophetie of Hierome of Prage, printed in the coyne called Moneta Hussi: of the which coyn I haue my selfe one of the plates hauing this superscriptiō folowing printed about it: Centum reuolutis annis Deo respondebitis & mihi. That is. After a hundreth yeres come and gone, you shal geue a count to God and to me. Wherof (God willyng) more shalbe sayd hereafter.

Furthermore in 48. Epist. the sayd I. Hus seemyng to speake with the like spirit of Prophecy, hath these wordes folowing: *Sed spero, quod quae dixi sub tecto, praedicabuntur super tecta: That is: but I trust that those thinges which I haue spoken within the house, hereafter shalbe preached vpon the top of the house.

And because we are here in hand with the Propheties of Iohn Hus, it shall serue well in place, here moreouer to Page 631 recorde his wordes in a certayne treatise by hym written, De Sacerdotum & Monachorum carnalium Abhominacione, wherein the sayd Iohn Hus speaking prophetically of the reformation of the Church, hath these wordes folowing. Ex istis vltorius aduerte incidentaliter, quod Dei ecclesia nequit ad pristinam suam dignitatem reduci. &c. That is in english.

*Moreouer, hereupon note and marke by the way, that the church of God, cannot be reduced to his former dignitie, or be reformed, before all thinges first be made new. The truth whereof is playne by the Temple of Salomon Like as the Clergie and Priests, so also the people and laity: Or els vnless all such as now be addict to auarice, from the least to the most, be first conuerted and reclaymed, as wel y^e people as the clergy and Priests. Albeit as my mind now geueth me, I beleue rather the first, that is, that then shall rise a new people, formed after the new man, whiche is created after God. Of the which people new Clerkes & Priestes shall come, and be taken: whiche all shall hate couetousnes, and glory of this life, hasting to an heauenly cōuersation.

Notwithstanding all these thinges shall come to passe and be brought by little and little in order of times dispensed of God for the same purpose. And this God doth and will do for his owne goodnes and mercy, and for the riches of his great longanimity and pacience, geuing time and space of repētaunce to them y^t haue lōg line in theyr sins to amend, and flye from the face of the Lordes fury, whyle that in like manner the carnall people, and carnal priestes successiuey and in time, shall fall awaye and be consumed as with the moth. &c.

An other letter of Iohn Husse.

MAister Martin my deare brother in Christ,

I exhorte you in the Lord, that you feare God, keepe hys commaundementes and flee the company of women,* and beware of hearing their confessions, least by the hipocrisie of women, Sathan deceiue you, trust not their deuotion. You know how I haue detested the auarice and the inordinate life of the Clergy, wherefore through the grace of God I suffer now persecution, which shortly shalbe consummate in me, neither doe I feare to haue my hart powred out for the name of Christ Iesus. I desire you hartely be not greedy in seeking after benefices. And yet if you shalbe called to anye cure in the country, let the honour of God, the saluation of soules, and the trauaile therof moue you therunto, and not the hauing of the lining or the commodities thereof. And if you shall be placed in any such benefice, beware you haue no yong womā for your cook or seruant, least you edifie and encrease more your house, then your soule. See that you be a builder of your spirituall house, being gentle to the poore, and humble of mind, and waste not your goodes in great fare. I feare also if you do not amend your life, ceasing from your costly and superfluous apparell, least you shalbe greuously chastised, as I also wretched mā shalbe punished, which haue vsed the like,* being seduced by custome of euill men and wordly glory, wherby I haue bene wounded agaynst God wyth the spirite of pride. And because you haue notably knowne both my preaching and outward conuersation euen from my youth, I haue no neede to write many thinges vnto you, but to desire you for the mercy of Iesus Christ, that you do not followe me in anye such leuitie and lightnes,* whiche you haue in seene in me. You knew how before my priesthoode, whiche greueth me now, I haue delighted to playe oftentimes at chesse, and haue neglected my time, and thereby haue vnhappily prouoked both my self and other to anger many times by that play. Wherefore, besides other my innumerable faultes, for thys also I desire you to inuocate the mercy of the Lord, that he will pardon me, and so directe my life, that hauing ouercome the wickednes of this present life, the flesh the world and the deuill, I may finde place in the heauenly country, at the least in the day of iudgement. Fare ye well in Christ Iesus, with all them which keepe hys law. My gray coate if you will keepe to your selfe for my remembraunce, but I thinke you are ashamed to wear that gray colour: therefore you may geue it to whō you shall thinke good.* My white coate you shall geue the minister. N. my scholer. To George or els to Zuzikon. 60. groates, or els my gray coate: for he hath faythfully serued me.

I pray you that you doe not open this letter, before you be sure and certayne of my death.

The consolation of Mayster Hierome to Mayster Hus.

MY maister, in those thinges which you haue both written hetherto and also preached after the law of God agaynst the pride, auarice, an other inordinate vices of the Priestes, goe forward, be constant and strong And if I shall know that you are oppressed in the cause, and if neede shal so require, of myne own accorde, I will folow after to helpe you, as much as I can.

BY the lyfe, actes and letters of Iohn Hus hetherto rehearsed, it is euident and playne, that he was condemned, not for any error of doctrine, which they coulde well proue in hym, who neyther denied their popishe transubstantiation, neither spake against the authoritie of y^e church of Rome,* if it were well gouerned, nor yet the 7. Sacraments, & also sayd masse himself, and almost in al their popish opinions was a papist w^t them: but onely of euil wil was accused of his malicious aduersaries, because he spake agaynst the pompe, pride, and auarice, & other wicked enormities of the pope, Cardinals, & Prelates of y^t Church, and because he could not abide the high dignities & liuings of the Church, and thought the doinges of the pope to be Antichristlike. For this cause he procured so many enemies & false witnesses agaynst him. Who straying and picking matter out of hys bookes and writings, hauing no one iust article of doctrine to lay vnto him, yet they made hym an hereticke, whether he would or no, and brought him to hys condemnation. This can hatred and malice do, where the charitie of Christ hath no place. Whiche being so, as thy charitie (good reader) may easely vnderstand, in perusing the whol course of hys story: I beseech thee thē, what cause had Iohn Cochleus to write his 12. bookes agaynst Iohn Hus and Hussites? In which bookes how bitterly & intēperately he misuseth hys penne, by these few words in hys second booke thou mayst take a little tast: which wordes I thought here briefly to place in English to the ende that all English men may iudge thereby, with what spirite and truth these Catholickes he caryed. Hys wordes be these. Lib. 2. Hist. Dico igitur Ioan Huss neque sanctum neque beatum habendum esse,*sed impium potius. &c. That is, I say therfore Iohn Husse is neither to be counted holy nor blessed: but rather wicked and eternally wretched: insomuche that in y^e day of iudgement, it shalbe more easie, not onely with the infidell Pagans, Turks, Tartarians, and Iewes, but also w^t the most sinfull Sodomites, & the abhominable Persians, which most filthily doe lye with their daughters, sisters or mothers,, yea & also with most impious Cain killer of hys owne brother, with Thyestes killer of hys own mother, and y^e Lestrygones & other Andropophagi, which deuour mans flesh, yea more easie w^t those infamous murderers of infants, Pharao, & Herode, then w^t him &c. These be the words of Cochleus. Whose rayling books although they deserue neyther to be read, nor aunswered, yet if it pleased God, it were to be wished that the Lord would stir vp some towardly yong man, that hath so much leasure, to defend the simplicitie of thys Iohn Hus, whiche cannot now aunswere for himselfe. In the meane tyme, something to satisfie or stay the readers mynde agaynst thys immoderate, hyperbole of Cochleus, in like fewe wordes I wyll bryng out Iohn Hus to speake and to cleare hymselfe agaynst this slaunder: whose wordes in hys booke De sacerdotum & Monachorum abhominacione desolationis. pag. 84. &c. I beseech the reader to note. Nam & ista scribens fateor, {quod} nihil aliud me in illis perurget, nisi dilectio Dom. Nostri Iesu crucifixi. &c. That is. For in writing these things, I confesse nothinge els to haue moued me hereunto, but onely the loue of our Lorde Iesus crucified, whose printes and stripes, (according to the measure of my weakenes and vilenes) I couet to beare in my selfe, beseeching hym so to geue me grace, that I neuer seek to glory in my selfe or in any thing els, but onely in his crosse, and in the inestimable ignominy of his passion which he suffered for me. And therefore I write and speake these thinges, which I do not doubt will like all such as vnsaynedly do loue the Lord Christ crucified: and contrary will mislike not a litle all suche as be of Antichrist. Also agayne, I confesse before the most merciful Lord Iesus Christ crucified, that these thinges which I do now write, and those that I haue written before, neither I could haue writtē, nor knew how, nor durst so haue written, vnlesse he by hys inward vnction had so commaunded me. Neither yet do I write these thinges as of authority, to get me fame and name: For as S. Augustine & Hierome do say, that is onely to be geuen to the scriptures and writings of the Apostles, Euangelistes and Prophetes, and to the Canonickall Scriptures, which doe abounde in the fulnes of the spirite of Iesus. And whatsoeuer is there sayd, is full of veritie and wholesome vtilitie. &c. And here place also would require something to say to Aeneas Siluius to Antoninus, and to Laziardus, which falsly impute articles to him, whiche he neuer mayntayned. But because tyme suffereth not, I wil proceed to the story of maister Hierom of Prage.

The Tragickall and lamentable history of the famous learned man and godly Martyr of Christ, maister Hierome of Prage, burned at Constance for like cause and quarrell as Maister Iohn Hus was. 1416.

* These thinges hetherto being discoursed touching the lyfe, Actes and Constant martyrdom of M. Iohn Hus with part also of his letters adioyned to the same, whose death was on the 6. of Iuly. an. 1416. now remayneth cōsequently to describe the like Tragedy and cruell handeling of his Christian companion and fellow in bandes M. Hierome of Prage: Who grievously sorrowing the slaunderous reproch and diffamation of his coūtry of Boheme, and also hearing tell of y^e manifest iniuries done vnto that man of worthy memory M. Iohn Hus: freely and of hys own accord came vnto Constance,* the 4. day of Iprill. an, 1415. Who there perceiuing that Iohn Hus was denyed to be heard, and that watche and wayte was layd for hym on euery side, he departed to Iberling a Citty of the Empire, vntill the next day: the which Citty was a myle of frō Constance,* and from thence he wrote hys letters by me vnto Sigismund kyng of Hungry and hys Barons, and also vnto the Councell, most earnestly requiring that the kyng and the Councell would geue him a safe conduct frely to come and go, and that he woulde then come in open audience to aunswere vnto euery man, if there were any of the Councell that would lay any cryme vnto hym, as by the tenour of his intimation, shall more at large appeare.

When as the sayd king of Hungary was required therunto, as is aforesayd, being in the house of the Lord Cardinall of Cambray, he denyed to geue M. Hierome anye safe conducte excusing himselfe for the euil speede he had w^t the safe conduct of Iohn Hus before, and alleading also certayne other causes. The deputies also of the foure nations of y^e Councell, being moued thereunto by y^e Lords of y^e kingdome of Boheme, answered: wee (say they) will geue hym a safeconduct to come, but not to depart. Whose aunsweres, when they were reported vnto maister Hierome, he the next day after wrote certaine intimations according to the tenour here vnder written, which he sent vn̄to Constance to be set vpon the gates of the Citty, and vpon the gates of the Churches and Monasteries, and of the houses of the Cardinals, and other nobles and prelates. The tenour wherof here followeth word for word in thys maner.

*Unto the most noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Sigismund, by the grace of God king of the Romanes, alwaies Augustus, and of Hungary &c. I Hierome of Prage maister of Arte of the generall vniuersities of Paris, Colleyn, Heldeberg & Prage, by these my present letters do notifie vnto the king together with the whole reuerend Councell and as much as in me lyeth, do all men to vnderstand and know, that because of the crafty slaunders, backbiters & accusers, I am ready freely & of myne owne will, to come vnto Cōstance, there to declare openly before the Councell the puritie and sinceritie of my true fayth and myne innocencie, and not secretly in corners before any priuate or par|ticulate person. Wherefore if there be any of my slaūderers, of what natiō or estate soeuer they be, which will object agaynst me anye crime of error or heresie: let them come forth openly before me in the presence of the whole Councell, and in theyr owne names object agaynst me, and I will be ready, as I haue written, to aunswere openly and publikely before the whole Councell of myne innocencie, and to declare the puretie and sinceritie of my true fayth. And if so be that I shalbe fōūd culpable in error or heresie, then I will not refuse openly to suffer such punishment as shall be meete and worthy for an erroneous person, or an hereticke.

Wherefore I most humbly beseech my Lord the King and the whole sacred Coūcell, that I may haue to this end and purpose aforesayd, safe and sure accesse. And if it happē that I offering suche equitie and right as I do, before any fault be proued agaynst me, be arested imprisoned, or haue any violence done vnto me, that thē it may be manifest vnto the whole worlde that this generall Councell doth not proceede according to equitie and iustice, if they woulde by any meanes put me backe from this profoūd and straight iustice, being come hether freely and of myne owne minde and accorde. The whiche thing I suppose to be farre from so sacred and holy Councell of wise men.

When as yet he through such intimations copied out in the Bohemian, Latine, and Germaine tongue, being set vp as is aforesayd, could not get any safeconduct thē the Nobles, Lords, and Knightes specially of the Bohemian nation, present in Constance, gaue vnto maister Hierome their letters patentes, cōfirmed with their seales for a testimony and wnesse of the premisses. With the which letters the sayd M. Hierome returned agayne vnto Boheme, but by the treason and conspiracy of his enemies was taken in Hirsaw by the officers of Duke Iohn, and in Zultzbach was brought backe agayne to the presence of the Duke. In the meane time such as were the setters forward of the Councell agaynst M. Iohn Hus, and M. Ierome, that is to say Michael de Causis and M. Palletz and other their accomplices, required that the sayde mayster Hierome should be cited by reason of hys intimations: & certayne dayes after the citation hereunder written, was set vpon the gates and porches of the citty, and Churches, which followeth here in this maner.

This most sacred and holy Synode and general councell of Constance,* faithfully congregated and gathered together in the holy Ghost, representing the vniuersall militant Church, vnto Hierome of Prage, which writeth himselfe to be a mayster of Arte of so many Uniuersities, and pretendeth those things which are onely pertayning vnto sobriety and modesty, and that he knoweth no more then he ought. &c. Know thou that there is a certayne writinge come vnto our vnderstanding and knowledge, the whiche was set vp as it were by thine owne person vpon y^t gates of the Churches and Citty of Constance, vppon the Sonday, when there was song in the Church of God: Quasi mo do geniti. Wherein thou doest affirme, that thou wilt openly answere vnto thy accusers and slaunders which shall object any crime, error or heresie agaynst thee, whereof y^u art meruailously infamed and accused before vs, and specially touching the doctrine of Wickleff, and other doctrines contrary vnto the catholicke fayth, so that thou mightest haue graunted vnto thee a safe conduct to come. But for so much as it is our part principally and chiefly to foresee and looke vnto these crafty Foxes which goe about to destroy the vyneyarde of the Lord of hostes, therefore we do cite & and call forth by the tenour of these presentes, thy person manifoldly defamed and suspected for the temerarious affirming and teaching of manifold errores, so that within the term of 15. dayes to be accompted from the date of these presentes, wherof 5. dayes are appoynted for the first term fiue for the second, and other fiue for the third, we do ordein and appoynt by Canonically admonition and warning, that thou do appeare in the publique Session of the sacred Councell, if there be any holden the same day, or els y^r first day immediately following, when as any Session shalbe, according to the tenour of thy sayd writing, to answere to those thinges, which any person or persons shall object or lay agaynst thee in any cause of thy fayth, and to receiue & haue, as iustice shall require. Whereupon, so much as in vs lyeth, & as catholike faith shall require, we offer & assigne to thee by the tenour hereof, our safe cōduct frō all violence (iustice alwayes being sauēd) certifying thee y^t whether y^u doest appeare or not, the sayd terme or tyme appoynted notwithstanding, processe shall goe forward agaynst thee by the sayd sacred Councell, or by their Cōmissary or Cōmissaries, for the time aforesayd not obserued and kept, thy continuacie or stubbornes in any thing notwithstanding Geuen in the 6. Session of the generall Councell, the 17. day of Aprill, vnder the seale of the presidentes of the foure nations.

Grumpert Faber Notary of the Germaines.

After that Sigismund king of Hungary with the rest of the Councell,* vnderstood by the foresaid Duke Ioh. that M. Hierome was taken, they were earnestly in hand, requiring that M. Hierome should be brought before them vnto the Councell. The whiche Duke Iohn, after hee had receiued letters of the kyng and the Councell, brought M. Hierom bound vnto Constance, whom his brother Duke Ludouicus lead through the Cittie to the Cloyster of the Friars Minors in Constance, whereas the chiefe Priestes and Elders of the people, Scribes & Phariseis, were gathered together attending and wayting for hys comming.* He the sayd mayster Hierome caryed a great handbolte of iron with a long chayne in hys hand, and as he passed the chayne made a great ratlyng and noyse, and for the more confusion and despite towards hym, they led him by the same chayne after Duke Ludouicus aforesaid, holding and stretching out the chayne a great way from him: with the whiche chayne, they also kept him bounde in the Cloyster. When he was brought into the Cloyster, they reade before hym the letter of Duke Iohn, which was sent with y^t sayd mayster Hierome vnto the Councell, contayning in effect how that the sayd Duke Iohn had sent mayster Hierome Page 633 vnto the councell, who by chance was fallen into his handes, because he heard an euill report of hym, y^t he was suspected of the heresies of Wickleffe: that the Councell might take order for him, whose part it was to correct & punish such as did erre and stray from the truth, besides many other flattering tales which were written in the sayd letter for the prayse of the Councell. After this they read the citation which was geuen out by the councell agaynst maister Hierome,* wherof we haue spoken before. Then certayne of the Byshops sayd vnto hym: Hierom why diddest thou flye & runne awaye, and diddest not appeare when y^u wast cited? He answered, because I could not haue any safecōduict, neither from you, neither from the king, as it appea^reth by these letters patentes of the Barons, whiche you haue, neither by my open intimations could I obtain any safe conduict.

Wherefore I perceauing many of my greuous & heauy frendes to be here present in the Councell, would not my selfe be the occasion of my perils and daungers, but if I had known or had any vnderstanding of this citation, w^tout al doubt, albeit I had bene in Boheme, I would haue returned agayne. Then all the whole rabble rising vp, alledged diuers and sondry accusations and testimonies agaynst him with a great noyse and tumulte. When the rest held their peace,* then spake maister Gerson the Chauncellour of Paris: Hierome when thou wast at Paris, thou thoughtest thy selfe by meanes of thy eloquence to be an Angell, & diddest trouble the whole Uniuersitie, alledging openly in the schooles many erroneous conclusions with their correlaria, and specially in the question de vniuersalibus & de Idaeis, with many other very offenseiue questiōs. Unto whom Mayster Hierome sayd: I answere to you mayster Gerson:* Those matters which I did put forth there in the Schooles at Paris, in the whiche also I aunswered to the argumentes of the Maysters, I did put them forth Philosophically and as a Philosopher, and mayster of the Uniuersitie: and if I haue put forth anye questions whiche I ought not to haue put forth, teache me that they be erroneous, and I will most humbly be informed, and amend the same.

* Whiles he was yet speaking, an other (as I suppose, the mayster of the Uniuersity of Colleyne vpon the Riuer of Rheine) rising vp sayd: when thou wast also at Coleyn in thy position whiche thou diddest there determine, thou diddest propound many erroneous matters. Then sayd M. Hierome vnto hym, shew me first one errour whiche I propounded. Wherewithall he being in a maner astonished, sayd, I do not remember them now at the first, but hereafter they shalbe obiected agaynst you.

* And by and by the thirde man rising vp, sayde: when y^t you were also at Heidelberg, you propounded many erroneous matters as touching the Trinitie, and there pain^ted out a certayne shield or scutchine, comparing the Trinitie of persons in diuinitie vnto water, snow, and yse, and such like. Unto whō M. Hierome answered: Those thinges that I wrote or paynted there, the same will I also speake, write and paynt here, and teach me that they be erroneous, and I will most humbly reuoke and recant the same.

*Then certayne cryed out, let hym be burned, let him be burned. Unto whom he answered: if my death doe delight or please you, in the name of God let it be so.

Then sayd the archbishop of Salisburg, not so mayster Hierome, forsomuch as it is written: I will not the death of a sinner, but rather that he conuert and liue. When these and many other tumultes and cryes were passed, whereby they did then most disorderly and outrageously witnes agaynst them, they deliuered the sayd mayster Hierome being bound, vnto y^e officers of the Citty of Constance, to be caryed to prison for that night: and so euery one of them returned to their lodgings.

*In the meane tyme, one of the friendes of M. I. Hus, looking out at a window of the Cloyster, sayd vnto hym, M. Hierome. Then sayd hee, you are welcome my deare brother. Then s^yyd Peter vnto hym: Be constant & feare not to suffer death for the truth sake, of the whiche whē you were in tymes past at libertie, you dyd preache so muche goodnes. Vnto whome Hierome aunswered, truely brother I do not feare death, and forsomuch as we know that we haue spoken much therof in tymes past: let vs now see what may be knowne or done in effect. By and by hys keepers comming to the window, threatning hym wyth strokes, dyd put away the sayd Peter from the window of the Cloyster.

Then came there one Uitus vnto M. Hierome & sayd mayster how doe you? Unto whom he aunswered: truely brother, I do very well. Then hys keepers comming about him, layd hold of the sayd Uitus, saying, this is also one of the number, and kept hym. When it drew towards euening, the archb. of Rigen, sent certayne o• hys seruants which lead away M. Hierome, being strögly bound with chaynes, both by the handes and by the neck, and kept him so for certayne houres.* When night drew on, they caryed hym vnto a certayn tower of the Cittie in Saint Pauls Churchyarde, where as they tying him fast vnto a great blocke, and his f•ete in the stockes: hys handes also being made fast vppon them, they left hym: where as the blocke was so high, that he could by no meanes sit therupon, but that his head must hang downward.* They caryed also the sayd Uitus vnto the archbishop of Rygen, who demaunded of him, why he durst be so bold to talk with such a man being a reprobate of all men, and an hereticke: and when as he could finde no cause of imprisonment in hym, and y^t he sayd he was maister Iohn de Clums friend (taking an othe and promise of him that he should not go about to endamage the Councell,* by reason of that imprisonment and captiuitie) so dismissed hym and sent him away.

Maister Hierom, vnknown vnto vs whether he was caryed,* lay in the sayd tower two dayes & two nightes relieued onely with bread and water. Then one of hys keepers comming vnto M. Peter, declared vnto him howe y^t M. Hierome lay hard by in bondes and chaines, and how he was fed. Then M. Peter desired that hee might haue leaue geuen hym to geue him meat,* because he would procure the same vnto hym. The keeper of the prison graunting hys request, caryed meate vnto hym. Within •leuen dayes after, so hanging by the heeles: he vsed so small repast, that he fell sore sicke euen vnto the death.* When as he lying then in that captiuitie and prison, desired to haue a Confessor, they of the Councell, denyed that he shold haue any, vntill such time as by great importunitie he obtayned to haue one: hys friends being then there present in y^e same prison and tower, wherein he then lay by the space of one yeaer lacking but seuen dayes.

After they had put Iohn Hus to death, then about the feast of the natiuitie of Mary the Uirgine, they brought forth M. Hierome, whom they had kept so long in chains, vnto the Church of S. Paule: and threatning hym with death, being instant vpon him, they forced him to abiure & recant, and cōsent vnto the death of M. Iohn Hus, that he was iustly and truely condemned and put to death by thē. He, what for feare of death and hopyng thereby to escape out of their handes, according to their will and pleasure: & according to the tenour whiche was exhibited vnto hym: did make abiuration, and that in the Cathedrall Church and open Session, the draught whereof penned to hym by the Papistes, here ensueth.

The abiuration of M Hierome of Prage.

I Hierome of Prage,* Mayster of Arte, acknowledging the Catholicke Church and the Apostolicke fayth: do accurse and renounce all heresies, & specially that, whereof I haue hetherto bene infamed, and that which in tymes past Iohn Hus and Iohn Wickleffe haue bolden and taught in theyr workes, treatises and sermons, made vnto the people and Clergy: for the whiche cause the sayde Wickliffe and Hus, together with the sayde doctrines & errours, are condēned by this Sinode of Constance, as heretickes and all the said doctrine sentencially condemned, and especially in certayne articles expressed in the sentences and iudgementes geuen agaynst them by this sacred Councell.

Also I do accorde and agree vnto the holy Church of Rome, the Apostolick seate in this sacred Councel, & with my mouth and hart do professe in al thinges, and touching all thinges, and specially as touching the keyes, Sacramentes, orders and offices and ecclesiasticall censures, of pardons, reliques of Saintes. Ecclesiasticall libertie, also ceremonies and all other thinges pertayning vnto Christian Religion, as the Church of Rome, the Apostolick sea and this sacred Councel do professe: and specially that many of the sayd Articles are notoriously hereticall and lately reprobued by the holy fathers, some of them blasphemous, other some erroneous: some offensive vnto godly cares, & many of them temerarious and sedicious. And suche also were counted the Articles lately condemned by the sacred councell, and it was inhibited and forbidden to all and singular Catholicke men hereafter to preach, teach or presume to hold or mayntayne any of the sayd Articles, vnder payn of being accursed.

And I the sayd Hierome, forsomuch as I haue laboured by Scholasticall Artes, to perswade the opinion, De Vniuersalibus realibus, and that one substance of the common kinde should signifie many thinges subiect vnder the same Page 634 and euery one of them as S. Ambrose, Hierom, Augustin do affirme, and likewise others. For the teaching hereof by a playne example I described as it were a certayne triangle, forme or figure, the which I cald the shield of fayth.

Therefore vtterly to exclude and take away the erroneous and wicked vnderstanding therof, the which peraduenture some men may gather thereby: I do say, affirme: & declare, that I neuer made the sayd figure, neither named it the shield of faith to y^t intent or purpose, y^t I would extoll or preferre the opinion of vniuersalities aboue or before y^e contrary opinion, in such sort as though that were y^e shield of faith, & y^t without the affirmation therof, the Catholicke faith coulde not be defended or maintained, when as I my selfe would not obstinately sticke thereunto. But this I said, because I had put example in the description of the Triangle or form, that one diuine essence consisted in three subiectes or persons in themselues distinct: that is to saye, the father, the sonne, and the holy Ghost. The article of the which Trinitie, is the chiefe shield of fayth, and foundation of the Catholicke truth.

Furthermore that it may be euident vnto all mē what the causes were for y^e whiche I was reputed & thought to stick to, and fauour some time I. Hus. I signifie vnto all men by these presentes, that when as I heard him oftentimes both in his sermons and also in the schooles: I beleueed that he was a very good man, neither that he dyd in any poynt gaynsay the traditions of our holy mother the Church or holy doctors: in somuch as when I was lately in this Citty, and the articles, which I affirmed were shewed vnto me, whiche were also condemned by the sacred Councell, at the first sight of them I did not beleuee that they were hys, at the least not in that forme. But when as I had further vnderstood by certayn famous Doctours & maysters of Diuinitie, that they were hys articles: required for my further information and satisfaction, to haue y^e bookes of hys own hand writing shewed vnto me,* wherin it was sayd, those articles were contayned. The which books, when they were shewed vnto me written with his owne hand, which I did know as well as mine owne, I found all, and euery one of those articles therein written in like forme as they are condemned. Wherefore I do worthely iudge and thinke him and his doctrine with his adherents to be condemned and reprobud by this sacred coūcell, as hereticall and without reason. Al which y^e premisses with a pure minde and conscience I do heare pronounce & speake, being now fully and sufficiently informed of y^e foresaid sentences and iudgementes geuen by the sacred councell agaynst the doctrines of the sayd Iohn Wickleffe and Iohn Hus, and agaynst their own persons: vnto y^e which iudgement, as a deuout Catholike in all thinges, I doe most humbly consent and agree.

Also I the foresayd Hierom, which before the reuerend fathers the Lordes Cardinals, and reuerend Lordes Prelates and Doctours, and other worshipful persons of this sacred Councell in this same place, did heretofore frely and willingly declare and expound myne intent, and purpose amongst other thinges speaking of the Church, did deuide the same into three partes. And as I did perceauē afterward, it was vnderstanded by some y^e I would affirme that in the triumphant Church, there was fayth. Whereas I do firmly beleue that there is the blessed sight and beholding of God, excluding all darke vnderstanding & knowledge: And now also I do say, affirm & declare, that it was neuer my intent and purpose, to proue that there sholde be fayth, speaking of fayth as fayth is commonly defined, but knowledge farre exceeding fayth. And generally whatsoever I sayd, eyther there, or at any time before, I do referre and most humbly submit my selfe vnto the determination of this sacred Councell of Constance.

Moreouer, I do sweare both by the holy Trinitie, and also by the most holy Gospell, that I will for euermore remayne and perseuere without all doubt, in the truth of the Catholicke Church. And all such as by their doctrine and teaching, shall impugne this fayth, I iudge them worthy together with their doctrines, of eternall curse. And if I my selfe at any time (which God forbid I should) doe presume to preach or teach, contrary thereunto, I will submit my self vnto the seueritie of the Canons, and be bound vnto eternall payn and punishment. Wherupon I do deliuer vp this my cōfession and tenour of my profession willingly before this sacred generall councell, and haue subscribed and written all these thinges with myne owne hand.

After all this, they caused hym to be caryed agayn vnto the same prison, but not so straightly chayned & bound as he was before: notwithstanding kept euery day wyth souldiors and armed men. And when as afterward, his enemies which were appoynted agaynst him, as Michaell de causis, & wicked Palletz, with other their companions in these affayres, vnderstood & knew by the words & talke of M. Hierome and by other certayn tokens, that he made the same abiuration & recantation, not of a sincere & pure minde, but onely to the intent thereby to scape their hands they together with certayne Friars of Prage, of the order of Carmelites, then comming in, put vp new accusations agaynst the sayd M. Hierome, and drew the same into Articles, being very instant and earnest that he shoulde answere thereunto. And forsomuch as his iudges & certayne Cardinals,* as the Cardinall of Cambray, the Cardinal de Vrsinis, the Cardinall of Aquilegia, and of Florence, considering the malice of the enemies of M. Hierome, dyd see the great iniurie that was done vnto him, they laboured before the whole Councell for hys deliury.

It happened vpon a certayn day, as they were labouring in the Councell for the deliury of the sayd M. Hierome: that the Germaines and Bohemians his enemies, with al force and power resisted against it, crying out, that he should in no case be dismissed. Then start vp one called Doctor Naso, which said vnto the Cardinales, we maruaile much of you most reuerend fathers, that your reuerences will make intercession for such a wicked hereticke, for whose sake we in Boheme with the whole clergy,* haue suffered much trouble & mischief, and peradventure your fatherhoodes shall suffer: and I greatly feare least that you haue receiued some rewardes, eyther of y^e king of Boheme or of these heretickes. When as the Cardinales were thus rebuked, they discharged themselues of mayster Hieromes cause and matter.

Then his enemies aforesaid,* obtayned to haue other iudges appointed, as the Patriarcke of Constantinople, & a Germaine doctour, forsomuch as they did knowe that the Patriarch was a greuous enemy vnto M. Hierome, because he being before appoynted iudge by the Councell, had condemned Iohn Hus vnto death.

But M. Hierome would not aunswere them in prison requiring to haue open audience, because he woulde there finally declare vnto them hys minde, neyther would he by any meanes consent vnto those priuate iudges. Whereupon the Presidents of y^e Councell thinking y^t the sayd M. Hierome woulde renue hys recantation, before the sayd audieuce and confirme the same: did graunt him open audiēce.

In the yeare of our Lord,* 1416. the 25. day of May, which was the Saterdag before the Ascen•ion of our Lord the sayd M. Hierom was brought vnto open audience before the whole Councell,* to the great Cathedrall church of Constance, whereas by the Commissioners of the Councell, in the behalfe of hys foresayd enemies, there was laid agaynst him of new. C. and vii. Articles, to the intent that he should not scape the snare of death, which they prouided and layd for him: in so much as the iudges had before declared that by the saying of the witnesses it was already concluded in the same audience. The day aforesayd, from morning vntill noone, he aunswered vnto more then 40. Articles, most subtiltie objected agaynst him: denying that he held or mayntayned any such articles as were either hurtfull or false,* & affirming y^e those witnesses had deposed thē agaynst him falsly and slaunderously as his most cruel and mortall enemies. In the same Session they had not yet proceeded vnto death, because that the noone time drew so fast on, that he could not answere vnto the Articles. Wherefore for lacke of time sufficient to aunswere vnto the residue of the Articles, there was an other time appoynted, which was the third day after the foresaid Saterdag, before the Ascension of our Lord, at whiche time againe early in the morning, hee was brought vnto the sayde Cathedrall Church to answere vnto all the residue the Articles.

In all which articles, as well those which he had aunswered vnto the Saterdag before: as in the residue, he clea'ed himselfe very learnedly,* refelling his aduersaries (who had no cause) but onely of malice & displeasure were set agaynst him, & did him great wrong) in suche sort that they were themselues astonyed at his oration, and refutation of their testimonies brought agaynst him, and with shame enough were put to silence: As when one of them had demanded of him, what he thought by y^e sacrament of the aul'tar: He answered, before consecration (sayd he) it is bread & wine: after the consecration it is the true body and bloud of Christ, adding withall moe wordes according to theyr catholicke fayth. Then an other rising vp, Hierome, sayde he: there goeth a great rumor of thee, that thou shouldest hold, bread to remain vpon the aultar. To whom he pleasantly answered, saying: that he beleued bread to be at the Bakers. At which wordes being spoken, one of the Dominicke Friers fumishly tooke on and sayd, what? doest y^e Page 635 deny, that no man doubteth of? Whose peuishe sausines, Hierome w^t these words did well repress: holde thy peace (said he) thou hipocrite And thus the monke being nipped in the head, sate downe dumme. After whom started vp an other, who with a loude voyce cryed out: I sweare (sayd he) by my conscience, that to be true, that thou doest deny. To whom sayd Hierome agayne, speaking in latine: Heus inquit, sic iurare per conscientiam tutissima fallendi via est. That is, thus to sweare by your conscience, is the next way to deceiue. An other there was, a spitefull and a bitter enemy of his, whom he called by no other name then dogge, or asse. After he had thus refuted them: one after an other, that they could finde no crime against him, neyther in this matter nor in anye other, they were all driuen to keepe silence.

This done, then were the witnesses called for, who cōming in presence, gaue testimony vnto the Articles before produced. By reason wherof, y^e innocent cause of Hierome was oppressed, and began in the councell to be concluded. Then Hierome rising vp begā to speak, forsomuch (sayth he) as you haue heard mine aduersaries so diligētly hether to, conuenient it is, that you should also nowe heare me to speake for my selfe. Whereupon w^t much difficultie, at last audience was geuē in y^e Councell for hym to say his mind Which being granted, he from morning to noon continuyng, entreated of diuers and sondry matters, with great learning and eloquēce. Who first beginning with his praier to God, be sought him to geue him spirite, habilitie and vtterance, which might most tend to the profite & saluation of his own soule. And so entring into hys Oration.

I Know sayth he, reuerend Lords, y^t there haue bene many excellēt men, which haue suffered much otherwise thē they haue deserued, being oppressed with false witnesses, & condemned with wrong iudgementes. And so beginning with Socrates he declared howe hee was vniustly condemned of hys countrimen,* neither woulde he escape when hee might: taking from vs the feare of two thinges, whiche seeme most bitter to men, to wit, of prisonment and death. Then he inferred the captiuitie of Plato,* the banishment of Anaxagoras, and the tormentes of Zeno. Moreouer he brought in the wrongfull condemnation of many gentiles as the banishment of Rupilius: reciting also the vnworthy death of Boetius and of others, whom Boetius himselfe doth write of.

From thence he came to the examples of the Hebrues, and first began with Moyses the deliuerer of the people, & the law geuer,* how he was oftentimes slaundered of hys people as being a seducer and contemner of the people. Io|seph also, sayth he, for enuy, was sold of hys brethren, and for false suspicion of whoredome,* was cast into bandes. Be|sides these, he reciteth Esayas, Daniell, and almost all the Prophetes, who as contemnners of god, and seditious persons, were oppressed with wrongfull condemnation. Frō thence he proceeded to the iudgement of Susanna, and of diuers other besides, who being good and holy men, yet were they vniustly cast away with wrongfull sentence. At the length he came to Iohn Baptist,* and so in long processe he descended vnto our sauour, declaring how it was euident to all men, by what false witnesses both he and Iohn Baptist, were condemned. Moreouer how Stephen was slayne by the Colledge of the priestes,* and how all the Apostles were condemned to death, not as good men but as seditious styrrers vp of the people, and contemnners of the Gods, and euil doers. It is vniust sayth he, vniustly to be condemned one priest of an other, and yet he proued that y^e same hath so happened most vniustly in that Councell of Priestes. These thinges did he discourse at large, w^t marueilous eloquēce, and with singuler admiration of all that heard hym.

*And forasmuch as all the whol summe of the cause dyd rest only in the witnesses, by many reasons he proued that no credite was to be geuen vnto them, especially seing they spake all thinges of no truth, but onely of hatred malice, & enuy. And so prosecuting the matter, so liuely and expressely he opened vnto them the causes of their hatred, that hee had almost perswaded them. So liuely and likely their hatred was detected, that almost no trust was geuen to their testimonies, saue onely for the cause and quarrell wherein they stood touching the popes doctrine. All mens mindes here were moued and bending to mercye towards hym. For he told them how that he of hys owne accord came vp to the Councell, and to purge hymselfe he did open vnto them all hys life and doinges, being full of vertue & godlines. This was (sayth he) the old maner of auncient and learned mē and most holy Elders, that in matters of fayth they did differ many times in argumentes, not to destroy the fayth, but to finde out the veritie. So did Augustine and Hierome dissent, not onely being diuers, but also contrary one from the other & yet w^tout al suspicion of heresy.

All this while the popes holy Councell did wayt still, when he would beginne to excuse himselfe, and to retracte those thinges, whiche were objected agaynst him, and to craue pardon of the Councell. But he persisting still in hys constant oration, did acknowledge no error, nor gaue any signification of retraction.

At last entring into the prayse & commendation of M. Iohn Hus,* he affirmed that he was a good, iust, and holy man, and much vnworthy that death, whiche he did suffer. Whom he did know from his youth vpward, to be neither fornicator, drunkard, neither any euill or vicious person: but a chaste & sober man, & a iust and true preacher of y^e holy Gospell: and whatsoever things mayster Iohn Hus and Wicklyff had holden or written specially agaynst the abuse and pompe of the clergie, he would affirme euen vnto the death, that they were holy and blessed men, and that in all pointes of the Catholicke fayth, he doth beleue as the holy Catholicke Church doth hold or beleue. And finally he did conclude that al such articles, as Iohn Wickleffe & Iohn Hus had written & put forth agaynst y^e enormities, pompe and disorder of the Prelates, he would firmly & steadfastly, without recantation, hold & defend euē vnto the death, And last of all, he added y^t al the sinnes that euer he had cōmitted, did not so much gnaw and trouble his conscience, as did y^t onely sinne, whiche he had committed in that most pestiferous fact, when as in his recantation, he had vniust^ly spoken against that good and holy man & his doctrine, & specially in cōsenting vnto his wicked cōdēnation concluding y^t he did vtterly reuoke & deny that wicked recantatiō which he had made in that most cursed place,* & that he dyd it through weakenes of hart and feare of death: And moreuer that whatsoever thing he hath spokē against that blessed man, he hath altogether lyed vpō him, and that he doth repent him with his whole hart, that euer he did it.

And at the hearing hereof, the hartes of y^e hearers were not a little sory. For they wished and desired greatly that such a singular man shold be saued if otherwise their blind superstition would haue suffered it.* But he continued still in his prefixed sentence, seeming to desire rather death then lyfe. And persisting in the prayse of Iohn Husse, he added moreouer, that he neuer mayntayned any doctrine agaynst the state of the Church, but onely spake agaynst the abuses of the clergie, against the pride, pompe and excesse of the Prelates. For somuch as y^e patrimonies of the churches were first geuen for the poore, then for hospitality and thirdly to the reparations of the Churches: it was a grieve to that good man (sayd he) to see the same misspent and cast away vpon harlots, great feastings, and keping of horses and dogges, vpō gorgeous apparell and such other things vnseming Christian Religion. And herein he sheweth him selfe marueilous eloquent: yea neuer more.*

And when his oration was interrupted many tymes by diuers of them, carping his sentences as he was in spea'king: yet was there none of all those that interrupted hym which scaped vnblanckt, but he brought them all to confusion, and put them to silence. When any noise began, he cea'sed to speake, & after began againe, proceeding in his Oration and desiring them to geue him leaue a while to speak whō they hereafter should heare no more.* neither yet was his mind euer dashed at all these noyses and tumults.

And thys was marueilous in him to behold, notwithstanding he continued in strait prison, 340. dayes, hauing neither booke, nor almost light to read by: yet how admirably his memory serued him: Declaring howe all those paynes of his strait handling, did not somuch greeue him, as he did wonder rather to see their vnkind humanitie towardes him.

When he had spoken these and many other thinges as touching the prayse of Iohn Wickleffe, & Iohn Hus, they which sat in the Councell, whispered together, saying: by these his wordes it appeareth that he is at a poynt w^t hym selfe. Then was he agayne caried into prison, & greeuously settered by the hands,* armes and feete with great chaines and fetters of yron.

The Saterdag next before the Ascension day, early in the morning he was brought with a great number of armed men vnto the Cathedral Church before the open congregation, to haue his iudgement geuen hym. There they exhorted him, that those thinges which he had before spokē in the open audience, as is aforesayde touching: he prayse and commendation of M. Iohn Wickleffe, and M. Iohn Hus, confirming and establishing their doctrine, he would y^t recant the same: but he merueilous stoutly without all feare, spake agaynst them, & amōgst other thinges said vnto them: I take God to my witnes, and I protest here before Page 636 you all, that I do beleue and holde the articles of the fayth,* as the holy Catholicke Church doth hold and beleue the same: but for this cause shall I now be condemned, for that I will not consent with you vnto the condemnation of those most holy and blessed men aforesayd, whome you haue most wickedly condemned for certaine articles, detesting and abhorring your wicked and abhominable life. Then he confessed there before them all his beliefe, and vt'tered many thinges very profoundly and eloquently, in so much that all men there present, could not sufficiently cōmend & prayse hys great eloquēce & excellent learning and by no means could they induce or perswade him to recant.

Then a certayne bishop named the Bishop of Landy made a certayne sermon exhortatiue agaynst M. Hierome perswading to his condemnation.

After the Byshop had ended the sayd sermon, M. Hierome sayd agayn vnto them: You shall condemne me wickedly and vniustly.* But I after my death will leaue a remorse in your conscience, and a nayle in your hartes, ET CITO VOS OMNES, VT RESPONDEATIS MIHI CORAM ALTISSIMO ET IVSTISSIMO IVDICE POST CENTVM ANNOS: that is. And here I cite you to aunswere vnto me before the most high and iust Iudge, within a C. yeares.

No penne can sufficiently write or note those thinges which he most eloquently, profoundly, & Philosophically had spoken in the sayd audience, neither can anye tongue sufficiently declare y^e same, wheerfore I haue but onely touched here the superficiall matter of his talke, partly, & not wholly noting the same. Finally, when as by no meanes he might be perswaded to recant the premisses, immediately euen in his presence, the sentence & iudgement of hys concondemnation was geuen against him, & read before him.

*IN the name of God Amen. Christ our God and our Sauour being the true vyne, whose father is the husbandman, taught hys Disciples and all other faythful men, saying: If anymā dwel not in me, let him be cast out as a bow or braunch, & let him wither and dry. &c. The doctrine and preceptes of which most excellent doctor and mayster, this most sacred Synode of Constance, executing & following in the cause of inquisition agaynst hereticks, being moued by this said sacred Sinode, through report, publicke same, and open infamation: proceedeth agaynst Hierome of Prage, Mayster of Arte, lay man. By the Actes & processes of whose cause it appeareth that the sayd mayster Hierome hath holdē, mayntayned, and taught diuers Articles hereticall and erroneous, lately reproued and condemned by the holy fathers, some being very blasphemous, other some offēding godly cares, & many temerarious & seditious which haue bene affirmed, mayntayned, preached and taught by the men of most damnable memory I. Wickleffe & Iohn Hus, the which are also written in diuers of their workes & books. Which articles of doctrine and books of the sayd Iohn Hus and Wickleffe together with their memory, and the person of the sayd Iohn Hus, were by the sayd sacred Synode condemned of heresie. The which sentence of condemnation this Hierome afterward during y^t time of inquisition, acknowledged in the sayd sacred Synode, & approued the true Catholicke & Apostolicke faith, thereunto consenting, accursing all heresie, specially that whereof he was enfamed, & confessed himself to be infamed & that which in times past I. Hus & I. Wickleffe maintained & taught in their works, sermōs & books: for y^e which the sayd Wickleffe & Hus together with theyr doctrine and errors, were by the sayd sacred Synode as hereticall, condemned. The condemnatiōs of all which the premisses, he did openly professe and allow, and did sweare that he wold perseuere and continue in the veritie of that fayth. And if that he shold presume at any time to hold opiniō or preach contrary thereunto, that he would submitte himselfe to the triall and truth of the Canons, and be bound to perpetual punishment. And this his profession writtē with his own hand, he deliuered vp into the holy Councell. Many daies after hys sayd profession and abiuration, as a dogge returning vnto hys vomitie, to y^e intent he might openly vomit vp the most pestilent poyson whiche had long lurked and laien hid in his brest, he required and desired that he might be openly heard before the Councell. The whiche being graunted vnto him, he affirmed, sayd and professed before the whole Synode, being publickely gathered together, y^t he had wickedly consented and agreed to the sentence & iudgement of the condemnation of the said Wickleffe and Hus, and that he had most shamefully lyed in approuing and allowing the sayd sentēce, neyther was he ashamed to confesse that he had lyed: yea he did also reuoke and recant his confession, approbation and protestation, which he had made vpon their condemnation, affirming that he neuer at any tyme had read any errours or heresie in the bookes & treatises of the said Wickleffe and Hus. Albeit he had before confessed it, and it is euidently proued that he did dilligently study, read and preache their bookes, wherein it is manifest that theyr are containyd many erroures and heresies. Also the sayd Mayster Hierome did professe as touching

Page 637 the Sacrament of the aulter, and the transubstantiation of the bread into the body of Christ, that he doth hold & beleue as the church doth hold & beleue, saying also that he doth geue more credit vnto S. Augustine, and the other Doctors of the Church, then vnto Wickliffe and Hus. It appereth moreouer by the premisses, that the sayd Ierom is an adherent & maintainer of the said Wickliffe & Hus, & theyr errors, and both is and hath bene a fauourer of them. Wherefore the said sacred Synode determineth the sayd M. Hierome as a rotten and withered braunch not growing vpon the vine, to be cut of and cast out. The sayd Synode also pronounceth, declareth & condemneth him as an heretick, and drowned in all kinde of heresies, excommunicate and accursed, leauing him vnto the arbitrement and iudgement of the secular iudge,* to receiue iust and due punishment, according to the quality of so great an offence: The sayd sacred Synode notwithstanding intreating that the sayd iudge would moderate his sentence of iudgemēt with out perill of death.

*The which sentence so geuen before his face, & ended. A great & lōg miter of paper was brought vnto him, pain'ted about with red deuils: the whiche when he beheld and saw, throwing away his hood vpon the ground amongst the Prelates, he tooke the miter, and put it vpon his head: saying, Our Lorde Iesu Christ, when as he shoulde suffer death for me most wretched sinner, did weare a crowne of thorne vpon his head: and I for his sake in stede of that crowne, will willingly weare this miter and cappe. Afterward he was layd hold of by the secular power.

After that he was ledde out of the sayde Church to the place of execution, when he was going out of the Churche with a cherefull coūtenance & a loud voyce lifting his eyes vp into heauen,* he began to sing Credo in vnum Deum, as it is accustomed to be song in y^e church. Afterward as he passed a long, he did sing some Canticles of the Church. The which being ended, in the entring out of the gate of the city, as men go vnto Gotthlehem, he did sing this himne, faelix namque.* And that respond being ended, after he came to the place of execution where as Maister Iohn Hus before had suffred death innocently, kneeling downe before an image which was like vnto the picture of M. Iohn Hus, which was there prepared to burne M. Hierom, he made a certayne deuout prayer.

While he was thus praying, the tormentors tooke him vp and lifting him vp from the ground,* spoyled him of all his garmentes, and left him naked, and afterward girded him about the loynes with a linnen cloth, and bound him fast with cordes and chaynes of Iron to the sayde Image, whiche was made fast vnto the earth: and so standinge vpon the ground, when as they beganne to lay the woode about him,* he songe Salue festa dies. And when the himne was ended, he songe agayne with a loude voyce, Credo in vnum Deum, vnto the end. That being ended, he sayde vnto the people in the Germaine tounge in effect as foloweth. Dearely beloued children,* euen as I haue now song, so do I beleue and none otherwise. And this Creede is my whole fayth: notwithstanding nowe I dye for this cause, because I would not consent, and agree to the council, and with them affirme and hold that maister Iohn Hus,* was by thē holily and iustly condemned: For I did know well enough that he was a true preacher of the Gospell of Iesu Christ.

After that he was compassed in with the wood vp to the crowne of the head, they cast all his garments vpō y^e wood also, and with a firebrand they set it on fire. The which being once fired, he began to sing with a loud voyce: In manus tuas domine commendo spiritum meum when that was ended, and that he began vehemently to burne, he sayd in the vulgar Bohemian tongue: * O Lord God father almighty, haue mercy vpon me and be mercifull vnto mine offēces, for thou knowest how y^e sincerely I haue loued thy trueth. Then his voyce by the vehemency of the fire, was choked & stopped, that it was no longer heard, but he moued continually his mouth and lips, as though he had still prayed or spoken within himselfe.

When as in a maner his whole body w^t his beard was burned round about, and that there appeared through the great burning vpon his body certayne great bladders, as big as an egge, yet he continually very strongly & stoutlye moued, & shook his head & mouth, by the space almost of one quarter of an houre. So burning in the fire, he liued w^t great paine & Martyrdome, whiles one might easily haue gone from S. Clementes ouer the bridge, vnto our Lady Church: he was of suche a stout and strong nature. After that he was thus deade in the fire, by and by they brought his bedding, his strawbed, his bootes, his hood, & all other thinges that he had in the prison, and burned them all to ashes in the same fire. The which ashes, after that the fire was out, they did diligently gather together, and cary thē in a cart, and cast them into the riuer of Rheine, which ran hard by the City.

That man whiche was the true reporter hereof,* and which testified vnto vs the actes and doinges about the condemnation Maister Hierome, and sent the same vnto vs to Prage in writinge, doth thus conclude: All these thinges (sayth he) I did beholde, see and heare to be done in this forme & maner. And if any man do tell you the contrary, do not credite him, for al those things which happened vnto him, when he came toward Constance, and also at his first comming vnto Constance of his own free well, and afterward when he was brought bounde vnto Constance, as is aforesay, I my selfe did see and perfectly beholde: and for a perpetuall memory thereof to be had for euer, I haue directed the same vnto you, not lying or falsifying any poynte thereof,* as he which is the searcher of all mennes hartes can beare me witnesse: willing rather to sustaine the note of ignoraunce & rudenesse of stile, to beare witnesse vnto the trueth, then I would by any meanes bee compelled by tickling or flattring the cares of the hearers, with fayned and cloked speach to swerue or goe aside from the truth,

Thus end the tragicall histories of M. Iohn Hus, and M. Hierom of Prage, faythfully gathered and collected by a certain Bohemian, being a present witnes and beholder of the same, written and compiled first in Latine, & so sene by the said Bohemian into his country of Boheme: and agayne translated out of the Latine with like fidelitye, into our English tounge.

In the meane time while Maister Hierome was in this trouble, and before the Councell, the nobles and Lordes of Boheme and of Morauia (but not a little agreed thereat) directed theyr letters vnto this barbarous Councell of popishe murderers, in tenour and forme of wordes as followeth.

The letter of the 54. Nobles of Morauia written vnto the Councell of Constaunce in the defence of Mayster Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage.

☞ To the right reuerend Fathers and Lordes in Christ, the Lordes, Cardinals, Patriarkes, Primates, Archbishops, Bishops, Ambassadors, Doctors, & Maysters, and to the whole Councell Constaunce. We the Nobles, Lordes, Knightes and Esquyres, of the famous Marquesdome of Morauia, wishe the desyre of al goodnes, and the obseruation of the commaundementes of our Lord Iesu Christ.

Forso much as euery man both by the law of nature, and also by Gods law, is commaunded to doe that vnto an other man, which he woulde haue done vnto himselfe, and is forbidden to do that thing vnto an other, which he would not haue done vnto himselfe, as our Sauour sayth: all things whatsoever you wyll that men should do vnto you,* the same doe you vnto thē, for this is the law and the Prophetes, yea the lawe is fulfilled in this one poynt: thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy self:.* We therefore (God being our author) hauing respect as much as in vs lieth vnto the said law of God: & the loue of our neighbor, before did send our letters vnto Constaunce for our dearelye beloued frende of good memorye Mayster Iohn Husse Bachelor of Diuinitye and Preacher of the Gospell. Whome of late in the Councell of Constaunce (wee knowe not with what spirite beeing ledde) you haue condemned as an obstinate hereticke: neither hauing confessed any thing, neither being lawfully conuict as were expediēt: hauing no errors or heresies declared or layde agaynst him, but onely at the sinister, false and importune accusations, suggestiōs and instigations of his mortall enemies, and the traytours of our kingdome and Marquesdome of Morauia. And being thus vnmercifully condemned, you haue slayne him with most shamefull and cruell death: to the perpetuall shame and infamy of our most christian kingdome of Boheme, and the famous Marquesdome of Morauia (as we haue written vnto Constance, vnto the most noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Sigismund king of Romaynes, and of Hungary, the Heyre and Successor of our kingdom) the which was also read and published in your congregations,* whiche wee will here also haue enrolled: and haue burned him, as it is reported, in the reproch and contempt of vs.

Wherefore we haue thought good, euen now to direct our letters patentes to your reuerences now present, in the behalfe of Maister Iohn Hus, openly professing and protesting both wyth Page 638 hart and mouth, that he the sayd Mayster Iohn Hus, was a iust, good and Catholicke man, and a long season worthely commended and allowed in our kingdome, for his life and conuersation. He also preached and taught vs and our subiectes the law of the Gospell, and of the holy Prophets, and the bookes of the olde and new Testament, according to the exposition of the holy Doctors approued by the church, & left many Monumēts in writing, most constantly detesting and abhorring all errors and and heresy, continually admonishing both vs and all faithfull christians to do the like, diligently exhorting all men as muche as in him lay by hys words, writings and trauel, vnto quietnesse and concord: so that vsing all the diligence that we might, we neuer heard or coulde vnderstand, that Mayster Iohn Hus had preached, taught or by any meanes affirmed any error or heresy in his Sermons, or that by any maner of meanes he had offended vs or our subiectes, either by word of deed,* but that he alwayes led a quiet and a godly life in Christ, exhorting all men diligently, both by his word and workes, as much as he might, to obserue and keepe the law of the Gospel, and the institutiōs of the holy fathers, after the preaching of our holy mother the church, & to the edifying of mens soules. Neither did these premisses, which you had so perpetrated to the reproch both of vs and our kingdom and Marquesdom, suffice & content you, but that also without all mercy and piety, you haue apprehended, imprisoned, and condemned, and euen now peradventure, like as you did Mayster Iohn Hus, you haue most cruelly murdered the worshipfull man, Mayster Ierome of Prage, a man abounding in eloquence,* Mayster of the seuen liberall artes, and a famous Philosopher, not being seene, heard, examined, neither conuict: but onely at the sinister and false accusation of hys and our accusers and betrayers.

Furthermore, it is come to our knowledge and vnderstanding (which we do not without great grieffe rehearse) as we may also euidently gather by your writings, how that certayne detractors, odible both to God and men, priuy enuyers and betrayers, haue wickedly and greuously, albeit falsly and trayterously, accused vs, our kingdome, and Marquesdome aforesayde, before you in your councell, that in the sayde kingdome of Boheme and Marquescome of Morauia, diuers errors are sprong vp, which haue greuously and manifoldely infected both our hartes, and also the hartes of many faythfull men: in so much, that without a speedy stop or stay of correction, the sayd kingdome and Marquesdome together with the faythfull Christians therein, should incurre an irrecuperable losse and ruine of theyr soules.

These cruell and pernicious iniuries which are layd vnto vs, and to our sayd kingdome and Marquesdome,* albeit most falsly & slaunderously, howe may we suffer? for so much as through the grace of God (when in a maner all other kingdomes of the world haue oftentimes wauered, making Schismes and Antipapes) our most Christian kingdome of Boheme, and most noble Marquesdome of Morauia, since the time they did receiue the Catholicke fayth of our Lord Iesus Christ, as a most perfecte * quadrant haue alwayes without reproofe sticke vnto the Church of Rome, and haue sincerely done theyr true obedience. Also with how greate costes and charges and great trauell, with what worship and due reuerence they haue reuerenced the holy mother the church and her pastors, by theyr princes and faythfully subiects, it is more manifest then the day light vnto the whole world: and your selues, if you will confesse the truth, can witnes the same also.

Wherefore that we, according to the mind of the Apostle, may procure honest and good thinges, not onely before God but before men also, and least by neglecting the famous renowne of the kingdom and Marquesdom, we be fouñd cruel towards our neighbours: hauing a stedfast hope, a pure and sincere conscience and intent, and a certayne true fayth in Christ Iesu our Lord, by the tenour of these we signify and declare vnto your fatherhoods, & to all faythfull Christians, openly professing both with hart and mouth, that whatsoever man, of what estate, preheminance, dignity, condition, degree, or religion so euer he be, which hath sayd or affirmed, eyther doth say or affirme, that in the sayd kingdome of Boheme and Marquesdome of Morauia, heresydes haue sprong vp which haue infected vs and other faythfull Christians, as is aforesayd (the onely person of our most noble prince and Lord, Sigismund king of Romaines and of Hungary. &c. our Lord and heire successor, being set apart, whom we trust and beleue, not to be guilty in the premisses) all and euery such man (as is aforesaid) doth lye fasly vpon his head, as a wicked and naughty traytour & betrayer of the sayd kingdome and Marquesdome, and most traiterous vnto vs,* & most pernicious hereticke, the sonne of all malice and wickednesse, yea and of the deuill himselfe, who is a lyar and the father of all lyes.

Notwithstanding, we for this present committing the foresayd iniuries vnto God, vnto whom vengeance perteyneth, who will also abundantly reward workers of iniquity, will prosecute them more amply before him whom God shall appoynt in the Apostolicke sea, to gouerne his holy Church as the onely and vndoubted Pastour. Vnto whom God willing, we exhibiting our due reuerence & obedience as faythfull children, in those things which are lawfull,* honest, and agreeable to reason and the law of God, wil make our request and petition, that speedy remedy may be prouided for vs, our sayde kingdome and Marquesdome, vpon the premises, according to the law of our Lord Iesus Christ, and the institutions of the holy fathers. The premises notwithstanding we setting apart all feare and mens ordinances prouided to the contrary, will maynetayne and defend the law of our Lord Iesus Christ, and the deuout, humble and constant preachers thereof, euen to the shedding of our bloud.

Dated at Sternberg, in the yeare of our Lord. 1415. vpon S. Wēceslaus day, Martyr of our Lord Iesu Christ.

Round about the sayd letters there were 54. Seales, hanging and their names subscribed, whose Seales they were. The names of which noble men, I thought it good here to annex with all, partly for the more credite of that hath bene sayd, partly also for examples sake, to the intent that our noble men and gentlemen in this our Realme of England, now liuing in this cleare light of the Gospell, may by their example vnderstand, that if they ioyne themselues with the Gospell of Iesus, zealouslye and as they should do, yet are they neither the first, nor the most that so haue done before them: if not, yet the trueth may here remayne in the story to theyr shame, or els to theyr instruction, seing so many noble and worthy gentlemen, within the small kingdome of Bohemia, to be so forward in those so darcke dayes and among so many enemyes 200. yeares agoe, to take part with Christ: And yet our Gentlemē here in such long cōtinuance of time, being so diligētly taught, are neyther in number nor in zeale to thē to be compared, but will still take part, contrary both to Christ, and to the example of these nobles whose names they may see & read here folowing.

After these things thus declared and discoursed cōcerning the history of Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, the order of place and countrye next woulde require, consequently to infer and comprehend the great troubles & perturbations, which happened after & vpō the death of these men in the coūtry of Boheme: but the order of time calleth me backe, first to other matters here of our owne country, which passed in y^e meane time with vs in England. Which things being taken by the way and finished, we will (christ Page 639 willing) afterward returne to the tractation hereof, to pro|secute the troubles and conflictes of the Bohemians, with other things beside perteyning to the latter end of the coūcell of constance, and chosing of Pope Martin, as the order of yeares and time shall require.

*Ye heard before pag. 588. how after the death of Thomas Arundell Archb. of Caunt. succeeded Henry Chichesley. an. 1414. and sate 25. yeres. In whose time was much trouble and great affliction of good mē here in England: of whom many were compelled to abiure, some we burned, diuers were driuē to exile. Wherof partly now to entreat, as we finde them in registers & historyes recorded, we will first begin with Iohn Claydon Currier of Londō, & Richard Turming, whom Rob. Fabian, doth falsly affirm to be burned in the yeare where in Syr Roger Acton and M. Browne suffered: who in deed suffered not before the secōd yeare of Henry Chichesley being Archb. of Caunt. whiche was an. 1413. The history of which Iohn Claydon, in the Registers is thus declared.

The story of Iohn Claydon Currier, and of R. Turming Baker.

THE 17. of August 1415. did personally appeare I. Claydon Currier of London (arrested by the Mayor of the sayd City for the suspition of heresy) before Henry Archbishop of Caunterbury, in Saynt Paules Church: whiche Iohn (being obiected to him by the Archbishop, that in y^e City of London & other places of the prouince of Canterbury,* he was suspected by diuers godly and learned mē for heresy, and to be contrary to the catholick fayth, and determinatiō of the church) did openly confesse and denyed not, but that he had bene for the space of xx. yeres, suspected both about the City of London, & also in the prouince of Caunt. and specially of the common sort for Lollardy and heresy,* & to be contrary to the catholick fayth and determination of the church of Rome, and defamed of the same all the tyme aforesayd.

In so much that in the time of M. Robert Braybrooke B. of London deceased, he was for the space of two yeares commaunded to the prison of Conwey, for the foresayd defamation and suspition, and for the same cause also he was in prison in the fleete for 3. yeares. Out of which prison he (in the raigne of King Henry the 4.) was brought before Lord Iohn Scarle then Chauncellor to the king,* & there did abiure all heresy and errour. And the sayd Iohn Claydon being asked of the sayd Archbishop whither he did abiure the heresye of which he was suspect before any other: did confesse that in a Conuocation at London in Paules Church before Thomas Arundell late Archbishop deceased, he did abiure all such doctrine which they called heresy and error contrary to the Catholick fayth and determination of the Church, and that he had not onely left such articles and opiniōs, wherin he was defamed, but also did abstaine from all company that were suspected of such opinions so that he should neither geue ayd, helpe, counsell, nor fauor vnto them.

And moreouer, the sayd Iohn was asked by the sayde Archbishop,* whether he euer had in his house since his abiuration, in his keeping, any bookes written in Englishe. Wherunto he confessed that he would not deny, but that he had in his house, and in his keeping many english bookes: for he was arested by the Mayor of the city of London, for such bookes as he had, which bookes (as he thought) were in the Mayors keping.* Upon the which, the Mayor did openly confesse that he had such bookes in his keping, which in his iudgement were the worst and the moste peruerse that euer he did read or see, and one booke that was well bound in red leather of parchment, written in a good english hand: and among the other bookes found with the said Iohn Claydon, the Mayor gaue vp the sayd booke afore the Archbishop. Whereupon the sayde Iohn Claydon being asked of the Archbishop if he knewe that booke,* dyd openly confesse that he knew it very well, because he caused it to be written of his owne costes and charges, for he spēt muche money thereupon since his abiuration. Then was he asked who wrote it. He did aunswere, one called Iohn Grime.

And further being required what the said Iohn Grime was, he aunswered, he coulde not tell. Agayne, being demaunded whether he did euer read the same booke, he dyd confesse that he could not read,* but he had heard the fourth part therof red of one Iohn Fullar. And being asked whether he thought the contentes of that booke to be Catholicke, profitable, good and true, he aunswered that many thinges which he had hearde in the same booke, were both profitable, good and healthful to his soule: and as he sayde, he had great affection to the sayd book, for a Sermon preached at Horsaldowne, that was written in the sayd booke. And being futher asked, whether, since the tyme of hys sayd abiuration, he did commune with one Richard Baker of the City aforesayd, he did answere yea: for the sayde Richard Baker did come often vnto his house to haue cōmunication with him.* And being asked, whether he knew the said Richard to be suspected, and defamed of heresy: he did aunswere agayne that he knew well that the sayd Richard was suspected & defamed of many men and women in the City of Londō,* as one whom they thought to be an hereticke.

Which confession being made, did cause the sayd bookes to be deliuered to maister Robert Gilbert,* Doctour of diuinity: to William Lindewood Doctor of both lawes, and other Clerkes, to be examined, and in the meane time Dauid Beard, Alexander Philip, and Balthasar Mero, were taken for witnesses agaynst him, and were committed to be examined, to Maister Iohn Escourt generall examiner of Canterbury. This done, the Archbishop continued hys Session till Monday next in the same place. Which Monday being come, which was the xx. of the sayd moneth, the sayd Maister Escourt openly and publickely exhibited the witnesses, being openly read before the Archbishop and other Bishops: which being read, then after that were read diuers tractations, founde in the house of the sayde Iohn Claydon: out of the which, being examined, diuers points were gathered and noted for heresies and errors,* and specially out of the booke aforesaid: which booke the said Iohn Claydon confessed by his owne costes to be written and bound, which booke was intituled, the Lanterne of light. In the which and in the other examined, were these Articles vnder written conteyned.

1. First, vpon the text of the Gospell, how the enemy dyd sowe the tares, there is sayd thus: that wicked Antichrist y^e Pope hath sowed among the lawes of Christ, his popish and corrupt decrees, which are of no authoritye, strength, nor valure.

2. That the Archbishops and Bishops, speaking indifferently, are the seates of the beast Antichrist, when he sitteth in thē and raigeth aboue other people in the darck caues of errors and heresy.

3. That the Bishops licence for a man to preach the word of God, is the true caracter of the beast.
i. Antichrist, & therfore simple and faythfull Priestes may preache when they will agaynst the prohibition of that Antichrist, and without licence.

4. That the court of Rome is the chiefe head of Antichrist and the Bishops be the body: * & the new sectes, that is, the monks, canons, and friers, brought in not by Christ, but damnably by the pope, be the venimous & pestiferous tail of Antichrist.

5. That no reprobate is a member of the Church but only such as be elected and predestinate to saluation: * seing the church is no other thing but the congregation of faythfull soules, which doe and will keepe their faith constantly, as well in deed as in word.

6. That Chryst did neuer plante priuate religions in the church, but whilest he liued in this world he did root them out. By which it appeareth that priuate religiōs be vnprofitable branches in the church and to be rooted out.

7. That the materiall churches should not be decked with golde siluer & precious stone sumptuously, but the folowers of the humility of Iesus Christ, ought to worship their Lord God humbly in mean & simple houses, & not in great buildings, as the churches be now a dayes.

8. That there be ij. chiefe causes of the persecution of the christians: * one is the priestes vnlawfull keeping of tēporal and superfluous goods, the other is y^e vnsatiable begging of the friers with their hye buildings.

9. That almes is not geuen vertuously nor lawfully except it be geuen with these 4. conditions: * first vnlesse it be geuen to the honor of God. 2. vnlesse it be geuen of goodes iustly gotten. 3. vnlesse it be geuē to such a person as the geuer therof knoweth to be in charity. And 4. vnles it be geuē to such as haue need and do not dissemble.

10. That the often singing in the church is not founded in the scripture, and therefore it is not lawfull for priestes to occupy thēselues with singing in the Church, but with the study of the law of Christ, and preaching his word.

11. That Iudas did receiue the body of Christ in breade, * & his bloud in wine In the which it doth playnly appeare that after consecration of breade and wine made, the same bread and wine that was before, doth truely remayne on the aultar.

12. That all ecclesiasticall suffrages do profit all vertuous and godly persons indifferently.

Page 64013. That the Popes and the Bishops indulgences be vnprofitable, neither can they profite them, to whom they be geuen by any meanes.

14. That the laity is not bound to obey the prelates what so euer they commaūd, vnles the prelats do watch to geue God a iust account of the soules of them.

15. That Images are not to be sought to by pilgrimages, neither is it lawfull for Christians, to bow theyr knees to them, neither to kisse them, nor to geue them any maner of reuerence. For the which Articles the Archbishoppe with other Bishops, and diuers learned commoning together, first condemned the bookes as hereticall and burned them in fire: * and then because they thought the said Iohn Claydon to be forsworne and fallen into heresy, the Archbishop did proceed to his definitiue sentence against the said Iohn personally appearing before him in iudgement (his cōfessions being read and deposed against him) after this maner.

IN the name of God. Amen. We Henry by the grace of GOD Archbishop of Caunterbury, primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolicke sea, in a certayne cause of hereticall prauity & of relapse into the same, wherupon I. Claidon lay man of the prouince of Caunterbury, was detected, accused and denounced, & in the sayd our prouince of Caunterbury publickely defamed (as by publick fame and common report notoriously to vs hath bene known) first, sitting in iudgement seat & obseruing all things lawfully required in this behalfe, do proceed to the pronouncing of the sentence definitiue in forme as followeth. The name of Christ being inuocated & onely set before our eies, forasmuch as by the actes and thinges enacted, producted, exhibited and confessed before vs, also by diuers signes & euidences we haue found the said Iohn Claydon to haue bene and to be publickly and notoriously relapsed agayne into his former heresye, heretofore by him abiured: according to the merites and desertes of the sayd cause, being of vs diligently searched, weyed and pondered before, to the intēt that the sayd I. Claidon shall not infect other with his scab, by the consent and assent of our reuerend brethrē Richard Bishop of Lōdon, Iohn Bishop of Couentry and Liechfield,  & Steuen Bishop of S. Davids, and of other Doctors as well of diuinity as of both lawes, and also of other discret and learned men assisting vs in this behalfe, do iudge, pronounce, and declare the sayd I. Claydon, to be relapsed agayne into his heresy, which he before did abiure, finally and definitiue appoynting him to be left vnto the secular iudgement, and so do leaue him by these presentes.

Thus Iohn Claidon receiuing his iudgement & condemnation of the Archbishop,  was committed to the secular power, and by them vniustly & vnlawfully was cōmitted to the fire, for that the tēporall magistrate had no such law sufficient for them to burne any suche man for religion condēned of the prelats, as is aboue sufficiently proued & declared pag. 523. But to be short,  Quo iurè quaque iniuria, Iohn Cleydon notwithstanding by the temporall magystrats, not lōg a•ter, was had to smithfield, where meekely he was made a burnt offering vnto the Lord. an. 1415.

The burning of Iohn Claydon, and Richard Turming.

Robert Fabian, and other Chronologers which folow him,* adde also that Richard Turming Baker, of whome mention is made before in the examination of Iohn Claydon, was likewise y^e same time burned with him in smithfield. Albeit in the Register I finde no sentence of condemnation geuen against the sayd Turming, neither yet in the story of S. Albons is there any such metiō of his burning made, but only of the burning of Iohn Claydon aforesaid: wherfore the iudgement hereof I leaue free to the reader. Notwithstanding, concerning the sayd Turming thys is certaine that he was accused vnto the bishops, & no doubt was in their handes, & bands. What afterward was done with him, I refer it vnto the authors.

The next yeare after the burning of these two aforesaid and also of Iohn Hus being burnt at Constaunce, whiche was an. 1416. the Prelates of England seing the dayly increase of the Gospell,* and fearing the ruine of theyr papall kingdome, were busily occupied with all theyr counsel and diligence, to mayntayne the same. Wherefore to make their state and kingdome sure, by statutes, lawes, constitutions, and terrour of punishment, as Thomas Arundell and other Prelates had done before, so the forenamed Henrye Chichesley Archbishop of Canterbury, in his conuocation holden at London, maketh another constitutiō (as though there had not enough bene made before) agaynst the poore Lollardes: the copy and tenor wherof he sendeth abroad, to the bishop of London, and to other his Suffraganes by them to be put in straight execution, conteyning in words as foloweth.

HENry by the grace of God Archbishop of Canterbury,* Primate of all England, and Legate of the chiefest seat: to our reuerēd brother in the Lord Richard, by the grace of God bishop of London, health, & brotherly loue, with con'tinuall increase. Lately in our last conuocation in Sayncte Paules Church in London, being kept by you and other our brethren and clergy of our prouince, we do remember to haue made this order vnderwritten by your consentes, When as among many other our cares this ought to be chiefe, y^t by some meanes we take those heretickes, whiche like foxes lurke & hide thēselues in the Lordes vineyard;* & that the dust of negligēce may be vtterly shakē from our feete and from the feete of our fellow brethren: In thys the sayd conuocation of the Prelats and clergy, we haue ordeined, and that our fellowe brethren, our Suffraganes and Archdeacons of our prouince of Canterbury by thēselues, their Officials or Commissaryes in all their iurisdiction, & euery of their charges in theyr country, twise euery yere at the least, do diligētly enquire of such persons as are suspect of heresy: And that in euery suche their Archdeaconries in euery parish, wherein is reported any hereticks to inhabit, they cause three or more of the honestest mē and best reported of,* to take their othe vpon the holy Euangelist, that if they shall knowe or vnderstand any frequenting either in priuy conuētibles, or els deferring in life or maners frō the common conuersation of other Catholick men, or els that holde any, either heresy or errors, or els that haue any suspected bookes in the English tong, or that do receiue any such persons suspect of heresy and errours into theyr houses, or that be fauorers of them that are inhabitants in any such place, or conuersant with them, or els haue any re'course vnto them: they make certificats of those persons in writing: with all the circumstances wherewith they are suspect, vnto the said our Suffraganes or Archdeacons, or to theyr Commissaryes, so soone, & with as much speede as possibly they can: And that the sayd Archdeacon and euery of their Commissaryes aforesayd: do declare the names of all such persons denounced together with all the circūstāces of thē, the dioces, & places, & secretly vnder theyr seales do send ouer vnto vs the same: And y^t the same diocessans effectually direct forth

And if perhaps they leaue not such persons cōuict vnto the secular court, yet notwithstanding let them commit thē vnto the perpetuall or temporall prisons, as the quality of the cause shall require, vntil the next conuocation of y^r prelates and Clergy of our prouince of Canterbury, there personally to remaine: and that in the same prisons they cause thē to be kept according as the lawe requireth: And that of all and singular the things aforesayd, that is, what inquisition they haue made, and what they haue found, and how in the processe they haue behaued themselves, and what persons so conuict they haue caused to be put in safe keeping, with what diligence or negligence of the Commissaryes aforesayd, with all and all maner of other circumstances premised, and therunto in any wise apperteyning, and Page 641 specially of the abiurations, if in the meane time they shall chaunce to abiure any heresy: that then in the next cōuocation of the Prelates and Clergy vnder the forme aforesayd, they cause the same distinctly and apertly to be certified to vs and our successours: And that they deliuer effectually to the Officiall of our Court, the same processe to remain with them, or els in the register of one court of Canterbury, so that euery one, to whom ••th things appertaineth for the further execution of the same proces, may haue recourse vnto the same officiall, with all effect.

We therefore commaund, that as touching the constitution brought vnto your City & Diocesan, you cause the same in conueniēt place and time to be published, and that in all pointes you both obserue the same your selues and cause it also of others to be diligently obserued: Commaūding furthermore, all and singular our felow brethren and Suffraganes, that they in likewise cause the same to be published throughout all their Cities and Dioces, & both diligently obserue the same themselves, and also cause al others to do the same: and what thing soeuer you shall do in the premisses, that you certify vs betwixt this and the feast of S. Peter ad vincula, next comming, that you duely certify vs of these thinges, by your letters patentes, contayning the same effect, sealed with your seales. Dated at our house in London, the first day of Iuly. an. 1416.

*During the time of this conuocatiō, in the yere aboue sayd, two priestes were presented & brought before the bishops, noted and defamed for hereticks: one named Iohn Barton, vnto whom it was objected by Philip Bishop of Lincolne, that he had bene excommunicated about 6. or 7. yeares before, vpon Articles concerning religion, and yet neither would appeare being cited, nor woulde seeke to be reconciled agayne vnto the Church. Which thinges being so prooued agaynst him, he was committed to the custody of the foresayd Philip Bishoppe of Lincolne, and so to be holden in prison, till he should heare further what should be done.

The other was Robert Chapel, otherwise named Holbech, Chaplain sometime to the Lord Cobham: vnto whō likewise it was objected, that he being vnder the sentence of excommunication about three or foure yeares, yet notwithstanding to the contempt of the keyes, did continue saying Masse, and preaching, & sought not to be recōciled, Chapel denying that he did know any such excommunication geuen out agaynst him. Then was the copy of his excommunicatiō first made by the bishop of Roff. afterward denoūced by y^e Bishop of Lōdon at Paules crosse brought and read before him: & so that done, that Session brake vp for that time, which was about the latter ende of May. an. 1416.

The xij. day of the moneth of Iuly next following, the sayd Chappell appeared agayn before the Archbishop and the Prelates. To whom when it was objected as before, how he had preached without the Bishops licence, in dyuers places,* as at Cobham, at Cowling, and at Shorne, at length he confessing and submitting himself, desired pardō. Which although it was not at the first graunted vnto him, yet at the last the Bishop of Roff. putting in his hands the decree of the canon law. 1. q. 7. cap. Quoties. &c. and causing him to read the same, made him to avoure all his former articles & opinions as hereticall and schismaticall, neuer to holde the same agayne, according to the contentes of the foresayd Canon. Whereupon the sayd Robert being absolved by the authority of the Archb. (saue only that he should not intermeddle with saying Masse, before he had bene dispensed from the Pope himselfe for his irregularity) was enioyned by the Archb. himselfe for his penance, standing at Paules to publish these articles folowing vnto the people, in stead of his confession geuen him to be read.

*In primis, I confesse that Bishops, Priestes, and other Ecclesiasticall persons, hauing no other profession to the contrary, may lawfully haue, receiue, and reteyne landes and possessions temporall, to dispense and dispose the same and the rentes thereof, to the behoofe of themselues or of theyr Church where they dwell, according as semeth good to them.

2. Item, I confesse that it were very vnlawfull, yea rather vniust, that temporal men vpon any occasion, whatsoeuer it be, should take away temporall landes and possessions from the church either vniuersal or particular, to whō they are geuen, the consideration of the abuse of mortall prelates, priest, or other ministers in the Church conuersant (which are mixt together good with bad) abusing the same to the contrary notwithstanding.

3. Item, I confesse that peregrinations to the reliques of saintes and to holy places,* are not prohibited, nor to be cōtemned of any Catholicke, but are auayleable to remission of sinnes, and approued of holy fathers, and worthy to be commended.

4. Item, I confesse that to worship the images of Christ or of any other saynts being set vp in the church, or in any other place is not forbiddē: neither is any cause inductiue of Idolatry, being so vsed as the holy fathers do will them to be worshipped: But rather such images do profit much to the health of Christians, because they do put vs in remēbraūce of the merits of those sayntes, whom they represent and the sight of them doth moone and stirre vp the people to prayers and deuotion.

5. Item,* I confesse that auricular confession vsed in the Church is necessarye for a sinner to the saluation of hys soule, and necessary to be done of such a priest, as is ordeyned by the Church, to heare the confession of the sinner, & to enioyne him penance for the same: without which confession (if it may be had) there is no remission of sinnes to him that is in sinne mortall.

6. Item, I confesse and firmly do hold, that although the Priest be in mortall sinne, yet may he make the bodye of Christ, and minister other Sacramentes and Sacramentals: which neuerthesse are profitable to all the faythfull, whosoeuer receiueth them in fayth and in deuotion of the Church.

7. Item, I confesse that bishops in their own dioces, may forbid, decree, & ordayn vpō reasonable causes, that priests should not preach without theyr speciall licēce, the word of God, and that those that do agaynst the same, should suffer the ecclesiasticall censurs.

8. Item,* I confesse that priuate religiōs as wel of monks canons and other, as also of the begging Friers, being allowed by the church of Rome, are profitable to the vniuer'sall church, and in no meanes contrary to Gods law, but rather founded and authorised thereon.

9. Item, I promise and sweare vpon these holy Euangelies, which I hold here in my hands, that I will hēceforth neuer hold, affirme, nor by any meanes teach any thing cōtrary vnto the premisses either openly or priuately.

After the setting out of the constitution aforesaid in the dayes of the aboue named Henry Chichesley Archbishop of Caunterbury great inquisition hereupon followed in England, and many good men whose harts began to be won to the Gospell, were brought to much vexation and caused outwardly to abiure.

Thus,* while Christ had the inward hartes of men: yet the Catholicke Antichrist would needes possesse their outward bodyes, and make them sing after his song. In the number of whom, being compelled to abiure, besides the o'ther aforesayd was also I. Taylor of the parishe of Saynt Michaels at Duerne. William Iames maister of Art and Phisition, who had long remained in prison, and at length after abiuration, was licēced with his keper, to practise his Phisicke.

Also Ioh. Dwerf, so named for his low stature, which was sent by the Duke of Bedford to the foresayd Chichesley and other bishops to be examined before them in the cōuocation: there he at length reuolting from his doctrine re'canted and did penance.

In like maner Iohn Iourdelay of Lincolnshire,* well commended in the registers for his learning, accused by y^e priestes of Lincoln for a certayn book, which he contrary to the former decree of the bishops did conceale & dyd not exhibite vnto thē,* was therfore enforced to abiure. After whō was brought likewise before the Byshops, one Katharin Dertford a Spinster, who being accused and examined vpon these 3. articles concerning the Sacrament of the popes altar, adoration of Images, and of pilgrimage, answered that she was not able, being vnlearned, to answere to such high matters, neither had she any further skil, but only her Creed and x. commaundements: and so was she committed to the vicar general of the B. of Wint. (for that she was of the same dioces) to be kept and further to be examined of the same. Ex Regist. Hen. Chichesley.

At the same sitting was also brought before the sayde Archb.* and his fellow bishops, by the liuetenant of y^e Tower, the person of Heggely in Lincolneshyre, named M. Robert, who being long kept in the tower, at lēgth by the kinges writte was brought and examined the same tyme vpon the like articles, to witte: touching the sacrament of their aultar, peregrinatiō, adoration of images, & whether it was lawfull for spirituall men to enioy temporall Lordships. &c. To the which articles he answered (saith the Register) doublely and mockingly, saue onely in the sacramēt he semed something more conformable, albeit not yet fully to their contētation.

Wherefore being committed to the custody Page 642 and examination of Richard Bishopp of Lincolne, where in the end he was also induced to submit himselfe.

*The same likewise did W. Henry of Tenterden being suspected and arested for company keping with thē, whom the Bishops called Lollardes, and for hauing suspected bookes.

*Besides these, diuers other there were also which in the same conuocation were conuented, and reuoked theyr opinions, as Iohn Galle a Priest of London, for hauing a booke in English intituled: A booke of the new law. Item, Richard Monke, vicar of Chesham in Lincolnshyre, who submitted himselfe likewise. In this race and number followed moreouer, Bartholomew Cormnonger, Nic, Hoper seruauant to the Lord Cobham. Tho. Granter, with other mo, mentioned in the foresayd register.

Among the rest which were at this time troubled for theyr fayth, was one Radulph Mungin priest, who for the same doctrine was arested and sent vp by the L. Chancellor of England, to the foresayd Arch. and by him committed to Dauid Price, Uicar generall to the B. of London: Where after he had endured 4. moneths in prison, he was by the sayd Dauid presented to the conuocation, agaynst whom diuers articles were obiected.

But for the better explaining of the matter, first here is to be noted, that during the time of this conuocation prouinciall, Pope Martine had sent downe to the Clergye of Englande,  for a subsidye to be gathered of the Church, to mayntayne the Popes warre agaynst the Lolards (so the Papistes did terme them) of Bohemia. Also an other subsidy was demaunded to persecute one Peter Clerke mayster of art of Oxford, who flying out of England, was at y^e councell of Basill, disputing on the Bohemians side. And thirdly, an other subsidy was also required to persecute W. Russell, Warden of the Gray Friers in London, who the same time was fled from England to Rome, to mayntayne his opinion before the Pope, and there escaped out of prison. &c. of whom more largely hereafter (Christ willing) we shall entreat.  In the meane time marke here the preey shiftes of the Pope to hooke in the English mony by all maner of pretences possible.

Thus Rafe Mungyn, the foresayd examine appearing before the bishops in the conuocation, it was articulated agaynst him, * first that he should affirme and hold, not to be lawfull for any Christian to fight and make warre agaynst the heretickes of Bohemia.

Item, it was to him obiected, that he did holde & say, not to be lawfull for any man to haue propriety of goodes, but the same to be cōmon, which he expressly denyed that euer he so sayd or affirmed. Whereby we haue to obserue, how the crafty malice of these aduersaries vseth falsely to collect and surmise of men, what they neuer spake, wherby to oppresse them wrongfully, whom by playne trueth they cannot expugne.

Moreouer, they obiected agaynst him, that he shoulde keepe company with Mayster Clarke aforesayde, and also that he dispersed in the City of London, certayn bookes of Iohn Wickliffe and of Peter Clarke, namely, the booke Trialogus and the Gospels of Iohn Wickleffe. * &c. He was charged moreouer to haue spoken agaynst the Popes indulgences, for that the Pope had no more power to geue indulgences, then he had.

Upon these and other such Articles objected, the sayde Mungyn being asked if he would reuoke, aunswered that it seemed to him not iust or meet so to doe, whiche dyd not know himself guilty of any heresy. Thus he being respited for that time, was cōmitted to prison till the next sitting, who then being called diuers and sundry times afterward before the Bishops, after long inquisition and straight examination made,* also depositions brought in agaynst him so much as they could search out, he notwithstanding styll denyed as before, to recant. Wherefore the foresayd Henry the Archbishop, proceeding to his sentence definitiue, condemned him to perpetuall prison.

After whose condemnation, the sonday next folowing, the recantation of Tho. Granter,* and of Richard Monke Priestes aboue mentioned, were openly read at Paules crosse, the Byshop of Rochester the same time preached at the sayd crosse. The tenour of whose recantation, with his Articles in the same expressed, here vnder foloweth.

IN the name of God. Before you my Lord of Canterbury, and all you my Lords here being present, & afore you all here gathered at this time, I Thomas Granter priest vnworthy, dwelling in this City of Londō, feeling & vnderstanding, that afore this time I affirmed open errours and heresies, saying, beleuing, and affirming within thys City, that he that Christian men callen Pope, is not verye Pope, ner Gods vicary in earth, but I sayd he was Antichrist. Also I sayd, beleued, and affirmed, that after the sacramentall wordes sayd by a Priest in the Masse, there remayneth materiall bread and wine, and is not turned into Christes body and his bloud. Also I said and affirmed that it was not for to doe in no wise, to goe on pilgrimage, but it was better I sayd to abide at home and beate the stooles with theyr heeles, for it was, I sayde, but tree & stone that they soughten. Also I sayde and affirmed that I held no Scripture catholicke ner holy, but onely that is conteyned in the Bible. For the Legendes and liues of Sayntes, I held hem nought, and the miracles written of hem I helde vntrue. Because of which errours and heresies I was tofore M. Dauby Price, Uicar generall of my Lord of London, and since tofore you my Lord of Caunterbury & your brethren in your councell prouinciall, & by you fully informed, which so sayd, mine affirming, beleuing & teaching, bene open errors and heresies, and contrarious to the determination of the chirch of Rome. Wherefore I willing to follow and sewe the doctrine of holy chirch, and depart fro all maner errors and heresy, and turne with good will & hart to y^e onehead of the chirch, cōsidering that holye chirch shitteth ner closeth not her bosome to him that will turne agayne, ne God will not the death of a sinner, but rather he ben turned & liue: With a pure hart I confesse, detest, & despise my sayd errours and heresies, and the sayd opinions I confesse as heresies and errours, to the fayth of the Chirch of Rome, & to all vniuersally holy Chirch repugnaunt. And therfore these sayd opinions in speciall, and all other errours and heresies, doctrines and opiniōs, •yen y^e fayth of the Church and the determination of the Church of Rome, I abiure and forswear, here tofore you all, and sweare by these holy Gospels by me bodily touched, that from henceforth I shall neuer hold teach, ne preach errorr errours, heresie, ne heresies, nor false doctrine agaynst the faith of holy chirch,* & determination of the chirch of Rome ner none such thing I shall obstinately defend, ne any man holding or teaching such maner thinges by me or an other person, openly or priuily I shal defend. I shall neuer after thys tyme be receitor, fautor, counsellor, or defendor of hereticks, or of any person suspect of heresie, ner I shal trow to him: ner wittingly fellaship with him, ner yeue him counseil, fauour, yiftes, ne cōfort. And if I know any heretickes, or of heresie, or of such false opinions, anye person suspect, or anye man or woman making or holding priuy conuenticles, or assemblies, or any diuers or singular opinions from the common doctrine of the Church of Rome, or if I may know any of their fautors, comforters, councelours, or defenders, or any that haue suspect bookes or quiers of such erroures and heresies: I shall let you my Lord of Canterbury, or your officers in your absence, or the Diocesans and Ordinaries of such men, haue soone and ready knowing, so help me God and holydeme, and these holy Euangelies by me bodely touched.

After this recantation at the Crosse thus published, and his submission made, 'the sayd Granter then was by the aduise of the Prelates, put to 7. yeares prisonment, vnder the custody and charge of the bishop of London.

After this, followed in like maner the recantation of Richard Monke. Also of Edmund Frith, which was before Butler so sir Iohn Oldcastle.

Beside these aboue remembred,* many and diners there be in the sayd register recorded, who likewise for their faith and religion were greatly vexed and troubled, especially in the Dioces of Kent, in the townes of Romney, Tenterden, Wodcherche, Cranbroke, Staphelherst, Beninden, Halden, Roluenyden and others, where as whole housholdes, both man and wife, were driuen to forsake theyr houses and townes for daunger of persecution: as sufficiently appeareth in the processe of the Archb. Chichesley agaynst the sayd persons, and in the certificat of Burbath his officiall,* wherein are named these persons following.

- 1. W. White Priest.
- 2. Tho. Grenested. Priest.
- 3. Bartho. Cronmonger.
- 4. Iohn Wadnon.
- 5. Ioan his wife.
- 6. Tho. Euerden.
- 7. William Euerden.
- 8. Steuen Robin.
- 9. W. Chiueling.
- 10. Iohn Tame.
- 11. Iohn Fowlin.
- 12. Will. Somer.
- 13. Marion his wife.
- 14. Iohn Abraham.
- 15. Rob. Munden
- 16. Laurence Coke.

These being cited vp together by the bishop would not appere. Wherupon great inquisition being made for them by his officers, they were constrained to flie their houses & townes, & shift for themselves as couertly as they might. When Burbath and other officers had sent worde to the Page 643 Archbishop that they coulde not be founde, then he directed downe order that Citations should be set vp for them on euery Church dore through all townes where they did inhabite: appointing them a day & terme whē to appeare. But not withstanding, when as they yet could not be taken, neither would appeare, the Archbishop sitting in hys tribunall seate, proceedeth to the sentence of excommunication against them. What afterward happened to them, in the register doth not appeare: but like it is, at length they were forced to submit themselves.

Concerning sir Iohn Oldcastle the Lord Cobham, and of his first apprehension,* with his whole story & life, sufficiently hath bene expressed before, pag. 575. how he being committed to the Tower, and condēned falsely of heresie, escaped afterward out of the Tower, and was in Wales about the space of four yeares. In the which meane time, a great summe of money was proclaimed by the King, to hym that could take the sayde sir Iohn Oldcastle, eyther quicke or dead. About the ende of which foure yeares beeing expired,* the Lord Powes, whether for loue and greedines of the money, or whether for hatred of true and sincere doctrine of Christ, seking all maner of wayes how to play the parte of Iudas, at length obtained his bloudie purpose, and brought the Lorde Cobham bound vp, to London: which was about the yeare of our Lord. 1417. and about the moneth of December. At which time, there was a Parliament assembled at London, for the reliefe of money the same time to be sente to the King, whome the Byshops had sente out (as yee heard before) to fight in Fraunce. The records of which Parliament do thus say: that on Twesday the xiiij. day of December, and the xxix. day of the sayd Parliament, Sir Iohn Oldcastle of Cowling, in the Countie of Kent, Knight, being outlawed (as is afore minded) in the Kings bench, and excommunicated before by the Archbishop of Canterbury for heresie, was brought before the Lords, and hauing heard his said conuictions, aunswered not thereto in his excuse. Upon which record and processe, it was adiudged, that he should be taken as a traytour to the King and the Realme: that he should be carried to the Tower of London, and from thence drawne thorough London vnto the new gallowes in S. Gyles without Temple barre, and there to bee hanged, and burned hanging.

As touching the pretenced treason of this Lord Cobham falsely ascribed vnto him in his inditement, rising vpon wrong suggestion and false surmise, and aggrauated by rigour of words, rather then vpon any ground of due probation, sufficiently hath bene discoursed before in my defence of the saide Lorde Cobham, against Alanus Copus, page. 575. where againe is to be noted, as I saide before, how by this appeareth, that the Lorde Cobham was neuer executed by force of the inditement or outlawry, because, if he had, he should then haue bene brought to the barre in the Kings bench, and there the Iudges shoulde haue demaunded of him, what he could haue said, why hee shoulde not haue died: and then not shewing sufficiente cause for the discharge or delay of execution, the Iudges should haue awarded and geuen the iudgemente of treason: which being not so, it is cleare he was not executed vpon the Inditement. Besides, to proue that he was not executed vpon the Inditement, and the outlawry, the maner of the execution proueth it, because it was neither the execution of a Traitour, nor was the whole punishment thereof pronounced by the Iudge, as by due order of lawe was requisite.

Finally, as I said before, heere I repeate againe, that albeit the sayd Lord Cobham was attained of treason by the Act, and that the King, the Lords, and the commons assented to the Act: yet all that bindeth not in such sorte (as if in deede he were no traytour) that any man may not by search of the truth, vtter and set forth sincerely and iustly, the very true and certaine cause, whereupon his execution did follow. Which seemeth by all circumstances and firme arguments, to rise principally of his Religion, which first brought him in hatred of the Bishops: the Bishops brought him in hatred of the King: the hatred of the King brought him to his death and Martirdome. And thus much for the death and execution of this worthy seruaunt of Christ Lord Cobham.

Moreouer, in the records aboue mentioned it followeth, how in the sayd Parliament, after the Martirdome of this valiant Knight,* motion then was made, that the Lord Powes might be thanked and rewarded, according to the Proclamation made, for his great trauaile taken in the apprehension of Sir Iohn Oldcastle Knight, hereticke. Thus stand the wordes of the recorde. Where two things are to be noted: First, how Sir Iohn heere in the record is called not traitour, but hereticke only. Secondly, marke how this brother of Iudas heere craueth hys Page 644 reward for betraienge the innocent bloud. Wherein it is not to be doubted, but that his light fee, and quid vultis mihi dare in this world, will haue an heauie reward hereafter in the world to come, vnlesse he repented. &c.

*Furthermore, in the sayde Parliament, Act. 17. it was enacted, that the Church and all estates should enioy all their liberties, which were not repealed, or repealeable by the common lawe: meaning belike, the excluding of the iurisdiction of the Popes foreine power, which hath alwaies by the common lawe bene excluded out of thys Realme.

In the same Parliament also a greeuous complainte was made (by the Bishops no doubt) against insurrections. In the ende, they suspected that they were the Lollards, hereticks, and traitours, with a request that commissions might at all times be graunted to inquire of them. Whereunto aunswere was made, that the statutes therefore made, should be executed, &c. Thus the Cleargy Tanquam leones rugientes, ceased not to roare after Christian bloud: And whosoever was else in fault, still the Clergy cried: crucifie Christ, and deliuer vs Barrabas: For then all horrible facts and mischieues, if anye were done, were imputed to the poore Lollards.

And now from our English matters, to returne againe to the story of the Bohemians, from whence wee haue a little digressed, when as the newes of the barbarous cruelty exercised at Constance against Iohn Hus, & Hierome of Prage, were noised in Boheme, the nobles and gentlemen of Morauia and Boheme, such as faouored the cause of Iohn Hus, gathering themselues together in the zeale of Christ: first sent their letter vnto the Councell, expostulating with them, for the iniurie done to those godly men, as is before expressed, page. 602. for the which letter they were all cited vp to the Councell. Unto this letter Sigismund the Emperour maketh aunswere againe in y^e name of the whole Councell: first, excusing himselfe of Husses death, which he saide was against his safeconduict, and against his will: Insomuch that he rose in anger from the Councell, and departed out of Constance, as is before remembred. Secondly, he requireth them to be quiet, and to conforme themselues peaceably vnto the order of the Catholicke Church of Rome, &c.

Also the Councell hearing or fearing some stirre to rise among the Bohemians, did make lawes and Articles whereby to bridle them, to the number of xxiiij.

*First, that the King of Bohemia shall be sworne to giue obedience, and to defend the liberties of the Church of Rome.

That all Maisters, Doctours and Priestes, shall bee sworne to abiure the doctrine of Wickleffe, and Husse, in that Councell condemned.

That all they which being cited, would not appeare, should also be sworne to abiure: and they whiche would not appeare, contemning the censure of the keyes, should haue processe against them, and be punished.

That all such lay men as had defended the causes of Iohn Wickleffe and Iohn Husse, should sweare to defend them no more, and to approoue the doings of that Councell, and the condemnation of Iohn Husse.

That all such seculare men as had spoiled the Cleargie, should be sworne to restitution.

That Priestes being expelled from their benefices, should be restored againe.

That all prophaners of Churches should bee punished after the Canonically sanctions.

That such as had bene promoters in the Councell against Iohn Husse, should be permitted safely to returne into Boheme againe, and to enioy their benefices.

That the reliques and treasure taken out of the Church of Prage, should be restored fully againe.

That the vniuersitie of Prage should be restored againe and reformed, and that they which had bene the disturbers thereof, should be really punished.

That the principall heretickes and doctors of that secte, should be sente vp to the sea Apostolique, namely, Iohn Iessenetz, *Iacobellus de Misna, Symon de Tysna, Symon de Rochinzano, Christiannus de Brachatitz, Ioannes Cardinalis, Zdenko de loben, The prouost of Alhalowes, Zaislaus de Suiertitz, and Michael de Czisko.

That all secular men which communicated vnder both kinds, should abiure that heresie, and sweare to stoppe the same heereafter.

*That they which were ordeined Priestes by the suffragane of the Archbishop of Prage, taken by y^e Lord Zenko, should not be dispensed with, but sent vp to the Sea Apostolicke.

That the treatises of Iohn Wickliffe, * translated into the Bohemian tongue by Iohn Husse, and Iacobellus, should be brought to the Ordinary.

That the treatises of Iohn Husse condemned in the Councell, should also be brought to the Ordinarie.

That all the tractations of Iacobellus De vtraque specie, de Antichristo (wherein he ralleth the Pope Antichrist) Et de remanentia panis post consecrationem, should likewise be brought and burned.

That all songs and balates made to the preiudice of the Councell, and of the Catholike persons of both states, should be forbid to be soong in Cities, townes and villages, vnder great and extreame punishment.

That none should preach the word without the licence of the Ordinarie, or of the parson of that place.

That Ordinaries and Prelates, hauing iurisdiction, should not be stopped in their iurisdiction, by the secular power, vnder paine of excommunication.

That all and singular parsons shall be commaunded to obedience, vnder paine of excōmunication: and that whosoeuer knoweth any person to fauour any Wicleuistes or their doctrine, or that keepeth company with suspect persons, he shall present the same to his Diocesans or his officials.

That the confederacie of the seculars made betweene themselues, or any of the spiritualitye, to the preiudice of the foresaid Councell, and of the Apostolicke sea & Church of Rome, in the fauour of Iohn Hus, Hierome of Prage, and other in the said Councell cōdemned, shalbe dissolved.

That the rites and ceremonies of Christian Religion, touching Gods seruice,* Images, and worshipping of reliques, shall be obserued, and transgressours of the same be punished.

That all and singular, either spirituall or secular that shall preach, teach, holde, or maintaine the opinions and Articles of Iohn Wickliffe, Iohn Hus, and Hierome, in this Councell condemned, and conuict of the same, shall be holden for heretickes, and falling in relapse, shall bee burned.

That all secular persons being monished and charged by the Ordinaries, shall be bound to geue their aide and furtherance vnto them, touching the premisses.

The Bohemians, notwithstanding these cruell Articles, contemning the vaine deuises of these Prelates and fathers of the Councell, ceased not to proceede in their league and purpose begon, ioyning themselues more strongly together.

In this meane time it hapned, that during this Councell of Constance,* after the deposing of Pope Iohn, and spoiling of his goodes, which came to 75. thousand poūds of golde and siluer, as is reported in the story of Saint Albans,* Pope Martin vpon the day of S. Martin, was elected. Concerning whose election, great preparation was made before of the Councell, so that beside the Cardinals, fiue other Bishops of euery nation should enter into the conclaue, who there together should be kept wyth thin diet, till they had founded a Pope. At last, when they were together,* they agreed vpon this man, and not tarieng for opening of the dore, like mad men, for hast, brast open an hole in the wall, crieng out, habemus papam, Martinum, we haue a Martine Pope. The Emperour hearing thereof, with the like hast, came apace, and falling downe, kissed the new Popes feete. Then went they all to the Church together, and sang, Te Deum.

The next day following,* this Martine was made priest (which before was but a Cardinall Deacon) and the next day after was consecrate Bishop, and sang his first masse, whereat was present 140. mitted Bishops. After thys, the next morow, the new holy Pope ordeined a generall procession, where a certaine Clarke was appointed to stand with flaxe and fire, who setting the flaxe on fire, thus said: Ecce pater sancte, sic transit gloria mundi. i. behold holye father, thus vadeth the transitorie glory of this worlde. Which done,* the same day the holy father was brought vp vnto an high scaffold (saith the story) I will not say to an high mountaine, where was offered to him all the glory of the world, &c. there to be crowned for a triple Kyng. This done, the same day, after dinner, the new crowned Pope was with great triumph brought through y^e midst of the Citie of Constance, where all the Bishops and Abbots followed with their miters.* The Popes horsse was all trapt with red skarlet downe to the ground. The Cardinals horses were all in white silke, the Emperour on the right side, and prince Electour on the left, playeng both the Popes footemen, went on foote, leading the Popes horse by the bridle.

Page 645*As this Pageant thus with the great gyant proceeded, and came to the market place, there the Iewes (according to the maner) offered to him their lawe and ceremonies. Which the Pope receiuing, cast behind him, saieng: Recedant vetera, noua sunt omnia. i. Let olde thinges passe, all things be made new, &c. Ex hist. S. Alb. ex paralip. Vrsperg. This was an. 1417.

Thus the Pope being now cōfirmed in his kingdome, first beginneth to write his letters to the Bohemians, wherein partly he moueth them to Catholicke obedience, partly he dissembleth with them, faining, that if it were not for the Emperours request, he woulde enter processe against them. Thirdly and finally he threatneth to attempt the vttermost against them, and with all force to inuade them, as well with the Apostolicall, as also with the secular arme, if they did still persist, as they begōn.

Albeit these new threatres of the new Bishop, did nothing moue the constant harts of the Bohemians, whome the inward zeale of Christes word had before inflamed.

Although it had bene to be wished, such bloudshead and warres not to haue followed: yet to say the truth, how could these Rabines greatly blame them heerein, whome their bloudy tirannie had before prouoked so iniustly, if nowe with their glosing letters they could not so easely appease them againe.

Wherefore these foresaid Bohemians, partly for the loue of Iohn Hus and Hierome their countrey men,* partly for the hatred of their malignant Papistry, assembling together, first agreed to celebrate a solemne memoriall of the death of Iohn Husse and Hierome, decreeing the same to be holden & celebrate yearely. And afterward, by meanes of their frends, they obtained certaine Churches of the King, wherein they might freely preach and minister the Sacraments vnto the congregation. This done, they suppressed diuers monasteries, pharisaicall temples, and idolatrous phanes, beginning first with the great monasterie of the blacke Friars, eight miles from Prage, and driuing away the wicked and vicious Priests & Monkes out of them, or compelling them vnto a better order. And thus their number more and more encreasing vnder the conduct of a certaine noble man named Nicholas, they went againe vnto the King, requiring to haue more and ampler Churches graunted vnto them. The King seemed at the first willingly and gently to giue care vnto the said Nicholas intreating for the people, and commaunded them to come againe the next day.

When the people were departed, the kyng turning himselfe to y^e noble man Nicholas,* which taried still behynde, said: Thou hast begun a webbe to put me out of my kingdome, but I will make a rope of it, wherewithall I will hang thee. Whereupon he immediatly departed out of the Kings presence, and the King himselfe went into the Castle of Uissegrad: within a while after, into a new Castle, which he himselfe had builded fīue stones cast frō thence, sending Ambassadors to his brother to require aide.

These Protestants beeing assembled in the Towne of Pra•e, holding their conuentions: the king sent forth his Chamberlaine with CCC. horsemē, to runne vpō them: but he hauing respect vnto his life, fled. Whē newes thereof was brought vnto y^e king,* all that were about him being amased, vtterly detested the fact: but the Kings cupbearer stāding by, said: I knew before that these thynges would thus come to passe.* Whom y^e king in a rage taking hold of, threw him downe before his feete, and with hys dagger would haue slaine him: but being letted by such as were about him, with much ado, he pardoned him his life. Immediatly the king being taken with a palsey, fell sicke, and within 18. daies after, whē he had marked the names of such, whom he had appointed to put to death, incessantly calling for aide of his brother, and other his frends, he departed this life before the Princes which he had sente vnto, were come with aide, whē he had raigned 55. yeares, and was about the age of 57. yeares.

IMmediatly after the death of Wenceslaus, there was a certaine noble man named Zisca, borne at Trosnouia, which from his youth vpwarde, was brought vp in the kyngs court, and had lost one of his eies in a battel, where as he had valiantly borne himselfe. This man beeing sore greeued for the death of I. Hus, and Hierome of Prage, minding to reuenge the iniuries which the Councell had done, greatly to the dishonour of y^e kingdom of Boheme, vpon their complices and adherēts: he gathered together a number of mē of warre, and subuerted the Monasteries and idolatrous temples, pulling downe, and breaking in peeces the images and idols, driuing away the Priestes and Monkes, which he saide were kept vp in their Cloysters, like swine in their styes to be fatted. After this, hys army beeing increased, hauing gathered together aboute fortie thousande men, hee attempted to take the Castle of Uissegrade, which was but slenderly warded. Frō thence the said Zisca vnder the conduit of Coranda, wente speedely vnto Pelzina, whereas he knew he had many frends of his faction, and tooke the towne into his power, fortifieng the same very strongly, and those which tarried behinde, tooke the Castle of Uissegrade.

Then the Queene Sophia beeing very carefull,* sente letters and messengers vnto the Emperour Sigismund, and other nobles adioining vnto her, requiring aide and helpe: but the Emperour made preparation against the Turke, which had then lately wonne certaine Castels of him. Whereupon the Queene seeing all ayde so farre off, together with Zenko Warrenberge, gathered an host with the kings treasure, and fortified the Castle of Prage, and the lesser Citie which ioineth vnto the Castle, making gates and Towers of wood vpon the bridge, ouer the Riuer Multane, to stoppe that the Protestants shoulde haue no passage that way. Then it hapned that at the Ile of S. Benedict, one Peter Steremberge fought an equall or indifferent battaile with them.

In the meane time the number of the Protestantes beeing increased in Prage, they fought for y^e bridge. In which battaile many were slaine on both parts, but at the length the Hussites wanne the bridge, and the neather part of lesser Prage, the Queenes part fleeing into the vpper parte thereof: whereas they turning againe fiersly, renued the battaile, and fought continually day and night by y^e space of fīue daies. Many were slaine on both parts, goodly buildings were rased, and the councell house, which was in a low place, was vtterly defaced and burned.

During the time of this troublous estate,* the Ambassadors of the Emperour Sigismund were come: whyche taking vpon them the rule and gouernāce of the Realme, made a truce or league with the Citie of Prage vnder this condition, that the Castle of Uissegrad beeing rendred, it should be lawful for thē to send Ambassadors to y^e Emperour Sigismund to intreat as touching their estate, and that Zisca should render Pelzina & Piesta, with the other forts which he had taken. These conditions thus agreed vpon and receiued, all the forreine Protestants departed out of the Citie, and the Senate of the Citie began to gouerne againe according to their accustomed manner, and all things were quieted. Howbeit, y^e Papists which were gone out of y^e Towne, durst not returne againe: but still looked for the Emperour, by whose presence they thought they should haue bene safe. But this their hope was frustrate by meanes of certaine letters which were sent from the Emperour, wherein it was written that he woulde shortly come and rule y^e kingdome, euen after the same order and maner as his father Charles had done before him. Whereby the Protestants vnderstoode that their sect and Religion should be vtterly banished, which was not begon during the raigne of the sayd Charles.

About Christmasse, the Emperour Sigismund came to Brunna a Citie of Morauia, and there he pardoned the Citizens of Prage, vnder condition that they woulde let downe the chaines and barres of the City, and receiue his rulers and magistrates. Wherunto the whole city obeied, and the Magistrates thereof lifting vp their handes vnto heauen, reioiced at the comming of the new king. But the Emperour turned another way, and wēt vnto Uratislauia, the head city of Slesia, where as a little before, the cōmunalty of the City had slaine in an insurrection, the magistrates, which his brother Wēceslaus had set in authority: the principals wherof he beheaded.* The newes wherof when they were reported at Prage, the Citizēs being seared by the example of the Vratislauians, distrusting their pardō, rebelled out of hand, and hauing obtained Cencho on their part, which had the gouernaunce of the Castle of Prage, they sent letters into all the Realme, that no man should suffer y^e Emperour to enter, which was an enemie vnto Boheme, and sought nothing else, but to destroy the kingdome:* which also bound the aunciēt citie of the Prutenitants, vnto order by pledges, and put the Marques of Brandenburge from the Bohemian crowne: and had not onely suffered Iohn Hus & Hierome of Prage to be burned at y^e Council of Constance, but also procured the same, & with all his endeouour did impugne the doctrine & faith which they taught and folowed. Whilest these things wee thus done. Zisca hauing giuen ouer Pelzina by cōpositiō, was twise assaulted by his enemies, but through policy he was alwaies victor. The places where they sought, were Page 646 rough and vnknowne, his enimies were on horsebacke, and all his souldiours on foote, neither could there be any battaile fought, but on foote. Whereupon, when his enemies were alighted from their horses. Zisca commaunded the women which customably followed the host,* to cast their kerchieffes vpon the ground, wherein the horsemen being entangled by their spurres, were slaine before they could vnlose their feete.

After this, he went vnto Ausca, a towne situate vpon the Riuier Lusinitius, out of which towne Procopius and Ulricius, two brethren Papists, had castout many Protestants. This Towne Zisca tooke by force of armes the first night of Lent, rased it, and set it on fire. He also tooke the Castle of Litius, which was a mile off, whether as Ulricius was fled, and put Ulricius and all his familie to the sword, sauing one only.

Then, forsomuch as he had no walled or fensed towne to inhabite, he chose out a certaine place vpon the same riuier, which was fensed by nature, about eight miles from the Citie of Ausca.*

This place he cōpassed in with walles, and commaunded euery man to build them houses, where they had pitched their tents, and named this City Thabor, and the inhabitants his companions Thaborites, bicause their Citie, by all like, was builded vpon the top of some hill or mount. This Citie, albeit that it was sensed with high rockes and cleaues, yet was it compassed with a wall and vainnure, and the riuier Lusinitius fenseth a great part of the towne, the rest is compassed in wyth a great brooke, the which running straight into the riuier Lusinitius, is stopped by a great rocke, and driuen backe towards the right hand, all the length of the Citie, and at the further end it ioineth with the great riuier. The way vnto it by land is scarce thirtie foote broade, for it is almost an Iland. In this place there was a deepe ditch cast, and a triple wall made, of such thicknes, y^t it could not be broken with any engine. The wall was full of towers & sorts set in their cōuenient & meete places. Zisca was the firste that builded the Castle, and those that came after him, fortified it, euery man according to his owne deuise. At that time the Thaborites had no horsemen amongst them, vntill such time as Nicholas, maister of y^e mint (whom the Emperour had sent into Bohemia with a M. horsemen to set things in order, & to withstand the Thaborites lodging all night in a village named Uogize) was surprised by Zisca comming vpon him sodenly in y^e night, taking away all his horse and armour, & setting fire vpon the village. Then Zisca taught his souldiours to mount on horseback, to leape, to runne, to turne, to cast in a ring, so that after this heuener led army without his wings of horsemen.

* In this meane time Sigismundus the Emperour gathering together, y^e nobles of Slesia, entred into Boheme, and went vnto Grecium, and frō thence with a great army vnto Cuthna, alluring Cencho with many great and large promises, to render vp y^e Castle of Prage vnto him, and there placed himselfe to annoy the towne. Thus Cencho infamed with double treason, returned home. The Citizens of Prage sent for Zisca, who speding himselfe thether with the Thaborites, receiued the citie vnder his gouernance.* In the Bohemiās host there was but only two Barons, Hilco Crussina of Liturburge, and Hilco of Waldestene, with a few other nobles. All the residue were of y^e common people. They went about first to subdue the Castell, which was by nature very strongly fensed, and could not be won by no other meanes then with famine: wherupon all y^e passages were stopped, that no vittailles should be carried in. But the Emperour opened the passages by dint of sword, & when he had geuen vnto them which were besieged, all things necessary, hauing sente for ayde out of the Empire, he determined shortly after to besiege the Citie. There was in the Emperours campe the Dukes of Saxon,* the Marqueses of Brandenburge, and hys sonne in law Albert of Austrich. The Citie was assaulted by the space of vi. weekes. The Emperor Sigismūd was crowned in the Metropolitane house in the Castle, Conradus the Archbishop solemnising the ceremonies of the coronation. The city was straightly besieged. In the meane time the Captaines Rosenses & Chragery, which had takē the tentes of the Thaborites, being ouercome in battaile by Nicholas Husse, whome Zisca had sent with parte of hys power for that purpose, were driuen out of their tentes, and Gretium the Queenes Citie was also taken.

There is also about the Towne of Prage a high hill, which is called Uidechon.* On this hill had Zisca strongly planted a garrison, that his enemies should not possesse it, with whome the Marques of Misnia skirmishing, lost a great part of his souldiours. For when as the Misnians had gotten the top of the hill, being driuen back into a corner, which was broken & steepe, and fiersly set vpon, whē as they could no longer withstād the violent force of their enimies, some of them were slaine, and some falling headlong from the hill,* were destroied. Whereupon the Emperour Sigismund raising his seege, departed vnto Cuthua and Zisca with his company departed vnto

Thabor, and subdued many places: amōgst which he subuerted a town pertaining to the captaine of Uisgrade. During this tyme the Castell of Uisgrade was strongly besieged, whereas, when other vittailles wāted, they were compelled to eate horse flesh. Last of all, except the Emperour did aide them by a certaine daye, they promised to yeld it vp, but vnder this condition, that if the Emperour did come, they within the Castle should be no more molested.

The Emperour was present before the day,* but beeyng ignorant of the truce taken, entring into a straight vnderneath the Castle, was sodenly set vpon by the souldiours of Prage, where he had a great ouerthrow, and so leauing his purpose vnperformed, returned backe againe. There were slaine in that conflict xiiij. noble men of the Morauians, and of the Hungarians, & other a great number. The Castle was deliuered vp vnto them. Whilest these things were in doing, Zisca toke Boslaus a captaine, which was surnamed Cigneus, by force, in a very strōg towne of his, and brought him vnto his religion. Who a few yeares after, leading the protestants host in Austria, was wounded before Rhetium, and died.* Ther were in the territorie of Pelsina many monasteries, of y^e which Zisca subuerted and burned fiue. And forsomuch as y^e monastery of Saint Clare was the strongest, there he pitched himselfe.

Thether also came the Emperour with his army:* but when Zisca brought forth his power against him, he most cowardly fled, and not lōg after, he departed and left Boheme. Then Zisca went with his army vnto Pelzina: but forsomuch as hee sawe the Citie so fenced, that hee was in doubt of winning the same, he went from thence to Commitauia a famous Citie, the which he tooke by force, burning all the Priests therein.

Afterward,* when as he lay before the towne of Raby, and strongly besieged the same, he was stricken wyth a shaft in the eye, hauing but that one before to see withall. From thence, hee was carried to Prage to Phisicians, whereas he being cured of his wound, and his life saued, yet he lost his sight, and for all that, he woulde not forsake his army, but still tooke the charge of them.

After this, the garrisons of Prage went vnto Uarona, where as there was a great garison of the Emperours, & tooke it by force, many being slaine of eyther parte. They also tooke the towne of Broda in Germany, and slue the garrison, and afterward tooke Cuthna and many other cities by composition. Further, when as they ledde theyr army vnto a town called Pons,* which is inhabited by the Misnians, the Saxons meeting thē by the way, because they durst not ioine battaile, they returned backe. After all this, y^e Emperour appointed the Princes electours a day,* that at Bartilmewtide, they should with their armie inuade the Weast part of Boheme, and he with an host of Hungarians would enter on the East part. There came vnto his ayde the Archbishop of Mentz, the countie Pallatine of Rheine, the Dukes of Saxon, the Marques of Brandenburge, & many other Bishops out of Almaine: all the rest sente their aydes. They encamped before the towne of Sozius, a strong & well fenced place, which they could by no meanes subdue. The cuntry was spoiled & wasted round about, and the siege continued vntill y^e feast of S. Galle. Then it was broken vp because the Emperour was not come at his day appointed, but he hauyng gathered together a great army of the Hungarians, and West Morauians, about Christmas entred into Boheme, and tooke certaine townes by force, and Cuthna was yelded vnto him.* But when Zisca (although he was blinde) came towards him)and set vpon him, he being afcard, & many of his nobles slaine, fled. But first he burned Cuthna, which the Thaborites, by meanes of the siluer mines, called the powch of Antichrist.* Zisca pursuing the Emperour a dayes iourney, got great & rich spoyle, and taking the towne of Broda by force, set it on fire: the which afterward almost by the space of xiiij. yeares, remained disinhabited. The Emperour passed by a bridge ouer the riuer of Iglaria.* And Piso a Florentine, which had brought xv. M. horsemen out of Hungary to these warres, passed ouer the Ise, the which by the multitude & number of his horsemen being broke, deuoured & destroied a great number. Zisca hauing obtained this victory,* would not suffer any image or idoll to be in the Churches, neither thought it to be borne withall, that Priests shoulde minister wyth copes or vestiments: for the which cause he was much the Page 647 more enuied amongst the states of Boheme.* And the Cōsuls of Prage beeing agreeued at the insolencie of Iohn Premonstratensis, called him and nine other of his adherents, whome they supposed to be the principals of thys faction, into the Councell house, as though they woulde conferre with them as touching the common wealth:* and when they were come in, they slew them, and afterwarde departed home euery man to his owne house, thinking the Citie had bene quiet, as though nothing had bin done: But their seruaunts beeing not circumspect inough, washing downe the court or yarde, washed out also the bloud of those that were slaine, through the sinkes or canels: the which being once seene, the people vnderstood what was done. By and by there was a great tumult: the Councell house was straightway ouerthrowne, and eleuen of the principall Citizens, whiche were thought to be the authours thereof, were slaine, and diuers houses spoiled.

About the same time, the Castell of Purgell, wherein the Emperour had left a small garrison (whether as also many Papistes with their wiues and children were fled) was thorough negligēce burned, and those which escaped out of the fire, went vnto Pelsina. After this, diuers of the Bohemian Captaines, and y^e Senate of Prage, sent Ambassadors to Uitolde Duke of Lituania, and made hym their king. This did Zisca and his adherentes gainesay. This Untold sent Sigismūd Coributus, with two thousand horsemen into Boheme, who was honourably receiued of the inhabitants of Prage. At his comming they determined to lay siege vnto a Castle situate vpon a hill, which was called Charles stone.

Heere Sigismundus had left for a garrison foure Centurions of souldiours. The tentes were pitched in ii. places. The siege continued vi. moneths, and y^e assault neuer ceased day and night. Fiue great flyngs threw continually great stones ouer y^e walles, and about two thousand vessels, tubbs, or baskets, filled with dead carcasses and other excrements, were cast in amongst those which were besieged: whiche thing did so infect them with stench, that their teeth did either fall out or were all lose.* Notwithstāding they bare it out with stout courage, & continued their fight vntill the Winter, hauing priuily receiued medicine out of Prage, to fasten their teeth againe.

In the meane time Fridericke the elder, prince of Brādenburge entring into Boheme with a great power, caused them of Prage to raise the siege. And Uitoldus at the request of Uladislaus king of Pole, which had talked with the Emperour in the borders of Hungary, called Coributus his vnclē with his whole army out of Boheme. Wherupon y^e Emperour supposed y^t the Protestāts being destitute of foreine aid, would y^e sooner do his commandement: but he was farre deceiued therein, for they leading their armies out of Boheme, subdued y^e borderers thereupon adioining. It is also reported y^t Zisca went into Austrich, and whē as the husbandinē of the countrey had caried away a great number of their cattell by water into an Isly of the riuer called Danubius, and by chaunce had left certaine values and swine in their Uillages behind them: Zisca draue them vnto the riuer side,* and kept thē there so long, beating them, and causing thē to roare out and cry, vntill that the cattell feeding in the lland, hearing y^e lowing and grunting of the cattell on the otherside the water, for the desire of their like, did swimme ouer the riuer: by the meanes where of, he got and draue away a great booty.

About the same time the Emperour Sigismūdus gaue vnto his sonne in law Albert Duke of Austrich, the countrey of Morauia, because it should not want a ruler. At the same time also Ericius king of Denmarke, & Peter Instant, brother to y^e king of Portingal and father of Iames, Cardinall of S. Eustachius, came vnto y^e Emperour, being both very expert men in the affaires of warre: which did augment y^e Emperours host with their aid and power. Wherupon, they straightway pitched their camp before Lutemperge, a towne of Morauia, and continued the siege by the space of ii. moneths. There was at that time a certaine Knight at Prage surnamed Aqua, which was very rich and of great authority. This mā, forsomuch as he had no child of his owne, adopted vnto him his sisters sonne, named Procopius: whom when he was of meane stature and age, he caried with him into France, Spayne, and Italy, and vnto Ierusalem, and at his returne caused hym to be made Priest. This man when the Gospell began to flourish in Boheme, tooke part with Zisca, and for somuch as he was strong and valiant, and also painefull, he was greatly esteemed.

This Procopius for his valiaunt actes, was afterward called Procopius Magnus, and had committed vnto him the whole charge of the prouince of Morauia, and the defence of the Lutemperges: who receiuing a great power by force (maugre all the whole power which lay in the siege) carried vittales into the towne which was besieged, and so did frustrate the Emperours siege. The Emperour before this had deliuered vnto the Marqueses of Misnia the bridge and towne of Ausca, vpon the riuer of Albis, that they should fortifie them with their garrisons. Wherupon Zisca besieged Ausca, and Fridericke the Marquesse of Misnia, with his brother the Lantzgraue of Turyng, gathering together a greate army out of Saxonia, Turing, Misnia, and both the Lusaces, determined to rescue and ayde those which were besieged.

There was a great battaile fought before the Citie, and the victory depēded long vncertaine, but at last it fel on the Protestantes part.* There were slaine in that battaile, the Burgraues of Misnia or Chyrpogenses, the Barons of Glychen, and many other nobles, beside ix. thousand cōmon souldiours, and the Towne of Ausca was taken and vtterly rased.

At the last, dissention rising betweene Zisca and them of Prage, they of Prage prepared an army against him, wher with he perceiuing himselfe ouermatched, fled vnto y^e Riuer of Albis and was almost takē, but that he had passage through the town of Poggiebras, but they of Prage pursuing the taile of y^e battaile, slue many of his Thaborites. At the length they came vnto certaine hils^{*} whereas Zisca going into the valley, knowing the straights of the place, that his enimies could not spread their army, he commanded his standerd to stand still, and exhorting and encouraging his souldiours, he gaue them battaile.

This battaile was very fierce and cruell: but Zisca hauing the vpper hande, slue 3000. of them of Prage,* and put the rest to flight, and straightwaies tooke the Citie of Cuthna by force (which they of Prage had repaired) and set it on fire: then withall speed he went with his army to besiege Prage, and incamped within a bowe shoote of the towne.* There wer many both in the City, and also in his host which grudged sore at y^e siege: some accusing Zisca, othersome them of Prage.

There was great tumultes in the campe, y^e souldiours saieng that it was not reasonable, that the City should be suppressed, which was both the head of the kingdome, and did not dissent frō them in opinion: saieng that y^e Bohemians power would soone decay, if their enimies should know y^t they were deuided within themselues: also that they had sufficient warres agaynst the Emperour, and that it was but a foolish deuise to moue warres amongst themselues. This talke came vnto the eare of Zisca, who calling together his armie, standyng vpon a place to be heard, spake these words.

BRethren be yee not agreed against me,*neither accuse hym which hath sought your health and sauegard. The victories which ye haue obtained vnder my conduct, are yet fresh in memorie, neither haue I broughte you at any time vnto any place, from whence you haue not come victours. You are become famous and rich, and I for your sake haue lost my sight, and dwell in darkenesse Nothing haue I gotten by all these fortunate batailles, but only a vaine name. For you haue I fought, and for you haue I vanquished, neither do I repente me of my trauailes, neyther is my blindnesse greuous vnto me, but onely that I can not prouide for you, according to my accustomed manner: Neither do I persecute them of Prage for mine owne cause, for it is your bloud that they thirst and seeke for, and not mine. It were but small pleasure for them to destroy me being now an old man and blind: it is your valiantnesse and stoute stomackes which they feare. Either must you or they perish: who whilest they seeme to lye in wait for me, do seeke after your liues. You must rather feare ciuill warres then foreine, and ciuill sedition ought first to be auoided. We will subdue Prage, and banish the seditious Citizens, before the Emperour shall haue any newes of this sedition. And then hauing but a few of his faction left, we may wyth the lesse feare looke for it: better then if these doubtfull Citizens of Prage were still in our campe. But because ye shall accuse me no more, I geue you free libertie to do what you will. If it please you to suffer them of prage to liue in quietnesse, I will not be against it, so that there be no treason wrought. If you determine to haue warre, I am also readie. Looke which part you will decline vnto, Zisca will be your ayde and helper.

When he had spoken these words,* the souldiours minds were changed, and wholly determined to make wars, so that they ran by and by to take vp their armour and weapon, to run vnto the walles to prouoke their enemies to fight for the gates of the citie. Zisca in the meane time prepared all things ready for the assault. There is a little from Pelsina acertain vilage named Rochezana. In this place, there was a child borne of poore and base parētage, whose Page 648 name was Iohn: he came vnto Prage, and got his liuing there by begging, and learned Grammer & Logick. When he came to mās state, he became y^r Scholemaster of a noble mans child, and for so much as he was of an excellent wit and ready tounge, he was receiued into the Colledge of the poore, and last of all being made Priest, he began to preach the word of God to the Citizēs of Prage, and was named Iohannes de Rochezana,* by the name of the Towne where he was borne. This mā grew to be of great name and authoritie in the towne of Prage. Wherupon when as Zisca besieged Prage, he by the consent of the Citizēs went out into the camp, and reconciled Zisca againe vnto the Citie.

When as the Emperour perceiued that all things came to passe according vnto Zisca his will and minde, and that vpon him alone the whole state of Boheme did depend, he sought priuie meanes to recōcile and get Zisca into his fauour, promising him y^e gouernance of the whole kingdom, the guiding of all his hostes & armies,* and great yearly reuenues, if he would proclaime him King, and cause the Cities to be sworne vnto him. Upō which cōditions, whē as Zisca for the performance of the couenants went vnto the Emperour being on his iourney at the Castle of Priscouia, he was stricken with sicknesse and died.

It is reported, that when he was demaunded beyng sicke,* in what place he would be buried, he commaunded the skinne to be pulled off from his dead carkase, and the flesh to bee cast vnto the foules and beastes, and that a drumme should be made of his skinne, which they should vse in their battailes, affirming, that as soone as their enimies should heare the sound of that drumme, they would not abide,* but take their flight. The Thaborites despising all other Images, yet set vp the Picture of Zisca ouer the gates of the Citie.

The Epitaphe of Iohn Zisca, the valiant Captaine of the Bohemians.

I Iohn Zisca, not inferiour to any Emperour or Captain in warlike policie,* a seueare punisher of the pride and auarice of the Clergy, and a defender of my countrey, do lie heere. That which Appius Claudius by geuing good counsell, and M. Furius Camillus by valiantnesse did for the Romaines: the same I being blinde, haue done for my Bohemians. I neuer slacked oportunitie of battaile, neither did fortune at any time faile me. I being blinde, did foresee all oportunitie of well ordering or doing my businesse. Eleuen times in ioining battaile,* I went victour out of the field. I seemed to haue worthely defended the cause of the miserable and hungry, against the delicate, fatte, and glotonous Priests, and for that cause to haue receiued help at the hande of God. If their enuy had not let it, without doubt I had deserued to be numbred amongst the most famous men. Notwithstanding my bones lye heere in this halowed place, euen in despite of the Pope.

Iohn Zisca a Bohemian, enemy to all wicked and couetous Priestes, but with a godly zeale.

And thus haue you the actes and doings of this worthy Zisca, and other Bohemians, which for the more credite we haue drawne out of Aeneas Syluius, onely his rayling tearmes excepted, which we haue heere suppressed.

All this while the Emperour with the whole power of the Germanes, were not so busie on y^e one side, but Martin the Pope was as much occupied on the other side: who about the same time directed downe a terrible Bull, full of all poison to all Byshops and Archbishops, agaynst all such as tooke any part or side with Wickleffe, Iohn Hus, Hierome, or with their doctrine and opinions. The copie of which Bull, which I found in an olde written monument, I wish the reader throughly to peruse, wherein he shall see the Pope to poure out at once all his poison.

The Bull of Pope Martine directed foorth against the followers of Iohn Wickliffe of England, of Iohn Husse of Boheme, and Hierome of Prage.

*Martine Bishop, the seruante of Gods seruants, to our reuerend brethren the Archbishops of Salzeburgen, Gueznen, and Pragē, & to the Bishops of Dlumcen, Luthomuslen, Bambergen, Misnen, Patauiē, Uratislauien, Ratisponen. Cra. ouien, Poznamen, and Nitrien, & also to our beloued children the Inquisitours appointed of the Prelates aboue recited, or where else soeuer, vnto whome these present letters shall come, greeting, and Apostolicall benediction. Amongst all other pastorall cares where with we are oppressed, this chefly and specially doth inforce vs, that heretikes with their false doctrine and errours, being vtterly expelled from amōgst the cōpany of Christen mē, and rooted out (so farre forth as God will make vs able to do) the right and Catholike faith may remaine sound and vndefiled: and that all Christian people, immoueable and iuiolate, may stande and abide in the sinceritie of the same fayth, the whole vayle of obscuritie being remoued. But lately in diuers places of y^e world, but especially in Bohemia, and the Dukedome of Morauia, and in the straights adioining thereunto, certaine Archheretickes haue risen and sprong vp, not against one only, but against diuers & sundry documēts of the Catholike faith, being landlopers schismatikes, and seditious persons, fraught with diuelish pride & Woluish madnes,*deceiued by the subtlety of Sathan, and frō one euill vanity brought to a worse. Who although they rose vp & sprang in diuers parts of y^e world, yet agreed they all in one, hauing their tailes as it were knit together: to wit, Iohn Wickliffe of England, I. Hus of Bohemia, & Hierome of Prage of damnable memorie, who drew with thē no small nūber to miserable ruine and infidelitie. For when as those & such like pestiferous persons did in y^e beginning of their poisoned doctrine, obstinately sow and spread abroad peruerse & false opinions, y^e prelates who had the regiment & execution of the iudiciall power, like dumme dogs, not able to barke, neither yet reuenging speedely with the Apostle, all such disobediēce, nor regarding corporally to cast out of the lords house (as they were enioined by y^e canons) those subtile and pestilēt Archheretickes, and their Woluish fury and cruelty, with all expedition, but suffering their false and pernicious doctrine negligētly, by their ouerlong delaies, to growe and waxe strōg: a great multitude of people in stead of true doctrine receiued those things, which they did lōg falsly, perniciously and damnably sow among them, and geuing credite vnto them, fell from the right faith, and are intangled (the more pitie) in the foule errors of Paganisme.

In so much, that those Archheretickes, and suche as spring of them,*haue infected the Catholicke flock of Christ in diuers climates of the world and parts bordering vpon the same, and haue caused them to putrifie in the filthie dunghill of their lies. Wherefore the generall Synode of Constance, was compelled with Sainct Augustine to exclaime against so great and ruinous a plague of faythfull men, and of the sound and true faith it selfe, saieng: what shall the Soueraigne medicine of the Church do, wyth motherly loue seeking the health of hir sheepe, chasing as it were, amongst a companie of men franticke, and hauing the disease of the Lethargie? What? shall she desist and leaue off hir good purpose? No not so. But rather let hir, if there be no remedie, be sharpe to both these sorts, which are the greenous enemies of her wombe. For the Phisition is sharpe vnto the man bestraught and raging in his frensie,*and yet is he a father to his owne rude and vnmanerly sonne, in binding the one, in beating the other, by shewing therein his great loue vnto them both. But if they be negligent, and suffer them to perish (sayth Augustine) this mansuetude is rather to be supposed false crueltie.

And therefore the foresaide Synode, to the glory of almighty God, and preservation of his catholicke faith, and augmenting of Christian religion, and for the saluation of mens soules: hath corporally reiected and cast forth of the houshold of God, the foresaid I. Wicklieffe, I. Hus, and Ierome: who amongst other things, did beleue, preach, teach, and maintaine of the Sacrament of the aultar, and other sacramēts of the church & articles of the faith, cōtrary to that y^e holy Church of Rome beleueth, holdeth, preacheth and teacheth, & haue presumed obstinately to preach, teach, hold, and beleue many other moe, to the damnation of themselues and of others: and the sayde Synode hath separated the same, as obstinate and malipert heretickes from the Communion of the faithfull people, and haue declared them to be spiritually throwne forth: and many other things both wholesome & profitable hath the same Councell as touching the premisses, stablished and decreed, whereby they, which by the meanes of those Archheretikes, and by their false doctrine, haue spiritually departed from the Lords house, may by the canonicall rules be reduced to the straight path of truth and veritie.

And moreouer (as we to our great grieve do heare) not only in y^e kingdome of Bohemia, and Dukedome of Morauia and other places aboue recited, but also in certaine parts and prouinces neere adioining and bordering vpon Page 649 the same, there be many other of y^e secretaries and followers of the foresayd Archheritickes and hereticall opinions casting behind their backs as well the feare of God, as y^e shame of the world, neither receiuing fruit of conuersion & repentaunce by the miserable destruction of the foresayde Iohn Hus and Hierome, but as men drowned in the dun'geon of their sinnes,* cease not to blaspheme the Lord God taking his name in vayne (whose minds the father of lies hath damnably blinded) and do read and study the foresaid bookes or workes, contayning heresies & erroures, being lately by the foresayd Synode condēned to be burned: also to the perill of themselues and many other simple men, & against the statutes, decrees, and ordinaunces in the Synode aforesayd, and the Canonicall sanctions, do presume to preach & teach the same, to the great perill of soules, the derogation of the Catholicke fayth, and sclaunder of many other besides. We therfore considering that error, when it is not relisted, seemeth to be allowed and liked, and hauing a desire to resist such euill and pernicious errours, and vtterly roote them out from amongst the companie of faythfull christians, especially frō the afore recited places of Bohemia, Morauia, and other straights and llands ioyning and bordering vpon the same, least they shold stretch out & enlarge their ••ites: we will and commaund your discretions by our letters Apostolicall, the holy Councell of Cōstance approuing and allowing the same, that you that are Archbishops, Bishops, and other of the clergy, and euery one of you by himself or by an other or others, being graue and fit persons to haue spirituall iurisdiction: do see that al and singuler persons, of what dignitie, office, preeminence state, or conditiō so euer they be, and by what name soeuer they are knowne,* which shall presume otherwise to teache preach, or obserue, touching the most high and excelent, the most wholesome and superadmirable Sacrament of the bloud of our Lorde Iesus Christe, or els of the Sacrament of Baptisme, confession of sinnes, penaunce for sins and extreme vnction, or els of any other Sacramentes of the Church, & articles of the faith, then that, which y^e right holy & vniuersall church of Rome doth hold, teach, preach, & obserue: or els y^t shall presume obstinately by any wayes or meanes, priuily, or apertly, to hold, beleue, and teach the Articles, bookes, or doctrine of the foresayd Archhereticks Iohn Wickleffe, Iohn Hus, & Hieronimus of Prage, being by the foresayd Synode of Constance with theyr authours (as is sayd) damned and condemned, or dare presume publikly or priuily to allow or commend in any wise y^e death and end of y^e said archheretiks, or of any other their receiuers, ayders and fauourers, in the fauour or supportation of the foresayd errors, as also their beleuers and adherentes: that then as before, you see and cause them and e'very of them to be most seuerly punished, & that you iudge and geue sentence vpon them as hereticks, and that as arrant hereticks you leaue them to the secular court or power. Let the receiuers also,* and fauourers and defenders of such most pestiferous persons, notw^tstanding they neyther beleue, fauour, nor haue deuotion, towards their errors but happely shal receaue or entertain such pestiferous persons, because of carnall affection,* or friendly loue, besides y^e punishmene due vnto thē by both lawes, ouer and aboue the same punishment, by competent iudges be so afflicted, & for so haynous actes of theirs, with so seure payn & punishment excruciated, that the same may be to other in like case offending, an example of terrour: that at the least, those whome the feare of God by no meanes may reuoke from such euill doing, yet the seueritie of this our discipline may force and constraينه.

As touching the third sort, which shalbe any maner of wayes infected with this damnable sect, and shall after cōpetent admonition repēt and amend themselues of such errors and sectes aforesayd, and will returne agayn into the lap and vnitie of our holy mother the Church, & fully acknowledge and confesse the Catholike fayth: towards them let the seueritie of iustice, as the quallitie of the acte shall require, be somewhat tempered with a tast of mercy.

* And furthermore, we will and command, that by thys our authoritie Apostolicall, ye exhort and admonish al the professours of the catholicke fayth, as Emperours, kings, Dukes, Princes, Marquesses, Earles, Barons, Knights and other Magistrates, Rectors, Consuls, Proconsuls, Shires, Countries and Uniuersities of the kingdomes, Prouinces, Cities, otwnes, Castles, villages, their lands & other places, & al other executing tēporal iurisdiction according to the form & exigence of the law, y^t they expell out of their kingdoms, prouincies, Cities, towns, castles, villages & lands, & other places, al & all maner of suche heretickes, according to the effect and tenour of the Councell of Laterane, beginning, Sicut ait ecclesia. &c. y^t those whom publicly and manifestly by the euidence of their deedes,* shall be knowne to be such as like sicke and scabed sheepe infect the Lords flock, they expell and banish till such tyme as from vs or you or els other ecclesiasticall iudges or Inquisitours holding the fayth and communion of the holye church of Rome, they shall receiue other order and countermaund: and that they suffer no such within theyr shyres and circuites, to preach or to keepe either house or familye either yet to vse any handicrafte or occupations or other trades of merchaundise, or els to solace themselues anye wayes, or frequent the company of Christen men.

And furthermore if suche publike and knowne heretiques shall chaunce to dye (although not so denounced by the Church) yet in this so great a crime, let hym and them want Christian buriall, and let no offeringes or oblations be made for them nor receiued. Hys goodes and substance also frō y^e time of his death, according to y^e Canonical sanctions being confiscate, let no such enioy them to whō they appertayne, till that by the ecclesiasticall iudges hauing po^wer and authoritie in this behalfe, sentence vpon that his or their crime of heresie, be declared, and promulgate, & let such owners as be found suspect or noted with anye suche suspicion of heresie, before a competent and ecclesiasticall iudge, according to the consideration and exigence of that suspicion, and according to the quallitie of the person, by y^e arbitrement of such a iudge: shew and declare hys proper & own innocēcy with deuotion as beseemeth in that behalf, And if in hys purgation, being Canonically interdicted, he do fayle, or be not able Canonically to make his purgation, or that he refuse to take hys othe by damnable obstinacie, to make suche purgation: then let him be condemned as an hereticke. But such as thorough negligence or thorough slothfulnes, shall omit to shew their sayd inno^ccencie and to make such purgation, let them be excommunicate, and so long put out from the company of Christen men, til y^t they shall make condigne satisfactiō: so that if by the space of one whole yeare they shall remayne in such excommunication, then let them as heretickes be condēned.*

And further, if any shalbe found culpable in any point of the foresayd pestiferous doctrine of the Archheretickes aforesayd, or in any Article thereof, whether it be by the reporte of the seditious, or els well disposed: let them yet be punished, according to the Canons. If onely through infa'my and suspition of the foresaid Articles or any of them, any man shalbe found suspect, & in his purgation Canonically for this thing being interdicted, shall fayle: let hym be accompted as a man conuict, & as a conuict person by the Canons let him be punished.

And furthermore we innouating and putting in execution the Canon of our predecessour of happy memory pope Boniface the 8. which beginneth thus: *Vt inquisitionis negocium. &c. In exhorting wise require and also commaund all temporall potentates, Lordes & Iudges afore recited, by whatsoever dignities, offices, and names they are knowen: that as they desire to be had, esteemed, & counted for the faythfull members and children of the Church, and do reioyce in the name of Christ: so in likewise for the defēce of the same faith, they wil obey, intēd, giue their ayd, and fauorable help, to you that are Archbishops, Bishops, and Ecclesiastical men, inquisitours of al hereticall prauitie, and other Iudges and Ecclesiasticall persons by you hereunto, as aforesayd, appoynted (holdyng the fayth and communiō of our holy mother the church) for the searching out, taking, & safe custody, of all the foresayde heretickes, their beleuers, their fauorers, their receiuers, and their defenders, when so euer they shalbe therunto of them required.

And that they bring and cause to be brought (al delay set aparte) the foresayde pestiferous persons so seeking to destroy others with them, into suche safe keeping and prysons, as by you the Archbishops, Bishops, Clergie, and Inquisitors aforesaid, are to be appointed, or els vnto such other place or places, as eyther you or they shal commaūd within any of their dominions, gouernements, and rectories, where they by catholicke men, that is, by you the Archbishops, bishops, the Clergy, and inquisitours, or any other that shalbe by you appointed, or are already appointed by any of you, may be holden and kept in safe keeping, putting them in fetters,* shackles, boltes, and manacles of yrō vnder most straight custody for escaping away, tyll suche tyme as all that busines which belongeth vnto them, be by the iudgement of the church finished and determined, and that of suche heresie, by a competent ecclesiasticall iudge (which firmly holdeth the faith and communiō of the said holy church of Rome) they be cōdemned.

The residue, let the foresayde temporall Lordes, Rectours, Iudges, or other their officers and Pursinauntes, Page 650 take amongst them, with condigne deathes without anye delay to punish. But fearing least to the preiudice & sclander of the foresayd catholicke fayth and religion, thorough the pretext of ignorance, any man herein shoulde be circumvented, or that any subtile and craftie men should vnder the vayle of friuolous excuse, cloke and dissēble in thys matter, and that as touching the cōuincing or apprehending of the foresaid hereticks, their receiours & defēdors, fauourers, beleuers and adherentes, and also of suche as are suspect of heresie, and with suche like peruerse doctrine many wise spotted, we might geue more perfect instruction: Therefore as well to the kingdom of Bohemia & parts neare adioining to the same as all other where this superstitious doctrine first began to spread, we haue thought it good to send the articles here vnder written concerning y^e secte of those Archheretickes, for the better direction of the foresayd Catholicke fayth.

Touching which articles, by vertue of holy obedience we charge and commaund you and all other Archbishops and Bishops, all maner of commissaries and inquisitours that euery of them within the Dioces and limites of theyr iurisdiction, & also in y^e foresaid kingdom & dukedome and places neare adioyning, although the same places be beyond the same their iurisdiction: in the fauour of the catholicke faith, do geue most dilligent and vigilant care about the extirpation and correction of those erroures, archheresies, and most pestiferous sect aforesayd: and also that they compell all diffamed persons and suspecte of so pestiferous a contagion, whether it be vnder the penaltie of the crime confessed, •• of excommunication, suspension or interdicte, or any other formidable payne canonicall or legall, when and wheresoeuer it shall seeme good to them, and as the quallitie of the acte requireth, by an othe corporally taken either vpon y^e holy Euangelistes, or vpon the reliques of Saintes,* or vpon the image of the crucifixe, according to the obseruauntes of certayne places, and accordyng to the interrogatories, to make conuenient answere to euery article within written. For we intend agaynst all and singular archbishops, Byshops, Ecclesiasticall persons, or inquisitours, which shall shew themselues negligent and re|misse in the extirpation of the leauen of this hereticall prauitie, and purging their territories, dioces, and places to them appoynted, of such euill and wicked men: to proceed and to cause to be proceeded, vnto the deprauation and deposition of their pontificall dignities, and shall substitute such other in their places, which can and may be able to cō|found the sayd hereticall prauitie, and proceede to further paynes agaynst such by the lawe limited, and vnto other yet more grievous (if neede require) we our selues will proceede and cause to be proceeded, according as the party his fact, and filthines of his crime committed, shall deserue The tenour of those articles wherof we haue made mention in this our owne writing are in wordes as follow.

The articles of Iohn Hus to be inquired vpon.

- 1, THere is one onely vniuersall Church, whiche is the vniuersitie of the predestinate, as shall after be declared.
3. The vniuersall Church is onely one: as there is one vniuersitie of those that are predestinate.
3. Paule was neuer a member of the Deuill, although he did certayne actes like vnto the actes of the Church malignant.
4. The reprobate are not partes of the Church, for that no part of the same finally falleth from her,* because that the charitie of predestination, which bindeth the same Church together, neuer fayleth.
5. The two natures (that is) the Diuinitie, and the huma|nitie, bee one Christ.
6. The reprobate, although he be sometime in grace, according to present iustice, yet is he neuer a part of the holy Church:* and the predestination is euer a member of the Church, although sometime he fall from grace aduentitia, but not from grace of predestinatiō: euer taking the church for the conuocation of the predestinate whether they be in grace or not according to present iustice. And after this sort the church is an article of our beliefe.

7. Peter is not, nor neuer was the head of the holy catholicke Church.

8. Priestes, liuing viciously, doe defile the authoritie of priesthood, and so, as vnfaithfull Children do vnfaithfully beleue of the seuen sacraments, of the keyes of y^e Church of offices, of Censures, of ceremonies, of the worshipping of reliques: indulgences, orders, and other holy things of the Church.

9. The papill dignitie came and grew from the Emperour and hys gouernement and institution,* sprang from the em^perours gouernment.

10. No man can reasonably affirme eyther of himselfe or other that he is the head of any particular Church, or that the bishop of Rome, is the head of the Church of Rome.

11. A man ought not to beleue, that he which is byshop of Rome is the head of euery particular Church, vnles god haue predestinate hym.

12. None is the vicare of Christ, or els of Peter, vnlesse he follow him in maners and conditions, seing that there is no other following more pertinent, nor otherwise apte to receiue of God this power procuratory. For vnto y^e office of a vicegerent of Christ is required, the conformitie of maⁿers and the authoritie of the institutor.

13. The pope is not the manifest and true successor of Peter the Prince of the Apostles, if he liue in maners contrary to Peter: and if he hunt after auarice, then is he the vicar of Iudas Iscarioth. And likewise the Cardinales be not the true and manifest successors of the Colledge of the other Apostles of Christ, vnles they lyue according to the maner of the Apostles, keeping the commaundementes & counsels of our Lord Iesus Christ.

14. The Doctors alledging, that if a man, which will not be amended by the Ecclesiasticall censures, is to be deliuered to the secular powers: do follow in this poynt, the byshops, Scribes and Phariseis, that deliuered Christ to the secular power (saying it is not lawfull for vs to kill anye man) because he would not obey them in all thinges, and that such be greater homicides then Pilate.

15. The ecclesiasticall obedience is such an obedience as y^e Priestes of the church haue found out, besides the expresse authoritie of the scripture. The immediate deuision of humane works, is y^t they be either vertuous or vicious, & if a man be vicious, and doth any thyng, then doth he it vitiously, & if he be vertuous, and doth any thinge, thē doth he it vertuously. For like as vice which is called a great offere or mortall sin, doth stayne all y^e doyngs of a vicious man: so vertue doth quicken all the doinges of a vertuous man.

16. A priest of God liuing after hys lawe, and hauing the knowledge of the scripture, and a desire to edify the people ought to preach, notwithstanding any excommunication, pretended of the pope, And further, if the pope, or anye other magistrate doeth forbid a priest so disposed to preache, he ought not to be obedient vnto hi•. For euery one that taketh vpō him the order of priesthood, receiueh in charge the office of a preacher: and of that burden ought he well to discharge himselfe, any excommunication against him pretended in any wise notwithstanding.

17. By the Censures ecclesiasticall, as of excommunication, suspending, and interdicte, the clergy to their owne aduauncement cause the lay people to ayd them: they multiply their auarice, they defend their malice, and prepare the way to Antichrist. And it is an euident signe that such censures proceede from Antichrist, which in their process they call Fulminationes, that is, their thunderboltes where with the clergy principally proceedeth agaynst those that declare the wickednes of Antichrist, who so greatly for hys owne commoditie hath abused them.

18. If the pope be euill, especially if he be a reprob•••, thē is he with Iudas a very deuill, a theefe and the sonne of perdition, and is not the head of the holy Church militant nor any member of the same.

19. The grace of predestination is the band, wherwith the body of the church and euery member of the same is indissolubly ioyned to their head Christ.

20. The pope or Prelate that is euill and a reprobate, is a Pastor in name, and not in deede, yea he is a theefe and a robber in very deede.

21. The P. ought not to be called the most holy one for his office sake,* for then ought a king to be called by hys office y^e most holy one: and hangmen with other such officers also were to be called holye, yea the deuill hymselfe ought to be called holy, for asmuch as he is Gods officer.

22. If the pope liue contrary vnto Christ, although he clime vp by the right and lawfull election according to the common custome of men:* yet notwithstanding shoulde be otherwise clime then by Christ, yea though wee admitte that he shoulde enter by the election principally made by God. For Iudas Iscarioth was lawfully elect of GOD Christ Iesus to hys byshopricke, and yet came not he the same way he ought to do vnto the shepefold.

23 The condemnation of 45. articles of Iohn Wickleffe by the doctors made, is vnreasonable, wicked and naught, & the cause by them alledged is sayned that is, that none of them are Catholicke, but euery on of them hereticall, erroneous, or slaunderous.

14. Not for that the electours, or the most part of thē haue Page 655 consented together with liuely voyce according to the custome of men vpon the person of any, therfore, that person is lawfully elect,* or therfore is the true and manifest succes'sors & vicar of Peter the Apostle, or of any other y^e Apostles in y^r ecclesiastical office. Wherefore, whether y^e electors haue either wel or euil made their election, it behoueth vs to beleue the same, by the workes of him that is elected. For in that that euery one that worketh more meritoriously to the profite of the Church, he hath so much the more greater authoritie from God.

25.*There is not so much as one sparke of appearaunce that there ought to be one head, ruling and gouerning the church in spirituall causes, which should alwayes be conuersant in the church

millita•• For Christ without anye such monstrous heds, by his ••ue disciples sparsed through the whole world could better a great deale rule his church.

26. The Apostles and faythfull priests of God, haue right worthily in al thinges necessary to saluation gouerned the church before the popes office tooke place, and so might they doe agayne, by like possibilitie vntill Christ came to iudgement, if the popes office should fayle.

Let euery one that is suspected in the foresayd articles, or els otherwise found with assertion of them, Be examined in maner and forme as followeth.

*IN primis, whether he knew Iohn Wicleffe of Englande, Iohn Hus of Bohemia, and Hierome of Prage, or anye of them, and how he came by the knowledge of them, whither that during the liues of them or any of them, they had eyther bene conuersant with them, or found any frendship at their handes.

2. Item, whether he knowing them or any of them to be excommunicate, did willingly participate with them: esteeming & affirming the same their participaciō to be no sin.

3. *Item, whither that after their deathes, he euer prayed for them or any of them, openly or priuily, doing any work of mercy for them, affirming them to be either saintes, or els to be saued.

4. Item, whether he thought them or anye of them to be Saintes, or whether that euer he spake such wordes, and whether euer he did exhibite any worshippe vnto them as vnto saintes.

5. Item, whether he beleue, hold, and affirme, that euery generall councill, as also the Councell of Constance, doth represent the vniuersall Church.

6. Item, * whether he doth beleue that that which the holy Councell of Constance: representing the vniuersall church hath and doth alow in the fauour of the fayth, and saluatiō of soules, is to be approued and allowed of all the faythfull Christians: and that whatsoeuer the same Councell hath condemned, and doth condemne to be contrary both to the fayth and to all good men, is to beleued, holden, and affirmed for condemned or not.

7. Item, whether he beleueth that the condemnations of Iohn Hus, Iohn Wickleffe, and Hierome of Prage, made as well vpon their persons, as their bookes and doctrine by the holy generall Councell of Constance, be rightly & iustly made, and of euery good Catholicke man, are so to be holden and affirmed, or not.

8. Item, whether he beleue, hold, and affirme, that Iohn Wickleffe of England, Iohn Hus of Bohemia, and Hierome of Prage, were heretickes or not, and for heretickes to be nominated & preached, yea or not, and whether theyr bookes and doctrines were and be peruerse or not, for the which together with their pertinacie, they wre condemned by the holye sacred Councell of Constance for heretiques.

9. Itē, whether he haue in his custody any treatises, smal workes, Epistles, or other writings in what language or tongue soeuer, set forth and translated by any of these heretickes Iohn

Wickleffe, Iohn Hus, and Hierome or any o^ther of their false Disciples and followers, that he may deliuer them to the ordinaries of that place, or his commissary, or to the inquisitours, vpon hys othe. And if he say that he hath no such writing about him, but y^f they are in some other place: that then you sweare him to bring the same before his Ordinary or other aforenamed, within a certayne time to him prefixed.

10. Item, whether he knoweth any that hath y^e treatises, works, Epistles, or anye other writinges of the aforesayd Iohn Wickleffe, Iohn Hus, and Hierome, in whatsouer tong they are made or translated, and that he detect & manifest the same, for the purgation of their fayth and execution of iustice.

11. Item, especially let the learned be examined, whether he beleueth that the sentence of the holy Councell of Constance vpon the 45. articles of Iohn Wickleffe, and the 30. Articles of Iohn Hus be not Catholicke: which sayth that some of them are notorious hereticall, some erroneous, other some blasphemous, some slaunderous, some rash and seditious, some offensiuie to godly eares.

12. Item, whether he beleueueth and affirmeth, that in no case it is lawfull for a man to sweare.

13. Item, whether he beleueth, that at the commaundement of a iudge or any other, it is lawfull to take an oth to tell the truth in anye conuenient cause, although it be but purging of an infamy or not.

14. Item, whether he beleueth that periury wittingly cōmitted, vppon what cause soeuer, whether it be for y^e safegard of hys owne life, or of any other mans lyfe, (yea, although it be in the cause and defence of the fayth) be a sinne or not.

14. Item, whether a man contemning purposedly the rites of the Church, and the ceremonies of exorcisme of Cathechisme, and the consecration of the water of Baptisme, be deadly sinne or not.

16. Item, whether he beleue, that after the consecration of the priest in the sacrament of the aultar vnder the figure of bread and wyne, be no materiall bread and wyne: but in al poyntes, the same very Christ which was crucified vppon the Crosse, and sitteth vpon the right hand of the father.

17. Item, whether he beleue, that after the consecration made by the priest vnder the onely forme of bread and besides the forme of wyne, be the very flesh of Christ and hys bloud, hys soule and hys deitie, and so whole Christ as he is, and in likewise, vnder the forme of wine without the forme of bread, bee the very fleshe of Christ and hys very bloud, his soule, and deitie, and so whole Christ, & the same body absolutely vnder euery one of those kinds singularly.

18. Item, whether he doth beleue, that the custome of houseling of the lay people vnder the forme of bread only,* obserued of the vniuersall Church, and allowed by the onely Councell of Constance, be to be vsed, and not without the authoritie of the Church, at mens pleasures to be altered, and that they that obstinately affirme the contrary to this, are to be punished as heretickes, or not.

19. Item, whether he beleue that those whiche contemne the receiuing of the sacramentes of confirmation, or extreme vnction, or els the solemnisation of matrimony, cōmit deadly sinne or not.

20. Item, whether he beleue, that a Christian man, ouer and besides the contrition of hart, being licensed of a conuenient priest, is bound to confesse himselfe only to a priest and not to any lay man, be he neuer so deuout or good, vpon the necessitie of saluation.

21. Item, whether he beleue, that in the cases before put, a priest may absolue a sinner confessing himself, and being contrite, from all sinnes and enioyne him penance for the same.

22. Item, whether he beleueth, that an euill Priest, with due maner and forme, and with the intentiō of doing, doth verily consecrate, doth verily absolue, doth verily baptise and doth verily dispose all other sacramentes euen as the Church doth.

23. Item, whether he beleue that Saint Peter was the Uicar of Christ, hauing power to bynde and to lose vpon the earth.

24. Item, whether he beleue that the Pope being canonically elect, whiche for the tyme shall be, by that name expresly be the successor of Peter or not, hauing supreme authoritie in the Church of God.

25. Item, whether he beleue that the authoritie of iurisdiction of the Pope, an archbishop or a Bishop in binding & loosing, be more then the authoritie of a simple priest or not although he haue charge of soules.

26. Item, whether he beleue, that the pope may vpon a iust and good cause, geue indulgēces and remission of sins to all Christian men, being verily contrite and confessed, especially to those that go on pilgrimage to holy places and good deedes.

27. Item,* whether he beleue, that by such graunt the pilgrimes that visite those Churches, and geue thē any thing may obtayne remission of sinnes or not.

28. Item, whether he beleue that all Bishops may graūt vnto their subiectes according as the holy Canons doe limit, such indulgences or not.

29. Item, whether he beleue and affirme, that it is lawfull for faythfull Christians to worship Images and the reliques of sayntes or not.

30. Item,* whether, he beleue that those religions, whiche the Churche hath allowed, were lawfully and reasonably brought in of the holy fathers or not.

Page 65231. Item, whether he beleueth that the pope or any other Prelate for the time being, or their vicars may excommunicate their subiect Ecclesiasticall or secular for disobediēce or contumacie, so that such a one is to be holden and taken for excommunicate or not.

32. Item, whether ye beleue that for the disobediēce and contumacie of persons excommunicate, increasing: the prelates or their vicars in spirituall thinges haue power to agrauate and to reagruate, to put vpon men the interdict and to call for the secular arme: and that the same secular arme or power ought to be obedient to the censures, by their inferiors called for.

33. Item, whether he beleue that the pope and other prelates or els their vicars, haue power in spirituall things to excommunicate priestes and lay men that are stubberne and disobedient, from theyr office, benefice or entrance into the church, and from the administration of the sacraments of the Church, also to suspend them.

34. Item, whether he beleue, that it is lawfull for ecclesiasticall persons without committing sinne, to haue anye possessions & temporall goodes: and whether he beleue, y^t it is not lawfull for lay men to take away the same from thē by their authoritie: * but rather that such takers away & inrochers vpō ecclesiasticall goods, are to be punished as committers of sacriledge, yea although such Ecclesiasticall persons liue naughtely that haue such goodes.

35. *Item, whether any such taking away or inrochyng vpō any priest rashly or violently made, although y^e priest be an euill liuer, be sacriledge or not.

36. Item, whether he beleue that it is lawfull for lay mē of whether sexe soeuer: that is men and women, to preache the word of God or not.

37. *Item, whether he beleue that it is lawfull to al priestes freely to preach the word of God whersoever, whensoever, and to whom soeuer it shal please them, although they be not sent at all.

38. Item, whether he beleue that all mortall sinnes, and especiall such as be manifest and publike, are to be corrected and to be extirpate or not.

Furthermore, wee will commaunde, and decree, that if any by secrete information by you or any other to be receiued, shall be founde either enfamed or suspected of anye kind of y^e pestiferous sect, heresie & doctrine of the most pestilence men I. Wickleffe, I. Hus and Hierome of Prage the archheretickes aforesaid, or of fauoring, receiuing or defendeing the foresayd damned men whilst they liued on the earth, their false followers and disciples, or any that beleue their errorrs, or any that after their death pray for thē or any of them, or that nominateth them to be amongst the number of catholick men, or y^t defendeth them to be placed amongst the number of y^r saintes, either by their preaching worshipping, or otherwaies wherein they deserue to be suspected: y^r then they by you or some of you, may be cited personally to appeare before you or some of you, w^tout either Proctor or Doctor to answere for them, an oth being opēly taken by them as is aforesayd, to speak the plain & mere veritie of the articles aboue written and euery of them, or other oportune, as case and circumstance shall require, according to your discretion, as you or anye of you shall see expediēt to proceed against them, or any of them according to these presentes or otherwise canonically, as you shall thinke good.

Also that you do publish solemnly & cause to be published, these present letters, omitting the articles & interrogatories herein containyd, in the citties & other places of your dioces, where conueniently you may, vnder our authoritie, & there to denounce and cause to be denounced all & singular such hereticks, with their abbetters & fauorers of their heresies & erroures, of what sexe or kinde soeuer, that do hold, & defend the sayd erroures, or doe participate any maner of way with heretickes, priuely or apertly, of what state, dignitie, or condition soeuer he or they be, Patriarche, Archbishop, king, Queene, Duke or of what other dignitie either Ecclesiasticall or seculare he be: also with their aduocates and procurators whosoever, whiche are beleuers, followers, fauourers defenders, or receiuers of such heretickes,* or suspected to be beleuers, followers, fautors, defenders or receiuers of them, to be excommunicate, euery sonday and festiuall day, in the presence of the people.

Furthermore, that you dilligently do to be inquired by the sayd our authoritie, vpon all and singular such persons both men and women, that mayntayne, approue, defend, & teach such erroures, or that be fauourers, receauers and de'fenders of them, whether exempt or not exempt, of what dignitie, state, preeminence, degree, order, or condition soeuer. And such as you shall finde in the sayd your inquisition, either by their own confession, or by any other meane to be diffamed, or otherwise infected with the spot of suche heresie or error, you, through the sentence of excommunication, suspension, interdict, and priuation of their dignities, personages, offices, or other benefices of the Church, and fees, which they hold of any church, monastery and other Ecclesiastical places, also of honours and secular dignities and degrees of sciences or other faculties, as also by other paynes and censures of the Church, or by wayes and meanes whatsoever els shall seeme to you expedient, by taking and imprisoning of their bodies, and other corporall punishmentes wherwith heretickes are punished, or are wont, and are commaunded by canonical sanctions to be vsed: and if they be clerkes, by degradation, doe correcte and punishe, and cause them to be corrected and punyshed with all dilligence.

Furthermore, that you do rise vp stoutly and couragiously agaynst such heretickes,* and the goodes as well of them, as of the lay men, according to the canonicall sanctiō made agaynst heretickes, and their followers, vnder the which we will and commaunde them and their partakers to be subiect. And also such persons, as shall be infamed of the heresies or errors aforesayd, or any of y^e premisses, shall be bounde to purge themselues, at your arbitrement: but the other which either be witnesses, or by their owne confessions, or other allegations or probations, shalbe conuic'ted of the foresaid heresies, or articles, or of any the premisses, they shalbe compelled to reuoke and abiure publikely and solemnly the sayd articles and erroures, and to suffer condigne penance and punishment, yea euen to perpetuall imprisonment, (if need be) for the same.

And to the intent y^t they shall not nourish any kinde of heresies hereafter, either in word, deede, or gesture, or shall induce other, either in worde or deede, priuely or apertly, directly or indirectly to beleue y^e same, they shalbe forced to put in sufficient suretie. Who, if it so chaunce that they wil not publikely and solemnly renounce and abiure their articles and errors, and take at your handes condigne penance, though it be to perpetual, or tēporal punishment, according to your discretion, neither wil be cōtented to put in sufficient suretie that they will not hereafter holde nor nourish those erroures and heresies, neither wil induce other by word or deed, priuely or apertly, directly or indirecly, or by any other maner of colour, to beleue the same: that then you shall proceede agaynst them, according to y^e qualty of their errores and demerites, yea and if you see it so expedient, as against heretickes, & as infected with heresie by our authoritie, according to the canonical sanctions su^mmarily and simply and plainly, sine strepitu & figura iudicij, & of office, all appellatiō or appellations whatsoever ceasing and that you punish the same, according to the sanctions & traditions canonicall, yea if neede be, in leauing and committing them to the secular power: and agaynst such as be superiors or learned doctors, laying the censures of ecclesi^asticall excōmunication, al appellation set aside, also innocating, if neede shall require, ayd of the secular arme: The constitution as wel of our predecessor P. Boniface 8. of bles^sed memory, wherein is decreed that no man without hys City or dioces (except in certayne cases) or in places being one daies iornye distant from thence where he inhabiteth,* shalbe called into iudgement, & that no man do presume to depute iudges frō y^e sea Apostolicke, w^tout the city & dioces where they are deputed, to proceede agaynst any: or do pre^ssume to cōmit their authority to any other person or persōs or to fetch & remoue any man beyond one dayes iorny frō out his Dioces where he dwelleth, or at most two dayes iourney, if it be in a generall councill:* as also all other constitutions of any byshop of Rome, touching as well, Iudges delegate, as persons not to be called to iudgement beyond a certaine number: or els any other edict indulce, priuelege, or exemption generall or special graunted from the Apostolike sea, for anye person or persons not to be interdicted, suspended, or excommunicated, or cited vp to iudgement without the compasse of certaine limites: or els what soeuer thing otherwise may hinder, stop, or impeache your iurisdiction, power, and free proceeding herein by anye meanes to the contrary notwithstanding. Dat Constant. the first yeare of our popedome.

This bloody and abhominable commission of pope Martine, which I haue copied out of a certaine olde monument remaining in the handes of Maister Hackluyt, student in the Temple, seemeth to be directed and geuen out to the publike destruction of all faithful Christen men, about the latter end & breaking vp of the councel of Constance, an. 1418. By the which the prudent reader hath this Page 655 to note and consider, what labour, what pollicie, what coū^ssaile, & what lawes haue bene set,* what wayes haue bene takē, what seueritie hath bene shewed, how mens power, wit, and authoritie of the whole world haue conspired together from time to time, cōtinually by all maner meanes to subuert and supplant the worde, and way of the Lorde: And yet notwithstanding man hath not preuayled, but all his force & deuised pollicies haue bene ouerthrown, dispat^hched and w^t the councill of Achitophell and Ammon, haue bene brought to nought, and contrary to the furye of the world, the gospell of Christ hathe still increased. Neither yet for all this, will the Pope cease to spurne and rebell still against the kingdome of Christe,* and of hys Gospell agaynst which, neyther he, nor yet y^e gates of hell shall euer preuayle. The Lord of hostes be mercifull to hys poore persecuted flocke. Amen.

Agaynst this pestilent Bull and Inquisition of Pope Martine the great antechrist, I thought good here to adioyne and annexe an other contrarye writing of the Bohemians, bearing the name and subscription of Procopius, Conradus, and other Captaynes of y^e Bohemians, which seemeth not long after the death of Zisca, to be written agaynst the pestiferous sea of Rome, the tenour whereof here followrth.

A fruitfull and Christian exhortation of the Bohemianes to kinges and princes, to stir them vp to the zeale of the Gospell.

The almighty God the father, by hys welbeloued sonne Iesus Christ, may in hys holy spirite open the vnderstanding both of you and of all Christians, & lighten your hartes with the light of hys doctrin of righteousnes, and may make you to continue therein, surely established to the end. This we desire of you for your saluation, all ye honou^rable, wise, & honest noble men, & al the Comminaltie, ye rich and poore, heare and consider with dilligent heede, the wordes of this present letter, which is sent vnto you from the Country of the Bohemianes. It is manifest and well knowne to you and many other citties, Kynges, princes, and Lordes, that now a certayne number of yeares, there hath ben great discord betwixt vs and you, and there haue bene some which haue moued you by letters, and prouoked you to make warre against vs, and to destroy vs. And as well on your part as on ours: many men, as wel noble as vnnoble, haue foolishly lost their lyues. Yet neuer hetherto haue ye in any parte vnderstoode our fayth by our owne confession, neither whether we be able to proue the same out of the scriptures, yea or no: and yet in the meane time, kinges, Princes, Lordes, and Citties, haue sustayned great dammage. And hereof we greatly meruaile, that ye do so much trust and beleue the pope and hys priestes, which geue you drinke full of poyson, and such comfort as no man can vnderstand,* in that they say that they wil geue you forgeuenes of all your sinnes, and great grace & pardon, to this end, that you should warre vpon vs & destroy vs: wheras their graces and pardons are none other then great lies, and a great seducing of the body and soule of all them that beleue them: and put their trust in them. Thys we would proue vnto them,* & ouercome them by the holy scripture, and we wold suffer: that whosoeuer is desirous to heare the same, shoulde heare it. For the Pope and all hys priestes, herein deale with you as the deuill woulde haue done wyth our Lorde Iesus Christ. Of whome Luke writeth in hys 4. chap. that he brought him vpon an high hill, & shewed vnto hym in the twynckling of an eye, al the kyngdomes that are in the compasse of the earth, & said vnto him: I wil geue thee &c. So the deuill deceiueth the pope, and all the priestes with the riches of the worlde, and worldly power: And they thinke they can geue grace and pardon when they wyll, and they themselues shall neuer finde fauour before almighty God, except they repent and make amendes, because of theyr great deceauing of Christedom. And how can they geue that to others, which they themselues haue not? So dyd the Deuill, who was rich in promising, and poore in geuing. And like as the Deuill is not ashamed to tell a lye,* so all they are not ashamed to speake that which shall neuer be found true, nor be proued by the holy scriptures, because for no cause, they stirre vp kinges, Princes, Lordes, and Citties, to make warre agaynst vs, not to the end that the Christian fayth shoulde therby be defended, but because they feare y^t theyr secret vices and heresies shalbe disclosed and made manifest. For if they had a true cause, & a godly loue to the Christiā fayth they would then take the books of the holy scripture, and would come vnto vs, and ouercome vs with the weapōs of Gods word, and that is our chiefe desire. For so dyd the apostles of our Lord Iesus Christ, who came to y^e Paganes and Iewes, and brought them from their infidelitie to the true fayth of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and this they dyd in the spirite of mekenes, as the Apostle Paule writeth in the 6. chap. to the Galat.* Brethren if anye man be agreeued. &c. So ought they also to doe, if they perceiued that they were iust, and we vniust. And if we woulde not abide instruction: then they might take to them kinges, Princes,* Lordes, and imperiall citties, and resist vs accor^ding to the commaundementes of the holy scripture. But this is the subtile defence of all the Byshops and Priestes that they say that mayster Hus and Hierome which were burnt at Constance, were ouercome of the holy father the Pope,* and of the whole Councell: For ye must vnderstand that they were not ouercome by the holy Ghost, but vniustly, with wrongfull violence, which God may yet hereafter greuously punishe in all them that gaue their counsel and ayd thereto: and they saye it ought not to be suffered, tha we should be heard in confessing our fayth. How may that be proued by the holy scripture, since christ heard the deuilt as it is written in the fourth chap. of Mathewe? And they are not better then Christ,* nor we worse then the Deuill. If they be iust and haue the truth with them (as they saye they haue) and we be vnrighteous, why do they feare, sinc the truth ought not to be afeard of falshod, as Esdras writeth in hys second booke, the third chapter. Zorobabell declared that truth is of all thinges the most mightye, and ouercommeth all thinges. For Christ is the trueth. Iohn 14. I am the way, the trueth. &c. And the deuill is the father of lies. Iohn. 8. He is a lyer from the beginning, and neuer abode in the truth, & there is no truth in him. Therfore if the pope and hys priestes haue the truth, let them ouercome vs with the word of God. But if they haue lyes, then they cannot long abide in al their presumptiō. Wherefore, we exhort and beseech al the imperiall Cities, al kings Princes, noble men, rich and poore, for Gods sake, and for hys righteousness, that one of them write hereof to an other, and that there may be some meanes made howe we may cōmune w^t you safely and friendly, at some such place as shal be fit both for you and vs, and bring with you your Byshops and teachers,* and let them & our teachers fight together with the word of God, and let vs heare them, and let not one ouercome the other by violence or false sub^tiltie, but onely by the word of God. And if your Bishops and teachers haue better proofes of theyr fayth out of the holy scripture, then we, and our fayth be found vntrue, we will receiue penance and satisfaction: according to Gospell. But if your Byshops and teachers be ouercome of ours by the holy Scripture, then doe ye repent and harken to vs, and hold with vs. And if your Byshops & teachers will cease from their spirituall pride, and repent and make satisfaction: then wil we helpe you according to our power, and will compell them, eyther to ioyne with vs, or els we will expell them out of Christendome. And if your Byshops and teachers will say, that it is not lawfull for lay men to heare such reasoning, or to be presēt at it: that may you vnderstand to tend to no other end, but that they feare they should be ouercome and put to shame in the sight of you: For if they knew that they should ouercome therein, out of doubt, they would desire that euery mā should heare it, & thereby, their glory should become the greater, & their fame and prayses should be encreased vpon the earth. And if your Bishops and teachers couंसell you to come to no hearing with vs, thē do it whether they will or no, & suffer not your selues at any time to be so folishly seduced with their folish pardons, but tary at home in your houses w^t your wiues and children. And let y^e pope of Rome come to vs with all his Cardinals and byshops, and with all hys priestes, with his owne person & power to warre with vs, & let themselves deserue the absolution of sinnes, grace, and pardon, which they preach to you (for they haue great nede of forgeuenes of sinnes, grace, & pardō) & by the grace of god we will geue them pardō enough as they shall neede. But their subtile excuse is this: they say that it belōgeth not to priestes to fight w^t bodily weapons & true it is that belongeth not to them:* but it belongeth as little to them to stirre vp, to counsaile, & to fortifie others thereto: For Paule saith in the y^e 1. to the Rom. & in y^e fift to y^e Galath. that all that do such thinges are worthy of euerlasting death.*

And if yewill not determine to do any other thing then to fight against vs, then will we take the Lord to our helpe and his trueth, & we will defend it to the death, & we will not be afraid for the excommunicatiō or curse of the Pope, or his cardinals, or of y^e bishops, because we know that y^e

Pope is not god as he maketh himselfe, that he can curse and excommunicate when he will, or blesse when he will: Page 654 who hath now these many yeares cursed and excōmunitd vs,* & yet notwithstanding, God and his gracious blessing hath bene our helpe. But peraduenture ye wil say, that though we see that bishops and priests be euill & wicked, yet we cānot lacke them: for who should baptise our children, who should heare confessions, & minister the holy sacraments? and then also we should be w^tin the excommunication of the pope & of his bishops.* Welbeloued, ye nede to take no care for these matters. The excōmunicating of the Pope hurteth you nothing. Feare ye the excommunicating of God, and the Lorde wil prouide for those things wel enough. If ye would banish euil bishops and priests, ye shuld haue good priestes which shuld baptise your children, heare cōfessions, and minister the holy mysteries, bicause when y^e deuill is banished, then place is made for the holy ghost: So when yll bishops and priestes shall be banished, then place shal be made for good priestes & bishops Also, your bishops and priests say, that we are miscreants and hereticks, & that we beleue not on purgatory, vpō the virgine Mary, nor vpon the sayntes: wherein they say ill for we will proue by the holy scripture, that we know better by Gods grace how we ought to beleue vpon Purgatory, & vpon Mary the mother of our Lord, & vpon hys welbeloued saints, thē they can tell vs. Also they say, y^t we wil not be obediēt vnto the P. Truly when he shalbe come holy and iust, then we know well that we ought to be obe^dient to him in al things and not before. They say also that we destroy Gods holy seruice, in that we destroy monaste^ries, banishing thence the wicked Monkes and Nunnes.* Truely we dyd it, thinking once that they were holy, that they did the reuerend seruice of god, but after that we well perceiued and considered their lyfe & works, then we perceiued that they were false lowly hipocrites, and wicked builders on high, and sellers of pardōs and masses for the dead, and such as deuoured in themselues the sinnes of the people. And where as they sayd that they rise at midnight when other men slepe, and pray for the sins of the people: forasmuch as their selling of their praiers and masses for y^e dead for gifts, is no better then hipocrisie and heresie: ther^fore if we do speake agaynst them and destroy their monasteries, we do not therin destroy the seruice of God, but rather the seruice of the deuill, and the schooles of heretickes. And if ye knew them as we know them, ye would as diligently destroy them as we do. For Christ our Lord did not ordayne anysuch order, & therfore it must needs come to pas that shortly it shal be destroyd as our lord saith in the Gospel of S. Mathew the 15. chapter.* Euery plant whiche my father hath not planted, shalbe rooted vp. We desire you also that ye woulde dilligently consider the article• here written, wherein your bishops and priestes are guilty.

The 1. article is, that when your bishops will ordaine priests,* they do it not, except he y^r is to be made priest haue sufficient liuing, eyther inheritance left him of hys parents or of benefices: wheras notwithstanding, Christ wold that priestes should be poore, forasmuch as it is enough for the scholar to be as his maister is, and for the seruaunt to be as his Lord is: and the bishops wil that they should be rich v vpon earth, which is vniust before the Lord.

The 2. article is, that bishops take mony of such as are to be ordained,* but S. Peter did therfore sharply rebuke Si^mon Magus, when he would haue geuen him mony, as it is written in the 8. of the actes.

The 3. article is, that they that come to be priestes enter into priesthoode, not for gods seruice sake, because they mean to preach and encrease it among the Christiā people, so as the people may be edified and made better:* but rather for an idle life, and that they may eate well and drinke wel and that they may be honoured and reuerēced vpon earth For euery one wayteth vpon hys priest as a theefe and a robber, as Iohn writeth in his x. thap.

The 4. article is of excommunication, which the Pope and all his priestes take to themselues, and therwith fetter & bind all Christian people as they will, and they thinke y^t whosoever they excommunicate or curse,* hee is accursed and excommunicate before God: And we wil proue by the holy Scripture, that they themselues are excommunicate & accursed before God, because they kepe not the commaundement of the loue of God,* wherof the Apostle writeth in y^t 1. to the Cor. the 16. chap. If any man loueth not our Lorde Iesus Christ, he is excommunicate in the day of the comming of the Lord. For they cannot excommunicate you, who are already bound and excommunicate before God & hys saintes: and therefore why feare ye their excommunication?

The 5. Article is, that they take gifts for to pray for the dead, and to say masse for theyr soules. This is a wickednes and heresie before the Lord, & all they that contribute to them to this end,* do wickedly, for that hereby priests be|come merchantes of prayers and of masses: and herewyth is all the church of Rome poysoned and defiled. For if they would pray for the dead and say masse for their soules, yet no man ought to hire thē thereto, forasmuch as they ought to take no giftes, neither little nor great. And euery one that taketh rewardes to this end, to redeeme soules out of purgatory, do therwithal cast their own soules down into hel. And they y^t geue any thing to that end, doe altogether lose y^e which they geue. And with such deuilishe sub•lety, y^e Pope with all his priestes hath deceiued, spoyled and disherited kinges, princes, Lordes and knights, & good hous|holders and many other, of their lawful inheritaunces, be|cause their ancestors & progenitours gaue it to Colledges, monasteries & churches, y^t they might make memorialls of thē & to sing or say prayers or masses for their soules,* that they might be redeemed out of Purgatorye. And wyth such goodes, Byshops, Canons, and Monasteries haue made themselues so riche, that now they fall at variaunce with cities, & princes: & wheras they should procure peace betwixt cities and rulers, there they are the first that begin warre: and as long as they haue such goodes, they wil ne|uer cease to be at strife with Lordes and cities,* neither wil they begin to teach you the true foundation of y^e truth: For they do as a dogge, which as long as he holdeth a bone in his mouth and knaweth it: so long he holdeth his peace & cannot barcke. Euen so, as long as they haue this bone of pleasaunt riches, it wyl neuer be well in the world. Wherefore all kinges, princes and imperiall Citties should doe a great worke of godlines and mercy, if by them they were compelled to do this, as the dog is when the boane is takē from hym.

And therefore ye noble men, Kinges, princes, Lordes, imperiall Citties,* and all the communalitie, both riche and poore, if ye haue bene a sleep yet now awake and opē your eyes and behold the subtiltie of the deuill, how he hath blin|ded the Church of Rome, and take agayne that is youres, and not theirs. And if you wil make a good memoriall for your soules, then do as the wyse man saith, Eccle. 19: Lay vp almes. &c.

The 6. article is, that they are full of pride and of high mynde,* which is manifestly knowne by their long, costlye and superfluous garmentes, wherein they walke very vn|like to Christ our Lord, who had a garmēt without a seam and to the welbeloued Iohn Baptist, who had a garment of Camels heare, and they wyl be honoured and worshyp|ed, and they preach and say that Priesthood ought to be ho|noured, and so it ought in deede to be, but there is none y^t do so much sclander and abase it, as they themselues, with their euill works, gay apparell, and with their euil words wherein they passe all other men.* Paul sayth the i. to Tim. the 3. chapter. Let the Elders that gouerne wel, be honoured with double honour, chiefly they that labour in y^e word and doctrine of the Lord. Consider, that he sayth they that gouerne well.

The 7. article is, that they are couetous from y^e highest to the lowest,* and for couetousnes they preach many folish deedes & manifest lies, & sell the holy sacramentes, whiche is a great heresie: for God commaunded that they shoulde geue freely. Paule writeth in the first to Timothy: Couetousnesse is the roote of all mischief, wherunto many haue ben geuen, and therefore they are separated from the fayth and haue denyed the truth.*

The viii. article is, that they commonly are called notorious whoremongers. This is manifestly seene in theyr concubines and children, which walke openly in all mens sight, and make many mens wiues whoores, or corrupte their daughters being virgins, and make thē priests harlots and rybauldes.*

The ix. Article is, that they are ful of deuilish enuy, and especially in al Monasteries they haue great enuy and hatred amongst themselues, because when any thing is geuen or disposed to one Monastery or Colledge, then there are others, that hate it, and enuy at it, and woulde more gladly haue it themselues: Like as among dogs when any thing is geuen to the one and not to the other, which the other seing, enuyeth hys fellow, & the other likewise wil rather deuour all himselfe then geue any part to his fellowe. Wherefore it were well that they were brought from that great sin of enuy in geuing nothing vnto thē: And it were better that their possessions were takē from them, and that they should do that which the Lord spake to hys disciples saying: Go ye and preach the Gospell to all men.

The x. article is, that they are idle, and chiefly the Byshops, Chanons, and other Prelates, which wil not labor dilligently in the holy Scripture, wherewith they might cure the miseries of Christendome, wherto they haue boūd Page 655 thēselues,* and they eate the bread therof in idlenes, because when other men watch and labour to mayntaine themselues and their little ones, thē are they with their lemmons or els they walke in some Cittie, carying hawkes on their fistes, or els they sit at the good wyne w^t their Concubines. and there they sing and play the Lucians, & eat of the best and therefore al that willingly bring and geue to them, shal be made partners of that curse whiche is geuen them of God, because they eate their bread vniustly, whereof Paul writeth in the 2. to the Thess. the 3. chapter: He that laboureth not, let him not eate.

*The 11. article is, that they are notorious liers, beca••e to the end that they may please men, they tel many tales & lies, which in the holy Scripture haue no foundation nor prooffe. Of such wryteth Iohn in the Apoca. 21.

The 12. article is, that they doe not rightly giue or minister to the people the body of our Lord Iesus Christ,* and they geue it not as God hath instituted it and commanded. This is a great & a deuilish sinne and to great malapertnesse. Heerein we woulde ouercome them, wyth the testimonies of the Euangelistes: I say we woulde ouercome the Pope, and all his Priestes, with the authorities of Marke, Luke and Paule. Rom. 13. and we woulde suffer, that Kings, Princes, Lordes and all that are willing to heare, should heare it.

The 13. Article is, that they sit in spiritual iudgement, and then many times they iudge according to fauour,* and not according to the righteousnesse of God, and they take bribes giuing sentence for hym, which in Gods sight hath the wrongfull cause. Wo be to such sentēces, as it is wrytten in Isay 5. Wo be to ye that. &c.

The 14. Article is, that they sit hearing cōfessions, and when there come to them vsurers, raueners, and theeues, they take bribes of them of their ill gotten goodes, to spare them: and they willingly suffer them in cities and towns. And likewise of adulterers, and other notorious whoremongers and whores, and they neuer let or stay them in their great sinnes, to the end that the scripture may be fulfilled in them, which sayeth: Giftes and the loue of money do draw to hell, and do blinde the eyes of iudges.

*The 15. Article is, that they receiue tithes of men, and will of right haue them, and preache and say that men are bound to giue them tithes, and therin they say falsly: For they can not proue by the new Testament, that our Lorde Iesus Christ commanded it, and his disciples warned no man to do so, neither did themselues receiue them. But although in the old Testament, it were commanded to geue tithes, yet it can not thereby be prooued, that christian men are bound thereto: For this precept of the olde Testament had an end in the first yeare of our Lord Iesus Christ, like as the precept of Circūcision. Wherefore welbeloued, consider and see, how your bishops seduce you and shut youre eyes with things that haue no prooffe. Christ sayeth in the 11. of Luke. Geue almes of those thinges that remaine, but he said not, geue the tenth of the goodes, which yee possesse, but geue almes. But when they heare the word, they may say as the lawyer said to Christ: Maister when thou sayest so, thou geuest offence. Luke 11.

*The 16. Article is, that they in many places lende money or goodes to haue treasure or vsurie, and they haue in cities and townes, yearly paiments and perpetual reuenues, as great Princes and Lordes. Wherein they doe against the Gospel, which sayth, do not ye possesse gold nor siluer. And wheras they lend for gaine and vsury, againste that speaketh the Lord, Deu. 24. Lend not to vsury to thy brother. &c. Ye honest discrete and well beloued Lords, all the foresaide Articles we wil prooue against the Pope, and all his priests, with many testimonies of the holy Scripture, which for breuities sake, we haue not here mētioned. But note ye chiefly these 4. Articles, for which wee striue, and desire to defend them to the death.

The first Article is, that all publicke, and customably mortall sinnes ought to be forbidden and prohibited to all Priests and lay men, according to the commaundement of the holy Scripture.

*The seconde Article is, that richesse ought to be taken from the Pope and all hys Priestes, from the hyghest to the lowest, and they ought to bee made poore, as the Disciples of our Lord Iesus Christ were: who had nothyng of their own, neither possessiōs in this world, neither worldly power.

*The third Article is, that the word of God ought to be free for euery mā appointed and ordained therto, to preach and read in al places, whether they shal come, without resistance of any man or without any inhibitiō of either spirituall or earthly power openly or manifestly.

The fourth article is, that the body of our Lord Iesus Christ ought to be deliuered to euery christian as our lord hath ordained it,* and as the holy Euangelists haue wrytten. We haue also vnderstood that there shalbe a Councell in Basile: Wherefore let no mā be exalted, but let them diligētly kepe their wiues, their daughters and their virgins from Byshops, Priests, and Monkes. And do not thinke y^t there is made any holy assembly of Bishops and Priests for the common commodity and profit of Christendom, but onely to thys end that they may hide their secret vices and heresies, with the cloke of hypocrisie, and let and hinder y^e righteousnesse of God, which is muche contrary to them: and for this cause consider ye diligently, that they will not make an holy assembly, but the congregation of Sathan. And take ye heede that it be not done as some did at Constance, who tooke money of Bishops and Prelates, & suffered them to sleepe with their wiues. Ye welbeloued and honest Lordes, if ye finde any thing in these aforesaide Articles or wordes wrytten somewhat sharply, we did it not to offend or contemne you, but to the ende that ye shoulde diligently consider and deuise howe Christendome is so ill kept and led by the Priests of this present age. Our Lorde Iesu Christ keepe you both in body and soule. Amen. In the yeare of our Lord.* 1430.

Preropus, Smahors, Conradus, Samssmolich, Capitaines of Bohemia.

Nowe to prosecute the warres of the Bohemians againe, after Zisca was dead,* wherof we did intreat before, there was great feare, sorrow, and lamentation in the army, the soldiers accusing fortune which gaue ouer such an inuincible captaine to be ouercome with death. Immediatly there was a diuision in the host, the one parte chusing Procopius Magnus to be their captaine, the other parte saying, that there was none could be found worthy to succede Zisca: whereuppon they chusing out certaine to serue the warres,* named themselues Orphanes.

Thus the Thaborites being deuided into two armies, the one part retained their olde and accustomed name, and the other by meanes of the death of their captayne, named themselues Orphanes. And all be it, that oftentimes there was dissension betwene them, yet when soeuer any forein power came towards them, they ioyned their powers together in one campe, and defended themselues. They seldome went vnto any fensed townes except it were to buy necessities, but liued with their wiues and childrē in theyr campe & tents. They had amongst them many cartes, the which they vsed as a Bulwarke: For when so euer they went vnto battell, they made two wings of them, whyche closed in the footemen. The winges of the horse men were on the out side, and when as they sawe their time for to ioyne battell, the wagon men which led the wings, going forth vnto the Emperors standerd, and compassing in such part of their enemies as they woulde, did close themselues in together, whereby the ennemies being inclosed, so that they could not be rescued, they were partly by the footemē, & partly by the men that were in the carres w^t their darts slaine.* The horsemen fought without the fortification: and if it happened that they were oppressed or put to flight, by and by the carres opening themselues, receiued them as it were into a fensed Citie: and by this meanes they got many victories, for so much as their enemies were ignorant of their pollicies.

These 2. armies went foorth, the one into Slesia, and the other into Morauia, and returned againe wyth great pray, before their enemies knewe of their comming. After this they besieged y^e towne of Swetley in Austrich, where as the Thaborites and the Orphanes, two nightes continually assaulted the walles wythout ceasing, but Albert Duke of Austrich comming with his hoste to aide the Citizens, they fought by the space almost of foure houres, the valiauntest warriors being slaine on both partes. At the length the battaile was broken of, and the Thaborits lost their carres, and Albert was put out of his camp & tents. Within a while after, *Procopius Magnus came agayne and inclosed the citie of Rhetium in Austria w^t a notable siege. They of Prage were in his army, and Boslaus Cygneus, of whome we spake before, was slaine there with a dart, & the city of Rhetium was taken by force, sacked and burnt. The Burgrau of Malderburge Lord of the towne, was also taken and caried vnto Prage, where also hee dyed in prison.

These thinges thus done, the Emperour sent for the nobles of Boheme, which went vnto him vnto a town of Hungary, called Posenium in the borders of Austria, vpō the bāks of the riuer of Danubius: but they wold not enter into the towne, but remained w^tout the towne in their tents, whether as the Emperoure going out vnto them, Page 654 communing muche w^t them as touching his right & title,  and the recouering of his fathers kingdome, promising if there were any cause, which did alienate the Bohemians minds from him, that he would take away al the occasion therof. They made answer, that he had made warre vpon them without cause, and that he had suffred their countrey men cōtrary to his promise, to be burnt at Constance not being heard, and the kingdom to be contumeliously interdicted, and the Nobles of Boheme to be condemned by the church of Rome as heretickes:  and that he should thincke the force and power of the Bohemians not to be so small, but that they would prouide for their owne honor. Wherunto the Emperor answered very gently, & offered them a general councel, wherein they might declare their innocency, if they woulde submit themselues to the iudgement of the vniuersal Church: but the Bohemians which were now become valiant victors in armes, would not now be ouercome with wordes, and so nothing being finally concluded, the Emperor returned home.

*Then pope Martin perceiuing the Gospell to increase daily more and more, sent the Cardinall of Winchester an Englishman, borne of a noble house, into Germanie to mooue them vnto warre against the Bohemians. Wherevnto the Emperor also did assiste him.

There were three armies prouided. In the first armie were the Dukes of Saxonie, and the lower cities.

The 2. armye, which was gathered of y^e Franconians, was vnder y^e conduct of the Marques of Brandenburge. *

The 3. army was led by Otho the archbishop of Treuers, whom the Rhenenses, the Bauarians, and the Imperiall cities of Sweuia followed. These armies entring into Boheme, in 3. seuerall partes, after they were passed the woode,  they ioyned together & pitched before Misna. This towne a certaine learned and eloquent protestāt, named Prichicho, the night before, had won frō the Papists: wherfore the army was determined first to recouer y^t citie, before they woulde goe any further. But when as newes came vnto the host, how the Protestants had gathered an army,  and came w^tall spede towards them: they fled before they saw their enemies, and went vnto Thaconia, leauing behind them their warlike engins with a great pray. The Cardinall was not yet come into the campe, but meeting them in their flight at Thacouia, * he maruailed at the cowardly flight of so many Noble and valiaunt men, desiring them that they woulde turne againe vnto their ennemies, which he sayde, were farre weaker then they. Which thing when he had long trauailed about in vaine, hee was faine to be a companion with them in their flight. They were scarcely entred the woode, when as the Bohemians comming vpon thē, set vpon their rereward. Then was theyr flight much more disordered and fearfull then before, neither did they leaue flying before the Bohemiās left folowing. Then all impediment or let being taken away, they vanquished Thacouia: and hauing obtained great store of warlike engines, they destroyed Misna. And when they would haue returned home by Franconia, they had great summes of mony sent vnto them y^t they shuld not wast or destroy the Countreis of Bramberge and Noremburge: wherby the host of the Bohemians was greatly enriched.

Sigismundus the Emperour hauing newes of these things,* went straighte vnto Noremburge, and gathered there new aide and helpe. Also Pope Martin sent Iulian the cardinall of S. Angel into Germany with his ambassade, to make warre against the Bohemians,* and that hee should in the Counsell of Basill, which doth now shortly draw on, be president in the popes name. He entring into Germany, went straight to Noremburge to the Emperor, wheras many of the nobles of Germany were assembled.

There was a new expedition decreed against the Bohemians, against the 8. Kalendes of Iuly,* and Fredericke Marques of Brandenburge appoynted generall of that warre, which should follow the Cardinal. He entred into Boheme by the way that leadeth vnto Thopa, and Albertus prince of Austrich was appoynted to bring hys armie thorough Morauia.

In this expedition was Albert & Christopher of Banaria, and Friderike Dukes of Saxony, Iohn and Albert princes of Brandenburge, wyth their father, which was generall of those warres. Also the bishops of Hyperbolis, Bamberge, and Eisten. Also the company of the Sweuians, which they called the company of S. George, and the Magistrates of the imperial cities, the bishops of Mentz, Treuers and Colen sent their aides, and wyth them the chieftaines of their prouinces.* It is sayd that the number of their horsemen were about 40000. But their footemen were not full so many, for the Germans for the most part do vse to fight their battels on horsebacke.

Also Rhenatus prince of Loraine promised to come to these warres, but being letted by his ciuill warres, for somuch as hee went about to vanquish the Earle of Uandome, wherby he could not keepe his promise, neyther the County Pallatine of Rheine, which did aide and succour the Earle of Uandome, coulde not goe against the Bohemians. The Cardinal staying for them, deferred his iourney vntill the Kalends of August. In the meane time, Albert leading his armie out of Austria, vnderstanding that the Cardinall was not present at the day appoynted, and seeing himselfe vnable to encounter wyth the Bohemian power, he returned backe againe. After this the Cardinall entred into Boheme with an huge army,* & destroyed many of the protestantes townes, killing men, women, and children, sparing neither olde nor yong: notwithstanding, this his tyranny was exercised in the vttermost borders of Boheme, for his captaines feared to enter farre into the land. The Bohemians assone as they that heard tel y^t their enemy was come, made ready, & gathered their host with all speede, and laid siege to a towre called Stiltiuerge, and brought it vnder subiection.

In the meane season there fel such a maruelous sodein feare amongs al y^t papists throughout the whole campe,* y^t they begā most shamefully to run away before any enemy appearing in sight. The cardinal Iulianus maruelling at this most sodein feare, and what should mooue so great an army to flie, went about vnto y^e captains, exhorting them to put on armor, to order their battels, & coragiously to abide their enemies, saying: they did not fight for the glory of their kingdom, or for the possessiō of lands, but for their liues, and the honor & * religion of Christ, and for the saluation of soules. How ignominious a thing is it (saith he) for the Germans to flie in battell, whose courage and valiantnes all the world doth extoll? It were much better for to die, then to geue place to any enemies, before they were seene: for they can by no meanes liue in safetie wythin the walles, which geue place vnto their enemy in the field, for it is the weapon that defendeth a man and not the walles, and except they would euen presently defend their libertie with the sworde, they should shortly be in greater bōdage, more miserable then any death. But this exhortation was all in vaine, for feare had put away all boldnes: for the ensignes were snatched vp, and as though there had bene no captaine in the hoste, euery man ran headlong away. No man regarded any commandement, neither once tooke his leaue of his captaine, but casting away their armour with speedy flight they ranne away, as though their enemy had bene at their backs. * The Cardinall also, although it were against his will, was forced to doe the like.

Thus the protestants by y^e feare of their enemies made the more bolde and couragious, pursued them thorow the woodes, and had a great pray & spoile of them. Notwithstanding, Albertus, when he heard tell that the Cardinall was entered into Boheme, with all speede came agayne out of Austrich with his army, & besieged the strong town of Prezorabia: but when he vnderstoode howe the Cardinall was fled, * he left of his purpose, and returned through Morauia, which was not yet subiecte vnto him, and destroyed aboue 50. townes wyth fire and sword, toke many of their cities by force, and spoiled them, committing great murther and slaughter, and so afflicted them, that they toke vpon them his yoke, and promised to be subiecte and obedient to him vnder this condition, that as touching religion he would be bounde to doe that whych the Councel of Basil should determine.

Then was there an ambassade sent out of Boheme vnto Basil, * where as Sigismund held the Councel, who during the time of warres, * had kept himself at Noremberge. When as hee shoulde take his iourney vnto Rome to bee crowned Emperour, hee wrote letters vnto the nobles of Boheme, wherein was contained, how that he was a Bohemian borne, and how he was not more affectioned to any nation, then to his own, and that he went to Rome for none other cause, but to be crowned, the which his honor shoulde also be a renowne to the Bohemians, whome to aduaunce it hath bene alwaies his speciall care.

Also, how that through his endeuor the Councel was begon at Basill, exhorting all suche as were desirous to be heard as touching religion, that they shuld come thether, and that they woulde not maintaine any quarell contrary to the holy mother church, that the Councel wold louingly and gently heare their reasons: that they should onely endeuour themselues to agree wyth the Synode as touching religion, and reserue and kepe a quiet and peaceable kingdome for hym, against his returne: Neyther shoulde the Bohemians thinke to refuse his regiment, whose brother, father, and vncl, had raigned ouer them, and that hee Page 655 would reigne ouer them after no other meane or sort, then other Christian kings vsed to doe.

The councel of Basil also wrote their letter to the Bohemians, that they should send their Ambassadors which should shew a reason of their faith, * promising safeconducte to go & come, and free liberty to speake what they woulde. The Bohemians in this point were of 2. opinions, for the Protestants & almost all the common people, sayd, it was not good to go, alledging the examples of Iohn Hus and Hierome of Prage, which going vnto Constance vnder the safeconduct of the Emperour, were there openly burned. But the nobility folowing the minde of Maynardus, prince of the new house, sayde, that they ought to goe vnto the Councell, and that they are not to be suffred which had inuented those new and strange opinions of faith, & newe kinde of religion, except they would render accōpt of theyr doings and sayings before the vniuersall church, & defend those things, which they had openly taught, before learned men. This opinion tooke place, and an ambassade of 300. horse was sent vnto Basil. The chiefe wherof were William Cosca a valiant knight, & Procopius surnamed Magnus, a mā of worthy fame for his manifold victories. Ioh. Rochezana preacher of Prage. Nicolas Galecus, minister of the Thaborites, and one Peter an Englishman, of excellent prōpt and pregnant wit. The people came in great number out of the towne, and many out of the synode and councell, attending before the gates to see the comming of this valiāt and famous people: other some gathered together in great nōber into the streetes where as they should passe through. The matrones, maids and children, filled y^e windowes and houses to behold and se•, and to maruel at their strange kinde of apparel, and stoute couragious coūtenāces, saying that it was not vntrue which was reported of them: notwithstanding all men behelde Procopius, saying, this is he which hath ouerthrowne the papistes in so many battels, which hathe subuerted so many townes, and slaine so many men, whom both his enemies and also his owne souldiours, do feare and reuerence: also, that hee was a bold, valiant and inuincible capitaine, which coulde not be ouercome with no terrour, labour or trauaile.

These Bohemian Ambassadors were gently receyued. The next day after,* Cardinall Iulianus sending for them vnto the councell house, made a gentle, long, and eloquent Oration vnto them, exhorting them to vnitie and peace, saying, that the church was the spouse of our sauior Christ, and the mother of all faithful, that it hath the keyes of binding and losing, and also that it is white and fair, without spot or wrinkle, and cā not erre in those poynts which are necessary to saluation, and that he which doeth contemne the same church, is to be coūted as a prophane, Ethnike, & publicane, neither can this church be represented better by any meanes then in this council. Hee exhorteth them also to receiue the decrees of the councell, and to geue no lesse credite vnto the councell then vnto the Gospell, by whose authority, the scriptures themselues are receiued & allowed. Also y^t the Bohemians which call them selues, the children of the church, ought to heare y^e voice of their mother, which is neuer vnmindful of her children, how that nowe of late they haue liued apart from their mother, albeit (said hee) that is no newe or straunge thing, for there haue bene many in times past, which haue forsakē their mother, and yet seeking after saluation haue returned to her againe: That in the time of Noes floud, as many as were wythout the arke perished: That the Lordes passeouer was to be eaten in one house: that there is no saluation to be sought for out of the church, and that this is the garden & famous fountaine of water, wherof whosoever shal drinke, shall not thirst euerlastingly: That the Bohemians haue done as they ought, in that they haue sought the foūtains of this water at the council, and haue determined nowe at length to geue care vnto their mother. Nowe all hatred ought to cease, all armor and weapon is to be laid apart, & all occasion of warre vtterly to be reiected: For the fathers would louingly and gently heare whatsoeuer there they would say in their owne cause or quarell, requiring onely that they woulde willingly receiue and embrace the good counsels and determinations of the sacred synode: whereunto not onely the Bohemians, but also all other faithfull Christians, ought to consent and agree, if they wil be partakers of eternall life.

This Oration of the Cardinal, was heard & very wel allowed of the fathers. Wherunto the Bohemians answered in fewe woordes,* that they neither had contemned the Church nor the councils: that the sentence geuen at Constance against those which were vnheard, doeth diminishe nothing of the Christian religion: that the authoritie of the fathers hath alwaies remained amongst them inuiolate, and whatsoeuer thing the Bohemians had taught, to bee confirmed by the scriptures and Gospell, and that they are nowe come to manifest their innocencie before the whole Church, and to require open audience, where as the laitie may also be present. The request was graunted them: and being further demanded in what poynts they did disagree from the church of Rome, they propounded 4. Articles.

First, they affirmed, that all suche as woulde be saued, ought of necessitie to receiue the Communion of the laste supper vnder both kindes of bread and wine.

The second Article,* they affirmed a•l ciuil rule and dominion to be forbidden vnto y• Clergy by the law of God.

The thirde Article, that the preaching of the worde of God is free for all men, and in all places.

The fourth Article, as touching open crimes and offences which are in no wise to be suffered for the •oiding of greater euill.

These were the onely propositions whyche they propounded before the Councell in the name of the whole realme. Then another ambassador affirmed that he had hard of the Bohemians diuers and sundry thinges offensiue to Christian eares, amongst the which this was one poynte, that they should preach that the inuention of the order of begging Friers was diabolically.

Then Procopius rising vppe, sayde, neither is it vntrue, for if neyther Moises, neyther before hym the Patriarkes, neither after him the Prophets, neyther in the new lawe Christe and hys Apostles did institute the order of begging friers, who doth dout but that it was an inuention of the deuill, and a worke of darkenesse?

This answere of Procopius was derided of them all: And Cardinall Iulianus went about to prooue that not onely the decrees of the Patriarkes and Prophetes,* and those things which Christ and his Apostles had instituted to be onely of God, but also all such decrees as the church shuld ordaine, being guided through the holy ghost, be the workes of God. All be it as he sayde, the order of begging Friers, might seeme to be taken out of some parte of the gospel. The Bohemians chose out 4. diuines which shuld declare their Articles to be taken out of the Scriptures. Likewise on the contrary part there was 4. appoynted by the councell. This disputation continued 50. dayes, where many thinges were alledged on either parte, whereof, as place shal serue, more hereafter (by the grace of Christ) shal be sayd, when we come to the time of that Councell.

In the meane season, while y• Bohemians were thus in long conflicts wyth Sigismund the Emperour and the Pope, fighting for their religion, vnto whome, notw^tstanding all the fulnesse of the Popes power was bent against them,* God of his goodnesse had geuē such noble victories, as is aboue expressed, and euer did prosper them so lōg as they could agree among thēselues: as these things (I say) were doing in Boheme: King Henry the 5. fighting likewise in Fraunce, albeit for no like matters of religion, fell sicke at Boys, and died after he had raigne 9. yeres 5. moneths 3. wekes and odde daies from his coronation. This king in his life and in all hys doings was so deuout & seruiceable to the Pope and his chapleins, that he was called of many the Prince of priests: who left behind him a sonne being yet an infant 9. monthes and 15. dayes of age, whom he had by Quene Katherine daughter to the French king, married to him about 2. or 3. yeares before. The name of which Prince succeeding after his father, was Henry 6. left vnder the gouernement and protection of his vncle named Humfrey Duke of Gloucester.

THE SIXT PART OR SECTION, pertaining to the last 300. yeares.

A preface to the reader.

ACcording to the fiue sondry diuersities and alterations of the Churche, so haue I deuided hetherto the order of thys presente Church story into fiue principall partes, euery part containing 300. yeares. So that nowe comming to the laste 300. yeares, that is, to the last times of the Church, counting from the time of Wickleffe: For as muche as in the compasse of the sayd last 300 yeres, are contained great troubles and perturbations of the Church, with the meruailous reformation of the same through the wonderous operation of the almighty, all which things cannot be comprehended in one booke, I haue therefore disposed the sayd latter 30. yeares, into diuers bookes, beginning nowe with the sixt booke, at the raigne of king Henry the vj. In which booke, beside the greuous and sundry persecutions raised vp by Antichrist, to be noted, here in is also to be obserued, that where as it hath of long time bene receyued and thought of the common people, that this religion now generally vsed, hath sprong vp and risen but of late, euen by the space (as many do thinke) of 20. or 30. yeares, it may now manifestly appeare, not onely by the Acts and Monuments heretofore passed, but also by the hystories here after following, howe this profession of Christes religion hath bene spread abroad in Englande of olde and auncient time, not onely from the space of these 200. late yeares, from the time of Wyckleffe, but hath continually from time to time sparkled abroad, although the flames thereof haue neuer so perfectly burst out, as they haue done within these hundred yeares and more: As by these hystories here collected & gathered out of Registers, especially of the Diocesse of Norwich, shall manifestly appeare: wherein may be seene what men, and how many both men and women within the sayde Diocesse of Norwich, haue bene, which haue defended the same cause of doctrine, which now is receiued by vs in the Church. Which persones althoughe then they were not so strongly armed in their cause and quarel, as of late yeres they haue bene, yet were they warriours in Christes churche, and fought for their power, in the same cause. And although they gaue backe through tyrannie, yet iudge thou the best good Reader, and referre the cause therof to God, who reuealeth all things according to his determined will and appoynted time.

This yong prince being vnder the age of one yeare, after the death of his father, succeeded in his reigne and kingdom of England, Anno 1422. and in the 8. yeare was crowned at Westminster: and the 2. yeare after was crowned also at Paris, Henry bishop of Winchester, Cardinall being present at them both,* & rained 38. yeres, and then was deposed by Edward the 4. as heere after (Christ willing) shall be declared in his time.* In the firste yeare of his raigne was burned the constant witnesse bearer and testis of Christes doctrine, William Tailour, a Priest vnder Henry Chichesley Archbishop of Canterbury. Of this William Tailour I read,* that in the dayes of Thomas Arundell, hee was first apprehended, and abiured. Afterwarde in the daies of Henry Chichesley, aboute the yeare of our Lorde 1421. which was a yeare before hys burning, the said William Tailour appeared again in the conuocation before the Archbishop being brought by the Bishop of Worcestre, being complained of to haue taught at Bristow these Articles folowing.

*First, that whosoeuer, hangeth any scripture about his necke, taketh away the honor due onely to God, & geueth it to the Deuill.

Secondly, that no humaine persone is to be worshipped, but onely God is to be adored.

Thirdly, that the Saints are not to be worshipped nor inuocated.

Upon these Articles the sayde William Tailour being examined, denied that he did preache or hold them in way of defending them, but only did commune and talke vpon the same, especially vpon the second and third article, only in way of reasoning, and for argument sake. And to iustify his opiniō to be true in that which he did hold, he brought out of his bosome a paper or libell wrytten, wherein were contained certaine Articles, wyth the testimonies of the Doctours alleaged, and exhibited the same vnto the archbishop. Who then being bidde to stande aside, the Archbyshop consulting together with the byshops and other prelates, what was to be done in the matter, deliuered the wrytinges vnto M. Iohn Castle, and Iohn Rikinghale, the two vicechauncelors of Oxforde and Cambridge, and to Iohn Langdon monke of Canterbury. Who aduising with themselues, and with other deuines, about the Articles and allegations, on the monday following, presented the sayde Articles of William Tailour, to the Archbishop and Prelates, as erroneous and hereticall. Wherevppon William Tailour being called before them, in conclusion was contented to reuoke the same, and for hys penaunce was by them condemned to perpetuall prison.

Notwithstanding, through fauour they were contented, that he should be released from his carceral indurance, in case hee woulde putte in sufficient surety in the kinges Chancerye, and sweare that he shall neuer holde or fauour any such opinions hereafter. And thus the sayde William Tailor apoynted to appeare the next Wednesday at Lambeth before the Archbishoppe, to take his absolution from his long excommunication during y^e time from Thomas Arundell, appeared againe before him, where he laying a side his Arunlousa, that is: his cloke, his cap, and stripped vnto hys doublet, kneeled at the feete of the Archbyshop. Who then standing vp, and hauing a rodde in hys hande, began the Psalme Misere. &c. hys chaplaines aunswering the second verse.* After that was sayde, the Collect, Deus cui proprium. &c. with certaine other prayers. And so taking an oth of him, the Archbishop committed him to the custodie of the Byshop of Worcester, to whome power and authority was permitted to release him, vpon the conditions aforesaide. And thus was William Tailour, for that time absolved, being enioyned notwythstanding to appeare at the next conuocation whēsoeuer it shuld be, before the said Archbishop or his successour that should follow him.

In the meane time, while William Tailour was thus in the custody of the Bishop of Worcester, there passed certaine wrytings betweene hym, and one Thomas Smith priest at Bristowe, in the which wrytings William Tailour replied against y^e sayd Thomas, concerning the question of worshipping Saints. Upon the occasion of which reply, being brought to the hands of the byshop of Worcester, William Tailour began a newe to be troubled, & was broughte againe before the publicke conuocation of the cleargy, by the said bishop of Worcester, to aunswere vnto his wrytings. This was an. 1422. the 11. day of Februarie. Unto the which conuocation the sayd William being presented, his wrytings were read to him, which he woulde not, nor could not deny to be of his owne hand wryting.

The tenour and effect of whose wryting onely tended to prooue,* that euery petition and prayer for any supernaturall gift, ought to be directed to God alone, & to no creature. All be it in this his wryting he did not vtterly deny, that it was not lawfull in no respecte to pray to Saintes, (and bringeth for the same Thomas Aquine) but onely in respect of that worship, whych is called Cultus latriæ: And further so prosecuteth his minde herein,* that he semeth little or nothing to differ from the superstition of the papists: as most plainely appeareth by his owne wordes, saying: Nunquam tamen negaui, aut negare intendo, merita aut sanctorum suffragia tam beatorum, quam viantium, tam viuus, quam mortuis ad hoc dispositis, quantum possunt, suffragari, vel proficere, quia hoc est elicibile ex Scriptura, quæ non fallit, & ex consona ratione. &c. And moreouer hee inferreth the example of Moses, who prayed vnto God, alleading the merites of Page 659 Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, which were deade. &c. And furthermore passing from the testimony of Hierome, and alledging the example of Steuen, sayeth: Quod nunc magis exauditur pro veneratoribus suis, quam tunc exauditus est pro lapidatoribus.* And at length he commeth to this cōclusion, proouing by S. Austen, in this maner:

Ne igitur cum impijs & idolatris in veteri testamento, in circuitu ambulemus, nunquam deueniendo ad centrum, sanū est quod faciamus secundum consilium Apostoli sic dicentis: Accedamus cum fiducia ad thronum gratiæ eius, vt misericordiam consequamur & gratiam inueniamus in auxilio oportuno. &c.

That is. And therefore least we runne about in circles with the wicked, and wyth the idolaters of the old Testament, and neuer come to the center, therefore it is wholesome & good counsaile,* that we followe the minde of the Apostle, saying: Let vs resorte wyth boldnes vnto the throne of his grace, that we may obtaine mercy, and finde grace in time or oportune helpe. &c.

Thus much out of the foresayde wryting of W. Tailor I haue excerped, to the intent that the indifferent reader, vsing his iudgement herein, may see how litle matter was in this, wherefore he should be condemned by the Papists. And yet notwythstanding the same wryting being deliuered by the archbishop, to the four orders of Friers of London to be examined, was founde erroneous and hereticall in these poyntes.

- 1. First, that euery prayer, which is a petition of some supernaturall gift or free gift, is to be directed onely to God.
- 2. Item, that prayer is to be directed to God alone.
- 3. Item, to pray to any creature is to commit idolatry.
- 4. Also, an other opiniō there was much like to the other, to make vp the fourth, so that although all these opinions agreed in one, yet to make vp a number euery order of the foure sortes of Friers, thought to finde out some matter to offer vp to the Archb. against him, least one order shoulde seeme more cunning or pregnant in finding out more, then could an other: or els perchaunce least any of them should seeme to fauor the party, in bringing nothing against him, as the rest had done.

The burning of William Tailour, Priest.

When the Saterdag was come, which was the 20. day of February, vppon the which day the 4. orders were appoynted to declare theyr censure vppon the Articles in the chapter houses of Paules, first appeareth Frier Tylle, for the Blacke Friers, then Frier Winchelsey: then Frier Low: After Frier Ashwel, eche Frier for his order seuerally bringing his heresy, as is aboue specified.

Thus the verdict of these 4. orders being geuen vp to the Archb. and seuerally, eche order comming in with hys heresy, which was the 20. day of February. Hereuppon commeth downe a wryt from the king, directed to the lord Maior and Sheriffes of London. De heretico comburendo, dated the 1. day of March. Anno 1. of his raigne. The copie whereof remaineth in the recordes of the Tower, beginning thus, Rex Maiori & vicecomitibus. Whereupon the sayd William Tailour condemned as a relapse,* first was disgraded, and after to be burned, and so was committed to the seculare power, who their being had to Smithfield, the 1. day of Marche, with Christian constancie, after long imprisonment, there did consummate his Martyrdom. 1422.

The maner of his disgrading was all one with the disgrading of Iohn Hus before: for the Papistes vse but one forme for all men. First disgrading them from Priesthode, by taking from them the chalice and patine. From deaconship, by taking from them the gospell booke and tunicle. From Subdeaconship, by taking from them the Epistle booke and Tunicle.* From Accoluteship, by taking from them the Cruet and Candlesticke. From an Exorcisie, by taking away the booke of Exorcismes or Graduall. From the Sextonship, by taking away the churchdoore key and surplis. And likewise from Benet, in taking away the surplis, and first tonsure. &c. Al which they orderly accomplished vpon this godly Martyr, before his burning.

John Florence a Turner.

IDon Florence a Turner,* dwelling in Shelton, in the Diocesse of Norwich, was attached for that he helde and taught these heresies heere vnder wrytten (as they called them) cōtrary to y^e determination of the Church of Rome.

In primis, that the pope and Cardinals haue no power to make or constitute any lawes.

Item, that there is no day to be kept holy, but onely the Sunday which God hath halowed.

Item, that men ought to fast no other time, but of the Quatuor temporum.

Item, that Images are not to be worshipped, neyther that the people ought to set vp any lightes before them in the Churches, neither to go on pilgrimage, neither to offer for the dead, or with women that are purified.

Item,* that Curates should not take the tithes of theyr parishioners, but that such tithes shuld be deuided amōgst the poore parishioners.

Item, that al such as sweare by their life or power, shal be damned, except they repent.

The displing of Iohn Florence.

Upon wensday, being the second day of August in the yeare of our Lorde 1424. the sayde Iohn Florence personally appeared before William Bernam,* Chauncellour to William byshoppe of Norwich, whereas he proceding against him, objected the first article touching the power of the Pope and Cardinals: to which Article the sayde Iohn Florence answered in thys manner. If the pope liued vprightly as Peter liued, he hath power to make lawes: otherwise, I beleue hee hathe no power. But being afterward threatned by the iudge, he acknowledged that he had erred, and submitted himselfe to the correction of y^e church, and was abiured, taking an othe that from that time forward he should not hold, teach, preach, or willingly defend Page 658 <1 page duplicate> Page 660 any error or heresie contrary to the determination of the church of Rome, neither maintaine, helpe, or aide any that shal teach or hold any such errors or heresies, either priuely or apertly, and for his offence in thys behalfe done, hee was enioyned thys penance following.

Three Sondaies in a solemne procession in the cathedral Church of Norwich,* he should be displod before al the people. The like also shuld be don about his parish church of Shelton, three other seuerall Sondaies, hee being bare headed, bare footed & bare n•cked, after the maner of a publicke penitentiarie, his body being couered wyth a canues shirt, and canues breches, carying in his hande a taper of a pounce waight, and that done he was dismissed.

Richard Belward of Erisam, in the Diocesse of Norwiche, was accused for holding and teaching these errors and opinions heere vnder wrytten, contrary to the determination of the church of Rome.

*In primis, that Ecclesiasticall ministers and Ordinaries haue no power to excommunicate, neither can excommunicate: And all be it that a Bishop doe excommunicate any man, God doth absolue him.

Item, that he held the erroneous opinions and conclusions, that Syr Iohn Oldcastle helde when he was in prison, & affirmed that Syr Iohn Oldcastle was a true Catholicke man, and falsly condemned and put to death without any reasonable cause.

Item, that such as go on pilgrimage, offering to images made of woode and stone, are excommunicate because they ought to offer to the quicke, and not to the dead: and that the Ecclesiasticall Ministers, that is to say the curates do sell God vppon Easter day, when as they receiue offerings of such as should communicate before they do minister the Sacrament vnto them.

Item, that he counselled diuers women, y^e they should not offer in the Church for the dead, neither wyth women that were purified.

Item, that he blamed diuers of his neighbors that refused his doctrine,* saying vnto thē: truly ye are sooles that deny to learne the doctrine of my sect, for your neighbours which are of my sect, are able to confound and vauquish al other that are of your sect.

Item, that the Saintes whych are in heauen, ought in no case to be prayed vnto, but onely God.

Item, that the sayd Richard keepeth schooles of lolardy in the English tong, in the towne of Dychingham, and a certaine Parchment maker bryngeth hym all the bookes containing that doctrine from London.

The 5. day of July 1424. the sayde Richarde Belward was brought before Iohn, Byshop of Norwich sitting in place of iudgement, wheras the foresaid Articles were obiected against the sayde Richarde, whych he there denied: whereupō the bishop appoynted him an other day to purge himselfe, the monday next after the feast of S. Marget: vpon which day being the 24. of Iuly, in the yeare aforesayd, he appeared againe before the Bishop, and brought wyth him 9. of his neighbors to purge hym vpon those articles, and there did solemnely purge himselfe. And afterwarde, for somuch as the said Bishop suspected the sayd Richarde Belward greatly of lolardie, hee commaunded him there presently to sweare vpon the Euangelistes, that from that day forward he should not wittingly preach, teach, or defend any error or heresy, contrary to the church of Rome, neither aide, assist, fauour or maintaine, priuely or apertly, any maner of person or persons, that should hold or maintaine the sayde errorrs or heresies. In the presence of M. William Bernam, Iohn Wadden, Robert Serle & Iohn Berne Esquire, and other of his neighbours which came vnto his purgation.

In like maner Iohn Goddesel of Dychingham parchmentmaker, was detected and accused vpon the same articles, and thereupon brought before the bishop: * whereas he denying them, purged himselfe by his neighbours, as Richard Belward before had done, being sworne also in lyke maner, as he was, and so was dismissed and set at libertie, vntill the yeare of our Lord 1428. When as he was againe apprehended, accused and abiured, as shalbe more at large declared in the hystorie when we come to that yeare. Syr Hugh Pie also, chaplaine of Ludney in the dioces of Norwich, was likewise accused and brought before the byshop of Norwich y^e 5. day of Iuly. * An. 1424. for holding of these opinions following.

That the people ought not to go on pilgrimage.

Item, that y^e people ought not to geue almes, but only vnto suche as begge at theyr dores.

Item, * that the image of the crosse and other images are not to be worshipped. And that the said Hugh, had cast the crosse of Bromeholde into the fire to be burned, which hee tooke from one Iohn welgate of Ludney. Which articles as is aforesayde, being obiected against him, he vtterly denied: Whereupon he had a day appoynted to purge himselfe by the witnes of 3. lay men and 3. priests. That so done, he was sworne as the other before, and so dismissed.

After this, in the yeare of our Lorde 1428. king Henry the 6. sent downe most cruel letters of commission vnto I. Exetor and Iacolet Germaine, keeper of the castle of Colchester, for the apprehending of Sir William White Priest, and others suspected of heresies, the tenor wherof, hereafter ensueth.

The copie of the kings letters directed to Iohn Exeter, and Iacolet Germaine, keeper of the castle of Colchester, for the apprehending of Sir William White priest and other, (as they called them) lollards.

HEnry by the grace of God king of Englande and of Fraunce,*Lord of Ireland, to his well beloued Iohn Exetor, and Iacolet Germaine, keeper of the castle of Colchester health.

Ye shall vnderstand that we fully trusting vnto your fidelitie and circumspections, haue appoynted you ioyntly and seuerally to take and arrest William White priest, and Thomas, late chaplaine of Setling, in the countie of Norfolke, and William Northampton priest, and al other whatsoeuer they be that are suspect of heresy or lollardy, wheresoeuer they may be founde within the liberties or without, and straight way being so taken, to send the vnto our next gaile or prison, vnto such time, as we shall haue taken other order for their deliury: And therefore wee straightly commaunde you, that ye diligently attende about the premisses, and fulfill the same in forme aforesayde. Also we charge and command all and singuler Iustices of peace, Maiors, Shriues, Bailiffes, Cunstable, and all other our faithfull officers, by the tenoure of these presents, that they do assist, aide, and counsaile you & euery of you, in the execution of the premisses, as it shall be comely for them. In witnes whereof, we haue caused these our letters patentes to be made.

Witnes my selfe at Westminster, the 6. of Iuly, the 6. yeare of our raigne

By vertue of which commission we finde in olde Monuments, that wythin shorte space after. Iohn Exeter, which was appointed one of the commissioners, attached 6. persons in the towne of Bungay in the diocesse of Norwich, and committed them to William Day, and William Roe, Constables of the towne of Bungay, to be sent within 10. dayes folowing vnder safe custodie, vnto the castle of Norwich. Whose names, through the antiquity of the monument were so defaced that we coulde not attaine to the perfecte knowledge of them all: onely 3. names partlye remained in the booke to be read, which were these.

Iohn Waddon of Tenterdon, in the countie of kent, Bartlemewe, Monke of Ersham, in the countie of Norfolke, Corneleader, a martyed man. William Skuts.

These 3. were in the custodie of the Duke of Northfolk, at hys castle of Fremingham.

Besides these, we also finde in the said old monuments within the diocesse of Norffolke and Suffolke, specially in the townes of Beckels, Ersham, and Ludney, a great nūber both of men and women to haue bene vexed and ca••e in prison, & after their abiuration, brought to open shame in churches and markets by the bishop of the sayd diocesse called William, and hys Chancellour William Bernham, Iohn Exceter being the Register therein, so that wythin the space of 3. or 4. yeares,* that is from the yeare 1428. vnto the yeare 1431. about the number of 120. menne and women are examined and sustained great vexatiō for the profession of the Christian faithe: of whome some were onely taken vpon suspition onely for eating of meates prohibited vpon vigil dayes, who of their purgation made, escaped more easily away and wyth lesse punishment, whose names here follow subscribed.

These forenamed persons and souldiors of Christ, being much beatē with the cares and troubles of those dayes although they were constrayned to relent and abiure, that is to protest otherwise with their tongues, then theyr harts did thinke, partly through correction and partly through infirmity (being as yet but new trayned Souldiours in Gods field) yet for theyr good will they bare vnto y^e trueth, although with theyr tongues they durst not expresse it, we haue thought good that theyr names should not be suppressed, as well for other sondry causes, as especially for this: either to stop the mouthes of malignant aduersaryes, or to aunswere to theyr ignorance: Who folowing rather blinde affection thē the true knowledge of times and antiquities, for lacke of knowledge, blame that they know not, accusing the true doctrine of the worde of God, for newelty and carping, the teachers therof for new broched brethrē. Who, if they did as well foresee times passed, as they be vnwilling to follow times now present, they should vnderstand as well by these storyes as other before, how this doctrine of the grace of God lacking no antiquity, hath from time to time continually sought to burst out, and in some places hath preuayled, although in most places through tyrāny and the malice of men, Christes procedinges haue bene suppressed and kept vnder from rising, so muche as mans power and strength ioyned with craft and subtilty, coulde labor to keepe downe the same: as here by these good men of Northfolke and Southfolke, may well appeare. For if the knowledge and the good towardnesse of those good mē, had had the like liberty of time, with the helpe of like authority as we haue nowe,* and had not ben restrayned thorough the iniquity of time and tyranny of Prelates: it had well appeared how olde this doctrine woulde haue bene, which now they contemne and reiect for the newnes therof: neither needed Boner to haue asked of Tho. Hawkes, and such other, where their Church was for xl. yeares ago, in as much as for xl. yeares ago, and more, within the coutry of Norfolke and Suffolke, was then soūd such plenty of y^e same professiō & like doctrine which we now professe. And thus much for the nūber of the names of thesepersōs.

Now touching theyr Articles whiche they did mayneteine and defend: first this is to be considered, as I finde it in the registers, such society and agrement of doctrine to be amongst them, that almost in theyr assertions and articles there was no difference. The doctrine of the one was the doctrine of all the other, what theyr articles were, partly it is shewed in the lease before: and partly here followeth to be declared more at large.

Although it is to be thought concerning these Articles that many of them either were falsly objected agaynst thē, or not truely reported of the notaryes, according as the cōmon maner is of these aduersaryes, where the matter is good, there to make heresy, and of a litle occasion, to styre vp great matter of slaunder, as they did before by the articles of Iohn Wickliffe and Iohn Hus, and others mo: So in like maner it semeth they did in the Articles of these mē, either mistaking that which they said, or misunderstanding that which they ment, especially in these two articles concerning baptisme and paying of tithes. For where as they speaking agaynst the ceremonicall and superfluous traditions then vsed in baptisme, as salt, oile, spittle, taper, light crisomes, exorcising of the water, with such other, accoūted them as no materiall thing in the holy institution of Baptisme, the notaryes slaunderously deprauing this theyr assertion, to make it more odious to the eares of the people,* so gaue out the article as though they should holde that the sacrament of Baptisme vsed in the church by water, is but a light matter and of small effect.

Agayne, in speaking agaynst the Christening the midwiues vse in priuate houses, agaynst the opinion of suche as thinke suche children to be damned, which depart before they come to theyr Baptisme, they are falsely reported as though they shoulde say, that Christen people be sustiently baptised in the bloud of Christ, and nedeth no water, and that infants be sufficiently baptised, if their parents be baptised before them. Whiche thing is so contrary to the manifest worde, that it is not to bee thoughte anye to bee Page 662 so ignoraunt of the gospell, that euer would or did affirme the same.

Moreouer, they thought or sayd peradventure that in certayne cases, tithes might be withholden from wicked priestes sometime, and be conferred to better vses, to the be hoofe of the poore: Therfore they are falsly slaundered, as saying and affirming that no tithes were to be geuē to the ministers and curates of the churches.

*And likewise for matrimony, wherein they are reported to hold and affirme as though it consisted onely in the mutuall consent betwixt the man & woman, neding no other solemnizing in the publicke church and all because (as it is like) they denied it to be a Sacramēt. Other articles were objected agaynst them as these which hereafter folow.

*That auricular confessiō is not to be made vnto a priest but vnto God onely, because no priest hath any power to absolue a sinner from his sinne.

Item, that no Priest hath power to make the body of Christ in the sacrament of the aultar, but that after the sacramentall words, there remayneth pure materiall breade as before.

Item that euery true christian man is a priest to God.

Item, that no man is bound vnder paine of damnatiō vnto Lent or any other dayes prohibited by the Church of Rome.

Item, that the Pope is Antichrist, and his Prelats the Disciples of Antichrist, and the Pope hath no power to binde and loose vpon earth.

* Item, that it is lawfull for euery Christian to doe any bodely worke (sinne onely except) vpon holy dayes.

Item that it is lawfull for priestes to haue wiues.

Item, that the excommunications and ecclesiastical cēsure geuen out by the Prelates are not to be regarded.

Item, it is not lawfull to sweare in priuate cases.

Item, that men ought not to go on pilgrimage.

Item that there is no honor to be geuē to the Images of the crucifixe, of our Lady, or any other saynt.

Item, that the holy water halowed in the church by the priest, is not holier or of more vertue then other running or well water, because the Lord blessed all waters in theyr first creation.

*Item, that the death of Thomas Becket, was neyther holy neither meritorious.

Item, that reliques as dead mens bones, ought not to be worshipped or digged out of theyr graues, or set vp in Shrynes.

Item, that prayers made in all places are acceptable vnto God.

Item, that men ought not to pray to any saynt but only to God.

Item that the vels and ringing in the church was ordeyned for no other purpose then to fill the pristess purses.

Item, that it is no sinne to withstand the ecclesiasticall preceptes.

Item, that the catholick church is onely the congregation of the elect.

*These were the Articles, which were generally obiected agaynst them all, wherein they did so agree in one vniforme sayth, that whatsoever one did hold, all the other did mayntayne & hold the same. By the which theyr consent & doctrine it appeareth that they all receiued it of some one instructor, who was William White: which being a scholer and folower of I. Wickliffe, resorted afterward into thys country of Norfolke and there instructed these men in the light of the gospell. And now as we haue declared the names and Articles of these good men, so it remaineth somewhat to speake of theyr troubles how they were handled, beginning first with William White.

William White Priest.

*THIS William White being a folower of Iohn Wickliff and a priest not after the common sort of priests, but rather to be reputed amongst the number of them, of whom the wise man speaketh: He was as the morning starre in the midst of a cloud, &c. This man was well learned, vpright & a well spoken priest. He gaue ouer his priesthood & benefice, & took vnto him a godly yong woman to his wife named Ioane: notwithstanding he did not therefore cease or leaue frō his former office & duty, but continually labored to the glory and prayse of his spouse Christ, by reading, writing & preaching. The principal points of his doctrine were these, which he was forced to recant at Canterbury.

That men should seeke for the forgeuenes of their sins onely at the handes of God.

That the wicked liuing of the Pope and his holynesse, is nothing els but a deuilish estate and heauy yoke of Anti'christ, and therefore he is an enemy vnto Christes trueth.

That men ought not to worship Images or other Idolatrous payntings.

That mē ought not to worship the holy men which are dead.

That the Romish church is the fig tree which the Lord Christ hath accused,* because it hath brought forth no fruit of the true beliefe.

That such as weare coules, or be annointed or shorne are the lanceknightes and souldiors of Lucifer: & that they all, because theyr lamps are not burning, shall be shut out, when as the Lord Christ shall come.

Upon which articles he being attached at Cant. vnder the Archb. Henry Chichesley in the yeare of our Lord 1424. there for a certayne space stoutly and manly witnessed the truth whiche he had preached: but like as there he lost hys courage and strength, so afterward he became again much more stouter and stronger in Iesu Christ and confessed his own error & offence. For after this he going into Norfolk with his said wife Ioane, & there occupying himself busily in teaching & conuerting the people vnto the true doctrine of Christ, at the last by meanes of y^e kings letters sēt down for that intent and purpose, he was apprehended & taken & brought before Wil. bishop of Norwich, by whom he was conuict & condemned of 30. articles & there was burned in Norwich, in the moneth of September. an. 1424.

The burning of William White.

This William White and his wife had his most abode with one Tho. Moone of Ludney. This mā was of so deuout and holy life, that all y^e people had him in great reuerence, and desired him to pray for them: in so much that one Margaret Wright confessed, that if any sayntes were to be prayd to, she would rather pray to him then to any other. When he was come vnto the stake thinking to open hys mouth to speak vnto the people,* to exhort & confirme them in the verity, one of the bishops seruants stroke hym on y^e mouth, therby to force him to keepe silence. And thus thys good man receiuing the crowne of martyrdome, ended this mortall life to the great dolor & grieve of all the good men of Norfolke. Whose sayd wife Ioane, folowing her husbāds footsteps according to her power, teaching and sowing abroad the same doctrine, confirmed many men in Gods truth: wherefore the suffered much trouble and punishmēt the same yeare at the handes of the sayd bishop.

About the same time also was burned father Abraham of Colchester,* and Iob. Waddō priest, for the like articles.

Concerning them, which abiured, how & by whom they were examined, What depositions came in agaynst them, and what was the order & maner of the penance inioyned them, here it might be set out at large: but for auoyding of prolixity, it shall be sufficient briefly to touch certaine of the principals, wherby the better vnderstanding may be geuē Page 663 to the Reader, after what maner & order al the other were intreated.

First amongst them which were arested and caused to abiure in this yeare afore specified. 1428. was Thom. Pye, and Iohn Mendham of Aldborough, who being conuict vpon diuers of the Articles before mentioned, were enioined penance to be done in theyr own parish Church, as by the bishops letter directed to the Deane of Rhodenhall, & y^t parish priest of Aldborough, doth more at large appeare, the tenour wherof here ensueth.

The copy of the Bishop of Norwich his letter.

*William by the sufferance of God Bishop of Norwich to our welbeloued sonnes in Christ the Deane of Rodéhal of our Dioces, and to the parishe priest of the parish Church of Aldborough of the same our dioces, health, grace and benediction.

For so much as we, according to our office lawefully proceeding to the correction and amendment of the soules of Thomas Pye and Iohn Mendham of Aldborough of the dioces aforesayd, because they haue holden, beleued and affirmed, diuers and many errours and heresydes, contrary to the determination of the holy Church of Rome, and the vniuersall church and catholicke fayth, haue enioyned the sayd Thomas and Iohn appearing before vs personally and confessing before vs iudicially that they haue holden, beleued and affirmed, diuers and many errors and heresydes, this penaunce hereunder written for theyr offences to be done and fulfilled in maner, forme and time hereunder written, according as iustice doth require, that is to say, sixe fustigations or displinges about the parish church of Alborough aforesayd, before a solemn procession, sixe seuerall sondayes and three displinges about the market place of Herelston of our sayde Dioces, three principall market dayes, bare necked, head legs and feet, theyr bodyes being couered onely with theyr shyrtes and breeches either of them carying a taper in his hand of a pound waight, as well rounde about the Church, as about the market place, in euery of the foresayd appoynted dayes,* which tapers the last sonday after theyr penance finished, we will that the sayde Iohn & Thomas do humbly and deuoutly offer vnto the high aultar of the parish church of Alborough at the tyme of the offertory of the high Masse the same day, and that either of them going about the market place aforesayd: shall make foure seuerall pauses or staves, and at euery of those same pauses, humbly and deuoutly receiue at your handes three displings: Therefore we straightly charge and commaunde you and either of you, ioyntly and seuerally by vertue of your obedience, that euery sonday and market day, after the recept of our present commaundement, you do effectually admonishe and bring forth the sayde Thomas Pye and Iohn Mendam to begin and accomlishe theyr sayde penance, and so successiue to finish the same in maner and forme afore appoynted But if they wil not obey your monitions or rather our commaundementes in this behalfe, and begin and finish their sayd penance effectuallye, you or one of you shall cite them peremptoryly that they or eyther of them appeare before vs or our Commissary, in the chappell of our palace at Norwich, the 12. day after the citatiō so made if it be a court day, or els the next court day folowing, to declare if they or any of them haue any cause why they should not be excommunicate for theyr manifest offence in this behalfe committed, according to the forme and order of lawe, and further to receiue such punishmēt, as iustice shall prouide in that behalfe. And what you haue done in the premisses, whether the sayde Thomas and Iohn haue obeyed your admonitions, and performed the said penance or no: we will that you or one of you which haue receiued our sayd commaundement, for the execution thereof, do distinctly certify vs betwene this & the last day of Nouember next comming.

Dated at our palace of Norwich vnder our Commissaryes seale, the 8. day of October. an. 1428.

This (gentle Reader) was for the most part, the order of theyr whole penaunce: howbeit, some were oftentimes more cruelly handled, & after theyr penance they were banished out of the dioces, and other some more straightly vsed by longer imprisomēt, wherof we will briefly rehearse one or two for example.

Iohn Beuerley alias Battild,

IOhn Beuerley alias Battild a labourer was attached by the Vicar of Sowthereke,* the parish priest of Waterden and a lawyer, and so deliuered vnto Mayster Wil. Bernā the Byshops Commissary, who sent him to the Castle of Norwich there to be kept in irons: wheras afterward he being brought before the commissary, and hauing nothing proued agaynst him, he took an othe, that euery yeare afterward he should confesse his sinnes once a yere to his curat and receiue the Sacrament at Easter, as other Christians did: and for his offence was enioyned that the Friday and Saterdag next after he should fast bread and water, and vpon the Saterdag to be * whipped from the pallace of Norwich, going round about by Tomelands, & by S. Michaels Church by Cottle rew, and about the market, hauyng in his hand a waxe candle of two pēce, to offer to y^e image of the Trinity after he had done his penaunce. And for so much as he confessed that he had eatē flesh vpō Easter day and was not shriuen in all lent, nor receiued vpon Easter day, the iudge enioyned him that he shoulde fast Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday in Whitsonweke, hauing but one mealt a day of fish and other whitte meates, and after hys penāce so done, he should depart out of the dioces, & neuer come there any more.

John Skille of Flixton Miller.

IOhn Skille of Flixton Miller being apprehended and brought before the bishop of Norwich y^e 14 day of March 1428.* for holding & mayntayning the Articles aboue written, was therupon conuict and forced to abiure: and after his abiuration solemnly made (which here to anoyd tediousnes we omit) he had a most sharpe sentence of penance pronouced agaynst him, the effect wherof being briefly collected, was this: That forsomuch as the said Skille was conuict by his owne confession, for holding and mayntayning the Articles before written, and for receiuing certain good and godly mē into his house, as sir Wil. White priest, and Iohn Wadden, whom they called famous, notorious, and damnable heretickes, and had now abiured the same, being first absolved from the sentence of excommunication which he had incurred by meanes of his opinions, he was enioyned for penance 7. yeares imprisonment in the monastery of Langley, in the dioces of Norwiche. And forsomuch as in times past, he vsed vpon the Fridayes to eate flesh, he was enioyned to fast bread & water euery Friday, by the space of that 7. yeares to come, and that by the space of 2. yeares next immediately after the 7. yeares expired, euery wednesday in the beginning of Lēt, & euery Maundy thursday, he should appeare before the bishop or his successor, or cōmissary for the time being, in the cathedrall church of Norwich together with the other penitentiaries, to do open penance for his offences.

Besides these there were diuers other of y^e same cōpany which y^e same yeare were forced to like abiuratiō & penāce, And so to proceed to the next yeare following, which was 1429. there ensueth a great nūber in y^e same register, which were examined and did penance in like sorte to the number of 16. or 17. In the number of whom was Iohn Baker Page 664 otherwise called Usher Tunstall, who for hauing a booke with the Pater noster, the •ue and Creed in English, and for certayn other articles of fasting, confession and inuocation contrary to the determination of the Romish Church after much vexation for the same, was caused to abiure and sustayne such penance, as the other before him had done.

The story of Margery Backster.

*ANother was Margery Backster, wife of Wil. Backster Wright in Marthā, the same yere accused: against whom one Ioane wife of Cliffelande was brought in by the bishop, and cōpelled to depose, and was made to bring in, in forme following.

*First, that the sayde Margerye Backster did informe this deponent, that she should in no case sweare, saying to her in english, dame beware of the Bee, for euery Bee will sting, and therefore take heede you sweare not, neyther by God, neither by our Lady, neither by none other saynt: & if ye do contrary, the Bee will sting your tongue and venome your soule.

Itē, this deponēt being demaūded by y^e said Margery, what she did euery day at church, she answered y^t the kneled down & said 5. Pater nosters, in worship of the crucifixe, & as many Aue Maries in worship of our Lady, whō Mar'gery rebuked saying: you do euill to kneele or pray to such Images in y^e churches, for God dwelleth not in such churches, neither shall come downe out of heauen, & will geue you no more reward for such prayer, then a candle lighted & let vnder the couer of the font,* wil geue light by night to those which are in the church: saying moreouer in english, lewd wrightes, of stockes hew and forme such crosses and Images, and after that, lewd paynters glere thē with colours. And if you desire so much to see the true crosse of Christ, I will shew it you at home in your owne house. Which this deponent being desirous to see, the sayd Margery stretching out her armes abroad, sayd to this deponēt this is the true crosse of Christ, & this crosse thou oughtest and mayst euery day beholde and worship in thine owne house, and therefore it is but vayne to run to the Church to worship dead crosses and Images.

Itē this deponent being demaunded by the said Margery how she beleued touching the sacramēt of the aulter, sayd that she beleued the Sacrament of the aulter after the consecratiō, to be the very body of Christ in forme of bread. To whom Margery sayd: your beliefe is nought. For if euery such Sacrament were God, & the very body of christ there should be an infinite number of Gods, because that a thousand priests and more doe euery day make a thousand such Gods, and afterward eat them, and voyd them out again by theyr hinder partes filthily stincking vnder y^e hedges, whereas you may find a great many such Gods, if you will seek for them.* And therefore know for a certaynty, that by the grace of God it shall neuer be my God, because it is falsly and deceitfully ordeyned by the priests in the church, to induce the simple people to idolatry, for it is onely mate^riall bread.

Moreouer the sayd Margery said to this deponēt, that Thomas of Canterbury,* whom the people called S. Tho^mas, was a false traytor and damned in hell, because he iniuriously endowed the churches with possessions, and raised vp many heresy^es in the church,* which seduce the simple people, and therefore if God be blessed, the sayd Thomas is accursed, and those false priests that say that he suffered his death patiently before the aulter, do lye: For as a false cowardly traytor he was slayne in the church dore as he was flying away.

Moreouer, this deponent sayth, that the sayd Margery told her that the cursed Pope, Cardinals, Archbishops, and bishops, & specially the bishop of Norwich & others that support and mayntayne heresies and Idolatry, raigning & ruling ouer the people, shall shortly haue the very same or worse mischiefe fall vpon them, thē that cursed mā Thomas of Canterbury had. For they falsly and cursedly deceiue the people with theyr false mammetries & lawes, to extort mony of the simple folke to sustayn theyr pride, riot and idlenes: And know assuredly that the vengeance of God will speedely come vpō them, which haue most cruelly slayne the children of God,* Father Abraham, & William White, a true preacher of the law of God, and Iohn Wadden, with many other godly men: which vengeance had come vpon the sayd Cayphas, the Bishop of Norwich & his ministers, which are members of the deuill, before this time, if the Pope had not sent ouer those false pardons vnto these parties, which the sayd Cayphas had falsly obteyned to induce the people to make procession for the state of them and of the church. Which pardōs brought the simple people to cursed idolatry.

Item the sayd Margery sayd to this deponent, that euery faythful man or woman is not bound to fast in Lent, or other dayes appoynted for fasting by the church, & that euery man may lawfully eat flesh and all other meates vpon the sayd dayes and times:* and that it were better to eat the fragments left vpō Thursday at night on y^e fasting dayes, thē to go to the market to bring themselues in debt to buy fish: and that Pope Siluester made the Lent.

Item, the sayd Margery sayd to this deponēt, that W. White was falsly condēned for an hereticke, & that he was a good and holy mā, and that he willed her to folow him to the place of execution,* Whereas she saw that whē he would haue opened his mouth to speak vnto y^e people to instruct them, a deuill one of bishop Cayphas seruants strake him on the lips, and stopped his mouth, that he could in no case declare the will of God.

Item, this deponent sayth y^t the sayd Margery taught her that she should not goe on pilgrimage, neither to our Lady of Walsingame, nor to any other saynt or place.

Also this deponent sayth, that the sayd Margery desired her that she & Ioane her mayde would come secretly in the night to her chamber, & there she should heare her husband read the law of Christ vnto them, which law is written in a booke that her husbände was wont to reade to her by night, and that her husband is well learned in the Christian verity.

Also that the same Margery had talked with a woman named Ione West, and that the sayde woman is in a good way of saluation.

Also that the said Margery said to this deponēt: Ione, it appeareth by your countenance, that you intend to disclose this that I haue sayde vnto you: and this deponent sware that she woulde neuer disclose it, without the sayde Margery gaue her occasion. Then sayde Margery vnto this deponent if thou do accuse me vnto the Bishop, I wil do vnto thee, as I did once vnto a certayne Frier a Carmelite of Varmouth which was the best learned Frier in all the country. Then this deponēt desired to know what she had done to the frier. Unto whom Margery answered that she had talked with the sayd Frier, rebuking him because he did beg, saying that it was no almes to geue hym any good thing, except he would leaue his habite, and go to the plough, and so he should please God more, then folowing the life of some of those Friers. Then the Frier requyred of the sayd Margery whether she could teach him or tel him any thing els. Thē the sayd Margery (as she affirmed to this deponent) declared to this Frier the gospels in enlish, and then the Frier departed from her. After this the same Frier accused the sayd Margery of heresy, and she vn|derstanding that the Frier had accused her: accused the Frier agayne, that he would haue knowne her carrally, and because she would not consent vnto him, the Frier had accused her of heresy. And moreouer she sayd that her husbād would haue killed the Frier therefore: and so the Frier for feare held his peace, and went his way for shame.

This Margery also sayd that she had oftentimes bene faynedly confessed to the Deane of the fieldes,* because he should thinke her to be a woman of good life, and therefore he gaue the sayd Margery oftentimes money. Then thys deponent asked her whether she had confessed her sinnes to a priest or not. And she answered that she had neuer offended any priest, & therefore she would neuer confesse her selfe to any priest, neyther obey him because they haue no power to absolue any man from theyr sinnes, for that they offēd dayly more greeuously then other men, and therefore that men ought to confesse themselues onely vnto God and to no priest.

Item, the said Margery said to this deponent, that the people did worship deuils which fell frō heauen with Lucifer, which deuils in theyr fall to the earth, entred into the Images which stand in the Churches,* and haue long lurked & dwelled in thē, so that the people worshipping those Images, commit Idolatry.

Item, she sayd more to this deponent that holy bread & holy water were but tri•es of no effect or force, & that the belles are to be cast out of the Church, and that they are excommunicate which first ordeined them.

Moreouer that she should not be burned, although she were conuict of Lollardy, for that she had a charter of salua^{ti}on in her body.

Also the sayd deponent sayth, y^t Agnes Bethem her ser^uant being sent to the house of the sayd Margery the Saterdag after Ashwēsdag, the said Margery not being wⁱn, Page 665 found a brasse pot standing ouer the fire with a piece of baken and Otemeate sething in it, as it is said Agnes reported to this deponent.

There were also besides this deponent, diuers other (worne and examined vpon the sayde Margery, as Iohn Brunley and Agnes Berthē, seruauntes to William Clistand, which altogether confirmed the former depositions.

Thus much we haue thought good to note as concerning Margery Backster, which we haue gathered out of the old monumentes and registers. But what became of her after this her accusation, because we finde no mention made in the sayd registers, we are not able to declare.

The same yeare also, were the like depositions made by one William Wright agaynst diuers good men, as here foloweth.

*First, this deponent sayth that William Taylor, tolde Iohn Piry of Ludney, in the house of Iohn Bungay of Beghton, in the presence of I. Bungay, Robert Brigges wright of Martham, and Iohn Usher, that all the good men of Martham which were fauorers & helpers to that good man William White are euill troubled now a dayes, and that the sayd William White, was a good & holy doctor: and that the best doctor after him was William Euerden, whiche wrought with the sayde William Taylour, * of Ludney by the space of one moneth, and that the first Sonday of the same moneth, the sayd William Euerden did sit all day vpon the table at worke, saying to the sayd William Taylor, that he would not go to Church to shew hymselfe a Scribe or Pharisy: and the second sonday he put on Gentle mans apparell, and went to Norwiche to harken how the Byshop and his ministers vsed the poore Christians there in prison.

*Also the sayd William Wright, deposed that Willyam Taylour of Ludney was one of the secte, & went to London with Syr Hue Pye, and had conuersation oftētimes with Syr William White, hauing often conference vpon the Lollardes doctrine.

Item, that Auise, wife of Thomas Moone, is of the same sect and fauored them, * and receiueth them often, and also the daughter of Thomas Moone is partly of the same sect, and can read English.

*Item, that Richard Fletcher of Beckils, is a most perfect doctor in that sect, and can very well and perfectly expound the holy Scriptures, & hath a booke of the new law in English, which was Syr Hughe Pyes first.

Itē, that Nicolas Belward, sonne of Iohn Belward dwelling in the parishe of Southelham, is one of the same sect, and hath a new Testament which he bought at London for 4. markes and 40. pence, and taught the sayd William Wright and Margery his wife, and wrought wyth them continually by the space of one yere, and studied diligently vpon the sayd new Testament.

Itē, that Thomas Bremner Turner of Dychingame is perfect in that sect and law.

*Iohn Clarke the younger of Bergh, had the beddinge and apparell of William Euerden in his custody, after the returne of William White from Bergh, and is of the same secte.

*Item, William Bate, Taylour of Sething, and hys wife and his sonne, whiche can reade Englishe very well, are of the same sect.

*Item, William Skiruing of Sething, receiued Ioane the wife of W. White into his house, being brought thither by William Euerden, after theyr departure from Martham.

*Item, William Osborne of Sething, I. Reue glouer, and Bawdwin Cooper of Beckels are of the same sect.

Item, Iohn Pert late seruaunt of Thomas Moone, is of the same secte, and can read well, & did read in the presence of William White, and was the first that brought Sir Hugh Pye into the company of the Lollardes, which assembled oftentimes together, at the house of the sayd Tho. Moone, and there conferred vpon theyr doctrine.

*Item, Syr Hugh Pye bequeathed to Alice, seruaunt to William White, a new Testament, which they then called the booke of the new law, & was in the custody of Oswald Godfrey of Colchester.

*Iohn Perker Mercer of a village by Ipswitch, is a famous Doctour of that secte. Also he sayd that father Abraham of Colchester is a good man.

Item, the sayd William Wright deposeth that it is read in the Prophetes amonges the Lollardes, that the sect of Lollardes shalbe in a maner destroyed:* Notwithstanding at the length the Lollards shall preuayle and haue the victory agaynst all theyr enemyes.

Also, he sayd that Tucke knoweth all of that Sect in Suffolke, Norfolke and Essex.

Besides these, there were many other •he same yere troubled,* whose names being before expressed in the table of Norfolke men, here for breuityes sake we omit further to untreat of, passing ouer to the next yere folowing, which was 1430. Ex Regist. Norw.

IOhn Burrell seruaunt to Thomas Moone of Ludney, in the Dioces of Norwiche,* was apprehended and arrested for heresy, the 9. day of December, in this yere of our Lord 1430. and examined by Mayster William Bernam the Bishops commissary, vpon the articles before mentioned, and diuers others hereafter following, obiected agaynst him.

In primis, that the Catholicke Church is the soule of euery good Christen man.

Item,* that no man is bounde to fast the Lent or other fasting dayes appoynted by the Church, for they were not appoynted by God, but ordeyned by the priestes: and that euery man may eat flesh or fish vpon the same dayes indifferently, according to his own will, & euery friday is a free day to eat both flesh and fish indifferently.

Item,* that pilgrimage ought not to be made but onely vnto the poore.

Item, that it is not lawefull to sweare, but in case of life and death.

Item,* that Masses and prayers for the deade, are but vayne, for the soules of the dead are eyther in heauē or hell: and there is none other place of purgatory but this world. Upō the which Articles he being cōuict, was forced to obiure and suffred like penance as the other before had done.

THomas Moone of Ludney,* was apprehended and atta'ched for suspition of heresy, agaynst whom were objected by the Bishop, the articles before written, but specially this article, that he had familiarity & communication with diuers heretickes, and had receiued, comforted, supported, and mayntayned diuers of them,* as sir William White, syr Hugh Pye, Thomas Pert, and William Callis Priestes, with many other more: vpon the which articles, he being cōuict before the bishop, was forced to abiure, and receiued the like penance, in like maner as before.

In like maner Robert Brigges of Martham was brought before the Bishop the 17.* day of February, in the yeare aforesayd, for holding and affirming the foresayd articles, but especially these hereafter folowing.

That the sacrament of confirmation ministred by the Byshop,* did auayle nothing to saluation.

That it was no sinne to withstand the ordinaunces of the Church of Rome.

That holy bread and holy water were but trifles, and that the bread and the water were the worse for the conturacions & characters which the priestes made ouer them.

Upon which Articles he being conuict, was forced to abiure, and receiued penance in maner and forme as the other had done before him.

The like also (albeit somewhat more sharp) happened vnto Iohn Finch of Colchester,* the 20. day of September, who albeit he was of the dioces of London, being suspecte of heresy, was attached in Ipswich in the dioces of Norwich, & brought before the bishop there, before whom he being conuict of the like articles: as all the other before him, was enioyned penance, three displings in solemne procession about the Cathedrall Church of Norwich, three seuerall Sondayes, & three displinges about the market place of Norwich three principall market dayes, his head, necke and feet being bare, & his body couered onely with a short shirt or vesture, hauing in his handes a taper of waxe of a pound waight,* which the next Sunday after his penance, he shoulde offer to the Trinity: and that for the space of 3. yeres after, euery Ashwednesday & Maundy Thursday he should appeare in the Cathedrall Church of Norwich, before the Bishop or his Vicegerent, to do open penance amongst the other penitentiaries, for his offences.

There were besides these men which we haue here rehearsed, diuers and many other, who, both for the concordance of the matter, and also for that theyr Articles & punishmēts were all one, we haue thought good at this time to passe ouer, especially forsomuch as their names be before recited in the Catalogue.

ABout the same time, euen the same yeare. 1430. shortlye after the solemne Coronation of Kyng Henrye the sixt a certayne manne named Richard Houeden a woll winder,* and Citizen of Londō, receiued also the crown of Page 666

The burning of Rich, Houeden.

Martyrdome. Which man when as he coulde by no perswasions be withdrawne or plucked backe from the opinions of wickliffe, he was by the Rulers of the church condemned for heresy, and as Fabian writeth, buried hard by the tower of London.

Nicholas Canon of Eye.

*NOw to proceed in our story of Norfolke and Suffolk in folowing the order of yeres, we finde that in y^e yere of our Lord. 1431. One Nich. Canon of Eye was brought before the Bishop of Norwich for suspicion of heresy, with certayne witnesses sworne to depose against him touching his maners and conuersatiō, which witnesses appointing one William Christopher to speak in the name of them all, he deposed in maner and forme folowing.

First that on Easter day when all the parishners wēt about the church of Eye solemnely in processiō as y^e maner was, the sayd Nicholas Canon as it were mocking & deciding the other parishioners, went about the Church the contrary way, and met the procession.

*This article he confessed and affirmed that he thought he did well in so doing.

Item, the sayd Nicholas asked of maister Iohn Colman of Eye, this question. Maister Colman, what think you of the Sacrament of the aulter? To whome the sayde Colman aunswered: Nicholas, I thinke that the Sacramēt of the aulter is very God and very man, the very flesh and very bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ vnder forme of bread and wine. Vnto whom Nicholas in decision sayde: Truly if the Sacrament of the aulter be very God & very man, and the very body & bloud of our Lord Iesu Christ: then may very God and very man be put in a small roome: as when it is in the priests mouth, that receiueth it at mas. And why may not we simple men, as well eate flesh vpon Fridayes and al other prohibited dayes,* as the priest to eat the flesh and the bloud of our Lord euery day indifferētly: The which article, the sayd Nicholas denied that he spake vnto Maister Colman, but vnto a Monke of Hockesney, And furthermore, he thought he had spoken well in that behalfe.

Item that on Corpus Christi day at the eleuation of high masse, when all the parishioners & other straungers kneeled downe holding vp their handes, and doing reuerence vnto the sacrament, the sayd Nicholas went behinde a pillar of the church, and turning his face from the high aulter, mocked them that did reuerence vnto the sacrament.

This article he also acknowledging, affirmed that he beleued himselfe to do well in so doing.

Item, when his mother would haue the said Nicholas to lift vp his right hand, and to crosse himselfe frō y^e craftes and assaults of the deuill, forsomuch as he deferred the doing therof, his mother tooke vp his right hād & crossed him saying: In nomine patris filij, & spiritus sacti. Amen. Which so ended, the sayde Nicholas immediately deciding hys mothers blessing, tooke vp his right hand of his owne accord, and blessed him otherwise, as his aduersaryes reporte of him. This Article the sayde Nicholas acknowledged to be true.

Item, that vpon Alhallowen day in the time of eleuati'on of high masse, when as many of the parishioners of E•e lighted many torches and caried thē vp to the high aulter kneling down there in reuerence and honor of the Sacrament, the sayd Nicholas carying a torche, went vp hard to the high aulter, and standing behind the priestes backe saying masse,* at the time of the eleuation he stood vpriht vpō his feet, turning his back to the priest, and his face toward the people, and would do no reuerence vnto y^e sacrament. This article he acknowledged, affirming that he thought he had done well in y^t behalfe. All which Articles the Byshops cōmissary caused to be copied out word for worde, & to be sēt vnto M. William Worsted, Prior of the cathedrall church of Norwich, and to other doctors of diuinity of the order of begging Friers, that they might deliberate vpon them, and shew their mindes betwene that and Thursday next folowing. Vpon whiche Thursdays being the last of Nouember, the yeare aforesayd, the sayd Nicholas was agayne examined before M. Barnam and diuers other vpō two other articles which he had confessed vnto I. Exetor notary,* & Tho. Bernsten bachelor of diuinity and others. Whereof the first Article was this: that the sayd Nicholas Canon being of perfect minde and remembrance, confessed that he doubted whether in the Sacrament of the aulter, were the very body of Christ or no. This article he confessed before the Commissary to be true.

Item,* that he beyng of perfecte minde and remembraunce, beleued that a man ought not to cōfesse his sinnes to a Priest. This Article he also confessed that he doubted vpon.

Now remayneth to declare what these doctors aforesayd concluded vpon the articles: whose aunswere vnto the same was this.

First of all as touching the first article,* they sayde that the article in the same termes as it was propounded, is not simply an heresy but an error.

Item, as touching the second article, the doctors agree as in the first.

Item, as touching the third Article, they affirme that it is an heresy.

Vnto the fourth Article they aunswered as vnto the first and second.

Item,* the doctors affirme the 5. article to be an heresy.

Item, as touching the 6. Article, the doctors conclude that if the sayd Nicholas being of perfect mind and remembrance, did doubt whether the sacrament of the aulter were the very perfect body of Christ or no, then that Article is simply an heresy.

Wherupon the sayd Commissary declared & pronounced the sayd Nicholas Canon vpo the determinatiō of the foresaid doctors, to be an heretick: and therupon forced the sayd Nicholas to abiure all the sayd Articles. That done, he enioined the sayd Nicholas penance for his offēces, thre displinges about the cloyster of the Cathedrall Church of Norwich, before a solemne procession, bare headed & barefoote, carying a Taper of halfe a pound in his hand, going after the maner aforesayd,* like a mere penitētiary: y^e which his penance, the iudge commaunded should be respited vn'till the comming of the Bishop into his dioces, and that in the meane time he should be kept in prison, to the end that he should not infect the flock with his venune and poyson of errors and heresyes.

Thus haue we briefly discoursed vnto you, the greate troubles and afflictions, which happened in Norfolke and Suffolke by the space of those 4. yeares before mentioned, hauing drawn out briefly for euery yere, certayne notable examples, sufficient for the declaration of all the rest, for so much as their opinions being nothing different, theyr penaunce and punishment did also nothing differ, otherwise then by those particuler examples may be playnely seene.

Thomas Bagley Priest.

ANd now to proceede as we haue begon,* w^t our former storyes generally, we find in Fabians Chronicles that in the same yere of our Lord. 1431. Thomas Bagley a priest Vicar of Monenden beside Malden, being a valiant disciple and adherent of wickliffe, was condemned by the Byshops of heresy at London about the midst of Lent, was disgraded and burned in Smithfield.

Paule Crow a Bohemian.

*The same yeare also was Paule Crowe a Bohemian taken at S. Andrewes by the Bishop Henry, and deliuered ouer to the secular power to be burnt, for holding contrary opinions vnto y^e Church of Rome touching the sacramēt of y^e Lords supper, the worshipping of Sainets. auricular confession, with other of Wicklesses opinions.

The story of Thomas Rhedon, a French man, and a Carmelite Frier, burnt in Italy for the profession of Christ.

*WE haue declared before, how this cruell storme of persecution which first began with vs in England, after it had long raged heere against many good and godly men, it brake out & passed into Boheme, and after within a short time, the fire of this persecution increasing by little and little, inuaded Scotland, and from thence now wyth greater force and violence, this furious deuouring flame hath entred Italy, and suffereth not any part of the world to be free from the

murther and slaughter of most good & godly men. It hapned about this time, that one Thomas Rhedon,* a Frier of that sect, which taketh his name of the mount Carmelus, by chance came with the Venetiā Ausbassadours into Italy. This mā, although he was of that fort and secte, which in stead of Christians, are called Carmelites, yet was he of a farre other religion, & vnderstood the word of God, iudging that God ought not to be worshipped, neither in that mount, nor at Ierusalem onely, but in spirit & truth. This man being a true Carmelite, • fauoring with his whole hart that new sweet must of Iesu Christ, with earnest study & desire seeking after a Christiā integritie of life, prepared himselfe first to go into •ly, trusting y^t he should find there, or else in no place, sonne by whole good life and liuing he might be editied and instructed. For where ought more aboundance of verme & good liuing to be, then in that place, which is counted to be the forte and fountaine of all religion? And how could it otherwise be, but that wheras so great holines is professed wherupon all mens cies are bent, as vpon a stage, vnderas S. Peters seate is, and is thought to be the ruler & gouernour of all the Church, all things should florish and abesid worthy of so great expectatiō in that place? This holy man hauing these things before his eies, and considering the same with himselfe, forsooke his owne countrey & Citie, & went vnto Rome, conceiuing a firme & sure hope that by the example of so many notable and worthy me, he should greatly profile in godlines & learning: but the successe of the matter did vtterly frustrate his hope, for all things were cleane cōtrary. Whatsoeuer he saw, was nothing else but meere dissimulatiō and hypocrisie.* In stead of gold, he found nothing but coales: and for to say y^e truth, he found nothing else there but gold and siluer. In stead of heauenly gifts, there raigned amongst them the pompe and pride of the world. In place of godlines, riot. In stead of learning and study,* douthfulnes and superstition. Tyrannie and hautinesse of mind had possessed the place of Apostolicke simplicitie: that now there remained no more any place or libertie for a man to learne that whiche hee knew not, or to teach that which he perfectly vnderstoode.

Finally, all things were turned artic versie, all things hapned vnto him contrary to his expectation wheresoeuer he went. But nothing so much offended this good mas mind,* as the intolerable ambition, and pompous pride in them, whome example of humilitie should especially commend and praise to the whole worlde. And albeit that hee saw here nothing, which did accord & agree with the rule of the Apostles: yet these things did so much passe all measure and pacience, that he could by no meanes resraine his long in so great abuse and corruption of the Church, seing such ambitions pride in their buildings, apparell, in their places, in their daintie fare, in their great traynes of seruants, in their horse and armour, & finally in all things pertaining vnto them. Which things, how much they did vary from the prescript rule of the Gospel, so much y^e more was this good mā forced to speake. Albeit he did well vnderstand how litle he shoulde preuaile by speaking: for if admonition would profite any thing at all, the bookes of Wicklesse and diuers other were not wanting. The famous testimonies of Iohn Hus, & of Dierome of Prage, and their bloud shed for the same, was yet present before their eies:* at whose most effectual exhortations, they were so little correct and amended, that they seemed twise more cruell than they were before. Yet all this could not feare this good man, but that in so necessary and wholesome an office, he would spend his life if need should be. So by this meanes, he which came to be a scholer vnto others, was now forced to be their teacher. And he which determined to follow other mens liues and maners, had now contratrywise set before them his life to be marked and followed. For he liued so amongst them, that his life might be a rule vnto them all, and so taught, as he might also be theyr schoolemaister. For euen as Paule had foreshewed vnto such as desired to liue godly in Christ, that they shoulde suffer persecution: such like reward hapned vnto this

mā. He gaue vnto them the fruite of godlinesse,* whiche they should follow: they againe set vpon his head the diademe of Martirdome. He sheweth them the way to saluation, and they for the benefite of life rewarded him death: and whereas no rewards had bene worthy for his greate labours and trauailes, they with most extreame ignominie persecuted him euen vnto the fire. For when as by continuall preaching he had gotten great enuie and hatred, the rulers began to consist together, by what meanes they might circumvent this mans life. Heere they had reconcle to their accustomed remedies: for it is a peculiar and continuall custome amongst the prelates of the Church, that if any man did displease them, or that his talke be not according to their minde, or by any meanes hurtfull, or a hinderance to their lucre and gaine, by and by they frame out Articles of some heresie, which they charge him withall. And like as euery liuing thing hath his peculiar and proper weapon to defend himselfe from harme,* as nature hath armed the Bore with his tuskes, the Hedgebogge with his prickles, the Lyon is feared for his clawes, the Dogge for his biting, the Bull fighteth with his hornes, neither doth the A•e lacke his houes to strike withall: euen so this is the only armour of the Bishops,* to strangle a man with heresie, if he once go about to mutter against their will and ambition: which thing may be easily perceiued and seene in this most holy man, beside a greate number of other. Who, when as now he began to waxe greuous vnto them, and could no longer be suffred: what did they? straightwayes flee vnto their old policies, and as they had done with Hus, and Hicrome of Prage, euen so went they about to practise against this man. They ouerwhelme him with suspicion, they seeke to intangle him with questions, they examine him in iudgement, they compile Articles against him, and lay heresie vnto hys charge, they condemne him as an hereticke, and beeing so condemned, they destroy and kill him. This was theyr godlines: this was the peaceable order of those Carmelites. Whose religion was to weare no sword nor shield, notwithstanding they did beare in their hearts, malice, rancour, vengeance, poison, craft and deceit, sharper then any sword. With how great care and policie is it provided by law, that none of these Cleargy men should fight wyth sword in the streates? When as in iudgement and accusations (where as it is not lawfull for a man to oppresse his brother) there is no murtherer which hath more readie vengeance, or that both more vily esteeme his brothers soule then they. They shead no bloud themselues, they strike not, nor kill, but they deliuer them ouer vnto others to be slaine. What difference is there I pray you, but that they are the authours, and the other are but the ministers of the cruell fact? they kill no man as murtherers do. How then? Although not after the same sort, yet they do it by another meane.

The Articles which they falsly gathered against thys man,* are affirmed by some to be these.

That the Church lacketh reformation, and that it shall be punished and reformed.

That Infidels, Iewes, Turkes, and Moores shall bee conuerted vnto Christ in the later dayes.

That abominations are vsed at Rome.

That the uniust excommunication of the Pope, is not to be feared: and those which do not obserue the same, do not sinne or offend.

But yet there lacked a minister for these articles:* albeit he could not long be wanting at Rome, where all things are to be sold, euen mens soules. For this office and ministry, there was no man thought more meete, then William of Rowne, Cardinall of Saicet Martines in the Mount, Uicechancelour of the Court of Rome. Eugenius at that time was Pope, who had a little before succeded Pope Martin aboue mentioned. Before the whyche Eugenius, this godly Rhedonensis the Frenchman, was brought, and from thence sent vnto prison. And againe after his imprisonment, and diuers and sondry greeueus torments, he was brought before the Iudges. The Wolfe S•ate in iudgement: the Lambe was accused. Why? because he had troubled the spring. But heere neede not manie Page 668 malice of these mighty potentates, had offended inough, and was easely conuict and condemned to be burned: but in such sort, as first of all he should be depriued of all such degrees as he had taken to Priesthode: For it is counted an vnlawfull thing, that a Priest should be punished with prophane punishment, when as notwithstanding it is lawfull inough for Priests to put any lay man to death, be he neuer so giltles.

*How religiously and earnestly do they foresee, that the maiesty of Priestly dignitie should not in any case be hurt? But how little care haue they, that their consciences bee not hurt with false iudgements, and oppressing the giltles? Wherefore, before that he should come vnto punishment, this good man must be disgraded. The order and maner of this Popish degrading is partly before touched in the story of William Taylor, fol. 517.

*After that it had pleased the Bishops to disgrace thys man frō the degrees wherewith before they had consecrated him, and thought not that sufficiēt, by and by after they depriued him of his life also, & burned him four yeres after that he came to Rome. In the yeare of our Lord. 1436.

The burning of Tho. Rhedonensis.

And thus through the crueltie of these most tyrannous Prelates, this blessed Martyr dyed. Albeit it is not to be thought that he died, but made a losse of this bodie, for a greater gaine of saluation, before the iust iudgement of God: Neither is it to be doubted, but that he liueth eternally vnder the aultar, with them whose bloud the Lorde will reuenge, peradventure too soone sor some of them, whome the earth hath heere so long holden vnpunished.

As this Thomas abouesayd suffered at Rome: so were diuers other in other places about Germany executed neare about the same time,* after the burning of Iohn Hus: as Hēry Grunfelder, Priest of Ratispone, an. 1420. also Henry Radtgeber Priest, in the same Citie, an. 1423. Iohn Draendorfe of noble birth, and a Priest, was burned at Wormes. an. 1424. Peter Thoraw, at Spyre, an. 1426. Math. Hager, also suffered at Berline in Germany, not long after. Ex Balei Centur. sept.

After the death of Pope Martine, who reigned foureteene yeares,* succeeded Eugenius, the fourth of that name, about the yeare of our Lord 1431. Of whome Antoninus thus writeth, that he was much geuen to wars, as may well declare his conflictes and fighting with the Romaines: also the batailles betweene the Venetians and the Florentians.

This Pope began first to celebrate the Councell of Basill, which Councell Martin his predecessour had before intended, according to the institution of the Councell of Constance. Notwithstanding the said Eugenius perceauing afterward this Councell of Basill not to fauour him and his doings, and fearing some detriment to come to him by the same, afterward laboured by all subtil practises to dissolve and interrupt the saide Councell, and from Basill to translate it first to Ferrara, then to Florentia, more neere to his owne sea of Rome. Concerning the which Councell of Basill, forsomuch as we haue begon heere to make mention, it shall be no great digression out of the way, to discourse something thereof (the Lorde so permitting) more at large, so much as for the most principall matters thereof shall seeme sufficient or necessary to be knowne.

Heere foloweth the order and maner of the Councell of Basill, touching the principall matters concluded therein, briefly collected and abridged heere in this present booke: The rest whereof we haue referred vnto our former edition, wherein the full discourse of the whole disputation is to be seene more at large, for suche as haue list and leisure to see more thereof.

IN the 39. session of the Councell of Constance (as is before mentioned,* page. 594.) it was decreed and prouided concerning the order and tunes of such generall Councils as should heereafter followe: The first that shoulde next ensue,* to be kept the fift yeare after the said Councell of Constance: the second to be holden the seauenth yeare after that, and so orderly all other to follow successiuelly from ten yeare to ten yeare. Wherefore, according to this decree, followed a generall Councell, fiue yeares after the Councell of Constance, celebrate and holden at Sene, vnder Pope Martine, an. 1424. but it soone broke vp. After the which Councell, the tearme of seauen yeares being expired, another Councell was holden at Basill, in the yere of our Lord 1431. The which Councell is noted to haue bene the most troublesome, and to haue endured longer then any other Councell beforetime celebrate and holden in the Church. This Councell continued almost the space of seauenteene yeares: wherein it was concluded, as before in the Council of Constance, that the generall Councils were about the Pope, and both of these two Councils did attribute the chiefe authoritie in decreeing and determining vnto the generall Councell: which is the cause that the contrary part doth derogate so much from the authoritie of this present Councell.

When as Pope Martine the first had appointed Iulian, Cardinall and Deacon of S. Angell, his Legate, to celebrate and holde a generall Councell at Basill for the reformation of the Church, and rooting out of heresies, within short space after Pope Martin died, in whose seate Eugenius the fourth succeeded,* who confirmed vnto the said Cardinall Iulian, the same authoritie which his predecessor before had giuen him.* Vnto this Councell of Basill beeing begon, came the Emperour Sigismund, who during his life time, with his presence and authoritie, did protect and defend the said Synode. After the Emperours death, Pope Eugenius altering his former minde & purpose, would transport the Councell vnto Bononie, and thereby hindred the successe of the Councell of Basill. And first he helde a contrary Councell at Ferrara, and afterward at Florence: For after the death of the Emperour Sigismund, there was no Princes or noble men, that had any care or regard of the Councell. Eugenius the Pope pretended causes, as touching the Greekes, which should come vnto the Councell,* and the vniting of their Church vnto the West Church, the which Greekes woulde in no wise passe the Alpes: Also as touching his owne incommoditie, that he could not come vnto Basill being so long a iourney, and that all his men might haue easie accesse vnto Bononia, and that amongst the Germaines (which in their owne countrey are so intractable) nothing can be attempted for their reformation: whereupon he cited Cardinall Iulian and the fathers of the Councell vnto Bononia, vnder great penaltie.* vnder great penaltie. They againe cited the Pope, that either he should come himselfe vnto the Councell, or send Ambassadors vnder the like penaltie. For this cause the Ambassadors of Albert King of the Romaines, and of the other Princes of Germany, assembled together first at Norenberge, and when as they could determine nothing there, they assembled againe at Frankford, to appease the dissention betweene the Councell and the Pope: for it was thought, that the Electors of the Empire might best assemble and meete in that place. In the meane time, the Emperours Ambassadors, and the Ambassadors of the Electors, went vnto Basill, and hauing conference with the Ambassadors of the other Princes which were there, they did earnestly exhort the fathers of the Councell, that they would embrace and receiue the vnitie, which Page 669 they would offer.* The request of the Princes was, that the fathers would transport the Councell, and go vnto another place: the which onely thing Pope Eugenius seemed alwaies to seeke and desire, that therby he might either diuide the fathers of y^e Councell, or take away their libertie.

Notwithstanding this sacred Synode thought good neither to deny the princes request, nor to graunt that, which Pope Eugenius required. During this doubt, the Emperours Ambassadors, the Bishops of Pataua and Augusta (being much required and stirred thereunto) appointed a noble and valiant Baron called Conrad Weinsperge, by the Kings commandement, to be Protector and defender of the Councell, and the fathers. Whereby as the enemies perceiued the Emperours minde to be alienate from the Pope, so the Fathers of the Councell vnderstood his good will towards them: forsomuch as he would not haue sent them a protector, if he had not iudged it a lawfull Councell: neither againe would he haue iudged it a Coūcell in Basill, if he had geuen credit to Pope Eugenius. But by meanes of a great pestilēce which began to grow, the assembly that should haue bene holden at Frankford, was transported vnto Mentz. The Ambassadors of the princes also thought good to go thether, if they might find any meanes of vnity, whereby they might vnite and knit the Pope againe vnto the Councell.

The assembly was very famous, for there were present the Archbishops of Mentz,* Colen & Treuers, Electours of the sacred Empire, and all the Ambassadors of the other Electours. Notwithstanding, the Archbishop of Colen was the chiefe fauourer of y^e Coūcell in this assembly, who with all his labour and diligēce went about to bring the matter vnto a good ende. Rabanus the Archbishop of Treuers shewed himself somewhat more rough. The sacred Synode also thought good to send thether their Ambassadors, and appointed out the Patriarke of Aquileia, the Bishop of Uicene, and the Bishop of Argen diuines, Iohn Segouius, and Thomas de Corcellis, with diuers others. Ther was no mā ther present which would name himselfe the Ambassadors of Eugenius: Albeit there were many of his fauourers and frends come thether, both frō the Coūcell, and also out of Florēce, the which, albeit they had sworne to the contrary, yet fauoured they more Eugenius then the Councell. But the chiefe Hercules of all the Eugenians, was Nicholas Cusanus, a man singularly well learned, and of great experience. After diuers cōsultations had, the Electours of the Empire, and the Ambassadors of the other Princes of Germany, thought good to geue out commandement throughout their whole nation and countrey, that the Decrees of the Councell of Basill should be receiued and obserued.

Whilest these things were thus debated at Mentz, there sprang a certaine very doubtfull question amongst the Diuines, which remained at Basill, whether Eugenius might be called an heretike, which had so rebelliously contemned the commaundements of the Church. Hereupon they gathered theſelues together, diſputing long amongst themſelues, ſome affirming, and othersome holding the negatiue part.* Vpon this their diſputation, there aroſe three ſeuerall opinions, ſome affirming that he was an hereticke, othersome, not onely an Hereticke, but alſo a relapſe. The third ſort would neither grant him to be an hereticke nor a relapſe. Amongſt theſe diuines, the chiefe and principal both in learning and authority, was the Biſhop of Ebriun, Ambaſſadour of the king of Caſtell, and a certaine Scottiſh Abbot: which, as two moſt valiant Champions, ſubdued all their enemies, ſo that all the reſt did either conſent vnto their argumēts, or gaue place vnto thē, and ſo their determinatiō tooke place, and Eugenius was pronounced both an heretike and relapſe. Eight conſolutions were there determined and allowed amongſt the Diuines, which they called verities: the copie whereof they did diuulgate throughout all Chriſtendome.

When the Ambaſſadours of the Councell were returned from Mentz,* and that certain report was made of the allowing of their decrees, the fathers of y^e Coūcel thought good to diſcuſſe the cōcluſiōs of the diuines more at large. Whereupon, by the commandement of the deputies, al the Maisters and Doctours & Cleargy,* were called together, with all the reſidue of the Prelates, into the Chapterhouſe of the greate Church, there openly to diſpute and diſcuſſe Eugenius heresie. The which thing ſore greeued the Byſhop of Millaine, fearing leaſt this diſputation would worke the deprivation of Eugenius,* the which, as he ſaid, he had alwaies letted for feare of ſchiſme: Wherefore he ceaſed not by all manner of waies to labour, to ſtop & trouble the matter, exhorting thē that were abſent by his letters, and encouraging thoſe that were preſent by his words, to the defence of Eugenius. But at the laſt, there was a great aſſembly in the Chapter houſe, ſome commyng thether to diſpute, and other ſome to heare. This diſputation continued ſixe dayes, both forenoone and afternoone, amongſt whō Cardinall Lodouicus Archbiſhop Arelatensis, was appointed as Iudge and Arbitrator of the whole diſputatiō: who beſide many other notable vertues, was both valiaunt & conſtaunt. Nicolas Amici, which was alſo a Proctor of the faith, a famous mā amongſt the Diuines of Paris demaunded of euery man what their opinion was. Iohn Deinlefiſt, publicke Notary, wrote euery mā's ſentence and iudgement.* The conſolutions of the Diuines, whiche were the ground and foundation of their diſputation, were theſe here following.

- 1. It is a veritie of the Catholicke fayth, that the ſacred generall Councell, hath power ouer the Pope, or any other Prelate.
- 2. The Pope cannot by his owne authoritie, either diſſolue transport or proroge, the generall Coūcell being law fully congregated, without the whole conſent of the Councell: and this is of like veritie.
- 3. He which doth obſtinately reſiſt theſe verities, is to be counted an hereticke.
- 4. Pope Eugenius the fourth hath reſiſted theſe verities, when as at the firſt, by the fulneſſe of his Apoſtolicke power, he attempted to diſſolue or to transport the Councell of Baſill.
- 5. Eugenius being admoniſhed by the ſacred Councell, did recant the errors repugnant to theſe verities.
- 6. The diſſolution or translation of the Councell attempted the ſecond tyme by Eugenius, is agaynſt the foresayd verities, and containeth an inexcusable error touchyng the fayth.
- 7. Eugenius in going about to diſſolue and transport the Coūcell agayne, is fallen into his before reuoked errors.
- 8. Eugenius beyng warned by the Synode, that hee ſhould reuoke the diſſolution or trāſlation the ſecond time attempted: after that his contumacie was declared, perſeuering in his rebellion and erecting a Councell at Ferrara, ſhewed himſelfe thereby obſtinate.

These were the cōclusiōs which were read in y^e Chapter house before the fathers of y^e Coūcell. Upon the which, when they were desired to speake their mindes, they all, in a maner, cōfirmed & allowed them. Notwithstāding Panormitane Archbishop, disputed much against them. Like wise did the Bishop of Burgen the king of Arrogons Almoner. Yet did they not gaynsay the 3. first cōclusions, but onely those wherein pope Eugenius was touched.* This Panormitane as he was subtile, so did he subtilly dispute agaynst the last cōclusiōs, endeououring himselfe to declare that Eugenius was not relapsed, & had great contention with the Bishop of Argens, Iohn Segouius, & Fraūces de Fuxe,* Deuines. He diuided the Articles of the faith into three sortes: straightly: as in the Creede: largely, as in the declarations made by y^e Church, most largely of all, as in those things which rise of the premisses, affirming that Eugenius did by no meanes violate his fayth in his first dissolution that he made, because it is not contayned in the Creede, neither yet in the determinations of the Church, that the Pope cannot dissolue the Councels: & that it seemeth not vnto him to rise of y^e determination before made, but rather of the decrees of the Councell of Constāce: And further, that this, as a case omitted, is reserued for y^e Pope to be discussed, for somuch as in the chapter beginning Frequēs, it appeareth that the place where the Coūcell should be kept, ought to be chosen by the Pope, the Councell allowing the same, and nothing is therof at all spoken. And if peraduēture Eugenius had offended in the first dissolution, notwithstāding he ought to be holdē excused, because he did it by the Coūcell of the Cardinals,* representing the Church of Rome: whose authoritie he sayd to be such, that the iudgemēt therof should be preferred before all y^e world. Neither had there bene any sacred Coūcell found to haue proceeded agaynst Eugenius as an hereticke, & that is an euident signe, that the Councell hath not thought him to haue swarued from the faith, neither to haue any occasion, that he should be called hereticke for his errorrs reuoked, & that he himselfe hath read the whole text, that the Pope did not reuoke the dissolutiō as cōtrary vnto the faith, but as breiding offence: Also that y^e last dissolutiō hath no such cause in it: for somuch as likewise he had done it by y^e coūsell of the Cardinals,* and for the vniting of the Greekes, that he might not be compelled in a criminall cause, to aūswere by his procuratour, whē as he being letted by sicknes, could not come personally. So, for as much as in the first dissolutiō Eugenius hath fallē into no errorr of faith, he cannot be perswaded that he cā be called a relapse, for so Page 670 much as he neither in the first, neither yet in the seconde dissolution did violate his faith.

This Oration of Panormitane was more praised then allowed of all men. Notwithstanding this effect it wrought, that afterward this word relapse was taken out of the cōclusions, & in stead therof this word prolapse put in. Neither durst Panormitane himselfe, altogether excuse Eugenius of heresie, but defended more the first dissolution, then the second: yet departed he not without answer: for Iohn Segouius an expert Diuine, rising vp, answered him reueretly as was comely for such a Prelate. He said he granted that which Panormitane had spoken touching the diuision of the Articles of the faith into three points, for because it made for his purpose. For if those things are to be holden for Articles of faith, sayd he, which may be gathered of the determinations of the Church, it were manifest that the conclusions whereupon we now cōtend, redound and come of the determinations of the Church: that is to say, of the Councell of Constance: for, if therein the Pope be made subiect vnto the generall Councell, who is it that will say that the Pope hath power ouer y^e Councell which is aboue him? or that Eugenius ought to remaine Pope, because he could not dissolue the Councell which is aboue him, without the consent thereof? The which Article vndoubtedly, he hath violate and broken. And if any mā will say that in the first dissolution this Article was not violate, because there was no declaration made therof, let him which so thinketh, thus vnderstand: that the Byshop of Rome ought not only to knowe the plaine and manifest, but also the secret and hidden things of the fayth, for he being the vicare of Christ, and the head of all other, ought to instruct and teach all men. But if so be he wil not, then hee shall be conuicted for being head, because he cōtinued long in y^e dissolutiō after the declaratiō of y^e councell, neither did cōsent vnto y^e determination of y^e church, & therefore, if peraduenture he did not erre in y^e faith,* as it manifestly appeareth by y^e saieng of Clemēt oftētimes alledged by Panormitan, wherin it is said, y^e he which liueth rebelliously & neglecteth to do good, is rather a mēber of the deuill thē of Christ, and rather an infidell then a true beleuer: so that Eugenius by disobeieng y^e Church, may worthely be called an infidell. Neither is it true that y^e Pope hath not offended in the fayth: For somuch, as well in that aunswere which beginneth Cogitanti, as also in the aunswere which beginneth Sperant, made vnto the Popes Ambassadors, these words are manifest: this Article cōcerneth faith, and we had rather die then through cowardlines to giue place. By the which saieng it is euident, the Synode to haue sufficiently admonished y^e Pope that he did against the faith, and therefore it seemed that afterward when as Eugenius reuoked the dissolution, he also reuoked the errour of faith cōteined in the same. There are also diuers offences sprōg and risen through the errour of faith: for some say that the Pope is vnder the Councell, othersome denie it, and this diuersitie of doctrine bringeth offence. Also it is expressly against the authority of the Councell, that the Pope did reuoke the assertions made in their name.

And albeit in such reuocations, y^e stile & order of iudgements is not obserued, notwithstanding it doth suffice in such case, when as the Councell doth proceed against the Pope: in which case onely the truth is to be obserued, neither is the Councell subiect vnto any positieue law, that it ought to obserue any tearmes or iudiciall orders. Also he said that he vtterly cōtemned that singular glose which did prefer y^e Pope before all the world, so that it might well be called singular, which decreed so foolish and fonde things and vnworthy to be followed of any man: and that he did much maruaile of Panormitane, and other Doctours of those daies, which whilst they went about to extoll y^e authoritie of the gloses, do abase y^e same by adding a singularity therto: for that glose is singular whiche is alone. But who would not more esteme a glose constantly writtē and agreeable in all places, then that which in any one place teacheth any thing which may seeme to be an errour: and that as touching the veritie & truth. S. Hierome a graue and auncient Doctour is cōtrary to this glose, who doubteth nothing at all, but that the world, as touching authoritie, is aboue the Citie it selfe, that is to say, Rome.

Segonius, could fearsely finish this his Oration without interruption: for Panormitane oftentimes interrupting him, went about to confute now this, and now that reason. Wherupon the Bishop of Argen rising vp, a man not onely eloquent, but also of a stoute courage, troubled Panormitane in his reasons and argumēts, and put him from his purpose: yet they proceeded so farre, that they passed the maner of disputation, and did not abstaine from opprobrious tauntes.

When the Bishop of Argen chaunced to say that the Bishop of Rome ought to be the minister of the Church,* Panormitane could not suffer that: in so much that he so forgot himselfe that day, and his knowledge (which otherwise was great) did so faile him, that he was not ashamed to say and affirme, that the Pope was Lorde ouer the Church. Whom Segonius answered: Marke (sayth he) O Panormitane, what thou sayest: for this is the most honourable title of the Bishop of Rome, wherin he calleth himselfe the seruaunt of the seruants of God. Which is gathered vpon this point, when as Christ sayd vnto hys disciples, when they demanded of him which of them was the greatest, you know he aunswered them: The Princes of the people haue rule and dominion ouer them,* but amongst you it is not so, &c. Wherein he doth vtterly prohibit Lordship and dominion. And Peter which was the first vicar of Christ, saith, feede the flocke of Christ which is committed vnto you, prouiding for them not by compulsion, but willingly. And immediatly alter he sayd, not as Lords ouer the Cleargie. For it Christ y^e sonne of God, came not to be ministred vnto, but to minister & to serue, how then can his vicar haue any dominion, or be called Lord, as you Panormitane will affirme: forsomuch as the disciple is not aboue his maister, nor the seruaunt aboue his Lord. And the Lord himselfe saith: be yee not called maisters, for so much as your only maister is Christ, and he which is the greatest among you, shal be your seruant. Panormitane being somewhat disquieted with this aunswere, the councell brake vp and departed.

The next day,* there was a generall congregation, and they returned all againe vnto the chapter house after dinner, whereas the Archbishop of Lyons, the Kings Orator being required to speake his minde, after he had by diuers and sundry reasons proued Eugenius to be an hereticke, he bitterly complained, detesting the negligence and ignaue, of those that had proferred such a man vnto the papacie, and so moued all their harts which were present, that they altogether with him did bewaile the calamities of the vniuersall Church.

Then the Byshop of Burgen,* the Ambassadour of Spaine, diuided the conclusions into two parts, some he called generall, & othersome personall, disputing very excellently as touching the three first cōclusions, affirming y^e he did in no point doubt of them, but only that the additiō which made mention of y^e faith, seemed to be doubtfull vnto him. But vpon this point, he staid much, to proue that the Councell was aboue y^e Pope. The which, after he had sufficiently proued both by Gods law and mans lawe, he taught it also by Phisicall reason, alledging Aristotle for witnesse.* He said that in euery well ordered kingdome, it ought specially to be desired, that the whole realme should be of more authoritie then the King, which if it happened contrary, it were not to be called a kingdome, but a tirannie: so likewise doth he thinke of the Church, that it ought to be of more authoritie, then the Prince thereof, that is to say, the Pope. The which his Oration he vttered so eloquently, learnedly, and truly, that all men depended vpon him, and desired rather to haue him continue his Oration, then to haue an end thereof.

But whē as he entred into y^e other cōclusions,* he semed to haue forgottē himself, & to be no more the same mā that he was: for neither was there y^e same eloquēce in his wordes, neither grauitie in Oration, or cherefulnes of countenance, so that if he could haue sene himselfe, he would peraduenture greatly haue marueiled at himselfe. Euery man might wel see & perceiue thē the power & force of the truth, which ministred copy of matter vnto him, so long as hee spake in y^e defēce therof. But whē as he begā once to speak against hir, she tooke away euē his naturall eloquence frō him. Notwithstanding Panormitane, and the Bishop of Burgen, shewed this example of modesty, that albeit they would not confesse or grant the last cōclusions to be verities of faith: yet they would not that any mā should folow or leane vnto their opiniō, which wer but meane diuines, but rather vnto y^e opinions of the Diuines. But the king of Aragons Amner, being a subtile & crafty man, did not directly dispute vpō the conclusions: but picking out here and there certaine argumēts, sought to let and hinder the Councell. Against whome an Abbot of Scotland, a man of an excellent wit disputed very much: and Thomas de Corcellis a famous Diuine, alledged much against him out of y^e Decrees of y^e sacred Councell, and with a certaine modest shamefastnes, alwaies beholding the ground, did very largely dispute in the defence of the conclusions.

But now to auoide tediousnes, I will only proceed to declare arguments, wherby the conclusions were ratified Page 671 and confirmed:  not minding to intreate of th v. last cōclusions, which cōcerne y^e person of Eugenius, but only vpō y^e three first, whereunto I wil adioine certaine probable argumēts gathered out of y^e disputation of the fathers. In y^e first cōclusion is the greatest force, and first to be discussed: touching the which, two things are to be required, & examined. The one whether the generall Council haue authoritie ouer the Pope. The other, whether the Catholike faith commaundeth it to be beleued. As touching that the Pope is subiect to the generall Councell, it is excellently well proued by y^e reason before alledged, by the Bishop of Burgen. For the Pope is in the Church, as a king in his kingdome: and for a king to be of more authority then his kingdome, it were too absurd: Ergo, neither ought the pope to be aboue the Church.  For like as oftentimes, Kings which do wickedly gouerne the cōmon wealth, & exercise cruelty, are depriued of their kingdome, euē so it is not to be doubted, but that the Bishops of Rome may be deposed by the Church, that is to say, by the generall Councils.

Neither do I heere in allow them, which attribute so ample and large authoritie vnto kings, that they will not haue them bound vnder any lawes: For such as so do say, be but flatterers,  which do talke otherwise thē they think. For albeit that they do say that the moderation of the law is alway in the Princes power: that do I thus vnderstād, that when as reason shall perswade, he ought to digresse from the rigour of the law: for hee is called a King, which careth and prouideth for the common wealth: taketh pleasure in the commoditie and profite of the subiectes, and in all his doings hath respect to the cōmoditie of those, ouer whom he ruleth: which, if he do not, he is not to be counted a King,  but a tyraunt, whose propertie it is onely to seeke his owne profit: for in this point a King differeth from a tyraunt, that the one seeketh the commoditie and profit of those whom he ruleth, and the other only his owne. The which to make more manifest, the cause is also to be alledged, wherefore Kings were ordeined.

At the beginning (as Cicero in his Offices sayth) it is certaine, that there was a certaine time when as the people liued without kings. But afterward when lands and possessiōs began to be deuided according to the custome of euery natiō, then were kings ordeined for no other cause, but only to exercise iustice. * For when as at the beginning, the common people were oppressed by rich & mighty men, they ran by and by to some good and vertuous man, which should defend y^e poore frō iniurie, & ordeine lawes, whereby the rich and poore might dwell together. But when as yet vnder the rule of Kings, the poore were oftentimes oppressed, lawes were ordeined and instituted, the which should iudge neither for hatred nor fauour, and geue lyke eare vnto the poore as vnto the riche: whereby we do vnderstand and know, not only the people, but also the King to be subiect to the lawes. For if we do see a King to contemne and despise the lawes, violently rob and spoile his subiects, defloure virgins, dishonest matrones, and do all things licentiously and temerariouly: do not the nobles of the kingdome assemble together, deposing him from his kingdome, set vp another in his place, which shall sweare to rule and gouerne vprightly, and be obedient vnto the lawes? Verely as reason doth perswade, euen so doth the vse thereof also teach vs. It seemeth also agreeable vnto reason, that the same should be done in the Church, that is to say, in the Councell, which is done in any kingdome. And so is this sufficiently apparant which we haue before sayd, that the Pope is subiect vnto the Councell.

*But now to passe vnto the argumentes of Diuinitie, the foundation of the matter which we do intreate vpon, are the wordes of our Sauour Iesu Christ in diuers places, but specially where as he speaketh vnto Peter: Tu es Petrus, & super hanc petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam, & portae inferi non praeualebunt aduersus eam. i. * Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not preuaile against it. Vpon whyche words it seemeth good to begin this disputatiō, forsomuch as some were wont to alledge these words, to extoll y^e authority of the Bishop of Rome. But (as it shall by and by appeare) the words of Christ had another sense and meaning then diuers of them do thinke, for he saith: & the gates of hell shall not preuaile against it. Verely this is a great promise,* and these wordes of the Lord are of great importance. For what greater word could there haue bene spoken, then that the gates of hell should not preuaile against the church? These gates of hel, as S. Hierome saith, do signifie sins. Wherefore if sinnes can not preuaile against the Church, neither can any maligne spirites preuaile against the same, which haue no power at all ouer mankinde, but only through sinne. And for that cause, where as it is sayd in Iob, that there is no power vpon the earth that may be cōpared vnto the power of the maligne spirite, whereby it followeth that the power of the Church is aboue all other power.

We may also vpon the same saying,* reason after an other sort: for somuch as y^e gates of hel: that is to say, sinnes can not preuaile agaynst the Church, the Church thereby is declared to be without sinne: the which cā not be spoke of y^e pope which is a mortall mā, for somuch as it is written, seuen tymes in the day the iust mā doth offend: If the Church be without spot because it can not be defiled with sinne, who is it that will preferre a sinnefull mā: before an vndefiled Church? Neither let vs geue eare vnto those whiche will not referre these woordes of Christ vnto the Church,* where as he sayth: Oraui pro te Petre, vt non deficiat fides tua. That is to say, Peter I haue prayed for thee, that thy fayth should not fayle thee. For as S. Augustine sayth in the exposition of the Psalmes, certaine thyngs are spoken as though they seemed properly to pertaine vnto the Apostle Peter, notwithstanding, they haue no euident sense but when they are referred vnto the Church, the person wherof he is vnderstāded figuratiuely to represent. Wherupō in an other place in the questiōs of y^e new & old Testa^ment, vpon the wordes: Rogauī pro te Petre, I haue prayed for thee Peter: What is doubted? Did he pray for Peter, & did he not pray for Iames and Iohn, beside the rest? It is manifest that vnder the name of Peter, all other are conteyned. For in an other place of S. Iohn he sayth: I pray for them, whom thou hast geuen me, & I will that wheresoeuer I am, they shall be also with me. Wherupon we do oftentimes by the name of Peter vnderstand the Church, which we do nothing at all doubt to be done in this place: otherwise the truth could not consist, for somuch as within a while after, the fayth of Peter, fayled for a tyme by the deniall of Christ, but the fayth of the Church, whose person Peter did represent, did alwayes perseuere inuiolate.

As touching the Bishops of Rome,* if time would suffer vs, we could rehearse many crāples, how that they either haue ben heretickes, or replenished with other vices. Neither are we ignoraunt how that Marcellinus at the Emperours commaundement,* did sacrifice vnto Idols, & that an other (whiche is more horrible) did attaine vnto the Papacy by a deuilish fraude & deceite. Notwithstanding the testimony of Paule vnto the Hebrues shall suffice vs at this tyme, who sayth euery Bishop to be compassed in with infirmitie: that is to say, with wickednesse and sinne. Also the testimonies of Christ him selfe do approue, that y^e Church remaineth alwayes without sinne: for in Mathew he saith,* I am with you euen vnto the end of the world. The which wordes were not onely spoken vnto the Apostles (for they continued not vnto the end of the world) but also vnto their successours: neither would Christ then signifie that he was God, dispersed throughout all the world, as he is also perceiued to be amongst sinners, but would declare a certain gift of grace, through his assistaūce, whereby he would preserue y^e holy Church consisting amongst his Apostles and their successours, alwayes immaculate and vndefiled.

And agayne in an other place I (sayth he) will pray, & he shal geue you an other cōforter, that he may remaine w^e you for euer, euē the spirite of truth whō the world cānot receaue, because the world seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but you shall know him, because he shall remayne w^t you. The which wordes being spoken vnto the Disciples of Iesus, are also vnderstāded to be spokē vnto their successours, & so cōsequently vnto the Church. And if the spirite of truth be cōtinually in the Church, no man cā deny, but that the Church ought to continue vndefiled. By the same authoritie also that Christ is called the spouse of the Church, who seeth not, but that the Church is vndefiled? For the husband & the wise (as the Apostle sayth) are two in one flesh,* & (as he doth also adde) no mā hateth his own flesh: thereby it commeth to passe, that Christ can not hate the Church, for somuch as she is his spouse, and one flesh with him, & no mā cā hate himselfe: Ergo, the Church doth not sinne: for if it did sinne, it should be hated, for sinners the Lord doth hate.* The which authorities being gathered together we ought with the Apostle to confesse that the Church of God hath neither spot nor wrinkle. Also he writyng vnto Timothe affirmeth the Church to be the pillar & foundation of the truth: whereupō in this song of the spouse it is sayd: My frend thou art altogether fayre & beawtifull neither is there any spot in thee.

These wordes peradventure may abash some, that I do go about to proue the Church to be without sinne. For when as the Church doth containe all men which are called Christiās, which also do agree & come together in one Page 672 beliefe of faith, and participation of the Sacraments, I do feare least some men will thinke, that I do affirme all mē to be without sinne: which is so far frō my meaning, that I do verely thinke the cōtrary to be most true. For I suppose, that there is no man in the Church being clothed in this mortall flesh,* without sinne. Neither do these things vary or dissent among themselues: For the Church hath this gift, that albeit euery part and mēber therof may sin, yet the whole body can not sinne. For there bee alwayes good men in the Church, the which, albeit that they be subiect vnto humaine fragilitie, notwithstanding they haue so perfect a gift of sincere and pure vertue, that subduing all carnall desires and affectiōs, they keep themselues a pleasant and acceptable sacrifice vnto God. Neither do I consent or agree vnto the opiniō of diuers, which affirme that the Virgin Mary onely perseuered in faith at the Lordes passion.* Whereupon diuers haue not bene ashamed to say that the faith might be so debilitate and weakened, that it should returne to one only old woman. Whose opinion or rather madnes, Saint Paule seemeth opēly to reiect, writing thus vnto the Romaines: do ye not know (saith he) what the Scripture writeth of Helias, how incessantly he called vpon God against the childrē of Israell (saieng) O Lord, they haue slayne thy Prophets, and digged downe thine aultars, and I alone am left, and they seeke after my soule? But what answere receiued he of God? I haue left vnto my self yet vij. M. men, which haue not bowed their knees vnto Baal. What other thing doth this answere of God declare, then that it is a foolish opiniō of them which thinke the Church of God to be brought vnto so small & number? We ought to beleue the words of Christ, which are altogether repugnāt vnto those mē who affirme y^e the Virgine onely did perseuere in faith. For Iesus sayd vnto his Father, O holy father saue thē in thy name, whome thou hast geuen me, that they may be one as we are one. Whē I was with them, I kept them in thy name: I haue kept them that thou gauest vnto me, and none of them perished, but onely the sonne of perdition. And I do not desire that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest preserue them from euill.

Beholde, Christ praieth that his disciples shoulde not fall, but should be preserued from euill, and he so praieng, without doubt is heard: for he saith in another place, I know y^e thou hearest me. But how is he heard, if all those for whome he praieth, swarned at the time of his passion? As for example: By what meanes did Christ hanging vpō the Crosse, commende his dearly beloued mother vnto Iohn, if so be he were either then swarued, or should by and by after haue swarued from the faith: Moreouer, did not the Centurion by and by cry out and say: truly this is the sonne of God? The Iewes also which at that time were farre distant from Ierusalem, might both be called faithfull, and also saued by their faith: seeing that (as the Apostle sayth) men are bound vnto the Gospell, after it is once knowne and reuealed vnto them. But let vs leaue these men, and speake of that which is more likely, and let vs iudge that there hath bin and is a great number of good mē in the Church, and by thē as by the more worthy part, let vs name the Church holy and immaculate,* the whyche doth comprehend as well the euill as the good. For the Church is compared vnto a net, which is cast into the sea, and gathereth together all kinde of fishes.

And agayne it is compared vnto a King, which made a marriage for his sonne,* and sent forth his seruantes to call those which were bidden, vnto the wedding, and they gathered together good & euill, as many as they could finde. Wherefore, their opinion is erroneus, which affirme, that only good men be comprehēded in the Church: the which, if it were true, it would confound all things, neither could we vnderstand or know where the Church were.* But for so much as the Scripture saith: no man knoweth whether he be worthy of loue or hatred, their opiniō is more to be alowed & truer, which include all y^e faithfull in y^e Church: of whom, although a great part be geuen to voluptuousnes and auarice, yet some notwithstāding are cleane frō deadly sinne. The which part, as it is the most worthy, it geueth the name vnto y^e church, to be called most holy: which is so often done, that we are commaunded to sing in our Creede, vnam sanctam Catholicam & Apostolicam Ecclesiam, that is to say, one holy Catholicke & Apostolicke Church: the which Article the Synode of Constantinople, added vnto the rest: Wherefore if the Church be holy, it is also without sinne. But to returne to our former purpose, this word Sanctum, which signifieth holy (as Macrobius alledging Trebatius, affirmeth) is sometimes taken for religious, and sometimes for cleane and vncorrupt. And after the same maner, we call the Church holy, as the Apostle Peter calleth it immaculate, as we read in the famous Epistle of Clement.

To this end also tendeth that whiche is spoken by S. Paule, that Christ is the head of the Church: For if the Church should wholly sinne, she should not agree with her head Christ, who is in no pointe defiled. This also Christ himselfe would signifie vnto vs in Mathew, when he cōmendeth the house which wās builded vpō the strōg rocke,* against the whiche, neither the windes, neither the stormes could preuaile. In the house of God (sayth the Apostle) which is the Church builded vpō the strong rocke, which rocke (as the sayd Apostle declareth) is Christ. Who then is so vnshamefast that hee will affirme the Church, which is founded vpō Christ, to be subiect to sinne? & will not rather cry out with the Prophet and say: Domine, dilexi decorem domus tuae. That is to say. O Lord, I haue loued the beawtie of thy house. Hereupon wrote Iohn Chrisostome this golden sentence: The Church neuer ceaseth to be assaulted, neuer ceaseth to be layne in wayte for: but in the name of Christ it hath alwayes the vpper hād & ouercome. And albeit that other do lye in wait for it, or that the floudes do beate agaynst it: yet the fōdatiō which is layd vpon the rocke, is not shaken. S. Hillary also sayth, that it is the propertie of the Church to vanquish, when it is hurt, to vnderstānd when it is reprocured, to be in safetie whē it is forsaken, & to obtaine victory, when as it seemeth almost ouercome. Thus by many reasons & testimonies, it is proued that the Church doth not erre: which is not spoken or affirmed of the Bishops of Rome, so that this reason doth make the Pope subiect vnto the Church, for it is conuenient, that the lesse perfect be subiect vnto the more perfect. There be also many other testimonies & reasons, wherof we will now somewhat more entreate.

If authoritie be sought for,* sayth S. Hierome (for I willingly occupie my selfe in his sentēces, as in a most fertile field) the world is greater then a Citie. What then I pray you Hierome? Is y^e Pope mighty because he is head of the Church of Rome? His authoritie is great, notwithstanding the vniuersall Church is greater, which doth not onely cōprehēd one Citie, but also the whole world. Hereupon it followeth, that if the Church be the mother of all faithfull, then she hath the Bishop of Rome for her sonne. Otherwise as S. Augustine saith,* he can neuer haue God for his father, which will not acknowledge the Church for his mother. The which thing Anacletus vnderstandyng, called the vniuersal Church his mother, as the writers of the Canons do know. And Calixtus sayth: as a sonne he came to doe the will of his father, so we do the will of our mother, which is the Church. Whereby it appeareth, that how much the sonne is inferiour to the mother: so much y^e Church is superiour or aboue the Bishop of Rome.

Also we haue sayd before,* that the Church was the spouse of Christ, & the Pope we know to be a Vicare: but no mā doth so ordaine a Vicar, that he maketh his spouse subiect vnto him, but that the spouse is alwayes thought to be of more authoritie, then the Vicar, for somuch as she is one body with her husbād, but the Vicar is not so. Neither will I here passe ouer the wordes of S. Paule vnto the Romaines: Let euery soule (sayth he) be subiect vnto the higher powers: Neither doth he herein except y^e pope: For albeit that he be aboue all other mē, yet it seemeth necessary y^e he should be subiect to y^e Church. Neither let him thinke himselfe hereby exēpt, because it was said vnto Peter by Christ, whatsoever thou bindest. &c. In this place, as we wil hereafter declare, he represēted the person of the Church,* for we finde it spoken afterward vnto thē: Quaecunque ligaueritis super terrā, ligata erūt in coelis. i. Whatsoever ye shal binde vpō earth, shall be also bounde in heauē. And furthermore, if all power be geuē of Christ, as the Apostle writeth vnto the Corinthiās, it is geuen for the edifyng of the Church, & not for the destruction therof: why then may not the Church correct the Pope, if he abuse the keyes, and bring all thinges vnto ruine?

Adde hereunto also an other argument. A man in this life is lesser then the aungels, for we read in Mathew of Iohn Baptist, that he whiche is least in the kingdome of heauen, is greater then he. Notwithstanding Christ sayth in an other place, that amongst the children of women there was not a greater then Iohn Baptist. But to proceede: mē are forced by the exāp•e of Zacharias to geue credite vnto aūgels, least through their misbelief they be stricken blind as he was. What more? The Bishop of Rome is a mā: Ergo, he is lesse then the aungels, and is bound to geue credite to the aungels. But the aungels learne of the Church, and do reuerētly accorde vnto her doctrine, as the Apostle writeth vnto the Ephesiās: Ergo, the pope is boūd to do the same, who is lesse then the aungels, and lesse then Page 673 the Church,* whose authoritye is suche, that worthely it is compared by S. Augustine vnto the Sunne: that lyke as the Sunne by his light doth surmount all other lightes, so the church is aboue all other authority and power. Whereupon S. Augustine writeth thus: I would not beleue the Gospel saith he, if the authority of the church did not more me thereunto: the which is not in any place soūd to be spoken of the bishop of Rome, who representing the Church, and being minister thereof, is not to be thought greater or equall to hys Lorde and maister. Notwythstanding, the wordes of our Sauour Christ do specially proue the Byshop of Rome to be subiect to the church, as we will hereafter declare: For he sending Peter to preach vnto y^e church sayd, go, and say vnto the Church. To the confirmation of whole authoritye, these wordes do also pertaine: hee that heareth you heareth me. The which wordes are not onely spoken vnto the Apostles, but also vnto their succesaurs and vnto the whole Church.

Whereupon it foloweth,* that if the Pope do not harken & geue eare vnto the Church, he doeth not geue eare vnto Christ, & consequently he is to be counted as an Ethnicke & Publicane. For as S. Augustine affirmeth, when as the Church doth excommunicate, he which is so excommunicate is bounde in heauen, and when the Church looseth, he is loosed. Likewise if he be an heretike, which taketh away the supremacie of the Church of Rome, as the Decrees of the council of Coustance doth determine, how much more is he to be counted an hereticke, which taketh away y^e authoritye from the uniuersall Church, wherein the Church of Rome and all other are contained? Wherefore it is now euident, that it is the opinion of al men before our daies (if it may be called an opinion, which is confirmed by graue authors) y^e the Pope is subiecte vnto the vniuersall church. But this is called into question,* whether he ought also to be iudged of y^e general Council. For there are some, which (whether it be for desire of vaine glory, or that thorough their flattery they looke for some great reward) haue begon to teach new and strange doctrines, and to exempt the byshop of Rome from the iurisdiction of the generall Council. Ambitiō hath blinded them, wherof not only this present Schisme, but also all other Schismes euen vnto thys day haue had their originall. For as in times past the greedy desire & ambition of the papacy,* brought in that pesriferous beast, which through Arrius then first crept into the church: euen so they do specially norish and mainteine this present heresie, whych are not ashamed to begge. Of the which number, some cry out & say, the workes of the subiects ought to be iudged by the Pope, but the Pope to be reserued only vnto the iudgemēt of God. Others said that no man ought to iudge the high and principall Seate,* and that it can not be iudged either by the Emperour, either by the Clergy, either by any king or people. Other affirme, that the Lord hath reserued vnto himselfe the depositions of the chiefe Bishop. Others are not ashamed to affirme, that the Byshop of Rome although hee cary soules in neuer so great number vnto hell, yet hee is not subiect vnto any correction or rebuke.

And because these their words are easily resolved, they runne straight waies vnto the Gospell, and interprete the wordes of Christ, not according to the sense and meaning of the holy Ghost, but according to their owne wil and disposition. They doe greatly esteeme and regard this which was spoken vnto Peter: Tu vocaberis Cephas i. Thou shalt be called Cephas: by the which worde, they make hym the head of the Church. Also I will geue thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, and whatsoever thou shalt bind vpon earth, &c. I haue prayed for thee Peter, that thy Faith would not faile.* And againe, feede my sheepe: Last thy net into the depe: Be not afrajd, for from thēceforth thou shalt be a fisher of men: Also that Christ commaunded Peter as the Prince of the Apostles, to pay tolle for them bothe: and that Peter drew the net vnto the land, full of great fishes: & that onely Peter drew his sword for the defence of Christ. Al which places these mē do greatly extol, altogether neglecting the expositions of the fathers: the which if (as reason were) they would consider, they shuld manifestly perceine by the authorities aforesayde, that the Pope is not about them when they are gathered together in Councell, but when they are separate and deuided.

But these things being passed ouer, for somuch as answere shall appeare by that which heereafter shall followe we will now declare what was reasoned of by the learned men vppon thys question. But first wee woulde haue it known, y^e all men which are of any name or estimation, do agree, that the Pope is subiect to the Councell, and for the prooffe therof they repeat (in a maner) al those things which were before spoken of the church: for they suppose all that, which is spoken of the Church, to serue for the generall Councell: And first of all, they alledge this saying of the Gospel, Dic Ecclesiae, tell it vnto the Church. In the whych place it is conuenient to vnderstand, that Christ spake vnto Peter,* instructing him what he should doe as touching the correction of his brother. He saith, if thy brother offend or sinne against thee, rebuke him betwene thee and him alone. If hee geue eare vnto thee, thou hast wonne thy brother: but if he doe not geue eare vnto thee, take in thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or thee witnesses all truth may stand: if thē he wil not geue eare vnto thee, Dic Ecclesiae, tell it vnto the Church.

What shal we vnderstand by the church in that place? shall we say that it is the multitude of the faithfull dispersed throughout the whole worlde? My yoke is pleasaunt sayth the Lord, & my burden is light. But howe is it light, if Christ commaunde vs to doe that which is impossible to be done? For howe coulde Peter speake vnto the Church which was dispersed, or to seeke out euery Christian scattered in euery Towne or Citie? But the meaning of these words, is farre otherwise, and they must be otherwise interpreted: for which cause it is necessary that we remember the double person,* which Peter represented, as the person of the high byshop, and a priuate man. The sense and meaning of his words are euident and plaine inough of themselues, y^t they neede no supplement or alteration. We must first marke and see,* what thys worde Ecclesia signifieth, the which we do find but only to be twise spoken of by Christ: once in this place, and againe when as he said vnto Peter: Tu es Petrus, & super hanc Petram edificabo Ecclesiam meam, That is: Thou art Peter, and vpon this rock wil I build my Church.* Wherefore the Church signifieth the conuocation or congregation of the multitude. Dic Ecclesiae, tell it vnto the church. That is to say, tel it vnto the Congregation of the faithful: the which forsomuch as they are not accustomed to come together,* but in a generall Councell, this interpretation shall seeme very good, Dic Ecclesiae, tel it vnto the Church, that is to say, Dic generali Concilio, tel it vnto the generall Councell.

In this case I would gladly heare if there be any man, which doth thinke these words to be more properly expressed in any Prelate, then in the councell, when as they must put one man for the multitude: whych if it be admitted in the scriptures, we shall from hencefoorth finde no firme or stable thing therein. But if any man doe maruaile at thys interpretation, let him search the old wryters, and he shall finde that thys is no newe or straunge interpretation, but the interpretation of the holy fathers and olde Doctours, whyche haue first geuen lyght vnto the Church, as Pope Gregorie witnesseth (a man worthy of remembrance, both for the holines of his life, and his singular learning) whose wordes are these, wrytten in his Register vnto the bishop of Constantinople: And wee (sayde hee) against whome so great an offence is committed through temerarious boldnesse, do obserue and keepe that which the truth doth commaunde vs, saying, Si peccauerit in te frater, that is: If thy brother do offend against thee, &c. And afterward he addeth more, if my rebukes and corrections be despysed, it remaineth that I do seeke helpe of the church.* The which words doe manifestly declare the Church heere to be taken for the generall Councell. Neither did Gregory say, that he wold seeke helpe of the Church that is dispersed abroad in euery place, but of that which is gathered together, that is to say, the generall Councell, for that whych is dispersed abroad, cannot be had, except it be gathered together. Also Pope Nicholas reproouing Lotharius the king for adultery, sayd: if thou doest not amend the same, take heede that we tell it not vnto the holy Church.

In the which saying, Pope Nicholas did not say, that he wold go throughout y^e world to certifie euery one, man by man: but that hee would call the Church together, that is to say the general councell, and there would publish and declare the offence of Lotharius, y^e he which, had contemned the Popes commaundements, shoulde feare the reuerence of the general councell. I could recite an infinite nūber of witnesses for that purpose, the which all tende vnto one ende: but this one testimony of the Councell of Constance shall suffice for them all, wherein it is sayde that not onely the Pope in the correction of his brother is remitted vnto the Councell,* when as he can not correct him of hym|selfe: but also when as any thing is done as touchyng the correction of the Pope himselfe, the matter ought to be referred to the council. Wherby it appeareth our interpretation to be most true, which doth expound the Church to be in the generall Councell. Hereupon the Actes of the Apostles, the Congregacions whych were then holden, were called the Church. Also in the councell of Nice and in other Page 674 Councils, whē as any man shuld be excommunicated, alwayes, in a maner, thys sentence was adioyned: Hunc excommunicat Catholica & Apostolica Ecclesia. The Catholicke and Apostolicke Church doth excommunicate thys man. And heereuppon that title is geuen vnto the Councelles,* whereby we do say, that the generall Councell doth represent the vniuersall Church. Wherefore the lawes and decrees of the Councell are called the lawes of the Church, for that the Church doth not set foorth any lawes in any other place,* then in the general councell: except we will call the Popes cōstitutions the lawes of the church, which can not be properly said but of the Council: whereas, albeit all those which are of the church do not assemble and come together, yet the most part of them are accustomed to be there present, and in those whiche come, the whole power of the Church doth consist: Wherupon we read in the Acts of the Apostles: It pleased the Apostles and Elders with all the Church. For albeit that al the faithfull were not there present (because a great nūber of them remained at Antioche) yet notwithstanding it was called the whole Church, because the whole power of the Church consisted in the coūcell. Thus for this present it is sufficient that we vnderstand by the Church the generall Councell.

And nowe to returne vnto our purpose,* lette vs heare what our Sauour sayeth vnto Peter: If thy brother doe offend against thee, vnto this text folowing, tell it vnto the church: and let vs vnderstand the Council by the Church. Who is greater in thys place, hee whych is sent vnto the Council, or the Council whereunto Peter was sent? The uevity doth remit the Byshop of Rome vnto the generall Coūcell. And why so? verely because the bishops of Rome should not disdaine to acknowledge some power in earth, to be aboue them, the which they should consult withall in matters of importaunce, and agree vnto the determinations thereof.* Whereupon Peter is also called by an other name Symon, the which, as Rabanus in hys Homilies wryteth, is interpreted in the Hebrew tounge, obedience, that all men might vnderstande obedience to be necessary, euen in the Bishop of Rome.

The authority of the Councel of Constance might suffice vs in this poynte,* but we thinke it good to stay a little vpon thys matter, & to leaue no place open for our aduersaries: which, whilst they goe about to maintaine the vnsatiable wilfulnes of oue man, preferring a priuate wealth before a commō commodity, is it incredible how great errors they doe stirre vp. Against the which, besides many other, Zacharias bishop of Chalcedon, a man both famous and eloquent, did earnestly strine: who in the great and sacred Synode of Chaleedon, when as the sentence of the B. of Rome was objected vnto him, that the Canon of Pope Nicholas and other Patriarkes was aboute the Councell, he replied against it. And Zosimus the Pope sayth thus as touching the decrees of the general Councel: the authority of this seat cannot make or alter any thing contrary to the decrees of the fathers. Neither doth he heare speake of the decrees of the fathers, which are dispersed abroad in cities or wildernesses, for they do not binde the Pope: but of them which are made and published by the fathers in the generall Councell. For the more manifest declaration whereof, the words of pope Leo the most eloquent of all the bishops of Rome, are here to be annexed, who wrote vnto Anatholius, that the decrees of the Councel of Nice are in no part to be violate and broken: thereby (as it were) excluding himselfe and the high Patriarke.

The authoritie also of Damasus vpon thys sentence, is more manifest, wryting vnto Aurelius the Archbish. as Isidorus declareth in the booke of Councels, whose worthy saying as touching the authority of the synode is thys: That they which are not cōpelled of necessity, but of theyr owne wil either frowardly do any thing, either presume to do any thing, or willingly consent vnto those which wold do any thing contrary and against the sacred Canons, they are worthely thought and iudged to blaspheme the holy ghost.* Of the which blasphemy, whether Gabriel whyche calleth himselfe Eugenius, be presently partaker, let them iudge which haue heard him say, that it is so farre from his office and duety to obey the general Councels, that he saith he doeth then best merite and deserue, when as he contemneth the decrees of the Coūcel. Damasus addeth yet moreouer. For this purpose, sayeth he, the rules of the sacred canons, which are consecrated by the spirite of God and the reuerence of the whole world, are faithfully to be knowne and vnderstand of vs, and diligently looked vpon, that by no meanes, wythout a necessitye which cannot be eschued (which God forbid) we do transgresse of the decrees of the holy fathers.* Notwithstanding, we daily see in al the Popes Bulles and letters, these woordes Non obstante, that is to say: notwithstanding: which no other necessitie hath brought in, then onely vnsatiable desire of gathering of mony. But let them take heede to these things whych be the authours thereof.

But now to returne againe vnto Damasus,* mention is made in the Epistles of Ambrose bishop of Millaine of a certaine Epistle which is laid to be writtē by Damasus, vnto the iudges deputed by the Councel of Capua, where he declareth that it is not his office, to meddle w^t any matter which hath ben before the Councell. By the which saying he doth manifestly reprove all those which affirme and say the Byshop of Rome to be aboute the Councell. The which if it were true, Damasus might haue taken into his handes the cause of Bonosius the Byshop to determine, which was before begon by the Councell: but for somuche as the Councell is aboute the Pope, Damasus knewe hymself to be prohibited. Wherupon Hilarius also acknowledging the Sinode to be aboute him, would haue his decrees confirmed by the Councell. Also the famous Doctour S.

Augustine in his Epistle whych hee did wryte vnto Glorius & Eleusius, and Felix the Gramarian, declareth the case. Cecilianus the Byshoppe, was accused by Donatus, wyth others. Melchiades the pope with certaine other bishops absolved Cecilian and confirmed him in hys bishopricke. They being mooued wyth those doinges, made a schisme in the partes of Africa. S. Augustine reprooueth them, which hauing an other remedy against the sentence of y^e Pope, did raise a schisme, and doth mucy against them in this maner. Behold, let vs thinke those Bishops which gaue iudgemēt at Rome, not to haue ben good iudges: ther remained yet the iudgemēt of the uniuersall church, where as the cause might haue ben pleaded euen with the iudges themselues, so that if they were conuict not to haue geuen iust iudgement, their sentence might be broken.

Wherby it appeareth, that not only the sentence of the Pope alone, but also the Pope wyth hys Byshops ioyned with him,* might be made frustrate by the Councell: for the full iudgement of the uniuersall Church is not founde elswhere, then in the generall Councell. Let not any manne doubt, in that S. Augustine seemeth here onely to speake of Byshops: for if the text of hys Epistle be read ouer, hee shall finde the Byshoppe of Rome to be comprehended amongst the other Bishops. It was also prohibited by the counsels of Africa,* that the Bishops of Rome shoulde not receiue or heare the appeales of any which did appeale frō the Councell: whych altogether declare the superioritie of the Coūcell. And this appeareth more plainly in the Actes of the Apostles, where as Peter is rebuked by the congregation of the Apostles,* because he went in to Cornelius a Heathen man, as if it had not bene lawfull for him to attempt any great matter w^eout the knowledge of the congregation: and yet it was said vnto him as wel as others. Ite & Baptizate &c. Go & baptise.* But this seemeth to make more vnto the purpose, which S. Paule wryteth vnto the Galathians, whereas he sayth, he reststed Peter euen vnto his face, because he did not walke according to the verity of the Gospell. Which words if they be wel vnderstand, signifie none other thing by the veritie of the Gospel,* then the Canon of the Councel decreed amongst the Apostles: for the Disciples being gathered together, had so determined it. Whereupon S. Paule doth shew, that Peter ought to haue obeyed the generall Councell.

But nowe to finish thys disputation,* we will here adioyne the determination of the Councell of Constance, the which Councell aforesayd, willing to cut off al ambiguitie and doubts, and to prouide a certain order of liuing, declared by a solemne decree that all men, of what estate or condition so euer they were,* yea although y^t they were Popes themselues, be bound vnder the obedience and ordinances of the sacred generall Councils. And although there be a certaine restraint, where as it is sayde, in suche thinges as pertaine vnto the faith, the extirpation of schisme, and the reformation of the Church, as well in the heade as in the members: notwithstanding thys amplificatiue clause whych is adioyned, is to be noted, Et in pertinentibus ad ea, that is to say, withall the appertenautes. The which addition is so large, that it containeth all thinges in it, whych may be imagined or thought.* For the Lord said thus vnto hys Apostles, goe ye forth and teach all people. He did not say in three poynts onely, but teach them to obserue and keepe al thinges what soeuer I haue commaunded you. And in an other place he sayeth, not thys or that, but whatsoever yee shal binde, &c. which altogether are alledged for the authority of the Church and generall Councils. For the preserment wherof, these things also come in place. He that heareth you, heareth me. And againe: It is geuen vnto you to knowe the mysteries of God. Also where 2. or 3. bee gathered Page 675 in my name. &c. Againe, whatsoever yee shall aske. &c. O holy father, saue them whom thou hast geuen me. &c. And I wil be with them euen vnto the ende of the worlde. Also out of S. Paul these places are gathered. We are helpers of God. &c. Which hath made vs apt ministers of the new Testament. &c. And he appoynted some Apostles and some Prophetes. &c. In all which places both Christ and the Apostles spake of the authority of many, which altogether are alledged for the authority of y^t vniuersall Church.

But for somuche as that Church being dispersed and scattered abroad, can not decree or ordaine any thing: therefore of necessity it is to be said, that the chiefe and principall authority of the church, doth consist in the generall Councils, where as they assemble together. And therefore it was obserued in the primatiue Church, that hard and waightie matters were not intreated vpon,* but onely in the general councils & congregations. The same is also founde to be obserued afterward. For when as the churches were deuided, general councils were holden. And in the Council of Nice, we do finde the heresie of Arrius condemned. In the Council of Constantinople the heresy of Macedonius. In the Councell of Ephesus, the heresye of Hestorius. In the Councell of Chalcedon,* the heresies of Eutichius were also condemned: for somuch as they thought the iudgement of the bishop of Rome, not to suffice to so great, & waighty matter, and also they thought, the sentence of the Councell to be of greater force, then the sentence of the Pope, for somuch as he might erre as a man, but the Councell, wherein so many mē were gathered together, being guided with the holy ghost, could not erre. Also it is a very excellēt saying of Martianus the Emperour, which serueth for that purpose, whose words are these: Truly he is to be couēted a wicked and sacrilegious person, which after the sentence of so many good and holy men, wil sticke to withdraw any part of his opinion. For it is a poynt of meere madnesse, at the noone time & faire day light, to seeke for a fained lighte: for he which hauing found the truth, seketh to discusse any thing further, seeketh but after vanities and lies.

Now I thinke it is euident inough vnto all men, that the bishop of Rome is vnder the Councell. Notwithstanding some do yet still doubt, whether he may also be deposed by the Council or not: For albeit it be proued that he is vnder the Councell, yet for all that, will they not graunt, that hee may be also deposed by the Councell. Wherefore, it shall be no digressing at all from our purpose, somewhat to say vpō that matter: and first of all, to speake of these railers, which are yet so earnest for the defence of the Byshop of Rome: which being vanquished in one battaile, still renew an other, and cōtend rather of obstinacie then of ignoraunce. They would haue here recited againe, that whych we haue before spoken, as touching the preeminence of the Bishop of Rome, or the Patriarcke. And as there are many of thē more ful of words then eloquent, they stay much of this poynt, where as Christ sayd vnto Peter: Tibi d•bo clauēs regni coelorum. I wil geue thee the keies of the kingdom of heauen, & what soeuer thou shalt binde vpon earth shalbe bounde in heauen: as though by those wordes, hee should be made head ouer y^e other. And againe they do amplify it by this: Pasce oues meas: Feede my sheepe, whyche they do not finde to be spoken to any other of the apostles. And because it is sayde that Peter was the chiefe and the mouth of the Apostles, therefore they iudge it well spoken, that no man shall iudge the chiefe and principall sea: being all of thys opinion with Boniface, which sayde y^e the Pope ought to be iudged for no cause except he bee perceyued or knowen to swarne from the farth, although he do cary innumerable people with him,* headlong into hel, there to be perpetually tormented: as though hee coulde not open the kingdome of heauen to others, if any other could shut it against him, neither that he could feede other, if hee himselfe lacked pasture.

But we count these as things of no force or difficulty, For S. Augustine in the Sermon of the natiuity of Peter and Paule, sayeth in this wise: Our Lorde Iesus Christe before hys Passion, chose hys disciples (as yet doe knowe) whom he called brethren. Amongest those, Peter alone almost in euery place represented the person of the Church,* & therefore it was sayde vnto him, Tibi dabo claues regni coelorum That is to say. Unto thee will I geue the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. These keies did he not receiue as one man, but as one he receiued them for the Church. And in an other place, Where hee wryteth of the Christian agony, he sayth: the keyes of the kingdome of heauen were geuen vnto the churche: when as they were geuen vnto Peter: And when as it was spoken vnto him: Amas me? Pasce oues meas. That is to say. Louest thou me? feede my sheepe: it was spoken vnto them all. And S. Ambrose in y^e beginning of his pastorall, sayth which sheepe and which flocke, the blessed Apostle S. Peter tooke not charge of alone, but together with vs, and we alltogether with him. By which wordes the foundation and principall arguments of those flatterers, are vtterly subuerted and ouerthrowen. For if Peter represented the person of the Church, we ought not to ascribe the force of these words vnto Peter, but vnto the Church.* Neither do I see how that can stand, whych Boniface doth affirme, for it is farre distant from the truth, except it be vnderstand otherwise then it is spoken.

But it may peradventure seeme a great thyng vnto some, that it is sayd, the Byshop of Rome to be the head of the Militant Churche. For, as in the body of man, Philitions do neuer geue counsell to cut of the head for any maner of sicknes & disease, although it be neuer co•ul of vicers or infected: so in this mysticall body of the church, the head ought alwayes to be kept: and albeit it be neuer so wicked yet is it to be suffered and horne withall. But now conuert this argument.* If it were possible in y^e body of man, when one hed is taken away, to find an other to put in his place, as we see it may be done in the Church, should not heade then be oftentimes chaunged for diuers diseases? Moreouer, if we wil thus reason, that the head of the church shuld be in respecte of his body, as the head of man in respecte of the body of man: then doeth it necessarily followe that the head being dead the body must also die, as is manifest in y^e body of man: So should it grow into an absurditie to confesse that the Pope being dead, the Church also shoulde bee dead: the which how farre it dissenteth from the truth, it is most manifest. Therefore what soeuer other men say, I am not of opinion wyth them, whych affirme the Bishoppe of Rome to be head of the Church, except peradventure they doe make hym the ministeriall head: for we doe reade that Christ is the heade of the Churche and not the Pope: and that he is the true head immutable, perpetuall, and euerlasting, and the Church is his body, wherof the Pope hymselfe is also a member and the vicare of Christe, not to the destruction but to the maintenaunce & edifying of the same body of Christ.* Wherefore, if he be founde a damnable destroyer of the Churche, he may be deposed and cast out, because he doth not y^t he was ordeined to doe: and we ought, as Pope Leo sayeth, to be mindeful of the commandement geuen vs in the Gospell: that if our eye, our foote, or oure right hand, do offend vs, it should be cut of from the body. For the Lorde sayeth in an other place: Euery tree whych bringeth not foorth fruite, shall be cut downe and caste into the fire. And in an other place also it is sayde vnto vs: take away all euill and wickednesse from among you. It is very iust and true, whiche is wrytten in the Epistle of Clement vnto Iames the brother of our Lorde, that he whych will be saued, ought to be separate from them whych will not be saued.

But for the more manifest declaration hereof, we must haue recourse to that which is spoken by the Lorde, in the Gospell of Iohn: I am the true vine sayth the Lorde, and my father is the husbandman, and ye are the braunches: euery braunch therefore that bryngeth not forth fruite in me, my father wil cut off.* These wordes were spoken vnto the Apostles, amongst whom also

Peter was present, whome y^e Lord wold haue cut off, if he brought not foorth his fruit. Also S. Hierome vpon these wordes of Mathewe: Vnsauery salte is profitable for nothing,* but to be cast foorth and troden of swine. Whereuppon in the persone of Peter and Paule, he sayth thus: It is no easie matter to stande in the place of Peter and Paule, and to keepe the chaire of them which raigne with Christ. This vnsauery salte, that is to say a foolish Prelate, vnsauery in preaching, and foolish in offending, is good for nothing, but to be cast foorth, that is to say deposed, and to be troden of swine, that is of wicked spirits, which haue dominion ouer the wicked and naughty Prelates, as their owne flocke and herde. Beholde, thys testimonie of Hierome is plaine and euident. Let hym be cast out sayth he.

Hee expoundeth and speaketh it of the Prelate, whych vsurpeth the place of Peter,* and so consequently of the byshop of Rome, who being vnsauery in preaching, and foolysh in offending, oughte to be deposed (as Hierome affirmeth) from hys degree and dignitie. Neyther as some doe dreame, is he to be deposed for heresie only. Isidorus in the booke of Councils,* rehearseth a certain epistle of Clement the successour of Peter wrytten vnto Iames the Apostle, wheras the said Clement referring y^e wordes of Peter vnto himselfe, sayeth thus: If thou be occupied wyth worldly cares, thou shalt both deceiue thyselfe, & those which shall geue eare vnto thee: for thou canst not fully distribute vnto euery man, those thinges which pertaine vnto saluation: Page 676 whereby it shall come to passe, that thou as a man for not teaching those thinges which pertaine vnto saluation, shalt be deposed, & thy disciples shall perish through ignorance. Notw^lstanding in an other place, in stead of this word deposed, it is found thou shalt be punished: which 2. wordes, if they be wel vnderstoode, do not much differ, for deposition is oftētimes vsed in the place of punishment. But peraduenture some wil here object, that this Epistle is not to be iudged Clements, because it is sayd to be wrytten vnto Iames, who as the Ecclesiasticall hystory affirmeth, was deade before that Peter was put to death.* But Clement might thinke that Iames was aliue when as hee wrote: whych were farre distant a sunder, and messengers of the christians, came not often vnto Rome. Moreouer, there is mētion made of thys Epistle in diuers places of the decrerals, as most true, and therfore it shalbe nothing from the purpose, to rehearse other sayings out of the same Epistle, where he sayth, that he which liueth rebelliously, and refuseth both to learne and to doe good, is rather a member of the deuill, then of Christ, and doth shew himselfe rather to be an infidel, then a faithful Christian. Vpō which words, the glose which Panormitane calleth singular,* & is mucche allowed, sayeth, that if the crime or offence of the bishop of Rome be notorious, wherby the Church is offended, if he be incorrigible, he may be accused therof. If then he may be accused, Ergo also he may be punished, and according to the exigent of the fault deposed: Otherwise he should be accused in vaine.

Now is there no more any place of defence left for our aduersaries, but that the Pope may be deposed: Notwithstanding it is not yet euident whether hee may be deposed by y^t council or no, which we now take in hād to discours. And first of all, the aduersaries will graunt thys vnto vs, that the Bishop of Rome may be deposed by the Church, for somuch as the Pope being the vicare of the Church, no man doubteth, but that a Lorde may put out his vicare at his wil & pleasure, neither is to be doutd but that y^e Pope is more truly called the vicare of the church, then of christ. But if the church may depose the pope: Ergo the coūcel also may do the same. Also the glose which Panormitane in his wryting doth so greatly commend, hath this sentence: that the general coūcel is iudge ouer the pope in al cases. Likewise the most sacred Synode of Constantinople, whych is allowed of all men, doth appoynt the bishops of Rome to be vnder the iudgement of the councel: and the councell to iudge and determine of euery doutfull matter or question that doeth arise, concerning the bishop of Rome. Neither let any mā doubt hereof, because this worde deposition is not mentioned: for it is sayde, of euery doutfull matter or question: For if the Synode do iudge of euery doubt: Ergo it shall also iudge, whether the pope shalbe deposed or no: for that may also come in doute. And because we will not seeke examples farre of, Iohn 23. Whom all the world dyd reuerence, was deposed of his Papacie by the Councell of Constance. Neither yet was he cōdemned for any heresy: but because he did offend the Church by his manifolde crimes, the sacred Synode thought good to depose him:*, and euer since continually, the church hath proceded by like example, that their opinion might cease, which affirme that the Pope cannot be deposed but onely for heresy.

But heere is yet one thing not to be omitted, that certaine men do affirme the general Councils to be of no effect, except the Pope do cal and appoynt them, and his authoritie remaine with them. Whereupon they said that Dioscorus did rebuke Paschasius the bishop of Cicili, and legate of Pope Leo, because that hee did enterprise wythout the authoritie of the Apostolicke Sea, to call a Councell at Ephesus. They also alledge an other testimony of the Sinode of Chalcedone: wheras, when mention was made of the Council of Ephesus, al the Bishops cried out, saying: we ought not to call it a Councell,* because it was neyther gathered by the apostolike authority, neither rightly kept. By the which authorities, they which say that the Councils cannot be holden without the consent of the Pope, do thinke themselues marueilously armed. Whose sentence & opinion, if it take place and preuaile as they desire, it shall bring with it the great ruine and decay of the Church. For what remedy shall we finde,* if that a wicked Pope doe disturbe the whole Church, destroy soules, seduce the people by his euil examples, if finally he preach contrary vnto the faith and fill the people full of heresies, shal we prouide no stay or stoppe for him? Shall we suffer all things to runne to ruine and decay with him? Who woulde thinke that the bishop of Rome would cōgregate a councell for hys owne correction or deposition? for as men are prone vnto sinne, so would they also sinne wythout punishment. But when as I do peruse ancient hystories, and the Acts of the Apostles, I do not finde this order, that councils should be gathered only at the will of the Pope:* for the first Council of all, after that Mathias was substitute in the place of Iudas, was not congregate at the commandement of Peter, but at the commandement of Christ, who commanded the Apostles that they should not depart from Ierusalem, but looke for the promise of the father.

The seconde Councell as touching the election of the deacons,* Peter alone did not congregate, but the 12. Apostles: for it is wrytten. The 12. Apostles calling together the multitude. &c.

The thirde Councell,* whych was holden as touching the taking away of circumcision & other ceremonies of the lawe, was gathered together by a generall inspiration: for it is written: The Apostles and Elders came together. &c.

The fourth Councell,* whereas certaine thyngs contained in the law are permitted, seemeth to be gathered by Iames, & so discoursing throughout all, there can nothing be founde in the primatiue Church, whereby it should appeare y^t the authority of congregating of Councils should pertaine onely vnto Bishoppes of Rome. Neither alterwards in the time of Constantinus Magnus, and other Emperours, was the consent of the bishops of Rome greatly required to the congregating of Councils, and therefore it is wrytten thus of the Synode of Chalcedon: The sacred and vniuersall Synode gathered together at Chalcedone the chiefe Citie of the prouince of Berthunia,* according vnto the grace of God, & the sanctions of the most godly and Christian Emperours Valentinian and Martian, doeth not make any mention of the Byshop of Rome, although hys consent were there.

Wherefore, if the pope would resist, and would haue no Councell congregate, yet if the greater part of the Church do iudge it necessary to haue a Councell, the Councell may be congregate whether the Pope wil or no. The Councell holden at Pisa, was not congregate by the authoritie and consent of any Pope, when as Gregorie did condemne it, and Benedict cursed it. The same also may be sayde of the Coūcel of Constance, whych was assembled by the authority of Pope Iohn, who in respect of the Spaniardes was no true Pope. And if the Councell of Pisa were no true Councell, Pope Iohn was no true Pope: wherupon his consent to the congregating of the Councell of Constance, was of no effect. Moreouer it is more then folly to affirme, that when the pope hath once geuen his consent, if it shuld be called backe, that the Councell should then cease, for then it is no more in his power to reuoke his cōsent: And of necessity he must be obedient vnto the Councell, wherof he is a member,* and geue place vnto the greater part: and if hee separate himselfe from the consent of the greater part, and depart from the vnity of the Church, he maketh himselfe a Schismaticke.

Now, to come vnto the second conclusion, if it be true, as it is in deede, that the Pope is vnder the Councell, how can the Pope then dissolue, alter and transporte the Councell, against the will of the same? For wyth what countenance can we say, that the inferior hath power ouer the superior? How can the Synode correct the Pope,* if the Pope may dissolue the Synode contrary to the will thereof? Admit that the Pope be libidinous, couetous, a sower of war and discorde, and a most mortall enemie vnto the Church, and the name of Christ, how can the Councell reprove, him, if he haue authority to dissolue the Councell? For assoone as euer that the bishop of Rome shall vnderstande that in the Councell they doe intreat or talke of his correction or punishment, straightwaies he wil seke remedy by dissoluing the Councell. For as Macrobius sayth: he that hath liberty to do more then is fit or necessary,* wil oftentimes do more then is lawfull. If so be that the Bishop of Rome may exempt himself from correction by dissoluing or transporting the Councell, it followeth that the Councell is not aboue him. Therefore we must either deny that which is aforesaid, that the Pope is vnder the Councell, or els deny that the Pope hath power to dissolue the Councell, contrary to the will and determination of the Councell.

And as this first conclusion is most true, so are al other conclusiōs false, which seeme to impugne the same. Wherefore the seconde conclusion of the diuines is also manifest: albeit that some doe admit it in certaine cases, and in other some exclude it againe.* For if we do admit, that for certain causes the Pope may dissolue the Councell contrary to the will and determination thereof, that is to say, to make the Pope iudge of the Councell, it were cleane contrary vnto the first conclusion.

Now it is proued that y^e Councell is aboue the Pope, & can not be dissolved by the Pope wythout consent thereof. Nowe we must further see, whether it be an Article of Page 677 our faith to beleue it: Which matter hath respect vnto the third conclusion. For there haue bene many, which all beit they did confesse these two conclusions to be true, yet they doubted whether it were a veritie of the Catholicke fayth or no. Therefore this second part must be confirmed. And we must see whether it be an article of faith that the Pope be vnder the councel. Which being proued, it shall also appeare to be an article of faith, that the pope can not dissolue the councell without the consent therof. Which consequent none of the contrary part hath refused. First of al therefore we must inquire what faith is, that wee may thereby the better vnderstand, what pertaineth thereunto.

*Faith, as the Diuines do define it, is a firme and stedfast cleauing vnto things, beleued by the authority of hym that speaketh. If then we beleuee as is aforesayde, that the Pope of Rome is vnder the councell, some authority doth moue vs therunto: so is it the faith of him which beleueeth it: but the question is not whether it be an Article of faith onely, but whether it be an Article of the Catholike faith. Wherefore we must againe enquire what the Catholicke faith is. This word catholike is a Greke word, and signifieth vniuersal. *The catholike faith, that is to say y^e vniuersal faith, is not so called because that euery man holdeth it, but because euery man ought to beleuee it. For all men doe not beleue that God is incarnate, but euery man ought so to beleue. And albeit y^e many be against this faith, yet doth it not cease to be vniuersall. For what wryteth the Apostle vnto the Romans? *If some of them hath not beleued, doth their misbeliefe make the faith of God vaine? God forbid. Verely God is true, but euery man is a lyer. Therefore to beleue that the pope is vnder the councell, *is a poynt of the Catholike faith, although some thincke the contrary: for we are bound to beleuee it, for somuch as it is taken out of the Gospell. For we are not bounde onely to beleuee those things which are noted to vs in y^e Crede, but also all those things which are cōtained in the holy Scriptures, wherof we may not deny one iote. And those things whych we alledge for the superiority of the general Council, are gathered out of the sayings of our Sauour Iesu Christ, and the Epistles of S. Paule: Ergo, we are all bound to beleuee it. And to proue that these things are taken out of the gospel, the councell of Constance doth witnesse, the which groundeth his authority vpon these wordes: Dic Ecclesiae, that is to say, tel it vnto the Church. And, where 2. or 3. are gathered together in my name. &c. And, whatsoever ye shal bind &c. with other such like texts.

*Whereuppon Pope Martine the 4. being yet at Constance, vnder the licence of y^e Councell, sent out his bulles, which do reckon vp the Articles, wherupon they ought to be examined, which had fallē into any heresy, amongst the which articles he putteth this article: Whether hee doe beleue the sacred generall Council to haue power immediatly from God, and that the ordinances therof are to be receiued of all faithfull Christians, which if any man would deny, he should be counted an hereticke. Wherefore, when as the sacred Synode of Constance, doth set forth this verity, as touching the superiority of the general Councell, what should let but that we also shoulde confesse the same to be a verity of the Catholike faith? For the catholike church being congregated at Constance, receiued that faith, that is to say, beleued it by the authority of hym whych spake it, that is Christ and his Saintes.

*To this purpose also serueth very well the wordes of the synode of Chalcedon written in this maner: It is not lawfull for hym that is condemned by the whole Synode to nominate any Byshop. The determination pleaseth all men. Thys is the faith of the fathers. He that holdeth any opinion contrary vnto this, is an hereticke. And againe it is a rule, that it is not lawfull to appeale from the elect and chosen Synode.

Marke the manifest wnesse of this moste sacred Synode, which said that he is an hereticke, which holdeth any opinion contrary vnto the Councell: But hee is no hereticke, except hee refuse the Catholike faith: Ergo, it was the Catholike faith to beleue that it was not lawfull to appeale from the sacred Councel. But howe was the same any poynt of the Catholike faith? Verely for somuch as the sacred Synode perusing ouer the holy Scriptures, hath receiued thys conclusion out of the woordes of Christ and other holy fathers. And like as the Synode of Chalcedon tooke their conclusion out of the holy scriptures, so did the Councell of Constance, this which we now reason vpon. And like as the one is an Article of the Catholike faith, so is the other also. And he which holdeth any opinion cōtrary to either of both, is an hereticke.

Furthermore, they seeme vnto me to dreame and dote, which confessing them to be vexities, will not confesse them to be verities of faith. For if they be verities, I pray you wherof are they verities?*_ Truly not of Grammer, much lesse of Logike, and from Astronomy and Phisicke they are farre distant. Neither is there any other man but a diuine, that will graunt this veritie, whome Scripture doth force vnto it of necessity, if he do beleue Christ or his Apostles. Therefore this is a veritie of the Catholike faith which all men ought to embrace, and he which obstinately resisteth against the same, is to be iudged an hereticke, as the thirde conclusion doth affirm. Neither let any man thinke it hard or cruell, that he should be called an hereticke which goeth about to derogate any thing frō the power of the geuerall Councel, which is confirmed by so many testimonies and authorities. Also Panormitan alledged S. Hierome, saying: He which vnderstandeth the scripture otherwise then the consent of the holy Ghost doth require, albeit he do not depart from the Church, may be called an hereticke.

Wherupon it foloweth that he which vpon the wordes of Christ saying vnto Peter, *_Dic Ecclesiae. i. Tel it vnto the Church, doeth not vnderstand by the Church the generall Councell, vnderstandeth it otherwise then the sense of the holy Ghost doth require, and there by may be noted as an hereticke. And to proue that the sense of the holy Ghost is otherwise then he doth iudge it, the councell of Constance, doth declare: The which interpreting those words, Dic Ecclesiae. i. Tel it vnto the churche, spoken by the holy Ghoste, vnderstandeth them to be spoken of the generall councell. By these and many other waightier reasons, the 3. aforesaid conclusions, seemed true vnto the Diuines, & thorough them they also allowed the residue.

Now haue we suffiētly sayd, as touching that which was before promised: neither do I think any man now to be in doubt of these 3. first conclusions. Now to returne againe vnto our storie, it is our purpose to declare those thinges which happened after the conclusions of the Diuines: for there are many thinges worthy of remēbraunce, which also may happely be profitable vnto the posteritie.

When the disputation was ended and a final conclusion of these matters euen at hand, the Archbish. of Millaine and Panormitane with the residue of their fellow ambassadors of the king of Arragon, and duke of Willam, armed themselues with all their power to lette the matter, exhorting all men of their faction to withstand it with stout and valiant stomackes.

And first of all, *_ assoone as the congregation was assembled together, the byshop of Burgen exhorted them to deferre the conclusion, & to tary for the Ambassadors of other Princes, which would returne from Mentz.

After him Panormitane with a graue and Rhetoricall Oration,* spake (in a maner) as followeth.

I haue (saide he) had a cōmaundement by the prophet, to cry without ceasing: Which prophet sayd: Cry out, cease not, lift vp thy voice as a trumpet. If that in any matter at any time before, hee ought to haue cried, this matter specially which is now in hand lacketh crying and roaring out, when as the state of the vniuersal church is intreated vpon, either to be preserued, or vtterly ouerthrown: and that he hath cried so much in thys matter, that he doubted not, but the saying of Dauid was fulfilled in hym, where hee sayeth: Laborauī clamans, raucae sunt factae fauces meae. I haue laboured, crying out, that my iawes are become horse.

Notwithstanding that he would both now,* and as often as neede should require, wythout ceasing still crie out, and specially now in this most difficult and waighty matter: where in hee required the sacred Councell gently to heare both hym, and the Ambassadors of other Princes: adding moreouer foure thinges to be considered in all requestes made of any man. The which he also required the fathers now presently, to marke & consider. Who it is that maketh the request. What is required. Why it shuld be required, and what effect woulde come by the request eyther graunted, or denyed. As touching the first poynt he sayde: The most noble kynges and excellent Princes wyth their prelates to be of great power: and then reconed vp y^t kyng of Castill, the king of Aragon, the Duke of Millaine, and the Byshops of the same Princes, rehearsing also the merites & good deedes of the sayde kings, & also of the duke of Millaine. But when as hee came to make mention of the prelates, he coulde not restraine himself, but began to wax somewhat hoate, saying that the greatest number of Prelates were on his parte. For if the Byshops and Abbotes were counted, it were not to be doubted, but the greatest part of them would haue this present matter deferred: and forsomuch as the whole power of the councell doth consist in the Bishops, it is not to be suffered, that they being neglected and contēned, that should be concluded whych pleased Page 678 the greater part of the inferiours: For the keyes (sayde he) were geuen to the Apostles, & to their successors which are the Byshops: also, that there are three kindes of Synodes, Episcopall, Prouinciall, and Generall, and none of all these without Bishops.

Wherefore the maner and order of the present Councell seemed vndecent, wheras thinges were not weyed according as men excell in dignitie,* but by moste voyces: Notwithstanding according to y^e most famous Epistle of Clement, the Byshops were the pillars and keyes of heauen, and the inferiours had no determining voyce, but onely a consultatiue voyce with them: wherefore there would be a great offence in thys behalfe, if a matter of faith shoulde be determined without the bishops: in which matter not only the bishoppes, but also the secular Princes ought to bee admitted. And for so much as they, in y^e name of their princes, desired to be admitted to the examination of thys present matter, and would examine the matter more fully, hee cōplained greatly how vnworthy a thing it was that they should be contemned or despised.

After many things spoken to this ende & effect, he passed ouer to the second part of his Oration, declaring what it was y^t he required: not gold, nor siluer, neither precious stones,* neither prouinces nor kingdomes, neither a thing hard to be done: but that only the delay of the sacred councell was required, & that the fathers would stay in the processe against the Pope, and in the conclusion and determination of matters which are now in hand. Neither shuld the delay be long, but only vntil the returne of the Ambassadors from Mentz, whome he knew well would returne very shortly. That this was but a small matter, and to be small intreatie, because there was no danger in it. And also it shuld seme iniurious, not to tary for the Ambassadors of the Princes which were then at Mentz, when as they were not absent for their owne priuate commoditie, but about the affaires of the common wealth, and the commodity of peace: neither had he forgotten, y^t at their departure they had desired, that during their absence, there should be nothing renewed concerning the matters of Eugenius.

Then immediatly adioyning the third part of his Oration, wherefore this delay was required,* he concluded, that it was not required for the priuate commoditie of any one man, but for a common wealth: not to cause any trouble or vnquietnesse, but for the better examination of the matter, y^t all things might passe with peace and quietnes, that the matter might be somuch the more firme and stable, by how much it is ratified & allowed by the consent of many. And so he proceded to y^e last part of his argument, requiring the fathers that they would consider and wey in their mindes the effect that would follow, if they should graunt or deny thys request. For (sayth he) if ye shall deny this small petition of the Princes, they al wil be agreeued therewith, and take this repulse in ill parte. They will say, they are contemned of you, neither will they be obedient vnto you, or receiue your decrees. In vaine shall ye make lawes except the Princes do execute them, and all your decrees shall be but vaine:* yet woulde I thinke this to be borne w^tall, if I did not feare greater matters to ensue. What if they shuld ioyn themselves with Eugenius, who not onely desireth to spoyle you of your liuings, but also of your liues. Alas, what slaughter and murther doe the eyes of my minde behold and see? Would God my opinion were but vain. But if you do graunt and consent vnto their petitions, they wil thincke themselves bounde vnto you: they wil receiue and embrace your decrees, and whatsoever you shal require of them shall be obtained. They will forsake your aduersary, they will speake euil of him and abhorre him: but you they wil commend and praise, you they will reuerēce: vnto you they wil wholly submit themselves, and then shall followe that most excellent fruit of reformation and tranquillity of the church. And thus he required the matter to be respited on all partes. At the last he sayde, that except the Ambassadors of y^e Princes were heard, he had a protestation, wrytten, which he would commaund to be read before them all.

When Panormitan had made an ende of his Oration, Lodouicus the Prothonotary of Rome rose vp,* a man of such singular wit and memory, that he was thought not to be inferior vnto any of the famous men afore time. In so much that he had alwaies in memory whatsoever hee had heard or red, and neuer forgate any thyng that he had sene. This man first commending Panormitane, sayde that he came but the day before from the haths, & that it semed vnto him a strange thing which was now brought in question: wherein he desired to heare other mens minds, and also to be heard of others, and that those prelates which were at Mentz shuld be taried for, to be present at the discussing of this matter, in the name and behalfe of their Princes, which prelates were men of great estimation, and the Orators of most mighty Princes.

He allowed also the saying of Panormitane touching the voices of the inferiors,* that it seemeth not to be against the truth, that only Bishops should haue a deciding or determing voice in Councils. And all be it that some in thys disputation doe thinke that, which is writtē in the 15. chapter of the Actes, to be their force or defence: notwithstanding he was nothing moued therewith, nor tooke it to be of any effect, albeit it was sayd: It seemed good vnto the holy Ghost and to vs, where as both the Apostles and the elders were gathered together: whereby it appeared: that y^e others had a deciding voice w^t the Apostles. For he sayde, that there was no argument to be gathered of the Acts of the Apostles, whose examples were more to be meruailed at, then to be folowed: and that it doth not appeare there, y^t the Apostles called the Elders of duety, but that it is onely declared that they were there present: whereupon nothing could be inferred. And that it semed vnto him, that the inferiours in the Councell of Basill, were admitted to determine with the Bishops but of grace and fauour onely, because the Bishops may communicate their authority vnto others. He alledged for testimony, the bishop of Cancen, a man of great authority, who woulde not suffer any incorporation or felowship of the meaner sort, and therefore, neither any inferiour, neither himselfe, which as yet was not made Byshop, to haue any deciding voyce in the councel. Wherefore, for somuch as the matter was waighty, which was nowe in hand, and that the Byshops spake against it, he required the Councell that they would of necessitie stay and tary for the Ambassadors of the Princes comming from Mentz.

His Oration was so much the more greeuous,* in that many were touched with his wordes, and specially in that poynt, that he said, the apostles were not to be folowed: for that al men did impugne as a blasphemy. But here a man may meruel, that a mā of such excellency, alledged no more or better matter. But in this poynt the memory of the man is to be pardoned, which did not willingly speake in thys matter, and desired nothing somuch, as not to obtaine that which he intreated for. After him many other spake theyr minds, but al to this end that they might protract the time and deferre the conclusion of these matters.

Then Lodouicus the Cardinall Arelatensis, a man of marueilous constancy, & borne for the gouernaunce of general councels, gathering together the wordes of all the orators, spake in this wise: Most reuerend fathers, this is no new or strange busines, nor begon to day or yesterday. For it is now many wekes ago, since the conclusiōs were disputed vppon amongst the diuines, & sent vnto Mentz, and to all other partes of the world. After thys, they were disputed vpon 6. daies continually, and fully discussed, and after that not without great delay approued by the deputies, and as the truth seketh no corners,* so all things were done publikely and openly. Neyther can any man pretend ignoraunce, neither are the Prelates or Princes contemned: For wee called all that were present at Basill, and exhorted al y^r rest for to be present. And for somuch as mention is made of the most noble King of Castell: who is it that is ignoraunt, that the kings Orators were there present? The bishop of Burgen and Ebrun, men of singulare learning and eloquence, and you also Panormitane youre selfe, which heere represent the person of the moste famous king of Arragon, were twice present your self in the chapter house, and disputed twice most subtilly, and twice declared your minde, what you thought in that matter. What do you desire any more? Also out of the territory of y^t Duke of Millaine, there was present the Archbish. of Millaine, who albeit, he be no Ambassador, yet howe famous a Prelate he is, you are not ignorant. When he had spoken these words, the Archbishop being somewhat mooued, sayd vnto him.* My Lord Cardinal, you supply the rounge of a president no better, then I doe the place of a Dukes Oratour, and began to taunt him wyth many words. But the Cardinall, (as he was a man moste pacient: and woulde not be prouoked to anger by no meanes) sayd: this is it y^t I euen now desired. For if the Archb. be an Ambassador, then hath the Duke no cause to complaine, which had his Oratour present at the discussing of those matters.

I passe ouer other Princes, because they doe not complaine. Notwythstanding the most Christian Kynge of Fraunce, had there the Byshop of Lyons, a graue and sober man, his Ambassadour at the disputation. As for other princes, I see no cause why they shuld be taried for, which knowing the counsell to be congregate for such matters as pertaine vnto faith, do not thinke it absurd, that the doutfull Page 679 matters of fayth shoulde be declared in the Councell: Whereunto, if they had bene willing to come, they would haue bene present or this.

Why this matter should neede so much discussing, as some will haue, I doe not vnderstand. For if I be wel remembred, Panormitane and also Ludouicus, haue oftentimes affirmed in this place, euē y^e very same thing which the conclusions signifie. And if any of them now will go about to gaynsay it, it will happen vnto them, as it did vnto Didimus. To whom, when as on a time, hee repugned agaynst a certayne historye,* as vayne and friuolous, hys own book was deliuered vnto him, wherein the same was written: So likewise these two men (meaning Panormitane & Ludouicus the Prothonotary) Although they be excellently learned, & eloquent: yet may they be confuted by their owne writings. Besides this: there are Synodall Epistles and decrees of this Councell,* whiche are full of such cōclusions. What is it then whereupon any difficultie can be raysed? What is it that may be impugned? Shal we now bring that againe in doubt, whiche hath so often bene declared, affirmed, and decreed? But (say they) the princes & Ambassadors are absent whiche are byshops by whose presence the decrees should be of more authority. Wel, they are not onely absent which are gone to Mentz: but almost an infinite number of others, dispersed throughout y^e whol world: whō if we should tary to looke for, nothing at any tyme should be decreed. They are al called vnto the counsell: they might haue come if they would. To those that are present power is geuen, and they ought to debate these matters. If any man will say, y^t they which are absent, are about the affayres of the common wealth: truely we sent them not thither, but they went rather agaynst the will of the Councell, then with the consent therof.

And admit that they had bene sent by the Councell: yet were not our power so much restrayned, but y^t we might reforme the Church, for otherwise there should neuer any thing be done in y^e Councell: for somuch as alwayes some are sent out by the Councell, and some are alwayes to be looked and taryed for, and therefore we must eyther do nothing at all, or sende out no Prelates from the Councell. Where as he sayd that Prelates and specially Bishops are cōtemned, that is most far from the truth, for they haue the chiefe and first places. They speake first, and geue their voi|ces first of all vnto all thinges: and if so be they do speake learnedly and truely, all the inferiors without any gaynesaying, did soone follow their mynde.

Neither peraduenture shall it be founde vntrue, that there was neuer any Synode: which dyd more amplifie y^e power & authoritie of Byshops then this. For what haue the Byshoppes bene in our dayes, but onely shadowes? Might they not well haue bene called shepheardes w^tout y^e sheep? What had they more thē their miter and their staffe, when as they could determine nothing ouer their subiects Uerely in the primitiue Church, the Byshops had y^e greatest power & authoritie: but now was it come to y^t poynt that they exceeded the cōmon sort of priestes onely in theyr habite and reuenues? But we haue restored them agayn to their old state,* we haue reduced the colation of benefices agayn vnto thē: we haue restored vnto thē y^e confirmation of elections: we haue brought agayn the causes of the subiectes to be heard, into their handes: & haue made them bishops which were none before. What cause is there then, y^t the Byshops should say, they are contemned of the Councell? Or what iniurious thing haue we at anye time done vnto them? But Parnormitan sayth, y^t forsomuch as most bishops are on hys parte, and few agaynst hym, the conclusion is not to be determined by the multitude of the inferiours, but let Panormitan remember himself, that this is no new kinde of proceeding.

This order of proceeding, the Councell ordeined from the beginning, neither hath it bene chaunged at any tyme since. And this order Panormitan, in times past hath plea'sed you well enough, when as the multitude did followe your minde. But now, because they do not followe your mynd,* they do displease you. But the decrees of the Councels are not so mutable, as the wils of mē. Know ye moreouer, y^t the very same bishops which doe consent with you in word and do not consent w^t you in minde, neither spake the same secretly, which they now do openly. They do fear that which you told them at home in their country, that ex'cept they would follow your minde, they shoulde displease the king. They feare the power of the Prince, & to be spoyled of theyr temporalities: neither haue they free libertye to speak as is requisite in Councels. Albeit if they were true Bishops, & true pastors of soules, they woulde not doubt to put their liues in venture for their sheepe, neither be afeard to shed their blood for their mother the Church.

But at this present (the more is the pittie) it is to rare to finde a Prelate in this world,* whiche doth not preferre hys temporalities before hys spiritualities: w^t the loue wher'of, they are so withdrawne, that they study rather to please Princes then God, and confesse God in corners, but Princes they will opēly confesse. Of whome the Lord speaketh in hys Gospell. Euery one sayth he, that confesseth me before men. I will confesse him before my father which is in heauen.* And contrariwise the Lord will not confesse him before his father which is afeard to confesse the Lord before men. Neither is it true which Panormitan sayth, most bishops to be on hys part, for here are many byshops proctors whō he doth not reckon, because they are not of his opinion. Neither is the dignities of the fathers, to be respected in the Councell, as he sayth, but onely reason, nor anye'thyng more to be looked for then the truth: neyther will I for my part, preferre a lye of any byshop, be he neuer so rich before a veritie or truth of a poore priest. Neither ought a byshop to disdayne, if he be rude or vnlearned, y^t the multitude doth not follow hym, or that y^e voyce of a poore learned and eloquent priest should be preferred before his. For wisdom dwelleth oftner vnder a bare and ragged cloke, then in rich ornamentes and apparell.

Wherefore I pray you my Lord byshops, do not so much contēne your inferiours, for the first which dyed for Christ the which also opened vnto all other the way of Martyrdome, was no byshop but onely a Leuite. As for y^t whiche Ludouicus and Panormitane do allege touchyng y^e voyces of Bishops, I know not where they haue it. Wherefore I desire them y^t they would tell me,* where they haue foūd it. But if we repeat the examples of old councels, we shall finde that the inferiours were alwayes present with y^e Bishops. And albeit that Ludouicus do forbid vs the examples of the apostles, I stay my self most vpon their doings For what is more comely for vs to followe, then the doctrine & customes of the primitiue Church? It is sayd therfore in the 15. chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, it seemed good vnto the holy ghost and to vs. The whiche word (to vs) is referred vnto them which are before named, the Apostles and the Elders. Neither this word, (it semed good) signifieth in this place consultation, but decision and deter'mination, whereby it appeareth, y^t other beside y^t byshops had determining voyces. In an other place also of the sayd Actes, when as the apostles shoulde intreate vppon anye wayghty matter, they durst not determine by themselues, but the xii. called together the multitude.

Here Ludouicus sayth, y^t it doeth not appeare y^t the Apostles called other of necessitie: but I say vnto hym, how knowest thou y^t they did not call thē of necessitie? But for so much as both partes are vncertayne: nothing doth prohibite vs to follow the Apostles. For seeing that all thinges were written for our learning, it appeareth that the Apostles wold geue vs exāple, y^t in wayghty matters we shold admit our inferiours. And therefore in all Councels which were celebrate & holden afterwards,* we find that Priestes were also present: as in the Councell of Nice, whiche of all other was most famous, Athanasius being then but onely a priest, withstood the Arrians, and infringed their argumentes: Albeit there were also other priestes. And albeit mention be made of 322. byshops, yet is not denyed, but y^t the inferiours were there, whome I thinke to be omitted for this cause, for that they were almost innumerable: for as you know well enough, the denomination for the most part, is taken of the most worthy.

In the Synode of Calcedon (which was counted one of the foure principall Synodes) it is sayd that there were present 600. priestes:* the which name is common both vnto byshops and Priestes. In other Councels the name both of Bishops and Priestes is omitted, & mention made onely of Fathers, which hath the same signification y^e thys worde Elders had in the actes of the Apostles. Wee haue also a testimony of the ecclesiasticall history,* how that ther was a Councell gathered of Rome of lx. Byshops, and as many Priestes & Deacons agaynst the Nouations which called themselues Cathari. Also, when Paule the Byshop of Antioche, in the tyme of Galiene the Emperoure, preached y^t Christ was a man of common nature, the Councell assembled agaynst hym in Antioche: wherunto there came Byshops out of Cesaria, Capadotia, out of Pontus, Asia, and from Ierusalem, and many other Byshops, Priestes and Deacons: and it is said that for that cause the Council was often holden.

And at the last, in the same place, vnder Aurelius the Emperour Paule was condemned of al Christian Churches which were vnder heauē: neyther was there any mā, which did more confound the sayd Paul, then Malchiona Priest of Antioche, which taught Rhetorike in Antioche. Page 680 But to make no long digression from the matter, we haue most euident testimonies,* for the defence of the inferiours. For the chiefe and principall amongst all the Diuines S. Austen vpō the wordes of Mathew, where as Christ saith vnto Peter: I wil geue thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauē, sayth that by those words, the iudiciall power was geuen, not only vnto Peter, but also to the other Apostles and to the whole Church the byshops and Priestes. If then Priestes haue a iudiciall power in the church, what shold iet y^t they haue not also a determining voyce in y^e coūcels? The famous Doctour S. Hierome doth also agree with S. Austen, whose wordes are these vpon the Epistle of Paule vnto Titus. Before that difference was made in Religion by the instigation of the deuill, or that it was spo'ken amongst the people, I holde of Paule, I of Apollo, & I of Cephas, the Churches were gouerned by y^e common consent and Councell of the Priestes: for a priest is the very same that a byshop is. Wherefore all Byshops ought to vnderstand,* that they are of greater power then Priestes, rather by custome then by y^e dispensation of y^e truth of God and y^t they ought to rule the church together. And this we do also gather out of Paule vnto Titus, which maketh so much concordance betweene bishops and priests, that oftentimes he calleth priestes Byshops, whereby it doth euidently appeare, that priestes are not to be excluded from the conuentions of byshops, and determinations of matters. And albeit as S. Hierom writeth, that byshops onely by custome are preferred before Priestes, it may be, that a contrary custome may take away that custome.* For if priestes ought to rule the church together with the byshops, it is euident that it also pertayneth vnto them to decide and determine the doubtfull matters of the Church.

Wherefore the testimony of S. Paule is euident: for (as he writing vnto the Ephesians sayth:) If Christe instituted hys Apostles, Prophetes, Pastours, and Teachers to the worke of the ministry, for the edifying of hys Church vntill such tyme as we should meete hym, for this purpose that there should be no doubt in the diuersitie of doctrine, who doubteth then, but that y^e gouernaunce of the Church is committed vnto others together with the Apostles? Let these our champions now hold their peace, and seeme to be no wiser then they ought to be. The memoriall of the coūcell of Constance, is yet fresh in memory, wheras diuers of vs were present, and I my selfe also whiche was neither Cardinall nor byshop, but onely a Doctour, where I dyd see,* without any maner of doubt of difficultie, the inferiors to be admitted with the bishops, to the deciding of hard & doubtfull matters. Neither ought we to be ashamed to follow the example of that most sacred and great Councell which also followeth the examples of the Councell of Pisa and the great Councell at Lateran, wherein it is not to be doubted, but that the Priestes did ioynly iudge together with the byshops.

*Moreouer, if Abbotes, as we do see it obserued in all Councils, haue a determining voice, which notwithstanding were not instituted by Christ: why should not priests haue the same, whose order Christ ordayned by hys Apostles? Hereupon also, if one byshops shoulde haue a determining voice, nothing should be done, but what pleased y^t Italian nation, the whith alone doth exceed all other nations, or at the least is equall w^t them, in number of byshops And howsoever it be, I iudge it in this behalf to be a work of God, that the inferiours shold be admitted to the determinations: for God hath nowe reuealed that vnto little ones which he hath hidden from the wise.

Behold you do see the zeale, constancy, vprightnes, and magnanimitie of these inferiours. Where should the councell now be, if onely bishops and Cardinals shoulde haue their voice? Where should the authoritie of the Councils be? Where should the Catholicke fayth be? Where shoulde the decrees and reformation be? For all things haue now a long time bene vnder the will of Eugenius, and he had now obtained hys wicked & naughty purpose, except these inferiours, whome you now contemne, had withstād him. These are they which haue contemned the priuation made by Eugenius.* These I say, are they which haue not regar'ded hys threatninges, spoyle and persecution. These are they which being takē, imprisoned, & tormented: haue not fered to defend the trueth of the Councell, yea euen these are they, who albeit they were by Eugenius deliuered ouer for a pray, yet would they still continue in y^e sacred coūcell, and feared not to suffer warre, famine, & most cruel pestilence: and finally what thing is it, that these men haue not willingly suffered for the right and equity of the council? you might haue heard this inferior sort euen in y^e midst of their tribulations, with a loud voyce cry out and say, albeit that all men become obedient vnto that subuerter of y^e Church Eugenius, and that euery man do depart from y^e veritie of the fayth and constitutions of the fathers, consēting vnto the commaundementes of Eugeneus, yet we & our brethren will be constant,* and doubt not to dye for the truth and traditions of the holy fathers, the which in deed they haue done. Neither could they be feared with threatnings or discouraged with any spoyles, neither could any feare or hope, turne them from their most blessed purpose: and (to speake somewhat of mine own order) whether any Cardinals haue done the like or no, that iudge you.

As for Byshops, whō Panormitane alone wold haue to determine, you see how few of them are on our part, & euen they which are here present, are not able, by vertue to ouercome iniquitie, they feare the terrene power, and com'mit offence with their hast.* Haue ye not heard how they al sayd: they would consent vnto the kinges will and pleasure? But y^e inferiours are they which haue had truth,* righte'ousnes, & god himselfe, before their eyes, & they are greatly to be commended for shewing themselues such men vnto y^e Church of God. But why do I defend y^t cause of these inferiours? When as some will also exclude those byshops which are but byshops by name and title, and haue no pos'session of the Church, from our company, not vnderstanding that whilest they go about to put backe those mē, they do condemne Peter, and the other Apostles, who (as it is euident) were long without any great flocke, neither was Rome vnto Peter, nor Ierusalem vnto Iames, at anye tyme wholly obedient: for at that tyme no great number of people, but a small flocke beleued in Christ.

For I pray you, what is that we shold require of these byshops? They haue no flocke, but that is not their fault. They haue no reuenues, but money maketh not a byshop, and as the Lord sayth Beati pauperes spiritu. i.* Blessed are y^r poore in spirite. Neither was there anye rich Byshops in the primitiue Church, neither did the auncient Church reiect Dionysius Byshop of Millayne, Eusebius Bishop of Uercelles, or Hillary Byshop of Pictauiā, although they were neuer so poore, and banished without a flocke. But if we will graunt the truth, the poore are more apte to geue iudgement then the rich, because that riches bringeth feare and their pouertie causeth libertie. For the poore men doe not feare tyranny as our rich men do, whiche being geuen ouer vnto all kinde of vanities, idlenes and sloth, will rather deny Christ, then lacke theyr accustomed pleasures: * whom not theyr flock, but theyr reuenues make bishops deliting so muche in riches, that they iudge all poore men vnhappy. But, as Cicero sayth: nothing can happen better vnto a wise man, then mediocritie of substaunce. Wherupon it is written in the Gospel: It is easiar for a Cammel to passe through a needle eye, then for a riche man to enter into the kingdome of heauen.

But now to returne to a more full declaration of Panormitans words, I determine to passe ouer two poynts which he pronounced in the beginning of hys Oratiō, that is: Qui petant, & cur petant, i. who maketh the petition, and for what cause they make their petition. We graunt y^e they are great men, & men of power, and (as he doth affirme) y^e they haue deserued good of y^e church, neither do I doubt but that they are moued thereunto, with a sincere affectiō. But whether it be a small matter that is required, or that the same effectes would ryse thereupon, which he spake of: it is now to be enquired. A delay (sayth he) is required: a delay for a few dayes. A small matter: a matter of no impor'taunce: a matter easy to be graunted.* Notwithstanding let Panormitane here marke well, that he requireth a delay in a matter of faith. The verities are already declared: they be already discussed and determined. If now there shoulde be but a little delay, it would grow to a long delay: for oftē times y^e delay of one momēt, is y^e losse of a whole yere, here of we haue many examples. Hanniball whē he had obtained his victory at Cannas, if he had gone strayght vnto Rome, by all mens iudgementes, he had takē the city. But for so much as he did deferre it vntill the next day, the Romaines hauing recouered theyr force agayne: he was shutt out, and deserued to heare this opprobry.

Hannibal thou knowest victory to get,

But how to vse it thou knowest not yet.

Likewise the French men, after they had taken Rome and besieged the Capitoll, whiles that they gredely sought to haue great summes of mony, & delayed the time in making of their truce, Camillus cōming vpon them, did most shamefully driue them out againe. But what need I to rehearse old histories, when as our own examples are sufficient Page 681 for vs? Ye know your selues how often these delayes haue bene hurtfull vnto you, & how oftē the delay of a few dayes hath growne to a long tracte of tyme. For now this is the 8. yeare that you haue spent in delayes: & you haue seene, that alwayes of one delay an other hath sprong and risen. Wherefore I do require that Panormitan shuld con'sider, that y^e conclusion being this day disturbed,* we know not whether it will be brought to passe hereafter againe or no. Many impedimentes or lets may rise. Neither doth Panormitan say, that this delay being obtayned, he wold afterward consent with his fellowes vnto the conclusiōs: for he denyeth that he hath any commaundement therunto & (which is more to be considered) he sayth that the Ambas'sadours at their returne from Mentz, may bring such newes, wherby these conclusions may be omitted: as though any thyng were more excellent then the truth.

The which thing doth manifestly declare, that they do not seeke delayes for the better examination of the matter but for to impugne the conclusions the more strongly. Nei'ther do I agree with Panormitan, as touching the effects which he sayd should ryse eyther of the denyall, or graunting of y^e requests: For I see no cause why y^e Princes should so greatly require any delay. There are no letters of anye Prince come vnto vs as touching such request, neyther is there any man lately come from them, neyther is it greatly materiall vnto them, but that the matters of faith shoulde be determined. But this is a most pernicious conclusion which Panormitane hath made, and not to be looked for at the handes of those most godly princes, wheras he saith if we do please them, they will take our part. If contrariwise, they will decline vnto Eugenius, and wholly resist & rebell agaynst vs. This is a meruailous word, & a wonderfull conclusion, altogether vnworthye to be spoken of such a man.* The decrees of the Councell of Constance are, y^t all maner of men, of what state or condition soeuer they be, are bound to the ordinaunces and decrees of the generall Councils. But Panormitanes wordes do not tend to that effect, for he would not haue the Princes obedient vn'to y^e Councel, but y^t councell to be obedient vnto y^t princes.

Alas most reuerend Fathers alas, what times & daies what maners and conditiōs are these? * Into what misery are we now brought? How shall we at anye time bring to passe, that the Pope being Christes Uicare (and as they say) an other Christ in earth, should be subiect vnto y^e coucell of Christians, if the Councell it selfe ought to obey wordly Princes? But I pray you look for no such things at the Princes handes. Do not beleue that they will forsake theyr mother the Church. Do not thinke them so farr alienate frō the truth, y^t they would haue iustice suppressed.

The conclusions whereupon the controuersie is, are most true, most holy, most allowable. If the princes do refuse them, they do not resist agaynst vs, but against the holy Scriptures, yea and agaynst Christ himselfe: which you ought neither to beleue, neither was it comely for Panormitane so to say. Panormitan (by your licēce be it spoken) you haue vttered most cruell words, neyther do you seeme to go about any other matter, then to inculcate terrour and feare into the mindes of the Fathers: for you haue rehearsed great perils and daungers, except we submitt our selues vnto the princes.

But you most reuerend fathers, shall not be afearde of them which kill the body, the soule they cannot kill: neyshal ye forsake the truth,* although you should shedde your bloud for the same. Neither ought we to be any whit more slacke in the quarrell of our mother the church and the Catholicke fayth, then those most holy Martyrs, whiche haue established the Church with theyr bloud. For why should it be anye greuous matter vnto vs to suffer for Christ, which for our sakes hath suffered so cruel & greuous death? Who when he was an immortall God, voyd of all passiōs toke vpō him y^e shape of a mortal man, & feared not for our redemption to suffer tormentes vpon the crosse. Set before your eyes the Prince of the Apostles, Peter, Paule, Andrew, Iames, and Barthelmew, and not to speake onely of Bishops) Marke what Stephen, Laurence, Sebastian & Fabian did. Some were hanged, some headed, some stoned to death, other some burned, and others tormented w^t most cruell and grieuous tormentes suffered for Christes sake. I pray you for Gods sake let vs follow the example of these men. If we will be byshops and succeed in honour let vs not feare Martyrdome. Alas what effeminate harts haue we? Alas what faynt harted people are we? They in tymes past by the contempt of death, conuerted the whole world, which was full of gentilitie and idolatrye: and we through our sluggishnes & desire of life, do bring the Christian Religion out of the whole world into one corner, & I feare greatly, least y^t little also which is left, we shall lose through our cowardlines: if that by following Panormitanes minde, we do commit the whole gouernaunce & defence of the Church vnto the princes. But nowe play the stout and valiaunt men in this time of tribulation, & feare not to suffer death for the Church, whiche Curtius feared not to doe for the cittie of Rome: which Menchotheus for Thebes, & Codrus for Athens, willingly took vpon them.

Not onely the martyrs,* but also the Gentiles might moue and stirre vs to cast of all the feare of death. What is to be sayd of Theremens the Athemen? With how ioyfull hart and minde, and pleasaunt countenaunce, did he drink the poyson? What say you vnto the Socrates that most excellent Philosopher? did he eyther weepe or sigh, when he supped vp the poyson? They hoped for that whiche we are most certayne of. Not by dying to dye, but to chaunge this present life for a better.

Truly we ought to be ashamed, being admonished by so many examples, instructed with so great learning, yea and redeemed with the precious bloud of Christ, so greatly to feare death.

Cato writeth not of one or two men, but of whole legi|ons, which haue chearfully & courageously gone vnto those places, frō whence they knew they shuld not return. Wyth like courage did y^e Lacedemoniās geue thēselues to death at Thermopilis, of whom Simonides writeth thus.

Dic hospes Spartanos te hic vidisse iacentes,

Dum sanctis patriae legibus obsequimur.

Report thou straunger, the Spartaines here to lye,

Whiles that their cōtry lawes they obeyed willingly.

Neither iudge the contrary, but that the Lacedemonians went euen of purpose vnto death: vnto whome theyr Captayne Leonidas sayd: O ye Lacedemonians, goe forward couragiously, for this day we shal sup together with y^e infernall Gods,* but I most reuerend fathers, do not inuite you vnto the infernals as he did his Lacedemonians, but vnto the celestiall and euerlasting ioyes of Paradise, if that you can suffer death for the truthes sake, and patiently abide the threatnings of these princes, if there be any threatninges at all. I call you vnto that eternal glory: where as there is no alteration of state, nothing decayeth or fadeth: where all good and perpetuall things do abound: wheras no man wanteth, no man enuyeth an other, no man stealeth frō an other, no man violently taketh frō an other, no man banisheth,* no man murdereth, and finally no man dyeth. Where as all men are blessed and happy, all are of one minde & one accord, all are immortall, all are of lyke estate, & that all men haue, euery man hath, & that euery mā hath all men haue. Which thinges if we will consider, we shall truely answere Panormitan, as Theodorus Cyrensis is said to haue answered Lismachus the king, whē he threatned to hang hym: who sayd, I pray you threaten these horrible thinges vnto your Courtiers, as for Theodorus, it maketh no matter whether he rotte aboue the grounde or vnder the ground.* So likewise let vs aunswere vnto the princes, if there be anye that do threaten vs, and let vs not feare their tormentes.

What doth a longer life preuayle to help vs? No man hath liued to short a tyme, which hath obtained the perfect gift of vertue. And if the death which a man suffereth in the quarrell of his country, seemeth not onely to be glorious amongst the Rhetoricians, but also happy & blessed, what shall we say for these deaths whiche are sustayned for the country of all countryes, the Church? Truely most reuerend fathers, it is to muche that our aduersaries doe perswade themselues of you, for they iudge you feareful, sluggish and faynt harted:* and therefore they do object Princes vnto you, because they thinke that you wil not suffer hunger, thyrst, exile in the quarrell & detence of the church. But I thinke you will esteeme it no hard matter, for the obteyning of euerlasting lyfe, to do the same which shipmen do for the obteyning of transitory riches, to put themselues in danger of the sea & wind, and suffer most cruell stormes.

The hunters lye abroad in the nightes in the snowe in the hilles and woodes, & are tormented with cold: yet haue they none other reward, but some wilde beast of no value or prise.* I pray you what ought you then to doe, whose reward shalbe Paradise? I am ashamed of our ignaue, whē as I read that women, yea euen yong maydens haue violently obtayned heauen through their Martyrdome, and we are made afrayd onely with the name of death. Thys riuer of Rhein which runneth along by the cittie in tymes past hath caryed 11. thousand virgines vnto Martyrdome. In India (as Cicero writeth) whē any mā was dead, hys wiues (for there they had many wiues) came not into contention who shuld be burned with him:* and she whom he loued best, hauing vanquished the other, all y^e rest ioyfully Page 682 folowing her, was cast into the fire with the dead Carcase of her husband and burnt. The other whiche were ouercome, departed full of heauines and sorow, wishing rather to haue dyed then liue.

The which courage we now taking vpon vs for Chri'stes sake, will aunswere Panormitan euen as the Lacedemonians aunswered Phillip, who when as by his letters he threatned them, that he would stop all that whiche they went about, they asked him whether he would also let thē to dye. Therefore as you are excellent men, so vse your vertue, which is alway free, and remayneth alwayes inuincible. For you do know that power is geuē you of y^e Lord and strength from y^e most highest: who will take accompt of your workes and examine your thoughtes: vnto whom ye should be carefull to render a good accompt, iudgyng rightly and keeping the lawe of righteousness, and in all thinges walking according to the will of God. And not according to the will of men.

And whereas the Embassadours of Eugenius, doe openly preach and declare a new doctrine, extolling the byshop of Rome aboue the vniuersall church: to the end that ignorant soules be not snared, ye shall not cease or leaue to publish the three first conclusions, following the example of y^e Apostle Paul, which would in no point geue place vn'to Peter when he walked not according to the Gospel. As for the other matters, which doe respect the only person of Eugenius (because Panormitan and the other Ambassadours of the princes, shall not say that we doe passe our bonds) ye shall deferre them for this present.

When as Cardinall Arelatensis had made an ende of his Oration, there was a great noyse crying, out & brawling euery where. The Presidents cōmaundements were not regarded, neither was the accustomed order obserued: for sometimes they spake vnto Panormitan, sometime vnto Lodouicus: no man was suffered to speake but in haste the bishops brawled with byshops, and the inferiours w^t theyr fellows.* All was full of contention & debate: which when as Lodouicus the Patriarck of Aquileia perceiued a man of no lesse courage and stomacke, then of nobillitie and byrth, being also a Duke, for the zeale whiche he bare vnto the vniuersall church, turning himselfe vnto Panormita & Lodouicus the Prothonotary, sayd: Do not think the matter shall so passe, you know not yet the maners of y^e Germaines, for if you go forward on this fashion, it wil not be lawfull for you to depart out of this country wyth whole heades: With which wordes Panormitan, Lodouicus, and the Archbishop of Millaine, being stricken (as it were with lightning from heauen, rose vp, & sayd: Is our libertie thus taken from vs? What meaneth it that the patriarcke doth threaten vs,* that our heades shoulde be broken? And turning themselues vnto Iohn Earle of Dierstene, which then supplied the protectors place, they demāded of him whether he would defend the Councel and preserue al men in their libertie,* or no.

The Citizens also and Senators were present to prouide and foresee that no offence shoulde rise, for the Cittizens obserued alwayes this order, that they would be present in all affayres, which they supposed would breede dissension, foreseeing specially that no tumultes shold ryse, otherwise then with wordes. They vsed alwayes suche a marueilous foresight & prouidence, that no man vnto this day, could haue any cause agaynst them, to complayne for violating their promise. Wherefore if at any time, any citizens haue deserued wel at the hands of the churche, surely this prayse is to be geuen vnto y^e Basilians. These men to'gether with Iohn Earle of Dierstene, being present in the assembly of y^e fathers, gaue a signe of preseruatiō of their libertie. The Earle (albeit he was moued at the strangenes of y^e matter, for he would not haue thought so great contētions could haue risen amongst wise mē) answered by his interpreter, y^e they all should be of good cheare. For y^e Emperours safe conduit should be obserued and kept euē to the vttermost, neither should the Patriarck, nor any other once violate the libertie, or take away the assurance granted by the Emperour. Notwithstanding he desired the pa'triarcke y^t he would call backe hys wordes agayne, & not to speake any more in such sort. But that famous father, be'ing nothing at all moued, or troubled, cōmitted his whole minde vnto Iohn de Bacheistein, auditor of the chamber, a man both graue and eloquent, to be declared. Who affirmed that the patriarches minde was not to threaten anye man, or disturbe the libertie of the councell, but to moue y^e fathers vnto Constancie, that they should be mindefull of the reformation, which they had promised vnto the whole world, and not so say one thing to day, & an other to morrow: for if they would so do, it were to be feared, least y^e lay tie seeing themselues deluded, and dispayring of reformation should rise agaynst the Clergy.

Therefore he monisheth the fathers to foresee and prouide for the perill, that they shoulde not depart from the Councell, nothing being determined or done: and finally he desired pardon, if in his wordes he had offended eyther agaynst the Councel, Panormitā, or any other mā. Wherby he declared it to be true which is commonly sayd,* that Humilitie is the sister of nobilitie: both which did very excellently appeare in this man. Yet for al this, could not the humilitie of the patriarch stop or staye their noyse or cryes: For as often as mention was made of reading the Concor datum, great noyse and rumours were stil made, for to stop the same.* Then Amodeus archbishop of Lyons, and primate of al Fraunce, a man of great reuerence and authoritie, being touched with the zeale of fayth, whiche he sawe there to be stopped and suppressed, sayd: Most reuerend fathers, I haue nowe a great occasion for to speake: for it is now 7. yeares or more, that I haue bene amongst you, yet haue I neuer seene the matter at that poynt whiche it is now at, most like vnto a miracle, for euen presently I doe behold most wōderfull signes of miracles, for it is no smal matter that the lame do walke, the dumme do speake, and that poore men preach the Gospel. Wherupon I pray you commeth this sodayne chaunge?* Howe happeneth it that those which lie lurking at home, are now sodenly start vp, Who hath geuen hearing to the deafe, and speache to the dumme? Who hath taught the poore men to preach y^e gospell? I do see here a new sorte of prelates come in, whiche vnto this presēt haue kept silence, and now begin to speak. Is not this like to a miracle? I would to God they came to defend the truth, and not to impugne iustice.

But this is more to be marueiled at then any miracle, that I doe see the best learned men of all,* impugne our cōclusions which are most certayn and true: And they which now reprove them, in times past allowed them. You are not ignoraunt howe that Lodouicus the Prothonotarye preached these verities at Louain and at Collē, & brought them from thence, confirmed with the authoritie of the Uniuersities. Wherefore, albeit that he be now changed, yet is the truth in no poynt altered. And therefore I desire you & beseech you all, that ye will not geue eare vnto these men, which albeit they are most excellētly learned, yet haue they no constancy in them: which doth adorn all other vertues.

When he had ended his Oration, Lodouicus the Prothonotary rising vp, sayde: It is most true that I brought those verities, but you do cal them verities of fayth, which addition semeth very doubtful vnto me. When he had spoken these wordes, Cardinall Arelatensis required that the Concordatum of the twelue men should be read, and many whispered him in the care, that he should go forward, and not aulter his purpose.

Then Panormitan,* as soone as the Concordatum began to be read, rising vp with his companions and other Arragons, cryed out w^t a loud voyce, saying: You fathers do contemne our requestes, you contemne kinges & Princes, and despise Prelates, but take heede least whilest that ye despise all men, you be not despised of all men. You would conclude, but it is not your part for to conclude. We are the greater part of Prelates, we make the Councell, & it is our part to conclude, and I in y^e name of all other prelates do conclude, that it is to be deferred & delayed. With this worde, there sprang suche a noyse and rumour in the Councell as is accustomed to be in battaile with the sound of Trumpets and noyse of horsemē, when as two armies ioyne. Some cursing that which Panormitan went about other some allowing the same: So that diuersitie of minds made diuers contentions.

Then Nicholas Amici,* a Diuine of Paris, according vnto his office, sayd. Panormitan I appeale frō this your conclusion, to the iudgement of the councell here present, neither do I affirme any thinge to be ratified whiche you haue done, as I am ready to proue, if it shall seeme good. The contrary part seemed nowe to bee in the better place, for they had already concluded. The other part had neither cōcluded, neither was it seene how they could conclude amongst so great cryes and vprores. Notwithstanding amongst al this troublous noyse, Iohn Segouius, a singu'lar Diuine of y^e vniuersitie of Salamantine lacked not audiēce: for y^e whol cōūcel was desirous for to hear him: wherfore al mē as soon as he rose vp kept silence, & he perceiuing y^t they were desirous to heare him speake, begā in this sort.

Most reuerend fathers,* the zeale and loue of the house of God forceth me nowe to speake: and I woulde to God that I had ben either blind this day, not to haue sene those thinges whiche haue happened, or that I had bene deafe, y^t I should not haue heard those words, which haue bene spoken. Who is it that is so stony or hard harted, which cā Page 683 abstayne from teares, when as the authoritie of the church is so spoyled, libertie taken away both from vs and y^e coun'cell, & that there is no place geue vnto the veritie. O sweet Iesu, why hast thou forsaken thy spouse? Behold and look vpon thy people, and helpe vs if our requestes are iust. We come hether to prouide for the necessitie of the Church we require nothing for our selues, •our desire is only that truth might appeare. We trusted now to haue concluded vpon y^e verities which were sometimes allowed in y^e sacred deputations. The Oratours of the Princes are present, & require the conclusions to be deferred.* But we be not vnmindful of those thinges which Ambrose wrote vnto Ualentinian the Emperour in this maner: if we shall intreate vpon the order of the holy. Scripture and auncient times past: who is it that will deny but that in case of faith (I say in case of faith) the bishops ought to iudge vpon Christian Emperours,* and not Emperours vpon Bishops. Neyther doe we admit their petition but vpō most vrgent causes: Notwithstanding we heard them patiently and willingly, whiles that they did speake euen so long as they would.

But now if any of our part would speake, by and by he is interrupted, troubled and letted. What honesty is this? What modesty or grauitie? is it lawful so to do in the councell• Where is the decree of y^e Council of Tholose now become (where are our decrees, which do not only prohibitie tumultes,* but also all small bablinges & talk) They say, it is because we contemne them: but they are they, which not onely conteme the Councell: but also resist the same. The patriarke spake but one small worde agaynst them, & that of no euill intent or purpose, and by and by they complayned y^e their liberty was broken, but they, when as they do inforce the councell, when as they forbid the President to speake, and will not suffer the ordinances to be read, doe not iudge that they doe any thing contrary to the liberty of the Councell. They say, they are the Councell themselues and yet they intreat the Councell. These thinges doe not I vnderstande: for if they be the Councell, why doe they intreat thēselues? If they be not the Councell, why do they not suffer the Council for to speake? Why do they not look for an answere of him to whom they make their petitiōs?

Truely this is to much violence, and certes our paence is also to much, to suffer such excesse euen in the face of the Church. But this doth most of all greeue me, and thys do I most maruell at,* But this doth most of all greeue me, and thys do I most maruell at, that Panormitan a man of singular wit and doctrine did cōclude without any discussing or deciding of the deputies, and without the examination of the 12. men, or any rite or order. The which, except mine eies had behold & seene, I would scarsly beleue, if any other mā should report it vnto me, of him: Neither do I yet know, whether I may sufficiently credite my selfe, the matter seemeth so horrible: for I do not see by what authoritie his cō|clusion doth stande, except it be by the authoritie of hys king whom he sayth will haue it to. But you most reuerēd fathers take heed that ye bring in no such custome: for so it shall come to passe, that in all matters, a few froward prelates shall haue me to conclude for them.

And albeit Parnormitan hath proued (as he thinketh) by strong reasons that the veritie ought to be deferred, yet notwithstanding I do require you most reuerend fathers to follow the example of the Apostle,* who (as Arelatensis hath very wel declared) would not geue one houres respite vnto Peter, when he swarued frō the truth of the Gospel. The sayth is speedely to be relieued & holpen, neither doth any thing sustaine more danger by delayes, thē faith doth. For heresies, except they be rooted out at the first, whē they are once growne, are hardly taken away. Wherefore I desire you speedily to helpe and ayd. Hoyse vp your sayles, & launch out your ores. What should we tary looking for either the Prelats or the princes? You are now in conflict: I ouely desire that you would hasten vnto the victory. Regard not the threatnings of those Princes, neyther the opprobries of those contumelious persons, for you are blessed sayth the Lord, whē as men curse you & persecute you, speaking all euill agaynst you, making lyes and slaunders vpon you for my sake: reioice and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen. What is it I pray you that the princes do so much obiect agaynst vs? Is not our Lord God able to take vs out of the furnace of hote burning fire, and deliuer vs out of y^e hands of those princes? I beseech you most reuerend fathers and louing brethren, haue no lesse hope in Iesus Christ, thē Sidrach, Misach, and Abednago had, which feared not that old king Nabuchodouosor:* and let y^e princes know, y^t the most high ruleth ouer y^e kingdomes of men, and geueth them vnto whom he pleaseth. God beholdeth all thinges from aboue (he is I say) in the midst amongst vs, wherefore are ye then afraid? Be of good courage, and shew yourselues as a strong wall for the church of God: suffer not the sayth to perish vnder your handes. The almighty God is present with you. He is present that will defend you.* Feare not them which seeke onely to kill the body. Do iustice and equitie, and be assured that he wil not deliuer you ouer into the handes of the bachiter and slaunderer. Againe I say vnto you, show yourselues valiant and stout: Defend your mother the Church. And vnto thee, O thou president I say, that thou oughtest rather to please God then man, for if thou depart thence without a finall conclusion, know assuredly that thou shalt render accompt in the straight iudgment of God,* and thus without any more wordes, he sate downe in his place.

In the meane tyme, many graue and ancient men had exhorted Panormitan that he shuld geue ouer his conclusion. The bishop of Burgen was very instant and earnest with him, that he should make vanitie and concord amōgst the fathers, and went about to make an vuitie with al mē. But neither the fathers of the Councell were determined to depart without a conclusion, neither Panormitan was minded to aulter his intent and purpose. All thinges were disturbed, neither did the prelates sit in their seats, as they were accustomed, but as euerye mans affection led hym. Some went to the Cardinall Arelateusis, some vnto Panormitan and exhorted them, as if they had bene princes or rulers of armies. Then Arelatensis knowing y^e matter to be in danger, and that there was no ready way to make a cōclusiō, thought to vse some policie, to appease y^e tumult.

Most reuerend fathers said he,* we haue receiued nowe letters out of Fraūce, which declare vnto me marueilous thinges: that there are incredible newes syrong vp there which if you will geue me willing audience, I wil declare vnto you.* By this meanes there was a sodayne silence throughout the whole Councel, & by this marueilous policie he made al men attentue to heare. When as he saw he had free liberty to speake, without either fable or history of any letters sent, he opened the whole order of the matter, & as it is requisite in an Orator, came by little and little to y^e principal poynt, saying, y^t Eugenius his messengers filled all France, preaching a new doctrine, and extolling y^e, authoritie of the bishop of Rome, aboue the generall Councils: agaynst whom, except speedy remedy were founde, it would come to passe, y^e man woulde geue credite vnto thē, and therfore the sacred Councell ought of necessitie, to prouide remedy,* and of necessitie to conclude vpō the vereties which were examined, that therby the temeritie of the Eugeniās might be repressed, which verities, albeit they were 8. in number, yet was it not the Fathers intēt to conclude vpon them al, but onely the three first: euen as I also (saith he) here do conclude, in the name of the Father, the sonne, and the holy Ghost.

When he had finished his Oration, with a cheerful and mery countenaunce rising vp, he departed. Some of them kissed him, and some of them kissed the skirtes of his garmentes. A great number followed him, and greatly commended his wisdom, that being a Frenche man borne, had that day vanquished the Italians, which were men of great pollicy. Howbeit this was all mens opinion, that it was done rather by the operation of the holy Ghost, then by y^e Cardinals owne power.* The other of y^e contrary faction, as men bereft of their mindes, hanging downe theyr heades, departed euery man to his lodging. They wē not together, neither saluted one an other: so that their countenaunces declared vnto euery man y^t they were ouercome. Something more also is reported of Panormitane,* that when he came to his lodging, & was gone vnto his chamber, he complained with himself vpon his king, which had compelled him to striue agaynst the truth, and put both his soule and good name in daunger of loosing, and that in the midst of his teares and complayntes he fell a sleepe, and did eate not meate, vntill late in y^e euening for very sorow for that he had neither ignorauntly, neither vnwillingly impugned the truth.

After this, there was great consultation amongst the Eugenians,* what were best to be done in this matter, Some thought good to depart and leaue y^e Councel, other some thought it meeter to tary, and w^t at endeuour to resist y^t nothing should further be done agaynst the Eugenians: & this opinion remained amongst them. The next day after, being y^e 15. day of Aprill, the Archbishop of Lyons and the bishop of Burgen, calling together the prelates into y^e Chapter house of the great church began many thinges as touching peace.* The Bishop of Burgen perswaded that there shuld be deputations appoynted that day, vnto whō the Archbishop of Lyons shoulde geue power to make an agrement. Unto whome aunswere was made, as they thought, very roughly, but as other iudged, gētly, but not Page 684 withstanding iustly and truely: For, they sayd there could be no vnitie or concorde made, before the aduersaries confessed their fault and asked pardon therefore.

The day following, the sayd Byshop of Burgen, with the other Lombards and Cathelans, went vnto the Germaines, and from thence vnto the Senate of the citie, speaking much as touching the prohibiting of Schismes. The Germaines referred themselues to those thinges which y^e deputation should determine.* The Senate of the Citie (as they were great mē of wisdom, which would do nothing without dilligent aduise and deliberation) answered, that the matter pertayned not vnto them, but vnto y^e Coun•or, The fathers whereof were most wise men, and were not ignoraunt what pertayned vnto the Christen fayth, and if there were any daunger toward, it shuld be declared vnto the Councell and not to the Senate: For they beleue that the Elders of the Councell, if they were premonished, would foresee y^t there should no hurt happen: as for y^e Senate of the Cittie, it was there duety onely to defend the fathers and to preserue the promise of the citie, with this answere the byshop of Burgen departed.

*In the meane time the fathers of the councell had drawen out a forme of a decree vpon the former conclusions, and had approned the same in the sacred deputations. By this time the Princes Orators were returned from the assembly at Mentz, & holding a Councell among themselues they had determined to let the decree: The 9. day of May there was a generall conuocation holdē, wherunto all mē resorted, either part putting forth himselfe vnto the cōflict.

The Princes Ambassadors were called by the bishop of Lubecke and Conrade de Winsperg the protectour into the quier, and there kept: whereas they intreated of a vnity and by what meanes it might be had, and there they taryed longer then some thought to doe: the whiche matter gaue occasion to bring thinges well to passe, beyond al expectation.* The onely forme of the decree was appoynted to be concluded that day, whereupon, as soon as Cardinall Arelatensis perceiued the congregation to be full, and that the twelue men had agreed, and that there was a great expectation, with sileuce, he thought good not to delay it for feare of tumult, but commanded, by and by the publick cōcordaunces to be read, wherein this was also contayned, that the Cardinall Arelatensis might appoynt a Session when soeuer he would. Which being read, he being desired by the promotors, concluded according as the maner of custome is. The Ambassadors of princes being yet it in the Duier, as soone as they vnderstoode how the matter passed, being very much troubled & vexed, they brake of theyr talke, imputing all thinges to y^e bishop of Lubecke, which of purpose had kept them in the Duier and protracted the time. Wherupon they entring into the congregation, filled the church full of complayntes.

First of all, the Oratour of Lubecke complayned both in his owne name and the name of the protectour, as touching the conclusion,* & required y^t the councell woulde reuoke the same. If that might be graunted, he promised to intreate a peace, and to be a protector betweene the Councell and the Ambassadors of the Princes. But the Archbyshop of Turnon said, that it seemed vnto him euery mā to haue free libertie to speake against that law which shold be promulgate, vntill the Session, whē the Canons shuld be consecrated and receiue their force: whē as the bishops in their pōtificalibus, after the reading of the decree in the Session, should aunswere that it pleased them: otherwise the demaund which was made by the promoters in the Session, to be but vayne, and for that the cōclousions were not yet allowed in the Session, and therefore he sayd that he might without rebuke, speake somewhat as touching the same, and that it was a great and hard matter, and not to be knit vp in such a short time, and that he had the know|ledge thereof but euen now: notwithstāding that he being an Archbishop ought to haue knowne the matter, that at hys return home, he might informe the king & also instruct those which were vnder him. And that he and his fellowes before any Session should be: would both heare & be heard of others. Neither doth it seeme good vnto him that the Session should be holdē, before report were made of those things, which the Ambassadors of the Princes had done at Mentz which would, peradventure be such as might alter and chaunge the mindes of the fathers.* Then the Byshop of Concen Ambassadour of the king of Castell, which was also lately returned from Mentz, a man of great vnderstanding, but lacking vtteraunce, greeuously complayned that the prelates were contemned. Neither had it bene (sayd he) any great matter if they had ben taryed for, which notwithstanding great daunger and expences, went to Mentz, not for theyr pleasure, but of necessitie. And afterward as it were smiling, he sayd; how mad am I y^e would haue the Prelates, to be taryed for, vntil they returne from Mentz when as they are not taryed for whilest they came out or the Duier of the Church: doe therefore as ye list. If there rise any offence or mischief her •upon, neyther are we the Ambassadors of Castell to or blamed, neither can anye man of right inpute any thing to one most noble king.*

Here were it long is replete, with what rebukes and taimtes they inuyed agaynst the Cardinall Arelatensis: but especially the byshop of Milane rayled most: teuellye vpon him, saying y^e he fostred & mayntained a table of Sopistes and Scholemaisters, & that he had concluded in mat^rters of faith with them: calling him also another Cataline vnto whom al desperate and noughty persons had refuge that he was thew Prince, & ruled the Church with them: and that he would not geue care vnto the Ambassadors of the most noble princes, or to the most famous Prelates in this most wayghty matter. Albagenis & a man of great nobilitie, descended of the Emperours bloud, albeit he had neuer alienate hys minde before from the Councell: yet least he should seeme to dissent from other Ambassadors of y^e princes, made the like complaynt as touching the attēpt of the prelates. After this it came vnto Panormitā to speake, who as he had a greater vehemency in speaking: so also he did declare a more angry stomacke and mind: for in the beginning of hys Oration, he seemeth not to go about accordyng to the precept at Oratours, to get the good will of the hearers, but rather theyr hatred: for he sayd that our sauour sheweth foure signes in the Gospell, whereby we should know the good from the reprobate: for he whiche is of God (sayth he) heareth y^e wordes of God, but you heare not the wordes of God, because yee are not of God. And agayne, he that doth euill hateth the light. And in an other place also, by their fruites you shal know them. And a good tree cannot bring forth euill fruit.

All which sayinges he wrested agaynst the fathers of y^e Councel, because they would not heare the words of God that is to say, the wordes of peace which the Ambassadors had spoken, because they fled from the light in the absence of the Ambassadors, priuilye concluding, and because in their deputation they had not holden and kept the holye day but had cōcluded thereupon,* also because they had the vpper hand in the foresayd cōclusion, not by reason, but by deceit. As touching the fruits, he sayd that the fathers them selues shuld meditate and consider how that, if their fruits were not good, they also themselues were not good: & that he did see an other Councell at hand, where as he feared least these conclusions should be reuoked, as the fruit of an euill tree: and therefore, they ought not so sodaynly to proceede in so wayghty matters: and y^t he would be yet more fully heard before the Session, as well in hys owne name because he was an archbishop, as in the name of his prince which raygned not ouer one kingdome alone but ouer maⁿy: Also he said that he heretofore by his words,* deeds and writings, hath extolled the authoritie of the Councel: and that he feared, least by these meanes, the authoritie thereof shuld be subuerted. At the last he required pardon if he had offended the fathers of the Councell, for so muche as very sorrow and grieve forced hym to speake so.

The Abbot Uergiliacensis would haue made answeare to those thinges whiche Panormitan had touched concerning hyis deputation: * but Arelatensis thought good that all the contrary part should speake first, amongst whome, last of all, * Ludouicus the Prothonotary, the Homere of Lawyers, rose vp. And albeit that he spake vnwillingly, yet when he had begon, he could not refrayne his wordes. And whiles he went about to seeme learned and eloquent he vtterly forgot to be good. He sayd y^t the Councell ought to take heed, that they intreated no matter of fayth, against the Prelates, least any offence should follow, for that some would say it were a matter of no force or effect. For albeit that Christ chose 12. Apostles and 70. Disciples, notwithstanding in the setting forth of the Creede, onely the Apostles were present, thereby (as it were) geuing example, y^t the matters of fayth did pertayne onely vnto the Apostles & so consequently vnto bishops. Neither that they ought hastily to proceede in matters of fayth, whiche ought to be clearely distinct, for somuche as Peter affirmeth the triall of fayth to be much more precious then golde, which is tryed by the fire. And if the Bishops be contemned, which are called the pillars and keyes of heauen, the fayth cannot seeme to be well proued or examined. But at length he confessed, y^t the inferiours might determine with the Bishops but denied that the least part of the Bishops with the most part of the inferiours might determine any thing. From thence he passing to the matter of fayth, sayd, that those verities whereupon question was nowe had, are Articles of Page 685 fayth, if they were verities of fayth. And forsomuch as euery man should be bounde for to beleue those, therefore he would be better instructed & taught in that matter whiche he shoulde beleue as an Article or fayth. Neither should it be comely for the Councell to deny him his request, which according to the rule of the Apostle, ought to be ready, to geue account vnto euery man whiche shall require it, touching the fayth, which it holdeth.

After euery man had made an end of speaking, the Car'dinall Arelatēsis calling his spirites together, * made an Oration wherein he answered now the one, & now the other. And first of all he commended the desires of the Imperiall Ambassadors, which offered to intreat a peace and vnity, but neither necessity, nor honesty (he sayde) would suffer those thinges whiche are concluded to be reuoked. He aunswere also that the petition of the Ambassadors of Fraūce is most iust, * in that they required to be instructed touching the fayth: and that the coucell would graunt their request, and send vnto them certayn diuines, which should instruct them at home at theyr lodgings: but the matter was already concluded & could no more be brought in question: that the Session was onely holden, rather to beautify the matter, * then to confirme the same. And as touching that which the bishop of Concen so greatly cōplayneth of, he doth not much maruell: for he could not know the processe of y^e matter, when he was absent, who being better instructed, he supposed would speak nomore any such words, forsomuch as a iust man would require no vniust thing. Also that his protestatiō had no euill sense or meaning, in that he would not haue it imputed, neither vnto him, neither vnto hys king, if any offence should rise vpon the conclusions. Notwithstanding it is not to be feared, that any euill shoulde spring of good workes. But vnto the Bishop of Millayne he would aunswere nothing, because he saw him so moued and troubled, for feare of multiplying of more greuous and hainous words. As for Panormitane he reserued vnto the last. * But vnto Ludouicus the Prothonotary, whiche desired to be instructed, he sayd: he willed him to be satisfied w^t y^e wordes which were spokē vnto the Bishop of Turnon.

Notwithstanding, he left not this vntouched which ludouicus had spoken concerning the Apostles Creede. For albeit that in the setting forth of the Creede, the Apostles be onely named, yet it doth not follow (sayth he) that they onely were present at the setting forth therof. For it happeneth of tentimes that Princes are commended and praysed as chiefe authors and doers of thinges, when as notwithstanding they haue other helpers, as it appeareth in battayles, which although they are foughte with the force of all the souldiors, yet the victory thereof is imputed but vnto a fewe. As in these our dayes, they do ascribe all thinges which the army doth either fortunately or wisely, vnto Ni|colas Picenius,* that most valiaunt Captayne which hath obtained so many famous victories: albeit that oftentimes other haue bene the inuentors of the pollicy, and workers of the feate.* And therefore Ludouicus ought to knowe and vnderstand, that they are not onely articles of fayth which are conteyned in the Creede, but all other determinations made by the Councels, as touching the fayth. Neyther is he ignorant, that there be some articles of the Creed which we now vse in the Church, that were not put too by the Apostles, but afterward by generall Councels: as that part wherein mention is made of the holy Ghoste, whiche the Councell of Lyous did adde, in whiche Councell also it is not bee doubted, but that the inferiours dyd iudge together with the Byshoppes. But for so much as he had sufficiently declared that matter in the congregation before passed, he would stay no longer thereupon. But comming vnto Panormitan, he rehearsed his wordes: Qui ex Deo est, verba Dei audit, He that is of God, heareth Gods word, which is very well takē out of the Gospell, but not well applyed vnto the councell (sayd he:)* for he firmly beleued, that his predecessors haue iudged holy Ghost to be in the midst of the Councels, and therefore the wordes of the Councels to be the wordes of the holy Ghost: which if any man do reiect, he denieth himselfe to be of God. Neither doth the councell hate the light, which doth all things publickly and openly, whose congregatiōs are cuidēt vnto all men, neither doth it as the conuenticles of the aduersaries, admit some, and exclude other some. Moreouer, the thing which is now in hand, was begon to be intreated of for two monethes agoe, & first the conclusions were largely disputed vpon in the diuinity scholes, and afterward sēt vnto Mentz and other places of the world.

After all this, the fathers were called into the Chapter house of the great Church, to the number of 120. amongst whom Panormitan which now cōplaineth, was also present, and according to his maner, did learnedly and subtilly dispute, and had liberty to speak what he would. Likewise in the deputations, euery man spake his mind freely, & in that deputation where Panormitan was, the matter was 3. dayes discussed. After this the 12. men did agree vpon it, and the general congregation did conclude it. Neither hath there bene at any time any thing more ripelye or exactlye handled both openly, & also without any fraud or deceite. And whereas the deputatiō did sit vpō a holy 〈◇〉 •here is no hurt in y^t, neither is it any new or straunge thing, forasmuch as they haue oftē holden their Session vpon testinall dayes, when as the matter hath had haste, and specially for that the matter of fayth hath no holy dayes.* And further he said that he did not conclude craftely and deceitfully in the congregatiō; as Panormitane hath reported, but publickly & opēly at the request of the Promoto^s. Neither hath any mā any iust cause to cōplayne vpō him, forsomuch as, whē he was made President, he was sworne that alwaies whē 4. or 3.* of the deputations did agree, he should conclude therupō. And forsomuch as he had already concluded, in di|uers causes touchinge the Pope, he sawe no cause why hee should not conclude in the matter of fayth, for that he was a Cardinall; & did weare his red hat for this purpose, that he should shed his bloud in the defēce of the fayth. Neither hath he done any thing now agaynst the Pope, for that omitting the fine conclusions touching Eugenius, he had concluded but onely the generall conclusions: which except he had done, the fathers should haue had iust cause to complayne agaynst him (in that they trusting in his fidelitie & faythfulnes, had chose him Presidēt) if by him they shoulde now be forsaken in this most necessary cause of fayth. And turning himselfe vnto the people; he desired the fathers to be of good comfort, forsomuche as he woulde neuer forsake them, yea although he should suffer death: for he had geuen his fayth and fidelity vnto the Councell, which he would be obserue and keepe: neither should any manues flattery in threatninges put him from his purpose: that he would be alwayes ready to do whatsoeuer the Councell should commaund him, and neuer leaue the commaundements of the deputies by any meanes vnperformed.

As touching that Panormitan had extolled the authority of the Councell, he sayd that he was greatly to be thāked. But yet he ought to vnderstand and know the authority of the Councell to be such, as cannot be augmented or increased by any mans prayse or cōmendation, or be diminished by any opprobry or slaūder. These things thus premised he cōmaunded the forme of y^e decree to be read. Thē Panormitane & those which tooke his part, would needes haue a certayn protestatiō to be first read. There was great contention on euery side. Notwithstanding at the last. Arelatensis preuayled, and the forme of the decree was read vnto this word, Decernimus, that is to say, we decree. Thē Panormitan rising vp, would not sucter it to be heard any further: And the Bishop of Catauia cryed out saying, that it was vncomely that Arelatensis,* with a few other Byshops by name, should conclude the matter. The like did al|so all those which fauoured Panormitane. The Cardinall of Terraconia also (which vntill that time had holden hys peace) did greuously rebuke his partakers, that as men be|ing a sleep or in a dreame, they did not read the protestatiō, and commaūded by and by one of his familiars to read it. But like as the aduersaries before did perturb the reading of the concordances,* so would not the Fathers of the Councell now geue place to the reading of the protestatiō. Which when Albiganensis did consider he cōmaunded the writing to be brought vnto him, and as he began to speak, sodenly Arelatensis rose vp, with a great number of the fa|thers to depart: which thing pleased y^e cardinall of Terraconia and Panormitan very well, for that they hoped that they alone with theyr adherentes, shoulde remayne in the Church. They exhorted Arelatēsis to reuoke the conclusiō, and to make another.

There was in that congregation in his place George the Prothonotarye of Bardaxina, sitting somewhat beneath his vnclē, the Cardinall of Terraconia, a man but yong of age, but graue in wisdomē, and noble in humanity: who as soone as he sawe the Cardinall Arelatensis rise, he determined also to depart, and when as his Uncle called him, commaunding him to tary, he sayd: God forbid father that I should tary in your congregatiō,* or do any thing cōtrary to the othe which I haue takē. By which words he declared his excellent vertue and nobility, & admonished our men which remained, of those things which they had to do. His voyce was the voyce of the holy ghost, and words more necessary, then could be thought. For if he had not spoken that word, the fathers of the Councell had peradventure departed, and gone theyr way, and the other remaining in the church, had made another cōclusiō which Page 686 they would haue affirmed to haue ben of force, because they would say the last conclusion was to be receiued. But many being warned by the wordes of the Prothonotary, and calling to remembraunce the like chaunce of other Councels before, called backe agayne the multitude which were departing, and cried vpon the Cardinall and the Patriark to sit downe agayne, & that they should not leaue y^e church voyd and quiet for theyr aduersaryes. Whereupon, sodenly all the whole multitude sate downe, and the gates were shut agayne.* In the meane time Matheus Albiganensis a bishop, read the protestation to none els but to himselfe alone, for it could not be heard for noyse: which being ended the Lombardes and the Cathelanes confirmed the protestation. When the Cardinal of Terraconia sayd that he did agree to that dissension, they maruelled at that saying. And whē some smiled & laughed at him: what sayd he, ye tooles, do ye mocke me? do not the Ambassadors of my king dissent from you? What do you maruell then if I do say I cōsent vnto theyr dissention? And with these wordes, he and almost all the Arrgonēs,* Lombardes and Cathelanes departed, all the other taryed still. And albeit it was somewhat late (for it was past ij. at after noone) Arelatensis seeing the congregation quiet, commaunded the affayres of priuate persons to be read, as the maner is: which beyng ended, he commaūded also the publicke affayres to be read, & willed the conclusions & the forme of the decree to be red agayne. There remayned in the congregation, the Ambassadors of the Empyre and of Fraunce, talking together of theyr affayres. Notw^tstanding the bishop of Turuō heard mention made of the cōclusions, & turning himselfe to the Bishop of Lubecke, sayd: lo, the matters of fayth are now in hand again, let vs go hēce I pray you that we be not an offence vnto others,* or that we be not sayd to dissent from the other Ambassadors. To whom the Bishop of Lubecke aunswered: tary father, tary here, are not the conclusions most true? Why are you afayrd to be here for y^e truth? these wordes were not heard of many, for they spake them sottely betwene themselues. Notwithstanding I heard it, for I sitting at theyr feet, did diligētly obserue what they said. Arelatensis, after all thinges were read, which he thought necessary, at the request of the deputies concluded, and so making an end dismissed the congregation. Twise it is declared, with how great difficulty Arelatēsis concluded forso much as neither the matter nor the forme could be cōcluded without dissension:,* and the conclusions were miraculous, and past all mens hope, but were obtained by the industry of Arelatensis, or rather by the speciall gift of the holy Ghost.

After this, it was determined betwene the Lōbardes and Aragon to absteyne frō the deputations for a certaine time, whiche they did not long obserue, notwithstanding y^e deputations were holdē very quietly for a certein space, neither was there any thing done worthy of remembraūce vntill the 15. day of May, during whiche time, all meanes possible were sought to set a concorde betwene the fathers, but it would not be. Then Nicolas Amici promoter of the faith, was called into the congregation, & briefly rehearsed those things which were done the dayes before, and declared how that Arelatensis might poynt a Session. Wherefore, forsomuch as delay in matters of fayth was daungerous, he required that a sessiō should be appoynted against the morow after, requiring the Cardinall for his dignities sake, in that he was called the principall of the church, and the other bishops, that (as they had promised in theyr consecration) they would not now shrink from the church in these wayghty affayres, and suffer the faith to be oppressed: but the other inferiors he required vpon theyr othe which they had taken, to shew themselues faythfull and constant herein. Then againe there fell a great contention vpō these wordes: for Arelatensis, as he was required, did appoynt a Session, and exhorted all men to be there present in theyr Robes.* The Bishop of Lubecke rising vp, made a protestation in his owne name, and also in the name of his protector, that he would not consent, that there shoulde be any Session, if it shoulde in any part derogate from the agreement had at Mentz. Georgius Miles also, his fellow Ambassadour consented to this protestation. When as the protector of the Councel appoynted by the Emperour, vnderstood himselfe for to be named by the bishop of Lubecke,* he maruelled a while what the matter shoulde be. But being certified by an enterpreter, he aunswered that he would in no case consent vnto the protestation of the Bishop of Lubecke, and that he did not know any thing of their doings at Mentz: also that he was sent by the Emperour to the sacred Councell, and hath his charge whiche he doth well remember, and would be obedient therunto. After whom the Bishop of Concense, according to his accustomed maner, made his protestatiō & after him also folowed Panormitane. Whose wordes before I will repeat, I desire that no man woulde maruell that I make mention so often of Panormitane: for it is necessary to declare the matter in order as it was done.

It happened in these matters euen as it doth in warlike affayres: For as there, suche as are most valiaunt and strong,* and doe most worthy feates, obteine most fame, as in the battell of Troy, Achilles and Hector: so in these spirituall warres and contentions, those which most excell in learning and eloquence, and do more then other, should be most renowned & named: for on y^t one part Panormitane was prince and Captayne, on the other, Arelatensis: but his owne will made not the one Captain, but onely necescity, for it behoued him to obey his prince. Notwithstanding he was not ignoraunt of the truth and verity, neither did he resist willingly against it: for I haue sene him oftentimes in his library complayne of his prince, that he followed other mens Coucell. When as his time came to speak he sayd that he did not a little maruell why the protector of the fayth, shoulde require the Prelates to haue a Session, whiche was nothing pertaining to his office, and that he ought not to vsurpe the Presidentes place. And agayne he complayned touching the contempt of the Prelates, for the matter did presently touch the state of the Apostolicke sea, & for that cause the sea ought to be heard before any Session beholdē. Neither it is to be regarded (said he) that the coucell of constance semeth to haue decreed, that it should now be spoken of, for so much as Pope Iohn was not heard at Constaunce, neither any man els, to speake for the sea, by which words he seemed both to contēnc and bring in dout all the decrees of that most great and sacred synode of Cōstance: therefore there was a great tumult,* and all men cried out with one voyce, saying: that the Synod of Cōstance is holy and the authority thereof ought to be inuiolate. But he being still instant, with a stoute and hauty courage, affirmed that the matter coulde not be finished without the Ambassadors of the Princes, and that the Princes ought to be heard in a matter of fayth. And agayne that the Ambassadors themselues cannot consent, for so much as in the Colloqui holden at Mentz they had promised during the treaty of peace by them begunne, they woulde receiue & allow nothing that the Pope shoulde either doe agaynst the councell, or the councell agaynst the Pope: & that he doubted not, but that the th•ee first conclusions declared Eugenius an hereticke, in so much that it was euident, that Eugenius did vehemently resist the two first. And therefore for so much as the Session was not yet holden, and that it was lawful for euery man before y^t Session to speak what he will, he desired and required them most instauntly, that there might be no Session as yet holden. Unto whom Arelatensis answered,* that it was not to be doubted but that the promoter of the fayth, by his office might call the prelates to determine a matter of fayth, & specially for so much as the deputation of the fayth and the whole councell, had so geuen him in commaundement.

As touching the prelates, he sayth, that albeit without all doubt bishops haue chiefe authority: yet notwithstanding it is accustomed in Councels, not to make any conclusion in the name of the bishops, but in the name of y^e whole councell: and the vniuersall Church hath decreed certayne lawes in this Councell, which shoulde remayne inuiolate. Neither let the bishops thinke the presence of the inferiors greuous vnto them, when as oftētimes vnder a bare and torne coate, wisdomē lyeth hid, and vnder rich vestures & ornaments,* folly lurketh. Bishops ought also to be mindfull of the saying of Domitius (whiche as S. Hierome reporteth) sayd: why should I esteeme thee as a prince, if thou doest not regard me as a Senator? For the byshops ought to esteeme Priestes as Priestes, if they will haue reuerence done vnto them as Bishops. Neither ought the Princes to be looked for,* to the deciding of this matter, for so much as the Church is not congregated in the name of the princes: but in the name of Christ, which hath not receiued hys power from princes: but immediatly from God: to the defence wherof, he should perceiue the inferiors to be no lesse encouraged thē the bishops, for that he did wel vnderstand and know, that they would not onely spend theyr tēporall good, but also theyr liues for the defence thereof. As for some bishops, rather thē they will lose any part of their tēporalties, they wil sel the liberty of y^e church vnto y^e princes & make them iudges and Lords ouer the Councel. As touching the actes at Mentz, he doth not regard them, for so muche as (as it is sayde) they accompted without theyr hoste: for he sayth, he doth not vnderstand how this can be that they had decreed neither to obey the pope, nor the coūcell. The one or the other they must needs be obedient vnto: Page 687 for there is no third tribunall, whereunto any obediēce is due in these matters which concern the fayth and the saluation of soules: And finally that the Church woulde not suffer that theyr affayres & matters of fayth shoulde be determined by the iudgement of princes: for the holy ghost is not subiect vnto princes, but princes vnto him: and vpon this conclusion he would not feare, neither the losse of hys goods, neither any death or martirdome. And wheras Panormitane doth now shew himselfe so great a defender of Eugenius,* he sayth that he doth not a litle maruell at it, for that in times past no man hath more published Eugenius his errors then he: by whose special labor & councel, both a decree monitory, & also y^e suspēcion was admitted & set out against Eugenius: And now, whereupō this sodein chaūge should come, he saith y^t he was vtterly ignorant, forsomuch as neither Eugenius had altered his life, neither could the church continue in such a schisme. Wherefore he desired Panormitane diligently to consider, whether he spake according to his conscience or not: for (sayth he) the conclusions which now shall be decreed, are most generall: neither is there any mention in them of the Pope, and moreouer the verity of fayth is contayned in them: agaynst the whiche if Eugenius did contend, it were more meete that the Pope should be corrected, then the veritye omitted. And thus he making an end all were warned to come the next day vnto the Session.* The protector also desired the sacred Councel, that none should be suffred to bring any weapon to the session. For so much as he was ready to obserue the safe conduct of the Emperour, and together with the Senate of y^e city, to prohibite all quarrellers for doing of miury.

When the 16. day of May was come, all they whom the Session contēted and pleased, assembled at the houre. The Ambassadors also of the princes were come together into the quier of the church, to attempt further what they could do, and sending the bishops of Lubeck and Concense, and the Deane of Turnon, an excellent learned man, they offered themselues to be present at the Session, if that the depo'sition of Eugenius might yet be deferred foure monethes. Who, when they had receiued a gentle answere of Arelatēsis, and the other principals, returning agayn vnto y^e Embassadors, they would only haue the first conclusion decreed, and therupon sent agayne vnto Arelatensis: vnto whō answere was made, that the chief force did consist in y^e two other conclusions, and that the Coūcel would specially determine vpon them. If the Ambassadors would not be pre'sent, they should vnderstand that the concord was broken by them, which would not obserue y^t which they had offered. With which auswere they departed, & the Sessiō begā to be celebrate. There was no Prelate of the Aragons present at it,* neither out of Spayn: and our of Italy, onely the bishop of Grosserane, and the Abbot of Dona, whiche for theyr constancy & steadfast good will toward the vniuersall church, could not be chaūged from their purpose, but of doctors and other inferiors, there were a great number of Aragons, and almost all the inferiors of Spayne and Italy (for the inferiors feared not the princes, as the Bishoppes did) and then the worthy stoutnes of the Aragones & Cathelanes appeared in the inferiour sort, which woulde not shrink away in the necessity of the church. Of the two other nations there were only present 20. bishops. The resi|due lurked in theyr lodgings, professing the fayth in theyr hartes but not in theyr mouthes. Arelatensis considering afore what would come to passe, caused praiers to be made, & after their praiers made vnto almighty god, with teares and lamētation, that he would send them his holy spirit to ayde and assist them, they were greatlye comforted and encouraged. This congregatiō was famous, and albeit that there were not many bishops present, yet al the seats were filled with the Bishoppes, Proctors, Archdeacons, Presidents, Priors,* Priestes and Doctors of both lawes, which I iudged to be about the number of 400. or more: amongst whō there was no noyce, no chiding, no opprobrious wor|des or contētion, but one exhorted another to the profession of the fayth, and there appeared a full and whole consent of them all to defend the church. The bishop of Massilia a noble mau read the decree, which was attentiuely harkened vnto, and not one word interrupted. When it was ended: Te Deum laudamus was song with great ioy and gladnes,* & so the Session dissolued, whiche was in number the xxxiii. Session, and amongst all the rest the most quiet and peaceable.

The day following, being the xxii. of May, the Princes Embassadors without all mens expectation,* came vnto the general congregatiō, by that theyr doing at the least, geuing their assent vnto the Session before passed. In celebrating wherof, if y^e fathers had erred, it had not bene lawfull for the Princes and Embassadors, to haue holden the councell with those fathers. But it was thought that they were touched with remorse of conscience, and euen now to detest and abhorre that which they had done: as it was not hidden to the Embassadors of the Empyre and Fraūce. For the bishop of Lubecke sayde, that the cause of his absence was, for that he was appointed by the Emperors cōmaūdement, to intreat a peace: Wherefore it was not comely for him to be present at any businesse, whereby he should be vexed or troubled, with whome the peace should be intreated. Notwithstanding he did much commend the session before holdē, and beleued the decree therein promulgate to be most good and holy, and the verities therin contemed to be vndoubted, & sayd that he would sticke therunto both now, and euen vnto the death. But the bishop of Turnō a man both learned and eloquent, speaking for him and hys felowes, sayd that he heard how that they were euill spokē of amongst some, in that they had not honored theyr king in that most sacred Sessiō, whom it becommed specially to exalt and defend the fayth: which also for that cause aboue all other kings was named most christen: notwithstāding he sayd that they had a lawfull excuse, in that it was cōuenient that they, which were sēt to intreat peace, should doe nothing whereby theyr Ambassade shold be stopped or letted. Also there are two kindes of iniustice (sayd he) wherby either thinges are done that should not be done,* or thinges y^t should be done are not done. The first doth not alwayes bind, because it is conuenient to haue respect of time, place, and persō. But the last doth alwayes bind, wherin he sayd they were not culpable. But as touching the first poynt, they might seme vnto some to haue erred, because they wer not present at the Session: but yet in this poynt they had sufficient to answeere, forsomuch as if they had bene present at that Session, they should haue bene vnmeete to haue intreated any peace with Eugenius: And therefore albeit they were wanting at so holy a businesse, in that point they followed the example of Paule, which albeit he desired to be dissolued & to be which Christ, yet for the further profit and aduauncement of the church, it was deferred. So likewise he sayd, that they had now done, for that they were not absent because they doubted of the conclusions (whiche they iudged to be most true and holy, & whereunto they would sticke euen vnto the death) but because they woulde not be vnmeet for the treaty of peace for which they came: and yet that which they had not done in theyr owne persō, they had fulfilled (sayd he) by theyr seruaunts and household, whom altogether they commaunded to reuerence that Session. I would that I had bene then in the place of some great prelate: surely they should not haue gone vnpunished, whiche thought to haue playd bo peepe.* For what doth the declaration of the trueth hinder the treatye of peace? Or if it doe hurt, why is he not counted as great an offender, which cō|senteth to him that declareth the truth, as he which doth de|clare it? What shal we need any further testimony? for now the Embassadors of the Princes haue declared Eugenius to be an enemy vnto the truth. But to passe ouer these thinges, it is sufficient that Eugenius wrote afterward vnto the king of Fraunce, that he did vnderstand the Bishop of Tournon to be become his enemy.

After that the Bishop of Tournon had made an ende, Cardinall Arelatensis gaue thanks vnto God, which had so defended his Church,* & after great stormes and cloudes, had sent fayre & cleare weather: & cōmending y^e good wyll of the Emperour and the King of Fraunce toward the Church, he also prayd the bishop of Lubecke and Tournon, for that oftentimes in the Councell, and also of late at Mentz, they had defended the authority of the coūcell. But specially he commēded this theyr present doings,* that they had opely confessed the trueth, and had not sequestred them selues from the fayth of the Church.

Afterward, he entring into the declaration of the matter, sayd that he was at Pysis and at Constance, and neuer saw a more quiet or deuout Session then this, affirming y^e this decree was most necessary, to repress the ambition of the Bishops of Rome, whiche exalting themselues aboue the vniuersall church, thought it lawfull for them to doe all things after their owne pleasure, and that no one man frō henceforth should transport the councell from one place to another, as Eugenius attēpted to doe, now to Bononia, now to Florentia, thē agayne to Bononia, after to Ferraria, and after that agayne to Florentia, and that hereafter the Bishops should withdraw theyr minds from the carefulnes of temporall goodes, whiche (as he himselfe did see) had no mind at all on spiritual matters: & therefore by how much this Sessiō was most holy and necessary, by so much more the assent of the Ambassadors was most laudable & acceptable to all the fathers. These wordes thus spoken, he rose vp, and the congregation was dissolved.

Page 688 Now after that Gabriel Condulmarius was deposed from the bishopricke of Rome, the principall fathers of the Councell being called together in the Chapter house of the great Church consulted together, whether it were expedēt that a new bishop should be created out of hād, or de•erred for a time.* Such as thought good that the election shoulde be done w^t speed, shewed how daungerous a thing it was for such a cōgregatiō to be without a head: also what a pestiferous sicknes was in al the City, which not onely consumed young men and children: but also men of middle age, and old men in like maner, and that this plague came first by straungers vnto the poore of the Citty, and so infected the rich, & now was come vnto the fathers of the councel: amplifiyng moreouer, and encreasing the terror therof, and making the thing worse then it was, as the maner is.* Neither doth the decree (sayd they) any thing let or hinder, wherein it is prouided that there should be delay of lx. dayes after the sea is voyde: for that is to be vnderstand, when as the sea is voyd at such time as there is no Councell holden, neyther ought we to tary or make any delay, least the Princes being perswaded by Gabriel, should resist: Unto whom the deposition of Gabriell, and the election of some other, is to be certified all vnder one message. The other which thought good that there should be a delay sayde:* that the Councell did lacke no head, for so muche as Christ was the head thereof: neither did lacke a ruler, for so much as it was gouerned by the Presidents & other officers: and that no mention shoulde be made of any pestilence in such case, seing that, vnto stout & strong men, death is not to be feared, neither can any thing daunt or feare thē which contend for the Christian fayth. As for that pestilēce which doth now encrease and grow in the City, forasmuch as iudgement is now geuen, it is to be hoped that it wyll asswage, which was thought to haue come for the neglecting of iustice. Also that in so doubtful a matter, they ought rather to vse the princes agaynst theyr will, then to neglect them: and that it is not be feared, but that in this case, God will helpe those that are stoute & valiaunt. The matter being thus discussed amongst them, (albeit that there was as many mindes, as there was men) yet it seemed vnto them all, that it was most profitable to choose the Byshop by and by, but most honest to deferre it.

Hereupon Iohn Segouius,* a man of excellent learning sayd: Most reuerend fathers, I am diuersly drawne by sundry reasons, to this side and that. But as I way the matter more deeply in my minde, this is my opinion, that to come to a speedy election, it seemeth good, to speake after mans iudgement: but to delay it for two moneths, to speak after Gods iudgement, it seemeth much better. I do iudge that not onely the wordes,* but also the meaning of our decree, ought to be obserued. Wherefore, if ye will geue any credite vnto me, folow rather daungerous honesty, thē secure vtility: albeit that in deede, vtility cannot be discerned from honesty. This opinion of delay took place among the Fathers, and they determined to staye for the space of two monethes.

In the meane time, messegers were sent vnto the princes to declare the deposition of Eugenius by the Synode, and publish it abroad.

During this time, the corrupt ayre was nothing at all purged, but the mortality dayly encreasing, many died and were sicke. Whereupon a sodayne feare came vpon the fathers. Neyther were they sufficiently aduised what they might do: for they thought it not to be without daunger, either to depart or to tary. Notwithstanding they thought it good to tary, & also they caused other to tary: that since they had ouercome famine, and the assaults of theyr enemies on earth, they would not seeme to shrink for the persecutiō of any plague or sicknes. But forsomuch as the could not all be kept there, it was politickly prouided, that the councell should not seme to be dissolued for any mās departure. And for the more establishmēt of the matter, there were certaine thinges read before the fathers, which they called De stabilimento, whose authority continued long time after.* When as the Dogge dayes were come, and that all herbes withe red with heat, the pestilence dayly increased more & more, that it is incredible how many dyed. It was to horrible to see the corses hourelly caryed through the streetes, when on euery side there was weeping, wayling, & sighing. There was no house voyd of mourning: no myrth or laughter in no place, but matrones bewayling their husbandes, & the husbandes theyr wiues. Men & women went through the streetes, and durst not speake one vnto another. Some taryed at home, and other some that went abroad, had perfumes to smell vnto to preserue them agaynst the plague.

The common people dyed without nūber: and like as in the cold Autumne, the leaues of the trees do fall, euen so did the youth of the City consume and fall away. The violence of the disease was such, that ye should haue met a mā mery in the street now, and within x. houres heard that he had bene buried. The number of the dead corses was such also that they lacked place to bury them in: in so much that all the Churchyards were digged vp, and filled with dead corses, & great holes made in the Parish Churches, wheras a great number of corses being thrust in together, they couered them ouer with earth. For which cause the fathers were so afraid, that there appeared no bloud in their faces: and specially the sodayne death of Lodouicus the Prothonotary did make all men afrayd,* who was a strong man & flourishing in age, & singularly learned in both lawes: whō the same enuious and raging sicknes tooke away in a few houres. By and by after dyed Lodouicus the Patriarke of Aquileia, a man of great age, and brought vp alwayes in troubles and aduersity, neither coulede he see the day of the Popes election which he had long wished for: Notw^tstanding he tooke partly a consolation in that he had seene Gabriel deposed before his death. This mans death was greuous vnto all the fathers, for now they sayde that two pillars of the Councel were decayed & ouerthrowne, meaning the Prothonotary and the Patriarke, whereof the one by the law: and the other with his deedes defended the verity of the Councell.

About the same time also dyed the king of Arragones Amner in Switzerland, a man of excellent learning, being bishop of Ebron. The Abbot of Uergilia dyed at Spyre & Iohn the bishop of Lubecke, betwene Uienna and Buda.

These two last rehearsed, euen at the point of death, did this thing worthy of remembraunce. Whē as they perceiued the houre of theyr death approche,* calling vnto them certayne graue and wise mē, sayd: All you that be here present, pray to God, that he will conuert such as knowledge Gabriell for high Bishoppe, for in that state they cannot be saued: and professing themselues that they would die in the fayth of the Councell of Basill, they departed in the Lord. In Boheme also departed the bishop of Constance,* which was Ambassador for the Councell. There was great feare and trembling throughout all the Coūcel. There had bene also in the Councell, by a long time, the Abbot of Dona, of the Dioces of Cumana,* a man poore vnto the worlde, but rich vnto God, whom neither flatterings nor threatnings could turne away from his good purpose & intent, chusing rather to begge in the truth of the fathers, then to abounde in riches with the false flattering aduersaries.

Wherupō, after the Lords were departed, which gaue him his liuing, he remayning still, was stricken with the plague and died. Likewise a great number of the registers and Doctors dyed: and such as fell into that disease, few or none escaped.* One amongst all the rest, Aeneas Syluius, byting strickē with this disease, by Gods helpe escaped. This man lay 3, dayes euen at the poynt of death, all men being in despayre of him: notwithstanding it pleased God to graūt him longer life. When as the pestilence was most feruent & hote, & that daily there dyed about one hundred, there was great intreatye made vnto Cardinall Arelatensis, that he would goe to some other towne or village neare hand: for these were the words of all his frendes & household: What do you most reuerend father? At the least void this wane of the Moone, and saue your selfe: who being safe, all we shall also be safe: if you dye, we all perish. If the plague oppresse you, vnto whom shall we flye? Who shall rule vs? or who shall be the guide of this most faythfull flocke? The infectiō hath already inuaded your chamber. Your Secretarye and chamberlayne are already dead, Consider the great daūger and saue both your selfe and vs. But neither the intreatye of his household,* neither y^t corse of those which were dead coulede moue him, willing rather to preserue the Councell with perill of his life, then to saue his life with perill of the coūcel: for he did know that if he should depart, few would haue taryed behinde, and that deceite shoulde haue beene wrought in his absence.

Wherefore, like as in wars the souldiors feare no daunger, when as they see theyr Captayne in the midst of theyr enemies: so the fathers of the Councell were ashamed to flye from this pestilence, seing theyr President to remayne with them in the middest of all daungers. Which theyr doinges did vtterly subuert the opinion of thē, which babled abroad, that the fathers taryed in Basill to seeke their own profite and commodity, and not the verity of the fayth: for there is no commodity vpon the earth, which men would chaunge for theyr liues: for that all suche as doe serue the world, do prefer before all other thinges. But these our fathers shewing themselues an inuincible strōg wall for the house of God, vanquishing all the craftye deceites whiche Gabriell vsed, and ouercōming all difficultyes, which this Page 689 most cruell and pestiferous yeare brought vpon thē, at the length all desire of li•e also being set a part, they haue ouercome all daungers, and haue not doubted with most constant mindes to de•end the verety of the councell, euen vnto this present.

The time of the decree being passed, after y^e deposition of Gabriel, it semed good vnto the fathers, to proceed to the election of another Bishop. And first of all they nominated those that together w^t the Cardinals, should elect y^e Pope. The first & principall of the Electours was the Cardinall Arelatēsis a man of inuincible constancy,* and incomparable wisdom: vnto whose vertue I may iustly ascribe whatsoeuer was done in the coūcell: for without him, the prelats had not perseuered in theyr purpose, neither could the shadow of any Prince haue so defended thē. This man came not to the election by any fauor or denomination, but by his owne proper right. The rest of the Electours were chosen out of y^e Italian, French, Germayne and Spanish nations, & their Sels & chambers appoynted to them by lots, without respect of dignity or person, & as the lots fel, so they were placed: Wherby it chaunced a Doctor to haue the highest place, and a Bishop the last. Wherein the distribution of lots was very straunge, or rather a Diuine dispensation, reprouing the deuises of man, wheras the prelates had determined to haue the best Chambers appoynted for themselues, & had earnestly contēded before to haue theyr chambers appoynted according to theyr dignity.

*The next day after, there was a Session holdē, where in Marcus a famous Diuine, made an Oration vnto the Electors, wherein he reckoned vp the manifolde crimes of Gabriel, whiche was deposed. He endeouored to perswade the Electours to choose such a man, which shoulde in all pointes, be contrary vnto Gabriel, & eschew all his vices: that as he, through his manifolde reproches, was hurtfull vnto al men: so he which should be chosē, should shew him self• acceptable vnto all men, through iustice: and as Gabriell was couetous and full of rapine, so this man should shew himselfe continent.

There was so great a nūber of people gathered together to behold this matter, that neither in the church, neyther in the stretes, any man could passe. Th•re was presēt Iohn Earle of Diestein, who supplied the place of the Emperours Protector: also the Senatours of the Citty, with many other noble men, to beholde the same, whereof you shall heare (Christ willing) more largely hereafter. The Citizens were without in armour to prohibite that there should be no vproare made. The Electours receiued the Communion together, and afterwarde, they receiued theyr oth: & the Cardinall Arelatensis opening the book of Decrees, read the forme of the othe in y^e audiēce of all mē, & first of all, he taking the othe himself, began in this maner.

*Most reuerend Fathers, I promise, sweare and vowe before my Lord Iesus Christ (whose most blessed body I vnworthy sinner haue receiued: vnto whom in the last iudgement I shall geue accompt of all my deedes) that in this busines of election, wherunto now by the will of the Coūcell we are sent: I wil seeke nothing els, then the onely saluation of the Christen people, and the profit of the vniuersall Church. This shall be my whole care and studye, that the authority of the generall Councils be not contemned: that the Catholick fayth be not impugned, and that the fathers which remayne in the coūcell, be not oppressed. This will I seek for: this shall be my care: vnto this, withall my whole force and power, will I bend my selfe: neyther will I respect any thing in this poynt, eyther for mine owne cause, or for any frend, but onely God and the profite of the Church. With this minde and intent, and with this hart will I take mine othe before the Councell.

His wordes were liuely and fearefull. After him al the other Electours in theyr order, did sweare and take theyr othe. Then they went with great solemnity vnto the Cōclauē: where they remayned 7. dayes.* The maner of their election was in this sort. Before the Cardinals seate was set a Deske, wherupon there stood a basen of siluer: into the which basen all the Electors did cast their scheduls: which the Cardinall receiuing, read one by one, and foure other of the Electors wrote as he read them.

The tenour of the Schedules was in this maner. I George Bishop of Uicene doe chuse such a man, or suche a man, for bishop of Rome, and peraduenture named one or two: euery one of the electors subscribed his name vnto the Schedule, that he might thereby know his owne, and say nay, if it were cōtrary to that which was spokē: wherby all deceit was vtterly excluded. The first scrutiny thus ended, it was found that there were many named to y^e papacy. Yet none had sufficiēt voices, for that day there were xvii. of diuers natiōs nominate. Notwithstanding Amedeus duke of Sauoy, a man of singuler vertue, surmoūted them all: for in the first scrutiny he had the voyce of xvi. Electors which iudged him worthy to gouerne the church.

After this, there was diligent inquisition had in the Councell, touching those whiche were named of the Electors, and as euery mans opinion serued him, he did either prayse or discommēd those which were nominate. Notw^lstanding there was suche reporte made of Amedeus, that in the next Scrutiny, which was holden in the Nonas of Nouember, the sayd Amedeus had 21. voices, and likewise in the 3. and 4. Scrutinye 21. voyces. And for so muche as there was none found in all the scrutiny to haue 2. partes all y^e other schedules were burnt. And forsomuch as there lacked but onely one voyce to the elecion of y^e high bishop, they fell vnto prayer, desiring God that he would vouchsafe to direct theyr mindes to an vnity and concorde,* worthely to elect and chuse him which shoulde take the charge ouer the flocke of God. Forsomuch as Amedeus seemed to be nearer vnto the papacy then all other, there was greate cōmunication had amongst them touching his life and disposition. Some said that a lay man ought not so sodenly to be chosen: for it would seeme a straunge thing for a secular prince to be called vnto the Byshopricke of Rome: which would also to much derogate frō the ecclesiasticall state, as though there were none therein meete or worthy for that dignity. Other some sayde that a man which was maryed and had children, was vnmeete for such a charge. Other some agayn affirmed that the bishop of Rome ought to be a Doctor of law, and an excellent learned man.

When these words were spoken, other some rising vp, spake farre otherwise, that albeit Amedeus was no Doctour, yet was he learned and wise, for so muche as all his whole youth, he had bestowed in learning & studye, & had sought not the name, but euen the grōūd of learning. Thē sayd another, if ye be desirous to be instructed further of this princes life, I pray you geue eare vnto me, which doe know him throwly. Truely this man from his youth vpward, and euen from his yong and tender yeares, hath lyued more religiously then secularly, being alwaies obediēt to his parentes and maysters,* and being alwayes indued with the feare of God, neuer geuen to any vanity or wantōnes: neither hath there at any time bene any childe of the house of Sauoy, in whom hath appeared greater wytte to towardnes, whereby al those which did behold and know this man, iudged and foresaw some great matter in him: neyther were they deceiued. For if ye desire to know his rule & gouernance, what and how noble it hath bene: First know ye this, that this man hath raigned since his fathers decease, about xl. yeares.

During whose time, iustice, the Lady and Queene of all other vertues, hath alwayes florished: For he hearing his subiectes himselfe, woulde neuer suffer the poore to be oppressed, or the weake to be deceiued. He was the defender of the fatherles, the aduocate of the widowes, and protector of the poore. There was no rapine or robbery in all his territory. The poore and rich liued all vnder one lawe, neither was he burthenous vnto his subiectes, or importune against straungers throughout all his country: there was no greuous exactions of mony, throughout all his do|minion. He thought himselfe rich enough, if the inhabitāts of his dominions did aboūd and were rich, knowing that it was the poynt of a good shepheard to sheare his sheepe, and not to deuour them. In this also was his chiefe study and care, that his subiectes might liue in peace, and suche as bordered vpon him, might haue no occasion of grudge.

By which pollicies he did not onely quietly gouern his Fathers dominion, but also augmēted the same by others, which willingly submitted themselues vnto him. He neuer made warre vpon any, but resisting agaynst such as made war vpon him, he studied rather to make peace then to seeke any reuenge, desiring rather to ouercome his enemies with benefites, then with the sword. He married onely one wife, which was a noble virgin, & of singuler beauty and chastity. He would haue all his family to keep their handes and eyes chaste, and continent, and throughout all his house, honesty and integrity of maners was obserued. When as his wife had chaūged her life, and that he perceiued his Duchy to be established, & that it should come with out any controuersye vnto his posteritye, he declared hys mind which was alwayes religious, & dedicate vnto god, & shewed what will and affectiō he had long borne in hys hart. For he contēning the pompe and state of this world, calling vnto him his deare frends, departed and went into a wildernes: where as building a goodly Abbey he addicted himselfe wholly to the seruice of God,* and taking his crosse vpon him, folowed Christ. In which place he being cōuersant by the space of many yeares, shewed forth great Page 690 examples of holynesse, wearing no other garmentes then such as could withstand the cold, neither vsing any kind of daynty fare,* but onely to resist hunger, watching and praing the most part of the night. Wherefore this Prince is not newly come vnto the Church (as some do suppose) but being a Christian borne of progenitours, a thousand yeares and more being Christians, doth now serue God in a monastery.

But as touching that, also which is spokē concerning a wife, I do not regarde it: when as not onely he whiche hath had a wife, but he also which hath a wife may be elect & chosen pope. For why do the doctors dispute, whether a married man chosen pope, ought to performe his duety toward his wife, but onely because a maryed man might bee receiued and chosen? For as you know well enough, there were many Popes that had wiues: and Peter also was not without a wife. But what doe we stande about this? for peraduenture it had bene better that more priestes had bene married, for many shoulde be saued through maryage, which are now dāned through theyr single life. But hereof we will (sayth he) speak in another place. But this semeth vnto me, rather to be laughed at, then worthy any answer which is obiected touching his children, for what can children (specially being of great age) be impediment or let vnto the father, * being a Bishop? Doth not the Scripture say wo be vnto him that is a lone, for if he fall, he hath none to helpe him vp agayne? This can not be imputed vnto the prince, for he hath 2. sonnes, both comely and wise. Whereof the one is prince of Piemont, the other Earle of the Gebennians: these men will rule the country of Sauoy in the absence of theyr father, & will helpe him, if he haue need, for they haue already learned to rule ouer that people. I pray you what hurt is it for a Byshop of Rome, to haue valiant childrē, which may helpe theyr father agaynst tyrants? O most reuerent fathers, the more I do beholde the storme of this most peruerse and froward time, the more I do cōsider the vexations and troubles which the church is now tormented withall: I do so much the more thinke it profitable, yea & necessary, that this man should be chosen prince and head: I will thinke that God hath shewed his mercye vpon vs, if I may see him haue the gouernance ouer thys boate, I pray you cōsider into what straights we are now driuen, with what perils we are now vexed & tossed. What prince is it that is obedient vnto this coūcel? For some wil not confesse that the Coūcel is here, neither receiue our decrees: other some confesse it in theyr wordes, but by theyr deedes they declare it to be at Florence. For albeit that by theyr wordes & letters, * they do not denye that the church is here, yet do they procure promotiōs at the hands of Ga|briell, which is deposed. This is the state of the Church: with these stormes and tempestes the shippe is shaken and brused: Wicked children haue risen vppe agaynst theyr mother, which being vnmindefull of theyr mothers labours & kindnesse towards them, despise her, contēn her & beat her. What is to be done here in? Shall we chuse a bare manne, which shall rather be derided of our princes, thē had in reuerēce? The dayes are not now, that mē haue respect onely vnto vertue: for (as the Satyricall Poet writeth) vertue is praysed, but is coldly folowed. A poore man speaketh & they aske what he is? Truly vertue is good: but for our purpose, it must be marked and looked vpon, whether it be in a riche man or a poore man, you must chuse a gouernour which may rule the ship not onely by Councell, but by power also. The winde is great: Wherefore except the Councell be good, and the power strong, the ship shall be broken, & all put in daunger. The memorial is yet fresh before our eyes: that the princes doe neglect the authority which is of no force or power. Is there not great valiantnesse shewed in this poynt, in that you fearing no perill or daunger, eyther of life or goods, haue so long contended for the truth of Christ? But the moste mighty & high God looketh downe from on high, and will resist this theyr pride. I haue often consented vnto theyr opinion, * which sayde it was expedient, that y^e tēporall dominions should be deuied from y^e Ecclesiasticall state: for I did think that the priests should therby be made more apt to the diuine ministry, & the secu|lar princes more obedient to the clergy: but for so much as at this presēt, y^e churches of the world are possessed, partlye by Eugenius & partly by other tyraunts, we must prouide that we chuse such a one, which may recouer agayn the patrimony of the Church, and in whom the office of Christes vicar may not be contemned: through the shielde of whose power, theyr contumacy may be suppressed, which contēne both verity & reason. Whereunto no man seemeth vnto me more apt or meet, thē Amadeus duke of Sauoy, which holdeth the one part of his possessions in Italy, and the other in Fraunce: Unto whom all christen princes are allied eyther by consanguinity, or ioyned by amity and frēdship, & whose vertue, how famous it is, I haue already declared. Why doe we then stay or doubte to chuse him? then whome Gabriell feareth no mā more. Let him therfore perish with the sword where withall he hath stricken. There is no man which can more pac••y the church then he. Do you require deuotion in a bishop? there is no man more deuout thē he. Do you require prudēce?

Now ye vnderstād by his former life, what maner of man he is. If ye seek for iustice, his people are a witnes thereof: so y^t whether you seeke for vertue or power, all are here present before you. Whereupon do ye stay? Go to I pray you: chuse this man. He will augment the fayth: he will reforme maners, and preserue the authority of the Church. Haue ye not heard these troubles of the church to haue bene afore spoken of, and that the time now present should be an end of al troubles? Haue ye not heard that about this time, there should a Pope be chosen, which should comfort Syō, and set all things in peace? And who I pray you should he be that could fulfill these thinges, except we chuse this man? Beleue me, these sayinges must be fulfilled, & I trust that God will moue your minds thereunto. Notwithstāding, do whatsoeuer ye shall think most good and holy.

When he had spoken these wordes, the greatest nūber of the electors semed to consent vnto him, and his wordes tooke such effect, that in the next Scrutiny, the matter was finished and ended, and when the Scrutiny was opened, it was found that Amedius,* the most deuout duke of Sauoy according to the decree of the Councell, was chosen Pope. Wherefore sodenly there was great ioy & gladnes amongst them, and all men highly commended theyr doings. Then the Cardinall Arelatensis, published vnto thē the name of the elect bishop. After this, al the prelates in their robes, pōtificalibus, and miters, and all the clergy of the city cōming vnto the conclaue, the electours being likewise adourned, they brought thē vnto y^e great church, where as after great thanks geuen vnto God, and the electiō agayne declared vnto the people, a Hymne being song for ioy, the cōgregation was dissolved.

This Amedeus aforesayd, was a man of reuerent age, of comely stature,* of graue and discreet behaiour: also before married. Who thus being elect for Pope about Nouem'ber, was called Felix the v. and was crowned in the city of Basill, in the month of Iuly. There were present at his coronation Lewes Duke of Sauoy: Philip Earle Gebenēs. Lewes Marques of Salutze: The Marques of Rotelen: Cōrade of Winsperghey,* Chāberlain of the Empire: The Earle of Dierstein: The Ambassadors of the Cittyes of Strasbrough, Berne, Friburge, Solatorne, with a great multitude of other beside, to the vew of 50000. persons. At this coronatiou, the Popes two sonnes did serue and minister to theyr father. Lewes Cardinal of Hostia did set on his head, the pontificall Diademe, which was esteemed at 30. thousand crownes. It were long here to recite y^e whole order and solemnity of the procession, or the Popes ryding about the City. First proceeded the Pope vnder his Canaby of cloth of gold, hauing on his head a triple crown, and blessing the people as he went. By him wēt the Marques of Rotelen, and Conrade of Winsperge, leading his horse by the bridle.* The procession finished, they went to dinner, which lasted foure full houres, being excessiue sumptuous: where the Popes two sonnes were butlers to his cup. The Marques of Salutze was the stuard, &c.

Of this Foelix,* thus writeth Uolaterane in his 3. booke, that he being desired of certayne of the Ambassadors, if he had any dogges or houndes to shew them:* he willed them the next day to repayre to him, and he woulde shew vnto them such as he had. When the Ambassadors, according to the appoyntment, were come, he sheweth vnto them, a great number of poore people and beggers sitting at his tables at meat, declaring, that those were hys hoūdes, which he euery day vsed to feede: hunting with them (he trusted) for the glory of heauen to come.

About the 6. yeare of the Coucell, Sigismund the Emperour dyed, leauing but one daughter to succede hym in his kingdome: whom he had maryed to Albert 2. Duke of Austricke, which first succeeded in the kingdome of Hūgary and Boheme, being a sore aduersary to the Bohemians: and afterward was made Emperour. an. 1438. and raigned Emperour but 2. yeares, leauing his wyfe, which was Sigismūd his daughter, great w^t childe. After which Albert, succeeded his brother Frederick the third Duke of Austrich, in the Empire, &c. wherof more (Christ willing) hereafter.

Page 691In the meane time, Eugenius hearing of the death of Sigismund aboue recited, began to worke the dissolutiō of the Councel of Basill, and to transferre it to Ferraria, pretending the comming of the Grecians. Notwithstanding the Councel of Basill, through the disposition of God, and the worthines of Cardinall Arelatensis, constantly endured. Albeit in the said Councell were many stops and practises to impeach the same,* beside the sore plague of pestilence, which fell in the Citie, during the sayd Councell. In the which plague time, besides the death of many worthy men, Aeneas Syluius also himselfe, the writer & compiler of the whole history of that Councell sitting at the feete of the Bishops of Tournon,* and of Lubecke, lay sicke iij. dayes of the same sore, as is aboue touched, and neuer thought to escape. They that died, departed with this exhortation, desiring mē to pray to God, that he would conuert the harts of them that stooke to Eugenius as Pope, against that Councell, as partly is afore noted, and now repeated againe for the better marking.* Arelatensis being most instantly exhorted by his frends to flie that danger, could by no meanes be intreated to auoide, fearing more the daunger of the Church, then of his owne life.

Beside these so great difficulties & obstacles to stay and hinder this Councell, strange it was to behold the mutation of mens minds. Of whom, such as first seemed to fauour y^e Councell, after did impugne it: and such as before were against it, in the end shewed themselues most frends vnto the same. The chiefe Cardinals & prelates, the more they had to loose, the sooner they slipt away, or els lurked in houses or townes neare, and absented thēselues for feare: so that the stay of the Councell most rested vpō their Proctours, Doctours,* Archdeacōs, Deanes, Prouostes, Priours, and such other of y^e inferiour sort. Wherof Aeneas Syluius in his 183. Epistle, maketh this relation, where one Caspar Schlicke the Emperours Chauncelour writeth to the Cardinal Iulian in these words: Those Cardinals (saith he) which so long time magnified so highly the authoritie of the Church, and of generall Councils, seeming, as though they were ready to spend their liues for y^e same, now at the sight of one letter from their king (wherin yet no death was threatned, but onely losse of their promotions) slipt away frō Basil.* And in y^e same Epistle deridingly commendeth thē, as wise men, that had rather lose their faith, then their flocke. Albeit (saith he) they departed not farre away, but remained about Solotorne, waiting for other commandements from their Prince. Wherby it may appeare, how they did shrink away not willingly, but the Burse (quoth he) bindeth faster, then true honour.

Quid enim saluis infamia nummis? That is to say: what matter maketh the name of a man, so his money be safe? Haec Aeneas.

Moreouer in one of the Sessions of the said Councell, the worthy Cardinall Arelatensis is sayde thus to haue reported, that Christ was sold for xxx. pence: but I (saide he) was solde much more deare. For Gabriell, otherwise called Eugenius, Pope, offered 60. thousand crownes, who so would take me,* & present me vnto him. And they that tooke the said Cardinall, afterward excused their fact by another coulour, pretending the cause, for that the Cardinals brother, what time the Armiakes wasted Alsatia, had wrought great dammage to the inhabitants there, and therfore they thought (said they) that they might lawfully lay handes vpon a Frenchman, wheresoeuer they might take him. At length by the Bishop of Strasbrough, Rupert,* and the said City, the matter was taken vp, and he rescued. Wherein, no doubt, appeared the hand of God, in defending his life from the pestilent danger of the Pope his aduersary. Ex Paralip. Abbat. Vrsper.

And thus farre hauing proceeded in the matters of this foresayd Councell, vntill the election of Amadeus, called Pope Foelix v. before we prosecute the rest, that remaineth thereof to be spoken, the order and course of times requireth to intermixt withall the residue pertaining to the matters concluded betweene this Councell, and the Bohemians, declaring the whole circumstances of the Ambassade, their Articles, disputations, and answeres, which they had first in the said Councell, then in their own cuntry with the Councels Ambassadors: also with their petitions and answeres vnto the same.

*Touching the story of the Bohemians, how they being sent for, came vp to the Councell of Basill, & how they appeared, and what was there concluded and agreed, partly before hath bin expressed, pag. 675. Now, as leisure serueth frō other matters, to returne againe vnto the same, it remaineth to prosecute the rest that lacketh, so farre as both breuitie may be obserued, and yet the reader not defrauded of such things, principally worthy in the same to be noted and knowne.

The Bohemians then (as is before declared) hauing alwaies the vpper hād, albeit they were accused by y^e new Bishop Eugenius, yet it was thought good that they should be called vnto Basill, where as the Councell was appointed. Wherupon Cardinall Iulian sent thether before, Iohn Pullumair Doctour of y^e law, & Iohn de Ragulio, a Diuine. Who cōming vnto Basill in the moneth of August, anno. 1431. called by their letters vnto y^e Councell, Iohn, Abbot of Mulbrun, and Iohn Belhusius, Monke of the same cloister: which men for the dexteritie of their wit, and experience and knowledge of countreis, were very meete and necessary for Ambassades.

Within a few daies after, Iulianus also came thether, as he had promised, and immediatly sent out Iohn Belhusius, and Hammon Offenbourg, a Senatour of Basill, first vnto the Emperour Sigismund being at Felokirch, and afterward vnto Friderike Duke of Austrich, for the appealing of the wars betweene him & Phillip, Duke of Burgony. This done, to the intent that peace being had, not onely the Ecclesiasticall Prelates, but also the Marchants might haue safe accesse vnto Basill, and so bring in all things necessary for sustentation.

They going on this Ambassade,* receiued letters from the Sinode to be deliuered vnto y^e Emperour Sigismūd, whereby the Bohemians and Morauians, were called vnto the Councell. These letters he by and by, caused to be carried vnto Boheme. But for so much as he hymselfe went into Italy, to receiue the Imperiall Crowne of the Bishop, he left William Duke of Bauaria, as his Deputy, to be protectour vnto y^t Councell. Furthermore, when as y^e Synode vnderstood that our men would take a peace with the Bohemians, after their most shamefull flighte, they sent Iohn Niderius a Diuine, & Iohn Belhusius, to comfort the people which ioined vpon Boheme, and earnestly to moue the Morauians & Bohemians, which were before called, to come vnto the Councell.

They departing from Basill about the end of October, tooke their iourney toward Monacum, a towne of Bauaria: Where, after they had saluted Williā Duke of Bauaria and his brother Ernestus, and Albert the sonne of Ernestus, and had declared y^e Cōmission of their Ambassade, and had shewed vnto Duke Williā, how that as soone as he should come vnto Basill, the protection of the Councel should be committed vnto him by the Emperour: they exhorted Fridericke, Marques of Brandenburg, and Iohn Duke of Bauaria, the Senate of Noremberg, and other Princes and Lords, partly by letters from y^e Councell, and partly by wordes of mouth, that they should by no meanes, take any truce with the Bohemians, for that it might be hurtfull vnto the Church, and said they should haue ayd out of hand. They desired them also in the name of the Councell, that if the Bohemians would sende their Ambassadors vnto Basill, they would guide them, euery man through his countrey in safety: which they promised to do. It is incredible how all men reioiced, that the Bohemians was sent for.

After this, when as they counselled with the Senate of Noremberg, touching the sending of the Councels letters vnto Boheme, it seemed best, first of al to inquire of y^e rulers of Egra, whether y^e Bohemiās had made any answer to the former letters of y^e coucell which they had sent. The rulers of Egra being aduertised by these letters, sent him, which caried y^e Councels letters into Boheme, vnto Noremberg. He reported how reuerētly the Councel of y^e greater city of Prage receiued y^r letters, and how he was rewarded.

Wherupon they conceiued great hope of the good successe of the Ambassade. Therefore the Ambassadors vsing the Councel of y^e Senate of Noremberg,* and diuers others, sent the messenger backe agayne vnto Egra, wyth theyr owne priuate letters, and with letters of the Councell: for there was no better meane to send the letters vnto Boheme. Much trauaile was taken by them of Egra, Friderike Marques of Brandenburg, and Iohn Duke of Bauaria, in this matter, for that they were very desirous that peace might be had amongst all Christians. The copy of those letters, whereby the Synode did call the Bohemians vnto the Councell, and other letters exhortatorie of the Ambassadors, and the Bohemians answere vnto the same: for breuities cause we haue heere pretermitted. The Bohemians not in all points trusting vnto the Ambassadors, required by their letters, that the Councels Ambassadors with the other Princes, would come vnto Egra, whereas their Ambassadors shoulde also be present, to intreate vpon the safe conduct and other matters.

The day was appointed for the meeting, the Sondag Page 692 after Easter, which was y^e xxvij. day of Aprill. Then came the Ambassadors of the Councell vnto Egra,* with y^e noble Princes, Friderike Marques of Brandenburg, and Iohn Duke of Bauaria, with other nobles, almost to the number of 252. horsse. But none of the Bohemians were present, because the inhabitants of Pilsana, and the Lord Swambergius had not sent their safe conduct. When they vnderstood this by their letters, they brought to passe that the Ambassadors of the Bohemiās, Nicolaus Hunpeltzius, secretary of the greater Citie of Prage, and Mathew Clumpezane, President of Piesta, should be brought forth by them of Egra, and the Elenbogenses, and so they came vnto Egra with xix. horse, the viij. day of May. The next day after, Henry Tocgye, receaued y^e

Bohemian Ambassadors before y^e Marques, with an eloquent Oration, taking this part of the Gospell for his Theame, Pax vobis. i. Peace be with you. Then they propounded what great iniuries they had hether to receiued at their hands, which was the cause of so many great slaughters on either partie, and that they were glad that yet now at the length there was some hope that they should be heard.

After this, they conferred as touching the safeconduict. The Bohemiās required pledges,* and that not of y^e common sort, but Princes & nobles. Which thing, for so much as it did not content the Ambassadors, and that the matter should so be put of, the common people of Egra began to cry out that it was long of the Ecclesiasticall Princes, that a concord was not made with y^e Bohemians. Then Friderike Marques of Brandēberge,* and Iohn Duke of Bauaria, bound themselues of their owne good will. The like also did William Duke of Bauaria, at the request of the Councell. Likewise also did the Councell and the Emperour Sigismūd. Furthermore promise was made, that all the Princes and Cities, shoulde do the like, thorough whose dominion they should come,* and the Citie of Basill also. The copie of which safeconduict was afterward sent vnto Prage. This also was required by the Bohemians, that if it were possible, the Emperour should be present at the Councell.

This conuention at Egra continued xxj. daies. But the Bohemiās, albeit they heard the Coūcels Ambassadors make great promises, yet did they not fully giue credit vnto them. Whereupon they chose out two Ambassadors, Nicholas Humgolizius,* & Iohn Zaczenses, which should go to Basill, & diligently enquire out all thinges. These men, Conrade Bishop of Ratisbone, and Conrade Seglauer Deane of Esteine, brought vnto Cattelspurg, where as the Marques dwelt, being sente out by the Synode a little before, to enquire whether the Bohemian Ambassadors woulde come or not. When they were come vnto Biberacke, one being ouercurious, enquired of one of the Bohemian Ambassadors, of what Countrey he was. He aunswered that he was a Zaczen. There (said he) are most execrable heretickes and noughty men, &c. Who for that slaundersous word, as a breaker of y^e truce, was straightway carried to prison, and there shoulde haue suffered more punishment, if the Bohemian Ambassadors, and the Abbot of Ebera, had not intreated for him. When they came vnto Basill,* they were honourably receiued wyth wine and fish. They tarried there fiue daies and a halfe. The tenth day of October, they came vnto the Synode, which was assembled at the Friers Augustines.

These Ambassadors, when as they were returned home with the Chartour of y^e Synode, and declared those things which they had seene, and that the matter was earnestly handled without fraud or disceipt: there were Ambassadors chosen to be sent vnto the Councell, both for the kingdome of Boheme, and the Marquesdome of Morauia, which comming vnto Tusca, were brought from thence,* with xxxij. horse, & diuers noble men, vnto Chambia. From thēce they came to Swenkendorph, and so vnto Noremburg, where as beside their entertainment of wine & fish, xxij. horsemen accompanied thē vnto Ulmes: from thence, they of Ulmes brought thē vnto Biberacke, and Sulgotia: there Iames Tunches a Knight receiuing them, brought them to Stockacum, and from thence the hands of the Duke of Bauaria brought thē vnto Schafhuse. There they taking ship the fourth day of Ianuary, came vnto Basill the ix. day of the same moneth. What were the names of these Ambassadors of the Bohemians, which were brought vp with 300. horse, and how they were receiued at Basill, mention is made before, pag. 675. When as they came vnto the Synode, Cardinall Iulian made an Oration, that whatsoever was in any place in doubt, the same ought to be determined by the authority of the Councell, for somuch as all men are bounde to submit themselues to the iudgement of y^e holy Church, which the Generall Councell doth represent. Which Oration was not allowed of all the Bohemians.

Then Rochezanus made an Oration, requiring to haue a day appointed whē they should be heard,* which was appointed the xvj. day of the same moneth. Upō which day, Iohn Rochezanus hauing made his preface, begā to propound y^e first Article touching the Communion to be ministred vnder both kindes, and disputed vpon the same by the space of three daies alwaies before noone. Then Uenceslaus the Thaborite disputed vpō the second article, touching the correctiō and punishing of sin, by the space of ij. daies. After whome Uldaricus priest of y^e Orphanes propounded & disputed vpon the third Article by y^e space of ij. dayes, touching the free preaching of the worde of God.

Last of all, Peter Paine, an English man, disputed iij daies vpō y^e fourth article touching y^e ciuill dominion of y^e Clergy, and afterward gaue copies of their disputations in writing vnto y^e Councell, with hartie thanks that they were heard. The three last did somewhat inuey against the Councell, Commending Iohn Hus & Iohn Wickliffe for their doctrine. Whereupon Iohn de Ragusio a Diuine, rising vp, desired that he might haue leaue to aunswere in his owne name, to the first article of the Bohemians. The Councell consented thereunto: so that by the space of viij. daies in the fore noone, he disputed therupō. But before he began to answer, Iohn the abbot of Sistertia made an oration vnto y^e Bohemians, that they should submit themselues to the determination of the holy church, which this councell doth represent. This matter did not a little offend the Bohemians, Iohn Ragusinus a diuine, after Scholers fashion: in his answere spake often of heresies and of heretickes. Procopius could not suffer it, but rising vp with an angry stomacke complained openly to the councel of this iniury. This our countreymā (saith he) doth vs great iniury, calling vs oftētimes heretickes. Whereunto Ragusinus answered: for somuch as I am your coūtrymā both by tounge and nation, I do the more desire to reduce you againe vnto y^e Church.* He was a Dalmatian borne, and it appeareth that y^e Dalmatians going into Boheme, tooke their name by their coūtrei which they possessed. It came almost to this point, that through this offence, y^e Bohemians woulde depart from Basill, and could scarsly be appeased. Certaine of the Bohemians would not heare Ragusinus finish his disputation.

After him,* a famous Diuine, one Egidius Carlerius, Deane of y^e Church of Cambrey, answered vnto the second article, by the space of iiij. dayes. To the third article answered one Henricus, surnamed Frigidum ferrū iij. daies together. Last of all, one Iohannes Polomarius, maister of the requests of the pallace, aunswere vnto the fourth article likewise by the space of three daies, so that the long time which they vsed in disputations, seemed tedious vnto y^e Bohemians. Notwithstanding this answere, the Bohemians still defended their articles, & specially the first, insomuch as I. Rochezanus did strōgly impugne Ragusinus answer by the space of vi. daies. But forsomuch as one disputation bred another, and it was not perceiued how that by this meanes any concord could be made: the prince William Duke of Bauaria, Protector of the Councell, attempted another remedie, that all disputations being set apart, the matter should be friendly debated.

There were certain appointed on either part to intreate vpō the concord:* who comming together the eleuenth day of March, those which were appointed for the Councell, were demanded to say their mindes. It seemeth good, said they, if these men would be vnited vnto vs, & be made one body with vs, that this body might then accord, declare and determine all maner of diuersities of opinions and sects, what is to be beleueed or done in them.

The Bohemians, when they had a while paused, sayd: this way seemed not apt enough, except first of all, the four articles were exactly discussed, so that either we should agree with them, or they with vs, for otherwise it woulde be but a friuolous matter, if they now being vnited againe, disagree in the deciding of the articles. Here aunswere was made to the Bohemians, that if they were rightly vnited, and the ayde of the holy Ghost called for, they should not erre in the deciding of the matter, for somuch as euery Christian ought to beleuee that determination: which if they woulde do, it would breede a most firme & strong concord and amity on either part. But this answer satisfied them not, in so much the other three rose vp, and disputed against the answers which were geuen. At that time Cardinall Iulian President of the Councell, made this oration vnto the Bohemian Ambassadors.

This sacred Synode, sayth he, hath now by the space of ten daies, patiently heard y^e propositions of your foure Page 693 articles,* and afterward he annexed: you haue propounded saith he, four articles, but we vnderstand that beside these foure, you haue many other strange doctrines, wherein ye dissent from vs. Wherefore it is necessary, if that a perfect vnity and fraternity shall follow betweene vs, that al these things be declared in the councell, to the end that by the grace of the holy Ghost, which is the author of peace and truth, due prouision may be made therein. For wee haue not gathered these things of light coniectures, but haue heard them of credible persons, and partly heere are some present, which haue seene them with their owne eies in Boheme, and partly we do gather it by our owne report: for maister Nicholas, which was the second that did propound,* amongst other things alledged, that Iohn Wickliffe was an Euangelicall Doctor. If ye beleuee him to be a true Doctor, it followeth that you must repute his works as authentike: If ye do not so thinke, it is reason that it should be opened vnto vs.

Wherefore we desire you, that you will certifie vs vpon these and certaine other pointes, what you do beleue, or what credite you do giue vnto them. But we do not require that you should now declare your reasons, but it shall satisfie vs, if you will answer vnto euery article by this word. Credimus aut non credimus: that is, we beleuee or beleuee not. Which if you will do (as we trust you will) then we shall manifestly perceiue that you desire that wee should conceiue a good estimation of you. If there be any thing, whereof you would be certified by vs, aske it boldly, and we will giue you an answer out of hand: For we are ready according to the doctrine of S. Peter, to render accompt vnto euery man which shall require it,* touching the faith which we hold. Heereunto the Bohemian Ambassadors answered in few words, that they came only to propound those four articles, not in their owne name, but in the name of the whole kingdome of Boheme, and speake no more. Whereupon, William the noble protectour of the councell, calling vnto him four men on either part, intreated touching the pacifieng of the matter,* by whose aduice, the Coūcell decreed to send a famous Ambassade, with y^e Bohemian Ambassadors vnto Prage, wheras the people should assemble vpō Sondag. But they would not receiue these conditions of peace, which were offred, but made hast to depart. Whereupon, the foureteene day of Aprill, there was ten chosen out of the councell, to go with the Bohemian Ambassadors vnto Prage.

It were to long here to declare what honour was done vnto these Ambassadors, all the way in theyr iourney, and specially when they came vnto Boheme by the Citizens of Prage, when as a great number of Bohemians were assembled at Prage at the day appointed, both of the Cleargy, Nobility and common people.

After the comming of those Ambassadors, much contention begā to rise betwene the parties.* First begā Ioh. Rochezanus: who speaking in the publike person of the commutaltie, laboured to commend and prefer the iiij. verities of the Bohemians before propounded: charging also the Prelates and Priests for their slanderous obtrextations, and vnderesued contumelies, wherwith they did infame y^e noble kingdome of Boheme, complaining also that they would not receiue those christian verities, left & allowed by their king Wenceslaus, now departed. Wherefore he required thē in the behalfe of y^e whole nation,* that they would leaue off hereafter to oppresse thē in such sort, that they would restore to thē againe their Iosephes vesture, that is, the ornament of their good fame and name, whereof their brethren, their enimies had spoyled them, &c.

To this Polomar maketh aunswere againe, wyth a long and curious oration,* exhorting them to peace and vnitie of the Church, which if they woulde embrace, all other obstacles and impediments (said he) shoulde be soone remoued, promising also that this their vesture of honor and fame, should be amply restored again: and afterward, if there were any doubtfull matters, they might & shoulde be the better discussed.

But all this pleased not the Bohemians, vnlesse they might first haue a declaration of their four articles,* which if they might obtaine, they promised then to embrace peace and concord, Which peace (said they) began first to be broken by themselues, in that the Councell of Constance by their vniust condemnation, burned Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, and also by their cruel Buls and censures, raised vp first excommunication, then warre against the whole kingdome of Boheme.

Heereunto Polomar reclaiming againe, began to aduance and magnifie the honor and dignity of general coūcels. To conclude, as much as the sayde Polomar did extoll y^e authoritie of the Councels, so much did the answere of the Bohemians extenuate the same: saying that the latter Councels whiche are not expressed in the law of God, haue erred,* & might erre, not onely in faith, but also in ma'ners. For that which hath chaunced to the greene wood, may also chaūce vnto the dry. But of other, the most strōg pillers of the militant Church,* the Apostles I meane: seeme all to haue erred, and the Catholicke faith to haue remained three dayes sound & incorrupt onely in the virgin Mary. No Christian man therefore ought to be compelled to stād to the determination of the Pope or the Coū|cell, except it be in that, whiche is plainly expressed in the law of God. For it is euident, that all the generall Councels whiche haue bene of long tyme, haue reformed very few thinges as touching the faith, peace, and maners of the Church: but haue alwayes both in their life and decrees, notoriously swarued, and haue not established them'selues vpon the foundatiō, which is Christ. Wherefore the sayd Bohemians protested that they would not simply & plainly (God being their good Lord) yeld themselues to their doctrine, nor to such rash and hasty decrees: least thorough that their hasty and vncircumspect submission, they should binde their faith and life, cōtrary to the wholesome and sound doctrine of our Lord Christ Iesus. In summe, in no case they would enter into any agreement of peace, except their foure Articles, which they counted for Euangelicall verities, were first accepted and approued. Which being obtained (sayd they) if they would condescend with them in the veritie of the Gospell, so would they ioyne together, & be made one with them in the Lord.* &c. Ex Cochleo Hist. Lib. 7.

Whē the Ambassadors saw the matter would not otherwise be brought to passe,* they required to haue those Articles deliuered vnto them in a certaine forme, whiche they sent vnto the Councell by three Bohemian Ambassadors.

Afterward the Councell sent a declaration into Boheme, to be published vnto the people, in the commō assemblies of the kingdome, by the Ambassadors, which were commaunded to report vnto the Bohemians, in the name of the Councell, that if they would receiue the declaration of those three Articles, and the vnitie of the Church, there should be a meane founde whereby the matter touching the fourth Article, of the Communiō vnder both kindes, should be passed with peace and quietnesse.

They propounded in Prage, in an open assembly of the Nobles and commons, the declarations of the three Articles in forme folowing.

For somuch as touching the doctrine of the veritie,* we ought so to proceede soberly & warely, that the truth may be declared, with wordes being so orderly conceiued & vttered, that there be no offence geuē to any mā, whereby he should fall or take occasion of errour, & (to vse the wordes of Isidore) that nothing by obscuritie bee left doubtfull: whereas you haue propounded touching the inhibition & correction of sinnes,* in these wordes: all mortall sinnes, & specially open offences, ought to be rooted out, punished, & inhibited, by them whose dutie it is so to do, reasonably & according to the law of God: here is to be marked and vnderstand, that this word (whose duty it is) is too generall, and may be an offence: & according to the meaning of the Scripture, we ought not to lay any stombling stocke before the blinde, and the diches are to be closed vp, that our neighbours Oxe do not fall therein: all occasion of offence is to be takē away.* Therefore we say that according to the meaning of the holy Scripture, and the doctrine of the holy Doctours, it is thus vniuersally to be holden: that all mortall sinnes, specially publicke offences, are to be rooted out, corrected and inhibited, as reasonably as may be, according to the law of God, & the institutiōs of the fathers. The power to punish these offenders, doth not pertainē vnto any priuate person, but onely vnto them which haue iurisdiction of the law ouer them, the distinction of law & iustice, being orderly obserued.

As touching the preaching of the word of God, which Article you haue alledged in this forme,* that the word of God should be freely and faithfully preached by the fit and apt ministers of the Lord: least by this word (freely) occasion may be taken of disordred libertie, which (as you haue often said ye do not meane) the circumstance therof is to be vnderstand and we say, that (according to the meaning of the holy Scripture, and doctrine of the holy Fathers) it is thus vniuersally to be beleued:* that the word of God ought freely, but not euery where, but faithfully & orderly, to be preached by the Priests and Leuites of the Lord, beyng allowed and sent by their superiours, vnto whom that office apperteineth, the authoritie of the Byshop alwayes reserued, who is the prouider of all thynges accordyng Page 694 to the institution of the holy fathers.

*As concerning the last Article expressed vnder these words: it is not lawfull for the Christian Cleargy, in the time of y^e law of grace, to haue dominion ouer temporall goods: we remēber that in the solemne disputation holden in y^e sacred Councell, he which was appointed by y^t Coūcell to dispute, propounded two conclusions in this sorte.

First, that such of the Cleargy as were not religious, and had not bound thēselues thereunto by a vow,* might lawfully haue and possesse any temporall goods, as the inheritance of his father or any other, if it be left vnto him, or any other goodes iustly gotten by meanes of any gift or other lawfull contract, or else some lawfull arte.

*The second conclusion: The church may lawfully haue and possesse temporall goods, moueable and vnmoueable, houses, landes, townes, and villages, castles and Cities, and in thē haue a priuate and ciuill dominion. Your Ambassadors which disputed against him, graunted those cōclusions, saieng that they did not impugne the sence of his Article, being well vnderstand, for somuch as he vnderstandeth his Article, of ciuill dominion formally meant. Whereby, and also by other things, it may be vnderstand, that those wordes, to haue secular dominion expressed in the foresaid Article, seemeth to be referred to some speciall maner or kind of dominiō. But for somuch as the doctrine of the Church is not to be intreated vpon by any ambiguous or doubtfull words, but fully and plainely: therefore we haue thought good more plainly to expresse that, which according to the law of God, and the doctrine of the holy Doctours, is vniuersally to be beleueed: that is to say, the two aforesayde conclusions to be true. And also, that the Cleargy ought faithfully to distribute the goodes of the Church, whose administratours they are, according to the decrees of the holy fathers: and that the vsurpation of the administration of the Church goodes, done by any other then by them, vnto whome the administration is Canonically committed, can not be without guilt of sacrilege.

Thus the sacred Councell (sayd they) hath diligently gone about according to the verity of the Gospell, all ambiguitie set apart, to expounde the true sence of the three foresayd Articles. Wherefore, if there do yet remaine any doubt: according to the information which we haue receiued in the sacred Councell, we are ready by Gods helpe (who is the principall veritie) to declare the truth vnto you: If ye do receiue and embrace the declaration of the sayd three Articles, which is grounded vpon the veritie of the holy Scripture, as you are bound, and will effectually haue a pure, simple, and perfect vnitie, touching the libertie of the communion vnder both kindes, which you desire and require, which also you can not lawfully haue, without the licence of holy Church: we haue authoritie from the generall Councell, by certaine meanes, to intreate and conclude with you, trusting that you will shew your selues as you will continue.

These things thus declared, after the Bohemians had taken deliberation,* they said that they would giue no answeere vnto the premisses, before they vnderstoode what should be offered them as touching the Communion. Wherefore, it shall be necessary to declare the matter, as it was written in forme following.

In the name of God and our sauour Iesus Christ, vpon the Sacrament of whose most blessed last supper we shall intreate,* that he which hath instituted this most blessed Sacrament of vnitie & peace, will vouchsafe to worke this effect in vs, to make vs that we may be one in the saide Lord Iesu our head, and that he will subuert all the subtilties of the deuill, which through his enuious craftines, hath made the Sacrament of peace and vnitie, an occasion of warre and discorde, that whilst Christians do contend touching the maner of communicating, they bee not deprived of the fruite of the communion. Whereupon S. Augustin in his Sermon vpon infants, in the decrees De cons. distinct. 2. Quia passus, saith thus: So the Lord Iesu Christ certified vs and willed,* that we shoulde appertaine vnto him, and consecrated the mistery of our peace and vnitie vpon the table. He that receiue the mistery of vnity, and doth not keepe the bond of peace, doth not receiue a mistery for himselfe, but a testimonie against himselfe. This we thought good aboute all things to be premised, that the generall custome of the Church, which your fathers and you also in times past haue obserued, hath a long time had and still vseth, that they which do not consecrate, communicate only vnder the kind of bread. Which custome beeing lawfully brought in by the Church and holy fathers,* and now a long time obserued, it is not lawfull to reiect, or to change at your will and pleasure, without the authority of the Church. Therefore to change the custome of the Church, and to take in hand to communicate vnto the people vnder both kindes, without the authority of holy Church, is altogether vnlawfull. For holy Church vpon reasonable occasions, may graunt libertie to communicate vnto the people vnder both kindes. And euery communion which, beeing attempted without the authority and licence of the Church, should be vnlawfull when it is done with the authority of holy Church, shall be lawfull, if other things let it not: because (as the Apostle saith) he that eateth and drinketh vnworthely, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation.

Whereupon Sainct Isidore in the second distinct. vpon the consecration,* writeth thus: They which liue wickedly and cease not dayly to communicate in the Church, thinking thereby to be cleansed, let them learne that it doth nothing at all profite them to the cleansing of their sins. And S. Augustine in the same distinctiō saith, holy things may hurt the euil, for vnto the good they are saluation, but vnto the euill damnation. There are besides this, many other authorities.* The Apostle Iudas was amongst thē which did first communicate, but for somuch as he receiued vnworthely, hauing that sinne of treason in his hart, it did profit him nothing, but the deuill by and by exercised more the power and authority ouer him. This is declared by a great reason:* which of you is it, that if you shoulde receiue your Lorde into your house, woulde not with all diligence and care, study to make cleane and adorne his house, that he may receiue the Lord honestly? much more he that shall receiue his Lorde and Sauour into the house of his soule, ought diligently to make cleane and decke his soule, to cleanse it by the Sacrament of penance, with sorrow and contrition of hart, humbly, purely, and truely confessing his sinnes, and receiuing due satisfaction and penance, to adorne and decke the same with the purple or rich aray of deuotion, that the hart being so purged and adorned with feruent desire, he may come to that most holy Sacrament, whereby God reconcileth all the world vnto him.

Wherefore, the most sacred Synode admonisheth, exhorteth, and commandeth, that all Priests shoulde diligently exhort & admonish the people, and that they should vse all their care & indeuor, that no man come to that most blessed sacramēt, except he be duely prepared with great reuerence & deuotion, least that which is receiued for the saluation of the soule, redounde to the condemnation, through the vnworthy receiuing thereof.

Moreouer, Doctours do say, that the custome of communicating vnto the people, only vnder y^e kinde of bread, was reasonably introduced by y^e Church & holy fathers, for reasonable causes, specially for y^e auoiding of ij. perils: of error and vnreuerēce. Of error, as to think y^t the one part of Christes body were in y^e bread,* & the other parte in the cup, which were a great error. Of vnreuerence, for so much as many things may happen, as wel on the part of y^e minister, as on the part of the receiuer: As it is said that it happened whē as a certaine Priest, carieng the Sacrament of the cup vnto a sicke man, whē he should haue ministred, he found nothing in the cup, beeing all spilt by the way, with many other such like chaunces. We haue heard moreouer that it hath often hapned, that the Sacrament consecrate in the cup, hath not bin sufficiēt for the number of communicants,* whereby a new consecration must bee made, which is not agreeable to the doctrine of the holy fathers, and also y^t oftentimes they do minister wine vncōsecrate for consecrate wine, which is a great perill. By this meanes then it shall be brought to passe, that if you will effectually receiue the vnity & peace of the Church, in all other things besides the vse of the Communion vnder both kindes, cōforming your selues to the faith & order of the vniuersall Church, you y^t haue that vse and custome, shall cōmunicate stil by the authority of the Church vnder both kindes,* and this Article shall be discussed fully in the sacred Councell, where you shall see what, as touchyng this Article, is to be holden as an vniuersall veritie, and is to be done for the profite and saluation of the Christian people, & all things being thus thoroughly handled, then if you perseuere in your desire, & that your Ambassadors do require it, the sacred Councell will grant licence in the Lorde,* vnto your ministers, to cōmunicate vnto y^e people vnder both kindes: that is to say, to such as be of lawfull yeares & discretiō, and shall reuerently & deuoutly require the same, this alwaies obserued, that the ministers shall say vnto those which shall communicate, that they ought firmly to beleue not the flesh only to be contained vnder the forme of bread, and the bloud only vnder the wine, but vnder each kinde to be whole and perfect Christ.

Thus hetherto we haue declared the decree of y^e Councell. Page 695 As touching the other doubts & questiōs which were afterward moued by the maisters & Prelates of Boheme,* the Ambassadors of the Councell answered thus.

First they sayd, that it was not the meaning of the sacred Councell, to suffer y^e Communion vnder both kindes by toleration, or as the libell of diuorsemēt was permitted to the Iewes: for so much as the Councell intending euen to open the bowels of motherly charity and pity, vnto the Bohemians and Morauians, doth not meane to suffer it with such kinde of sufferance, which shoulde not exclude sinne, but so to grant it, that by the authoritie of our Lord Iesus Christ, and of his true spouse the Church, it may be lawfull, profitable & healthfull vnto those which worthely receiue the same.* Also, as touching that which was spoken by the said Bohemians of the punishing of offences, that it is in Scriptures, how that God oftētimes stirreth vp the harts of priuate persons, to the correction & punishing of sinnes, and so it should seeme lawfull vnto the inferiours to correct and punish their superiours: they answered, alledging the text of S. Augustin in the xxiiij. decree: He that striketh wicked men in that they are wicked, & hath cause of death against them,* is the minister of God: but he which without any publike administratiō or office murdereth or maimeth any wicked theefe, sacrilegious, adulterous or periured person, or any other offender, shall be iudged as an homicide, and so much y^e more sharply, in that he feared not to abuse & vsurpe the power not graunted him of God: and truly, this City woulde take it much more greuously, if any priuate man should attempt to punish an offēder, & set vp a gallows in y^e streate, and there hang him, then if one man should kill another in brawle or quarell. They alledged also other textes of S. Ambrose & S. Hierome agreeable to y^e same. They said that no mā doubteth y^t the law of God is duly & holily appointed,* and therein is simply writtē, thou shalt not steale. And notw^tstanding by the commandement of God the childrē of Israell caried away the goods of the Egyptians, which they had borrowed of thē. Also in y^e same law it is plainely writtē, thou shalt do no murther. Whereupon S. Austen in his first booke De Ciuitate Dei, proueth that it is not lawful for any mā to kill himselfe: and whē as he maketh example of Sampson, he answereth with these words: when as God commandeth & doth affirme himselfe to command wythout any doubt, who is he that will call obedience sinne? or who will accuse the obedience to God?

Here in this proposition, you haue the words of S. Austen for an answer. But let euery man well foresee, if God do commaund, or that he do intimate the commandemēt without any circumstances, and let him proue the spirites whether they be of God. But in suche cases there are no lawes to be geuen,* neither are they much to be talked of, for therby there should easely occasiō rise to make seditiō, & for y^e inferiours to rise against the superiours. For whē any man had stollen any thing, or killed any mā: he would say that he was moued thereunto by the spirite of God: but without manifest prooffe therof, he should be punished.

*Againe they sayd that there were certaine cases wherein the Laity had power ouer the Clergy. It was answered, that there were certaine cases in the law, wherein the Laity hath power ouer the Cleargy, and oftentimes ouer Cardinals. For if the Pope being dead, the Cardinals would not enter y^t Cōclaue to elect a new Pope, the king, prince, or other Lord or secular power may compel them: but in these cases he is now no priuate person, but vseth his iurisdiction by the authority of the law. The like is to be vnderstand of all other cases expressed in the law.

They said further, that no common law hath any right or iustice, except Gods law do allow the same.

*It was answered that no common law hath right or iustice, if it be against the law of God, for because y^e law of God is the rule of all other lawes. But there is great cūning and knowledge in applieng the rule to that which is made by the rule, for oftentimes, it seemeth that there is diuersitie in the thing made by the rule, when there is none in deede: but the default is in the applieng, because the rule is not duely applied to the thing made by it.

*As touching the Article of preaching the word of God, it was moued that oftentimes some Prelates, thorough their owne enuie and malice, without any reasonable cause, do inhibite a good and meete Preacher that preacheth Catholickely and well.

*Aunswer was made, how that they vnderstood well enough that the abuse of certaine Prelates, which did inordinately behaue themselues, gaue a great occasion of those troubles. Also that they neuer heard of any such cōplaints in those parties, but that y^e Prelates do fauour good preachers, and stirre them vp to preach, by intreaty, fauour, & promotiō. In al such cases, there are remedies already pro|uided by the law: for when any mā is so prohibited to vse his right, he hath remedy to appeale: and if he do trust his appeale to be iust, he may vse his right, all violēce both of the spirituall and secular power set apart, for the end of the matter shall declare if he had iust cause to appeale. Then shalbe declared that the superiour hath done euill in prohibiting, & the pleantue iustly in doying, and the superiour for his vniust prohibition shalbe punished. But if he be iustly prohibited, and that through his temeritie, he do cōtemne the iust cōmaundement of his superiour, he is worthy to be punished with condigne punishment.

Where it was moued cōcerning the third Article,* whether it were lawfull for the Ecclesiasticall Prelates to exercise in their proper person, the actes of secular dominiō, hereunto it was aunswered, that if by this word actes of secular dominion are vnderstand actes whiche a secular Lord may do or exercise,* then is it to be sayd, that a Prelate may lawfully exercise some such actes in his proper person, as to sell,* to paune or pledge, to infeofe by maner and forme ordeined by law: but there are some actes, which it is not lawfull for them to exercise in their proper person, but ought to haue afterward, a Uicegerent or Proctor, to doe the same: whereupon there is prohiotion made in the law in the Rubrike, Ne clerus vel Monachus secularibus negotijs se immisceat, & in alijs rebus.

It was also moued,* whether that coactiue power, whiche ought to be exercised by a Steward. &c. be in the handes of an Ecclesiasticall Prelate.

Whereunto Iohn Polomair aūswered,* that this question presupposeth an other: wherof there are diuers opinions amōgest the Doctours,* in whose power the dominion of the Church should be: and furthermore, whether the actiōs be in the person of the tutor or proctor, or if they be not in their person, notwithstanding by the constitutiō of any actor or proctor (whose exercising of those actions do geue authoritie vnto the actor or proctor) they be: with other difficulties, whereof it is not needefull to speake at this present. But for somuch as he was vrged to say his opinion: he sayd, that to such as had either leysure or pleasure in disputation, & would argue agaynst him, he would be cōtēted to geue the choise to take which part he would, but his opinion was rather that the dominion of Church matters should bee in the power of Christ: and the Prelates, with the other Clergy, are but Canonically administratours in maner of tutors: but they haue more power & administration then tutors, and by constitutyng a Steward or Uicegerent. &c. Their constitution beyng duely made, the Steward or Uicegerent hath the same coactiue power and exercise of iurisdiction.

Also as touching the fourth Article, for the declaration of the first conclusion, it is agreed that these wordes, Iuste requisita. i. iustly gotten, alledged, therein, determine all thynges conteined in the same.*

Also as touchyng the second conclusion, where as the sacred Canons and holy Doctours speake thus: the goods of the Church, the substaunce of the Church, and the possessions of the Church, and diuers other opinions there be amongst the Doctours, in whose power the rule thereof should be, as it is noted in the Glose. Cap. expedit xij. quaest. i. they do not intend to constraine any man to any of those opinions, neither to exclude any of them, but that euery man should haue libertie, probably to mainteine which of them he thinketh best.

Moreouer,* the Bohemians sayd, that they did beleue that the Clergy are but administrators of the tēporalties of the Church, and not Lordes thereof, accordyng to the maner of speaking of the Scriptures, holy Doctours, and Canons. Also the Bohemians sayd, that in all occasions which shall hereafter rise, they would wholly stand to the determination of the iudge, agreed vpon in Egra, with one consent. In this maner did the Ambassadors make aunswere vnto the Bohemians. At the last, after much communication had to and fro,* a concorde and vnitie was concluded and confirmed by setting to their handes. The Bohemians promised to receiue the peace and vnitie of the Church, and the declaratiō of the three Articles. This was done in the yeare of our Lord. 1438. About the feast of S. Martin, it was afterward agreed both by the Ambassadors of that Councel, and of Boheme, that whatsoever remayned, should be determined & agreed vpon: first at Ratisbona: afterward at Bruna in the Dioces of Olymutes: then at Alba in Hungary, before the Emperour Sigismūd, but the matter could not be ended in no place.

Certaine petitions, which the Bohemians put vp last of all in the sacred Councell of Basill. An. 1438. in the moneth of Nouemb.

VNto the most reuerēd fathers in Christ, and our most gracious Lords. We the Ambassadors of the kingdom of Boheme, do most humbly and hartely require you that for the perpetuall preseruacion of the peace & concord, and for the firme preseruacion of all things contained in the composition, you will vouchsafe of your clemencie, to giue and graunt vnto vs all and singular our requests, heere vnder written, with effectuall execution of the same.

First and aboue all things, we desire and require you, for the extirpation of diuers dissensions and cōtrouersies, which will vndoubtedly folow amongst our people vpon y^e diuersitie of the communion, & for the abolishing of infinite euils, which we are not able to expresse as we haue conceiued them, that you will gently vouchsafe of your goodnes & liberality, to giue, grant & command, vnto our kingdome of Boheme, & Marquesdome of Moravia, one vniforme order of the cōmunion vnto all mē,u vnder both kindes: that is to say, vnto y^e Archb. of Prage, the Byshop of Luthonus, Olimutz, & other prelates of the kingdome and Marquesdome, hauing charge of soules, & to their vicars, & also to their flocks & subiects, & that according to those things which are cōteined in y^e Bull of the Ambassadors, & in the cōpositions made in the name of the whole Councel, written in the chap. Pro firmitate, where it is thus said, and all other things shall be done, which shall be meete and necessary for the preseruacion of the peace and vnitie. For thys done by your benefite, the whole kingdome shall be comforted aboue measure, and established in brotherly loue: whereby an vniforme subiection and obedience shall be perpetually attributed vnto the holy Church.

Item, we require and desire (as before) that for the auoiding of all false suspition and doubtfulnes of manie, which suppose that the sacred Councell hath graunted the saide Communion vnder both kindes vnto vs but for a time, as neither profitable nor wholesome, but as the libell of diuorcement: that you will vouchsafe, according to this chapter alledged in the compositions: First they sayde, that it was not the entent of the sacred Councell, &c. wholesomely and speedely to prouide for our safety and your graunt in this behalfe, and with the Bulls of your letters, to confirme that chapter together with the other, pertaining to the office of your Ambassadors.

Item, we beseech you (as afore) that for the confirmation of obedience, and for the discipline of all the Cleargy, and for the small defence and obseruation of all things determined and agreed vpon, and for y^e good order in spiritualties, ye will vouchsafe effectually to prouide for vs a good & lawfull pastor,* Archbishops and Bishops, which shall seeme vnto vs most meete and acceptable for our kingdome, to execute those offices and dueties.

Item, we require you (as aforesaid) that your fatherly reuerēces will vouchsafe, for y^e defence of the worthy fame of the kingdome and Marquesdome, to declare and shew our innocencie,* in that they haue cōmunicated, do, & hereafter shall communicate vnder both kindes: to giue out, ordaine, and direct the letters of the sacred Councell, in maner and forme most apt and meete for such declaration, vnto all Princes, as well secular as spirituall, Cities and communalities, according to the compositions, and as the Lords the Ambassadors are bound vnto vs for to do.

Item, we desire you, that in the discussing of the matter for the Communion vnder both kindes, and of the commandement thereof giuen vnto all faithfull, yee will not proceed otherwise then according to the concordatum agreed vpon in Egra: that is to say, according to the law of God, the order of Christ, and his Apostles, the generall Councils, and the mindes of the holy Doctours, truly grounded vpon the law of God.

Item, we desire that your fatherly reuerences, considering the great affectiō of our people, will giue vs the desired libertie to communicate vnto the yonger sort, the Sacrament of the Supper. For if this vse of communicating should be taken away, which our kingdome being godly moued by the writings of most great and holy Doctours, and brought in by examples, hath receiued as Catholicke, and exercised now a long time: verely it shoulde raise vp an intollerable offence amongst y^e people,* and their minds would be greeuously vexed and troubled.

Item we require you (as before) that for like causes your fatherly reuerēces, would vouchsafe to permit, at the least the Gospels, Epistles, and Creede to be song & read in the Church in our vulgare tong, before y^e people, to moue thē vnto deuotion: for in our Slauon language it hath bene vsed of old in the Church, and likewise in our kingdome.

Item, we require you in y^e name of the saide kingdome, and of y^e famous Vniuersitie of Prage, that your fatherly reuerences would vouchsafe to shew such diligence and care towards the desired reformation of that Vniuersitie,* that according to the maner and forme of other Vniuersities reformed by the Church, Prebends and collations of certaine benefices of Cathedrall and Parish Churches, may be annexed and incorporate vnto the said Vniuersitie, that thereby it may be increased and preferred.

Item, we desire you (as before) as hartily as we may, & also (sauing alwaies your fatherly reuerēce) require you, and by the former cōpositions we most instātly admonish you,* that with your whole minds and endeouours, & with all care & study, your reuerēces will watch & seeke for that long desired & most necessary reformation of the Church & Christian Religion, and effectually labour for the rooting out of all publike euils, as well in the head, as in the members, as you haue often promised to do in our kingdome, in the cōpositions, & as our fourth Article touching the auoiding of all publicke euils, doth exact and require.

There were certaine answeres prouided by the Councel, to these petitions of y^e Bohemiās, which were not deliuered vnto thē, but kept backe, for what purpose or intent we knowe not. Wherefore, because we thought them not greatly necessary for this place, & also to auoid prolixitie, we haue iudged it meet at this present to omit them. Thus haue ye heard compendiously the chief & principal matters intreated & done in this famous Councell of Basill. And here (to cōclude withall) we haue thought good to declare vnto you, for y^e aid & helpe of the ignorant people (whych iudge many things to be of lōger time & continuāce, then in deed they be, & thereupon haue established a great parte of their opinions) how that, toward the latter end of thys Coūcell, that is to say, in the xxxvi. Session of y^e same, holdē the xvij. day of September, in y^e yeare of our Lord 1439. the feast of y^e Conception of our Lady,* was ordeined to be holden and celebrate yearely. In like case also in the xliiij. Session of the same Councell, holden the first day of Iuly, an. 1441. was ordeined the feast of the Uisitation of our Lady, to be celebrate and holden yearely in the moneth of Iuly. We haue also thought it good, before we do end this story, to annexe hereunto certaine decrees, profitably and wholesomely ordeined in y^e said Coūcell, against y^e inordinate geuing of the Ecclesiasticall benefices and liuings by the Pope, with certaine other constitutions also, fruitfull for the behalfe and edification of the Church.

During the time that the generall Councell at Basill, was so diligent and carefull about the reformation of the Church, this one thing seemed good vnto them to be prosecuted & folowed with an earnest care and diligence, that through euery Church,* apt and meete ministers might be appointed, which might shine in vertue & knowledge, to the glory of Christ, and the healthfull edifieng of y^e Christian people: whereunto the multitude of expectatiue graces hath bene a great impedimēt and let, in that they haue bin foūd to haue brought greuous troubles, diuers disorders, and many dangers vpon the ecclesiasticall state. For hereby oftentimes, scarcely apt or meete ministers haue bene appointed for the churches, which are neither known nor examined: and this expectation of void benefices (as y^e old lawes do witnesse) doth geue occasion to desire another mans death, which is greatly preiudiciall vnto saluation: besides that, innumerable quarels & contentions are moued amongst the seruants of God: rancour and malice nourished: the ambition and gredy desire of pluralities, of benefices mainteined: and y^e riches and substance of kingdomes and prouinces marueilously consumed. Poore men suffer innumerable vexations, by running vnto the court of Rome. They are oftentimes spoiled and robbed by the way: troubled & afflicted with diuers plagues, and hauing spent their patrimony and substance left them by their parents, they are cōstrained to liue in extreme pouerty. Many do chalenge benefices, which without any iust title (yea such in deed as ought not to haue thē) obtaine and get the same: such I say as haue most craft and subiltie to deceiue their neighbour, or haue greatest substance to contend in y^e law. It happeneth oftentimes that vnder the intricacion of these prerogatiues, antelations, and such other as do associate these expectatiue graces, much craft and disceit is found. Also, oftentimes the ministry is taken away from yong men, by their ordinary geuers, whiles that by the trouble of those contentions, & diuers discourses, running to & fro by meanes of those graces, they are vexed & troubled, the Ecclesiasticall order is cōfounded, whiles that euery mans authority and iurisdiction is not preserued: & the Bishops of Rome also, by chalenging and taking vpō Page 697 them too much the office of the inferiours, are wythdrawen from more waighty and fruteful matters, neither doe they diligently attend to the guiding and correction of the inferiors, as the publike vtility doth require. Al which things do bring a great

In the same Councell also diuers other constitutions were made, not vnprofitable for reformation, & for remouing of certaine abuses & disorders brought in,* especially by the B. of Rome, as touching causes not to be brought vp and trāslated to the court of Rome: Wherin it was decreed, that no actions nor controuersies shuld be brought from other countries, to be pleaded at Rome, which were beyonde 4. dayes iourney distant from the sayde Courte of Rome, a few principall matters onely excepted. Also, that no friuolous appeales should be made to the pope hereafter. It was moreouer in the same councell decreed, for the number, age, and condition of the Cardinals, y^e they shuld not excede the number of 24. besides them that were alredy, and that they should be frely taken out of al countries: and that they should not be of kin to the bishop of Rome, or to the Cardinals, nor yet be blemished wyth any spot or crime. Also for Annates or first frutes, or halfe frutes, it was there prouided, that no such Annates or confirmation of elections, or collation of benefices, should be paide or reserued any more to the pope, for the first yeres voidance. All which thinges there agreed and concluded by them, were afterward cōfirmed and ratified by the French king, Charles 7. with the full consent of all his Prelates, in his high court of Parliament in Bitures, & there called Pragmatica Sanctio. An. 1438.* whereupon great vtility ensued afterward to the kingdome of Fraunce. All beit in processe of time, diuers Friers there were, whych wrote agaynste the same. Ex lib. Pragin. Sanctionis.

Amongst many decrees of the saide Councell of Basil, in the 19. Session there was also a decree made touchyng the conuerting of Iewes and yong nouesses in Religion, vnto the Christian faith.

*Also that all Ordinaries should yearly at appoynted times, prouide certaine men wel learned in the holy scriptures, in such places where Iewes and other infidels did dwell, to declare to them the truth of the Catholicke faith, that they acknowledging their errour, might forsake the same: vnto the which preaching, the said ministers should compell them to resort, and to heare, vnder paine of excluding them from occupying any more in y^t place: prouided that the said Diocesanes and preachers should behaue thēselues towards thē, mercifully & with all charitie, wherby they might winne them to Christ, not onely by the declaring of the veritie, but also in exhibiting their offices of humanitie.

And to the intēt their preaching might be y^t more fruitfull, & that the preachers might be the better instructed in the tongues,* it was also in the same Councell prouided & commaūded, that the constitutiō made before in the councell of Uienna for learning the Hebrew, Chaldey, Araby, & Greeke tongue, should by all meanes be obserued & kept, and ordinary stipendes prouided for thē that should teache the same tongues.

An other decree morouer in the 20. Session was enacted, y^t whosoeuer was knowē or publicly noted to be a keper of Concubines,* should be sequestred from all frutes of his benefices, for the space of 3. monethes, which frutes should be conuerted by the ordinary, to the reparations, or some other vtilitie of the Church, & if he did not so amend, it was by the Sinode decreed that he should be clearely deposed from all his benefices.

Furthermore, y^e said Sinode did greatly inuey against them, which hauing the iurisdiction of the Church, did not shame to suffer such whore maisters for bribes and money, still to continue in their filthines, &c.

By these decrees of the Councell aboue specified, it is to be seene,* what corruptiō had bene thē frequented in the Church of God, through the Byshop and courte of Rome. For the more expresse declaration whereof, we thought it not much impertinent here to inferre the wordes of one Martin Meyre, writing to Aeneas Syluius, touching and noting the saide corruptions: the tenour of whose epistle here ensueth.

Vnto the reuerend father, the Lord Aeneas Cardinal of Sene, Martin Meyr, Chancellor to the bishop of Mentz, wisheth health

I Haue vnderstand by certaine of my frends letters, that you are created Cardinall. I am glad for your part, that you haue receiued so worthy rewardes for your vertues. I reioyce also for my owne part, that my frend hath attained vnto such a dignity, wherein he may in time to come, both helpe me and my frends: But this is a grieve vnto me, that you haue hapned vpon those dayes, which seme to be troublesom vnto the Apostolike sea. For there are many complaintes made vnto my Lorde the Archb vpon the Pope, that he wil neither kepe the decrees of the council of Constance, neither of Basil, neither yet thinketh himselfe bounde to the couenants of his predecessours, and seemeth vtterly to contemne our nation, and to seeke the vtter ruine thereof. For it is euident that the election of Prelates, is euery where reiected: benefices & dignities, of what sorte soeuer they be, are reserued for the Cardinals and chiefe notaries: and you your self haue obtained the reseruatiō of 3. Prouinces of Germany, vnder suche a forme as hath not ben accustomed, or heard of. Vowsons or giftes of benefices are graunted without number: yerely stipends and half the reuenues are exacted without delay, and it is euident that there is more extorted then is due. The regiment of churches are not committed vnto such as best deserue them, but vnto such as offer most mony for them, and new pardons are graunted out daily to scrape and gather together monye. Tithes are commaunded to be exacted without the consent of our Prelates, for the Turkish warre, and those matters which were accustomed to be debated and determind at home, are now caried vnto the Apostolike sea of Rome. A thousand waies are inuented and deuised, how the sea of Rome may by subtlety and by craft,* extort and gette golde and treasure from vs, euen as it were of the Turkes or Barbarians; whereby our nation, which was sometime famous and valiant, which by their power and bloud, conquered the Romaine Empire, and was once the Lady and Queene of all the world, nowe being brought vnto pouerty, is made a handmaid, & become tributary, & being nowe in extreme misery, hath of long time bewailed her cruell fortune and pouerty. But now our nobles being (as it were) wakened out of their slepe, haue begon to consider and deuise with themselues, by what meanes they might withstand this calamity, and vtterly shake of this yoke and bondage, and haue determind with them'selues to challenge againe their former liberty. This wil be no smal losse vnto the court of Rome, if the Princes of Germany bring to passe that which they haue deuised. Wherefore as much as I do reioyce of your late obtained dignity, so much also am I mooued & greued that these things happen in your daies. But peraduenture Gods determination is otherwise, & his wil shal surely take place. You in the meane time be of good chere, and deuise according to your wisdom, by what meanes the vehemencie of these floudes may be staied. Thus fare ye well.

From Hasthaffenberge, the last day of August.

Concerning the authoritie of this generall councell of Basill, what is to be esteemed by the Actes & fruites therof may be vnderstand of all good men. Neither was it of any man doubted in the first beginning, so long as the Pope agreed and consented vnto it, But after the Pope began to draw backe, many other followed, especially of the richer sort of Prelates, which had any thing to lose: whereof sufficiently hath bene sayde by Arelatensis the Cardinall before. In the number of those vnconstant Prelates, besides many other, was firste Cardinall Iulian, the firste collector of this councell, and Uicegerent of the Pope, as by hys feruent and vehement letter written to pope Eugenius in defence of this council, may well appeare: Wherin he most earnestly doth expostulate with the foresaide Pope Eugenius, for seeking to dissolue the Councell, and declareth in the same many causes, why he shoulde rather reioyce, and geue God thanks, for the godly proceedings, and ioyfull agrement betwene the councell and the Bohemians, and so exhorteth him w^t manifolde persuasions, to resort to the council him selfe, & not to seeke the dissolution of the same. The copie & tenor of whose Epistle to the Pope, if any be disposed to peruse the same, we thought heere good to sette downe to be seene.

The copie of an Epistle, which Iulian Cardinall of S. Angen, and the Popes ambassadour into Germanie, wrote marueilous boldly and frely vnto Eugenius B. of Rome, for that he went about to dissolue the coūcel of Basil.

Most blessed father, after the deuout kisses of your blessed fete.

NOw shall the whole worlde vnderstande and know, whether that your holines haue in you the bowels of fatherly loue & charity, and the zeale of the house of God, whether you be sent to make peace or discord, to congregate or disperse, or whether you be that good shepheard, which geueth hys life for his sheepe. Beholde the doore beginneth now to be opened, whereby the lost sheepe may returne againe vnto their owne folde, nowe is there good hope euen at hand, of the reconciliation of the Bohemians. If that your holinesse as it is your duety do helpe and further the same, you shall obtaine greate glory, bothe in heauen and earthe. But if peraduenture, you goe about to lette the same (whiche is not to be hoped for at your handes) all menne will reprocue you of impietie. Heauen and earth will conspire againste you, Page 698 all men will forsake you. For how is he to be folowed, wich wyth one worde may restore peace and quietnes to the church, and refuseth to do it? But I cōceiue a better hope in you, how that your holines without any excuse, wil with your whole hart & mind, fauor this most sacred coūcel, & giue thanks vnto almighty God, this great goodnesse that this congregatiou hath not departed. Behold the ambassadors of this sacred councell are returned with great ioy and gladnes from Egra, reporting how that thorow the grace of the holy Ghost, they haue firmly concluded with the ambassadors of the Bohemians, that is to say of the Prages, Orphants and Thaborites, amongs whome was also present the captaines of their ennemies, and specially Procopius. That a solempne ambassade of all the states of the realme should come vnto the councell of Basill. After that a safe conduite is sent vnto them by the sayde council in fourme conditioned, which shall be done with speede, This sacred congregation is marue•lously exhilerate and ioyfull. For those our ambassadors affirme, that all things were handled with such charitie at Egra, & that they did see such things amōgs the Bohemians, that not without cause, they doe conceiue great hope of their reconciliation.

And at the last gently imbrasing one another, euē with teares of gladnesse, they departed from Egra. The Bohemians requiring our ambassadors, that the matter might be ended wyth all expedition. They reporte also that manie thinges happened in that Treatie, whyche if any manne hearde, and didde not weepe for ioy, he might well thinke him self to be but smally affectioned vnto Christ. As for 3 of the 4. articles, they seeme not to make any great difficulty vpon. As touching the 4. that is of the communion vnder both kindes, there is good hope that they wil followe the iudgement of the councel. Who is it then that dare counsell your holines to perseuere any lōger in the purpose of dissolution, for if the councell had not ben appoynted at all, for so great hope and necessity: it ought to haue ben appoynted in this place How worthy prase and commendation should your holines doe, if that you woulde leaue Italy and all other affaires, and come hether in your owne person. Although you shoulde neede to be caried in a wagon or litter. The keping & defence of the temporal patrimony of the church, may well be disposed and done by legates and vicares. This is the true patrimonie of the church to winne soules.* For the church is not a heap of stones and walles. Christ hath not made you a keeper of castles & fortes, but a pastor of soules. Therefore you shuld do that in your owne person, which is most necessary and acceptable vnto Christ, and al other things be your substitutes. For so did the Apostles, which to the intēt they might the more frely intend to the preaching of the word of God, did institute 7. to serue the tables, and for the ministration of other inferior things. I heare that by the grace of God, your holinesse doth daily recouer and amend, &• if •o be, as it is said, you do visit some churches on fore, ye may also come hether on horsebacke, for you can not go vnto any thing more profitable or cōcordant to your office, then to go vnto that place, whereas innumerable benefits and goodnes may spring. Let your holines vnderstand and consider wherein Christ whose vicar you are, and S. Peter whose successor you are, and the apostles and holy bishops, did exercise & occupy themselues, and as you do succede them in office, so succede them in maners. But if per aduenture your holines can not come hither, I doe counsell you that for so great a benefite, you would send the more part of the reuerend Lords Cardinals of the court of Rome, and command al other prelates to come hether, doe not let or hinder them that are willing to come, as it is reported you do, but rather allure them to come hither.

Your holines may beleue me, that only charity mooueth me to counsell you in this sort, be ye not separte from your members, nourish your children as the henne doeth her chickens vnder her wings. And if so be, that you will doe nothing els, yet speake this only word, Placet. That is to say, that it pleaseth you, that the coūcel of Basil shuld go forward. For a few daies past, there came newes hither, for the which your holines ought alltogether to cease from your dissolution. The reuerend father the Archb. of Lyons, hath wrytten vnto the councell,* and vnto me also, howe that the Prelates of France, haue assembled together in the city of Beturia, and there after long and exacte examination haue concluded that the council is lawfully cōgregate in this place. And that it is necessary, that it shuld be holden and celebrate here at this present, and how the Prelates of France shuld come vnto it, he also directed hither the cause which moued them so to conclude, the cōpye whereof I suppose is sent vnto your holinesse by some other. Wherupon then doth your holines stay? You haue gone about as much as in you lay, by your messengers, letters & diners meanes to draw backe the Prelates, and haue laboured with al your endeuer to dissolue the councell, yet notwithstanding as you do see, it is increased day by day. And the more it is forbidden, the more is all mens minds inflamed to the contrary, is not this then to resist the wil of God? Why do ye prouoke the church to anger? Why do ye stirre vp the Christian people? vouch safe I pray you so to doe, that ye may g^t the loue and fauor of the people & not the hatred for all nations are greatly offended when they heare: these your doings. Suffer not your holines to be seduced by any man, whych peradventure shall inculcate feare vnto you, whereas there is nothing at all to be doubted, or that doe perswade you this to be no lawful council I know I shuld offend your holines if I shuld go about to proue the contrary, but it is better that I do offend you a litle in words, and profit you in my deedes, for a Phisition layeth a burning corrisiue vnto the disease, and healeth the sore. For the medicine can not profit, except it be sharpe and bitter in tast. Vnder this hope and confidence I will not feare to declare the truth. That it being knowen, your holines may the better prouide both for your selfe and the church it dependeth vppon the councell of Constance whether this councell be lawfull or not. If that were a true council, so is this also. No man semeth to dout whether that council were lawfull, and likewise whatsoeuer was there decreed to be lawful, for if any man will say, that the decrees of that council are not of force, he must nedes graunt, that the depriuation of Pope Iohn which was done by the force of those decrees to be of no effect. If that depriuation were not of effecte. Neither was the election of Pope Martine of any force, which was done he being yet aliue. If Martin were no true Pope, neither is your holinesse, which was chosen by the Cardinales that hee made,* wherefore, it standeth no man more vpon to defend the decrees of that coucel, then your holines, for if any decree of that council be called into doubt: By like meanes may all the rest of the decrees be reuoked. And by like meanes, shall the decrees of any other councell be of no force and effect, for by like reason, as the faith of one councell is weakened, all the rest shal also be weakned, according to S. Augustins saying in the 9. distinction capitulo. Si ad scripturas, Then sayeth he, both the faithe and all other sacraments shall be put in doubt, if that there be once any doubt made, of the force and power of any councell lawfully cōgregate. There was a decree made in the council of Constance, intituled frequens. Whereby it was ordained, that the first council after that, should be holden within 5. yeres, and another within 7. yeres after that again. The council of Constance being ended, and the 5. yeres passed, the council of Papia or Sene was holden, after which 7. yeares being also run ouer, this councell is begon to be celebrate. To what ende then is it expressed in the Bull of the dissolution, amongst other causes, that the 7. yeare is already past. When as of necessitye it ought to be passed before the councell can be celebrate. For these wordes, from 7. yere or 5. yere, signify according to the law, that all partes of time should be passed, and the last day looked for. Wherefore it behoued that 7. yeres to be fully complete, before this council of Basil should begin.

Like as 5. yeares was fully expired, before that the councell of Papia did begin, but peraduenture some man will say, that it ought to haue begun the first day after the 7. yere was expired. For otherwise the terme of the councell is passed. But heereunto we may answer that it is not contained in the chapter Frequens, that except it were holden the first day, it should not be holden at al, neither can it be gathered either by the wordes or meaning. For it is only required that it should be holden after 7. yeares expired, but whether it be the 2. or 3. day, or the 3. or 4. moneth after the 7. yere it doth satisfy the chapter Frequens. For whē the first day is come then beginneth the power and liberty to celebrate the councell, but not afore, but it is not prohibited to celebrate it after, neither doth this word, In quinquennium. That is to say against 5. yeare, next following, which is alleaged in the chapter Frequens, and semeth to be repeated. Also for the 7.

yere, for it is not vnderstād that it is necessary to be holden the first day precisely after the 7. yere, but because it should not be vnderstand of other 7 yeares to come. For in speaking simply of 7. yere, it is vnderstand of 7. yeare next ensuing. Admit also that in the chapter Frequēs, any of these wordes had bene ioyned with immediatly following, as by & by, out of hād, immediatly, or straightwaies after, or such other words yet ought they to be vnderstand with a certaine moderation, and distance of time, that assone as might be cōuenient, as these wordes are expounded by the lawes and the doctors, for they are enlarged and restrained according, to the subiect and diuers circūstaunces of the matters and affaires. For it is not by any meanes likely that it was the mindes of those which made the decree, that considering the long iourneis and harde preparation of suche affaires, and also the manifolde impedimentes which may happen, that they woulde restraine so precise a time, euen at the first daye, that if it were not then celebrated, it should not be holden at all, for by such subtyll meanes, it shuld also be holden euen in the first moment and very instant after the same yere.

But forsomuch as wordes are ciuilly to be vnderstand, this fence or vnderstanding is to farre disagreeable. For if any man will say, then it is commaunded to be proroged, that is also forbidden in the chapter frequēs. He that doth so argue, doth not vnderstād himselfe, nor the force of the woordes. It is not proroged if it be begon, the 2. or 3. month, but rather a continuation or execution of that which is in their power. For if it were a prorogation, then for so muche as a proration doth sauour of the nature of the firste delay, it could not be begon in the first month, but in the 2. and 3. it is not therby concluded that it could not be begon in the first, Page 699 but if there had ben any prorogation made til the secōd month, then it coulde not haue bene begon in the first, as for example I promise to geue a hundred after Easter, afore Easter it can not be required, but by and by after Easter it may be required, and all be it that I be not vrged for it notwithstanding I doe not cease to be bounde, and if so be I bedemanded it in the 2. or 3. month after, it is not therby vnderstand that ther is any prorogation made: Neither doth it followe, but that it might haue bene demaunded in the beginning which could not haue ben done, that there had ben any prorogation made. Also it is nature of prorogation to bee made before the first terme or day be passed. For otherwise it is no prorogation, but anew appoyntment. And albeit it may be saide, that then it may be long delaide, it is aunswered that in thys poynt, we must stande vnto the iudgement of the Church, which considering diuers circumstances wold think the time mete. For the liberty of celebrating of councels was institute for the profit and fauor of the church. What if it shuld happen that whē the time commeth, in the place where a councell should be kept, there be a great plague, or some siege, which shuld continue by the space of 3. or 4. moneths, and the Pope in the mean time doth not chaunge the place according to the forme of the Chapter frequens, & that thorow such impediments, the prelates did not come the first day vnto the place, or if any were comming & were taken by the way which if they had not ben taken, had ben prese•t at the first day in the place appoynted. Is it to be said that the power of the coucel is past? or that the impediment ceasing, & the prelates cōming thither, the councell can not be holden? that truely were greatly absurd & to much preiudiciall to the church of God, but in this our case, the cause is probable why that the prelats did defer to come at the beginning of the time appoynted.* For so much as when the time drew neare, Pope Martin died the 20. of February. For which cause, the prelates might wel dout vpon some impediment of the councell. Also they taried loking that some shuld come thether in the name of the Pope, because they wold not tary in that place in vaine without a president.* As for the legate which was appoynted for the council, whose presence al men taried for, before he wold prepare him selfe to that iourney, he came not at the time apoynted vnto the councell, but went vnto Norrenberge, to persecute the Bohemians according to the cōmandement of Pope Martin, which had enioyned him to go first thither before he wēt to Basil.

And the same Legate, being oftētimes required at Norenberg, that he shuld go to Basil to hold the councell, he answered, that he wold not go before he had the cōsent of the new bishop. This was the cause of the prelates delay, neither is it greatly to be imputed vnto the prelates, which suspected that Pope Martin woulde not haue holden the councell, & feared to bring thēselues in trouble, and good cause had they so to feare, thorowe those things which hapned in the council of Sene. For there were many things spoken which caused great suspition. It was reported vnto me that many had said, I came vnto Germany to disturbe the councell.

Also this was Pope Martins minde and intent, that all beit the council was not begon at the beginning of March, notwithstanding the authority of holding the council should not be void. For he, when as the time of the councell approached, willed me that I shuld first go vnto Boheme, before I went vnto the coūcel, wherof also mention is made in the Bull of the consistorie dissolution.

But what nede we any other profe, then by your holinesse letters, which by your letters dated the 2 Kalendes of Iune, and were deliuered vnto me lōg after the time, by the space of 3. moneths, you do commaund me that my businesse being done in Boheme, I shuld take my way vnto Basil to hold the council, & there to forsee vnto all things as it was enioyned me, & ordained in the coūcel of Constance. The same also ye repeat in the Bul of the dissolution brought vnto me by the Lord Parentine, the wordes wherof are these. Vnto you circūspection. Since your going into Germany no Prelates haue assembled in Basill for the celebrating of the council, we gaue you in cōmandement that in the meantime you shuld be diligent, about the expedition against the Bohemian heretickes which is committed to your charge, & afterward you should come vnto Basil the place appoynted for the councell, and there to rule in our place in the name of the church. What is more euident then this? If any thing were doutful by the tenure of these letters it were euidently takē away, if any man wold say that neither Pope Martine nor Eugenius could confirme the council by wryting of suche letters, because there was a prorogation which is prohibited by the chapter frequens it is answered, that there is no prorogation, but execution of that which is in power, or a declaration that it is not necessary to hold the council precisely euē at the beginning. Also it is no prorogation. For a prorogation is made before the terme is expired and not after, for after, it is rather called an new indiction or appoyntment. And if any mā will say that there cā be no new indiction made, then may this be obiected. Howe could the council of Bononia be newly appoynted? If they wil answer, that the appoyntment of the coūcell of Bononia was of force, because the councell of Basill was dissolued by your holines, then I haue my intent. For if it were dissolued. Ergo, it was a coūcel before, bicause it presupposeth the habit. If it were a councell before, then, as hereafter shalbe proued, it could not be dissolued without the consent of the councell, what can be more answered heereunto? for the greater declaration and euidence of this matter, the Abbot of Virgilia euen vpon the same day of the time appoynted or afore, gathering together the Prelates of the great church and many other prelates and notable men, made a solemne protestation, howe the time was come to celebrate and hold the council, & that he was come vnto Basil for the same purpose, requiring them that they wold

Within a month after the ambassadors of the vniuersity of Paris came thither, & began to intreat of maters touching the coūcel, wryting also vnto the Emperour, and to the other Princes of Germany, that they should send vnto the councel, which letters I my self did see, neither doth the smal number of men let, for wher as aucthority is, a great number is not required, according to the saying of Christ, wheras 2. or 3. are gathered together in my name, I am in the midst of them. Vpon the which aucturity, the coūcels are grounded. Now therefore your holines doth manifestly see, the said obiection to be but friuolous. For to what end shuld any dissolution be made if it had not ben a councel: wherfore it is not to be doubted, but that it was a lawful councel, & canonically congregate. And peraduenture it is scarsly• found where any councel hath ben confirmed by so many authorities as this, that is to say, by the two councels before passed, of Constance and of Sene, and confirmed by two Bishops of Rome.

Besides this, I haue heard that some doe report at Rome that I could not call the Prelates vnto the councell, because that clause was not added in the Bul of Pope Martine. I greatly meruaile why this shuld be objected, specially seeing that, not I alone, haue called them, but I to gether with the rest, which are here assembled in the coucel. It is a maruelous matter, Pope Martin gaue me authority by the aduice of the councel to rote out heresies, to pacifie kingdoms, to reforme the maners of euery state of christendome, & yet they wil say that I can not cite them. Power is geuen me to iudge & to condemne, and haue I not also power to cite? The law doth say, vnto whom any power or iurisdiction is committed, all things seme to be committed vnto him, without the which he cā not exercise his iurisdiction, for howe coulde all the premisses be done, if the Prelates or others shuld not come hither? Also why is it said in the chapter, Ego enim de iure iurando? I will come vnto the Sinode if I be called, if he can not be called: By whome then is it presupposed that he shuld be called but only by the councel, or by him which ruleth the councell? Also the whole 18. distinction intreateth of no other matter, but that the bishops being called vnto the councel, if they come not, that they may be excommunicate and suspended. Let these men read the boke of councils of S. Isidore, and they shall finde howe that in many councelles the Prelates haue bene called by the Sinode. Nowe it remaineth, that we shuld declare, whether the dissolutiō be of force or no. Wherin I do againe feare to moue your holines vnto anger. But charity forceth me therunto, for peraduenture, your holines doth thinke the dissolution to be effectual, & therefore do perseuer in it, wherby, for somuche as many offences may rise, my conscience doeth moue me, not to hold my peace. First of all the chapter: Frequens, declareth that it is not of force, for if prorogation be forbidden & prohibited, which is a smal mater, much more is dissolutiō, which is a greater matter, for it is a greater matter to take away then to defer, for by proroging, a thing is but deferred, & by dissoluing it is vtterly taken away. Also these men say, that the said cōstitution in the chapter Frequens, may be made void, for somuch, assone as the councel is begon, it may be dissolved without any thing don, as it is said that it was done at Senes, and nowe they say also that your holines hath ben peruersly informed touching the dissolution. They say also that the sayd dissolution doth manifestly tend to the subuersion of faith, the ruine of the church, and the trouble of the christian people. Therefore it can not be done, neither obeid.

They say moreouer that the said dissolutiō could not be made, by meanes of a certen decree of the council of Constance in that behalfe prouided. That in such matters as pertaine vnto faith, the extirpation of sinne, and reformation of the church in the head & in the members, that all men of what estate or condition so euer they be, yea the Pope himself shuld be bound to obey the statutes, precepts, and ordināces of euery general councell, & except they did obey to punish them. Marke how that these things to haue power to determine vpon any man, to commaund him and punish him, if he be not obedient, are signes of superioritye, in those matters which he doth decree, command or punish, and to be bound to obedience, to be subiect and obey the same, are signes of inferiority in the said cases. Ergo, in the foresaid cases, seeing that the Pope as they say, is vnder the coūcel, which also hath ben. In that for one of the said 3. cases the council did depriue Iohn, & for the other Benedict, neither could the Pope dissolue the councell, in that he is inferior vnto the council, cannot bind or cōpel the superior. As in the chapter Cum inferior, otherwise it shoulde containe in it a contradiction, that hee is bounde to obey, and is not Page 700 bound to obey, because he may dissolue, for howe should he be obedient vnto the ordinance and decree of the councell, if he may anihilate and take away the same ordinaunce and decree. Thys councell is cōgregate for the rooting out of heresies, for the making of peace and reformation of maners, and in the first Session it did ordeine, that their whole intent and respect should be thereunto, and that he which should procure to let the coūcel, to proroge or alter it, should be punished and haue processe against him as against a common disturber of the peace. &c. If it may be dissolved it is euident that they doe not obey the saide ordinaunce, whereby this also must of necessity be graunted, that if it may be dissolved, the decree of the councell of Constance is of no force.

This is also proued by an other reason. No man doubteth but if any controuersie of heresie shoulde be mooued against any Bishop of Rome, that he could not dissolue the Councell: For if he might dissolue the councell he could not be iudged, whych were cōtrary to the cha. Si Pa. dist. 40. Ergo, like as it is inheresy, so is it in the two other cases. For these three were pacified by the coūcel of Cōstance, for thus speaketh the council. As it is in the Chapter, Si Papa in illo vno. And as I haue before saide, the Councell of Constance, allowed this decree, thorow the which they depriued Peter de Luna, for making of a Schisme, and Pope Iohn for the deformitie of his life.

And all be it there be certaine lawes that say, the principall seat can not be iudged of any man, and againe, no man iudgeth the chiefe seate. And no man sayth vnto him selfe why doest thou so. There are to be vnderstande in these three cases, first that there was prouiso made for the faith in the chapter Si Papa, and in the other two poynts by the decree of Constance. Otherwise it shuld be vnderstande, without any exception, that the first seate. &c. and then the chapter Si Papa. 40. Distinct. and the sayd decree of Constance shoulde be false. If the chapter Si Papa had added causes of heresies, no man would haue doubted vpon these two cases, touching the sayd sentence, so likewise no man ought to doubt of the decree of the councell, that it was made by the authoritie of the Pope, and representeth the vniuersal church, and if any man wold say, that in all councils the authoritye of the Pope is excepted, I aunswere that it is true, when as the persone of the Pope is not specially included. But if hee be specially included, he can not be excepted, because it should sauour of contradiction. Most blessed father, God is my witnesse, that I haue spoken these thinges wyth great anguish and sorowe of minde, but I am forced so to speake, that your holinesse may cease from the saide dissolution, lest there might happen infinite euels in the church of God. If your holines did see my pure mind, my vpright conscience, and entier affection towards you, whereby I am mooued to wryte those thinges, euen for very loue you would embrace and kisse me, and wythout doubt loue me as your owne sonne, I haue often sayde and nowe doe say and protest before God and mā, that you wil be the cause of Schisme and infinite mischieues▪ if you doe not alter & change your minde and purpose. Almighty God preserue your holinesse in the prosperity of a vertuous man. Vnto whose feete, I do moste humbly recommend me.

From Basil the 5. day of Iune.

Thus endeth the Epistle of Cardinal Iulian wrytten vnto Pope Eugenius. Wherein for so much as mention is made, howe that the Bohemians had promised to sende their Ambassadors vnto the Councell, and as before is partly touched in the Bohemian storie, their commyng into Basill, and propounding of certaine articles, wherein they dissented frō the Pope, we doe not thinke it any thing differing from our purpose, to annexe a brieft Epitome, declaring the whole circumstance of their Ambassade, their articles, disputations and answeres, which they had at the sayd councell of Basil, with their petitions and answeres vnto the same. Faithfully translated out of Latin by F.W.

In like maner Aeneas Syluius also with his owne hand and wryting, not onely gaue testimony to the authoritie of thys councell, but also bestowed his labour and trauaile in setting forth the whole storie thereof. Notwythstanding, the same Syluius afterward being made Pope, wyth hys new honour, did alter and change his olde sentence, the Epistle of which Aeneas, touching the commendation of the sayde Councel, because it is but short, and will occupy but litle rume, I thought heere vnder, for the more satisfying of the readers minde, to inserte.

*TO a Christian man, whiche will be a true Christian in deede, nothing ought to be more desired, then that the sinceritie and purenes of faith, geuen to vs of Christ by our forefathers, be kept of all men immaculate: and if at any time, any thing be wrought or attempted against the true doctrine of the Gospell, the people ought with one consent, to prouide lawfull remedy, & euery man to bring with him some water to quench the general fire: Neither must we feare how we be hated or enuied, so we bring the truth. Wee must resist euery mā to his face, whether he be Paul or Peter, if he walke not directly to the truth of the Gospell, which thing I am gladde, and so are we all, to heare that your Vniuersitie hath done in this Councell of Basill. For a certaine treatise of yours is brought hether vnto vs, wherein you reprehend the rudenesse, or rather the rashnesse of such, which do deny the Bishop of Rome, and the Consistorie of his iudgement, to be subiecte vnto the generall Councell,*and that the supream tribunall seate of iudgement, standeth in the Church, and in no one Bishop. Such men as deny this, you so confound with liuely reasons and trueth of the Scriptures, that neither they are able to slide away like the slippery Eeles, neither to cauill or bring any obiection againste you. These be the wordes of Siluius.

Furthermore,* as touching the authority and approbation of the foresayd Councell, this is to be noted, that during the life of Sigismund the Emperour, no man resisted this Councell. Also continuing the time of Charles the 7. the French king, the said Councell of Basill was fully & wholly receiued through all France. But after the death of Sigismund, when Eugenius was deposed, and Felix Duke of Sauoy, was elected Pope, greate discordes arose, and much practise was wrought. But especially on Eugenius part, who being nowe excommunicate by the Councell of Basill, to make his part more strong, made 18. new Cardinals. Thē he sent his Orators vnto y^e Germanes, labouring by all perswasions to dissolue the councell of Basill, the Germanes at that time were so deuided, that some of them did hold with Felix, and the Councell of Basill: other some,* with Eugenius and the Councell of Ferrara: and some were neuters. After this the French king being dead, which was Charles the 7. about the yeare of oure Lorde 1444. the Pope beginneth a newe practise, after the olde guise of Rome,* to excite (as is supposed) the Dolphine of Fraunce, by force of armes, to dissipate that Councell collected against him. Who leading an army of xb. M. men in to Alsatia, did cruelty waste and spoyle the countrey: after that, laide siege vnto Basill to expel & driue out the prelates of the Councell. But the Heluetians most stoutly meeting their enemies w^t a small power, did vanquish the Frenchmen, and put them to sword and flight: like as the Lacedemonians onely with C C C. did suppress, and scattered all the mighty army of Xerxes, at Thermopylae.

Although Basill thus by the valiantnes of the Heluetians was defended, yet notwithstanding the Councell thorough these tumultes,* could not continue by reason of the princes Ambassadors, which shronke away, and would not tary: So that at length Eugenius brought to passe, partly through the help of Fredericke (being not yet Emperour, but laboring for the Empire, partly by his Orators) in the number of whome was Eneas Syluius, aboue mentioned (amongst the Germans) y^t they were content to geue ouer both the councell of Basill and their neutrality.

This Fridericke of Austrich being not yet Emperour,* but towards the Empire, brought also to passe, that Felix, which was chosen of the Councell of Basill, to be Pope, was contented to renoūce and resigne his Papacie to Nicolaus, the fift, successour to Eugenius, of the which Nicolaus, the sayde Fredericke was confirmed at Rome to be Emperour, and there crowned. An. 1451.

As these things were doing at Basill, in the meane season, pope Eugenius brought to passe in his conuocation at Florence,* that the Emperour, and the Patriarke of Constantinople, wyth the rest of the Grecians there present, were perswaded to receiue the sentence of the Church of Rome, concerning the proceeding of the holy Ghost: also to receiue the communion in vnleavened bread, to admitte Purgatorie, and to yeelde them selues to the authoritye of the Romish Bishop. Whereunto notwithstanding, the other Churches of Grecia would in no wise assent,* at theyr comming home: In so much, that with a publike execration they did condemn afterward al those Legates, which had consented to these Articles, that none of them shoulde be buried in Christen buriall: whych was Anno. 1439. Ex• Casp. Peucer.

And thus endeth the storie, both of the Councell of Basill, and of the councell of Florence,* also of the Emperour Sigismund, and of the schisme betwene pope Eugenius, and Pope Felix, and also of y^e Bohemians. The which Bohemians notwythstanding all these troubles and tumultes, aboue said, did rightwel, and were strong enough against all their enemies, till at length, through discord, partly betwene the 2. preachers of the old and newe cite of Prage, partly also through y^e discord of the messengers & captains, taking sides one against the other, they made their eunemies Page 701 strong and enfebled themselues. Albeit afterward, in processe of time, they so defended the cause of their religion, not by sworde, but by argument and disputation, that the Bishop of Rome could neuer yet to this day, remooue the Thaborites, and Citie of Prage, from the communion of both the kindes, nor could euer cause them to keepe the conditions, which in the beginning of the Councell, was enioyned their priests to obserue, as testifieth Cochleus. lib. 8. hist. Huss.* With whom also recordeth Antoninus, who in 3 part. hist. saith, that the doctrine of the Bohemians, which he termeth by the name of Zizania, did take so deepe roote wyth them, and grewe so fast, that afterwarde, neyther by fire nor sword,* it could be extinct. An. 3. part. hist. tit. 22. cap. 10

Concerning the which Bohemians, briefly & in a generall summe, to recapitulate their whole actes & doings, here is to be noted, that they in their owne defence, & in the quarel of Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, prouoked by their catholike aduersaries to warre, fighting vnder Zisca their Captaine, had eleuen batailles with the Popes side, and euer went away victours.Ex paral. Abb. Vrsp. in Epitaphio, Ioan. Zisc. Moreouer, in the history of Peucer it is testified that pope Martin 5. sending for the B. of Wint. then Cardinal, had leuiued 3. maine armies, intending to ouerrunne al the Bohemians: one army of the Saxons, vnder the prince Elector, the seconde of the Francones, vnder the Marques of Brandeburge, the thirde of Renates, Bauarians and Suechers, vnder Octo archb. of Treuers. With these, Sigismund also the Emperor, and Cardinal Iulian the popes Legate (who at last was slain in war, and being spoiled of all his attire, was left naked in the field) ioyned al their force. Who ioyning together 5. times (sayth the story) which 5. sondry batailles, assailed and inuaded the Bohemians: at euery which battail, 5. times the sayd aduersaries stroken and daunted with a sodain feare, ranne away out of the field, leauing their tents w^e all their implements and furniture behind them, before any stroke was geuen. Ex Casp. Peuc. lib. 5.* Whereby it may appeare, the holy aungels of God to fight for them which embraced the syncere doctrine of Christes gossell.

Thus the Bohemians through the mighty protection of almighty God, cōtinued a long time inuincible, during all y^e life of Zisca, & also of Procopius, til at length through discord growing betwene them & theyr captains Procopius & Mainardus, they were subdued vnto their enemies.

*And heere by the way is not to be omitted the wicked and cruel facte of Mainardus, who after the death of Procopius, thinking to purge the realme of Boheme of those chiefe and principal soldiours, which had bene long expert and trained vp in warres, found meanes by a proclamation made, as though he woulde warre against other countreis of their eunemies bordering about them, craftily to traine all them which were disposed to take wages, into certaine barnes or houels, prepared for the same purpose, and so shutting the dores vppon them, the wicked dissembler set fire vpon them, & brent of them diuers thousands, and so brought the rest by that meanes, vnder subiECTION to the Emperor during his lyfe time, which after that continued not long.*Ex Aene. Syl. The which soldiours, if they had fought so much for the catholike liberties of the Pope and his church, as they had fought against him, it is martyrs. But they that kill with the sword (sayeth Christ) shall perish with the sword. Notwithstanding, the cruell deceit of Mainardus, is worthy of all men to be detested.

During this businesse among the bishops beyonde the sea in the meane time our bishops here also in Englande, were not vnoccupied. Whether it be y^e nature of the countrey that so geueth: or whether y^e great liuings and welthy promotions of the clergy, do draw w^e them a more insensible vnto wardnesse in Gods religion, hard it is to say: this is manifest to all them which will read and marke our stories from time to time, that in Englande is more burning and slaying for Religion and for all other matters: more bloudshed among vs then in any other lande or nation in Christendome besides. After the burning of Rich. Houeden, of Nicho. Canon, and of Thom. Bagley priest, aboue recorded, pag. 666. Whom the bishops condemned to death An. 1431. not long after, about the yere of our Lorde 1439. which was the 18. of the raign of king Henr 6. they had an'other poore man by the backe,* named Riche Wicke Priest, mentioned both in Rob. Fabian and also in another olde english chronicle borrowed of one Perminger.* What his opinions were, they do not expresse, This they recorde, that this Rich, wich first was degraded then burned at the tower hil for heresy. Some do a arm that he before his death reuolted, but that seemeth by his burning, not to be !!!.

which also afterward came as he said to passe, wherfore of many of the people he was counted for an holy man:* In so much that (as it is affirmed) they came to y^e place where he was burnt, and there made their oblations and prayers, and areired a great heap of stones, and set vp a crosse there by night: so that by this meanes a great clamor ran vppon the Churchmen, and especially vppon suche as put hym to death. Then to cease the rumor, the king gaue commandement to punish such, as went thether on pilgrimage. The copy wherof is here to be sene as foloweth.

Rex vicecomitibus London. & Midd. salutem. Albeit Richard Wyche late clearke, who heretofore long sithence heretically did hold, teach, & publikely preache certaine heresies and erroneous opinions in many places within our realme of England. And for the same many yeares nowe past being iudicially conuicted, did before a iudge in that behalfe sufficient abiure all heresy generally, and afterward as a dogge returning to his vomit, did presume to maintain, teach, & publikely preach his former errors and heresies, so that hee was worthely adiudged a Relapse. And againe being impeached for the same before the reuerend father in God Robert B of London his lawfull Ordinarie was called foorth to iudgement, and being before him, did iudicially confesse hys errors and heresies. For the which cause the saide reuerende father, vppon mature deliberation by hym the sayde Reuerende father first had with the aduise of the learned in the lawe, his assistantes lawfully proceeding against the saide Richard did by his sentēce defintie pronounce and adiudge him to bee a Relapse, and did disgrace him from the order and dignitie of Priesthooode, & tooke from him all priestly ornaments, and deprived him of all priestly function and Priuiledge (according to iustice) and last of all turned him ouer to the secular power as the manner is: And afterwards you, by our Princely commandement and warrant did according to the lawe of oure realme for his last punishment consume the body of the sayd Richard to ashes, being a Relapse conuict, and disgraced as a notorious traitour, not only against God, but also against vs and our crowne and dignity. All which notwithstanding certaine our subiects (as we haue ben sundry times enformed) being pricked foreward with a Diabolical spirite, practising of all likelihode not only sedition, but also Idolatry within our Realme are not afraide publicly to affirme that the sayde Richard was altogether innocent of heretical prauity Nay rather they do moste shaine fully with their vaine deuises, and wickedly conceiued imaginatiōs blase abroad that he was, & died a good, iust and an holy man, and that he doeth many myracles (whereas in deede no suche myracles be done by him.) Which disordinate persones we may well and vpon probable causes repute & deme culpable, not only of heretical prauitie, but also of high treason, and as rebels to our persone, Maiestie, and violatours of the peace and dignity of our Realme, as with all breakers and trespassours against the sacred Canons of the Church, who dare so presumptuously aduenture to worship the said Richard as a Saint, whereas it is not lawfull to worship any manner of person be he neuer so holy before he be canonised by the authority of the B. of Rome. We therefore being very carefull for the good preseruatiō of our peace, and desirous to abolish from out al the coastes of the same al maner Idolatry, do charge & command you that in certain places within your liberties wher you shal think most cōuenient, you cause forthwith proclamatiōs to be made on our behalf, straightly Page 702 charging, that no person from hencefoorth presume to resort to the place where the saide Richarde was executed vnder colour of Pilgrime, or for any other cause of deuotion what so euer, nor send any offering thither, nor worship him hereafter openly or secretly, nor adiudge, esteme, repute, name or talke of him as otherwise iustified or innocent, then such as the said reuerend father by his former definitiue sentence hath pronounced him to be vpon paine and penaltie to be taken and reputed for an hereticke or a fauourer of hereticks, and to receiue condigne punishment prouided for hereticks. And that you arrest all & euery person whom you shall finde to do any thing cōtrary to this our Proclamation, and the same so arested, commit to our prisone, there to remaine vntil we shal thinke good to send countermaund for their deliuerance. Witnes the king at his Manor of Estampstede, the 15. day of Iuly in the 18. yere of his reigne.

Per ipsum Regem.

Like writtes, and to the same effect were directed to al the shrines through all the realme bearing all one and the same Date. By the vertue of which letter, the Maior and sheriffes did such diligence, that shortly after, that cōcourse and seking of the people was left of.

*After the burning of thys man, which was about the moneth of Iune, in the same yere about Nouember, a connocation was called by Henry Archbish. of Cant. wherein was propounded among the clergie, to consult with them selues, what way were best to be taken, for the remoouing a way the law of Premuniri facias, for so were the harts then of the temporalty set against the ecclesiasticall sort, y^t where any vantage might be geuen them by the law, they did nothing spare, by reason whereof, the churchmen at that time were greatly molested by the sayd law of Premuniri, and by the kings writtes, and other inditements, to their no smal anoyance, By long consultation and good aduisement, at last this way was taken, y^t a petition or supplicatiō should be drawn and presented to the king, * for the abolishing of the foresaid lawe of Premuniri facias, and also for the restraining of other briefes, wryts, and inditements, which seemed then to lie heauy vppon the Clergy. This bill or supplication being contriued and exhibited by the Archbish. of Canter, and of Yorke, vnto the king standing in neede the same time, of a subsidie to be collected of the cleargie: thys aunswer was geuen to their supplication on the kings behalfe: that for somuche as the time of Christenmaste then drewe neare, whereby he had as yet no sufficient leisure to aduise vppon the matter, * he woulde take therein a farther pause. In the meane time, as one tendering theyr quiet, he would send to al his officers and ministers w^hin his realm, that no such briefe of Premuniri, shoulde passe against them or any of them, from the saide time of Christenmas, till the next Parliament. An. 1439. Ex Regist. Cant.

In my former edition of Acts & monuments, so hastily rashed vp at that present, in such shortnesse of time, as in the sayde booke thou mayst see (gentle reader) declared and signified: * among many other matters therein contained, there is a shorte note made of one Eleanor Cobham Duchesse of Gloucester, & of Syr Roger Onley knight (priest it should haue ben printed,) which two persons, about the yeare of our Lord. 1440. or the next yeare following, were condemned, the one to death, the other to perpetual prison. Of this litle short matter, maister Cope the Popes Scout, lying in priuie wait to spie faults in al mēs works, wherso euer any may appeare, taketh pepper in the nose, & falleth againe vnto his olde barking against mee, for placing these foresayd persons in my booke of Martyrs, but especially he thinketh to haue great vantage against me, for that in the same story, I do ioyne withal, one Margaret Iourdeman, the witch of Eye, condemned also wyth them the same time, and burned for practising the kings death by an image of waxe, &c. To answeere hereunto, first I say (as I before sayde) that I professe no such title to wryte of Martyrs: but in generall to wryte of rites and Monuments passed in the church and realme of England. Wherein, why should I be restrained from the free walke of a story wryter, more then other that haue gone before me?

Secondly, touching my commendation of Sir Roger Onley, and the Lady Eleanor, if maister Alane be therewith offended, I aunswer that I commended them for sauoring and fauoring of the truth of Christes doctrine: For the fact, if any such were in them, I do not commend them. And although I did commend them, yet neither did I it w^e any long tarying vppon it, nor yet all together vpon mine owne head, without some sufficient warrant of authoritie. For why may not I as well beleue Iohn Bale, as M. Alane beleue M. Fabian? especially seeing I do knowe, and was priuie, that the saide Iohn in recognising his Centuries, followed altogether the history of Leland. De Catalogo virorum illustrium, which booke being borrowed of master Cheke, I my selfe did see in the hands of the foresayd Iohn Bale, what time we were both together, dwelling in the house of the noble Lady Duches of Richmond. Wherefore if he thinke me so leud to speake without mine authors, he is deceiued. And if he thinke mine authors not to be beleueed, then let thys Nomothetes, or iolly Dictator, come foorth and prescribe vs a law, what authors he would haue vs to take, and what to refuse. For els why is it not as free for me to credite Iohn Bale, and Leland, as for him to credite Robert Fabian, and Edw. Hall, especially seeing they had seene hys bookes and workes left behinde him, wherupon they might better iudge, and so did neuer these?

Thirdly, * for the name of Roger Onley, if Cope denie that there was any such name in stories mētioned, but that there was one called Roger Bolingbroke. &c. heereby it may appeare that either his prompter out of England deceiued him, or els that hee going no further but to Fabian and Hall, lacketh no good wil in him, but only a litle matter to make a perfect sycophant. And admit the sayde name of Onley could not be founde in those wryters, yet it were not vnpossible for a man to haue two names, especially if he were a religious man, to beare the name of the towne where he was born, beside his own proper surname. But nowe what if I (M. Cope) can auouch and bring foorth to you the name of Roger Onley out of sufficient recorde, which you seeme not to haue yet read? Haue yee not then done well and properly (thinke you) so bitterly to flee in my face, and to barke so egerly all this while at moneshine in the water, hauing no more cause almoste against me, thē against the man in the Moone? And now least you shoulde thinke me so much vnprovidd of iust authority for my defence, as I see you vnprovidd of modestie and patience, wryte you to your prompter or suborner (where so euer he lurketh here in England) to sende you ouer vnto Louane the booke of Iohn Harding a Chronicler, more auncient then either Fabian or Hall, printed in the house of Richard Grafton, Anno 1543. where turne to the fol. 223. fac. b. lin. 19. and there shall you finde and reade these wordes.

Againe the Church and the king cursedly:

By helpe of one maister Roger Onley. &c.

By the whyche woordes yee must necessarily confesse Roger Onley to be the name of the man, either els must ye needes deny the author. For otherwise that master Roger Bolingbroke was the onely helper to the Duchesse in that fact, by no wise it can stande with the story of these authors which say, that 4. other besides hym were cōdemned for the same erune.* &c. And moreouer thought the sayd Sir R. Onley was no knight (as I haue saide in my former edition) yet this yee cannot deny, by the testimonie of them that haue sene his workes, but that he was a Priest, which you wil graunt to be a knights fellow. And thus much for the name and condition of M. Roger Onley.

Fourthly,* as concerning Margaret Iourdeman, whō ye call the witch of Eye, ye offer me herein great wrong, to say that I make her a martyr, which was a wytche: when as I here professe, confesse, and ascertain both you, and all English men, both present & al posterity hereafter to come, that this Margaret Iourdeman I neuer spake of, neuer thought of, neuer dreamed of, nor did euer heare of, before you named her in your booke your selfe. So farre is it of, that I eyther with my will, or against my will, made any martyr of her.

Furthermore,* I professe and denounce in like manner, y^e neither haue you any iust or congrue occasion in my booke so to iudge, much lesse to raile of me. For where, in expresse words I do speake of the mōther of the Lady Yong, what occasion haue you therby to slander me and my booke with Margarete Iourdeman? which Margarete whether shee was a witche or not, I leaue her to the Lorde. As for me, neither did I knowe of her then, nor did I meane of her now. But because I couple her in the same story, you say. To this I say, because shee was the mother of a Ladie, I thought to ioine her w^e an other Lady in the same story, as in one pue together, although in one cause I will not say. And yet notw^tstanding I doe so couple the saide mother w^e the Duchesse, in such distinet difference of yeares, that you M. Cope might casily haue vnderstande, or beside you, no man els would haue thought the contrary, but that Margaret Iouedeman was neither heere in my booke, nor yet many memento. For the wooordes of my storie are playne, whereas the condemnation of the Lady Eleanor, & of the mother of Lady Young being referred to the yeare of our Lord 1441. I doe also in the same story (through the occasion of that Ladie) inforte mention of the mother of the Ladie Yong declaring in expresse woordes,* that shee folowed Page 703 certayne yeares after, & in the end of that chapter, do name also the yeare of her burning to be. 1490. whiche was 50. yeares after the death of Onely, and Margaret Iourdeman: by the computatiō of which yeares it is playne, that no other woman could be noted in that place, but only the Lady Younges mother.

But M, Cope continuing still in his wrangling mood objecteth agayne, for that in my Callendar, the sayd Ladye Younges mother hath the next day in the Catalogue next after the death of Roger Onley, whiche day pertayneth properly to Margaret Iourdeman which was burned the same day in Smithfield, & not to the Ladyes mother, &c.

What order was taken in placing the names & dayes, what is that to me? If he whiche had the disposing of the Catalogue, did place them so in monthes, as he sawe them ioyned in chapters, not perusing peradventure nor abusing the chapters, that doth nothing preiudice the truth of my story, which sufficiently doth clare it selfe in distincting thē rightly in names & also in yeares, as is afore declared.

*Fiftly and lastly, hauing thus sufficiently aunswered to your circumstanunces of persons, names, and times (M. Cope) I will nowe enter to encounter with you concerning the fact: * and crime objected to the Lady Duches, and to the rest: with this protestation before premised vnto the reader, that if the fact be true and so done is reported in y^e histories of Fabian, Halle and harding, I desire the reader then so to take me, as though I do not here deale withall, nor speake of the matter, but vtterly to haue pretermitted, and dispuncted the same. But for somuch as the deed and offence layd and geuen forth agaynst these parties, may be a matter made, * & of euil wil compacted, rather then true in deede: therefore I doe but onely moue a question by way of history, not as defending, nor commending nor commemorating the thing, if it be true, but onely mouing the question, whether it is to be iudged true, or suspected rather to be false and forged, and so hauing briefly, propounded certayne coniectural suspicious or supposals concerning that matter, to passe it ouer, neither medling on the one side nor on the other.

*The first cōiecture, why it may be possible that this act of treason layd to the charge of the Duches, & Roger Oneley, agaynst the king, may be vntrue is this: that the sayde Oneley (otherwise named Bolingbroke) tooke it vppon hys death, that they neuer intended any such thing as they were condemned for.

*The second coniecture: for that the Lady Eleanor, and Onely seemed then to fauour and fauour of that religion set forth by wicklesse, and therefore like enough, that they were ha•d of the clergy. Furthermore what hatred & practise of Papistes can do, it is not vnknowne.

*The third coniecture: for that the sayd mayster Roger Onely falsly noted and accused of Nicromancie, wrote a booke in purgation of himselfe, intituled: de Innocentia sua. Also an other booke intituled. Contra vulgi superstitiones, recorded in Centu 8. Bale. cap. 4. Whereupon it is not credible, that he which wrote professedly agaynst the superstitions of the people, was ouertaken with that filth of Nicro'mancie himselfe.

*The fourth coniecture: because this accusation against the Duches of Glocester, Duke Humfries wife began not before, but after the grudge kindled betweene the Cardinall of Wint. and Duke Humfrey, her Husband.

*An other coniecture may be hereof, for that, if the Duches had entended any suche haynous treason against the kings life, as by burning of a waxe candle to consume him it is not like (neyther was there anye such neede) that she would haue made so many priuy to such a pernicious coucell, as the Witch of Eye, M. Rog. Bolingbroke, M. Tho. Southwest and Iohn Hume.

*Sixtly, it is not to be supposed, if anye such hie treason had bene wrought or pretended agaynst the kinges person by these that eyther the Duches should so escape with bearing a taper and banishment, or that Iohn Hume shoulde be pardoned hys life, the fact being so haynous, that neyther any durst aske hys pardon, nor if it had bene asked, it had not bene like to be graunted.

*To these we may also adde an other supposall, rising vpon the wordes and forme of theyr accusation, as it standeth in Harding: Polychronicon, and other moe, wherein they were accused for working sorcery, and inchantmentes agaynst the church and the king. Now what sorcery can be wrought agaynst the church, that is, the whole multitude of Christians, let the reader iudge, and by the truth of this consider also the truth of the other, which was agaynst the king. Furthermore, if by this Church is ment the Cardinall of Wint, as like it is: then it may be coniecturall, that all this matter rose of that Cardinall, who was then a mortall enemy to the house of Gloucester. &c.

Eightly:* And that all this was done and wrought by the sayd Cardinall of Wint. the witch concerning Eye maketh the matter the more suspicious, seeing that towne of Eye as Fabian witnesseth, was neare beside Wintchester, and sea of that Byshop.

Moreouer,* for so much as Polydore Virgill, among other story authors, being a mā as may be supposed, rather fauouring the Cardinalls parte then the Dukes, made no mention at all touching this treason, hys licence therof may minister matter not also to muse, but onely to coniecture, that he had found something whiche made hym to mistrust the matter. Otherwise it is vnlike that he wold haue so mewed vp the matter, and passed it ouer without some mention.

Finally and briefly:* The frequent practises and examples of other times, may make this also more doubtfull, cōsidering howe many subtile pretences, after like forte haue bene sought, and wrongfull accusations brought agaynst many innocent persons For (not to repeate the like forgeries agaynst the Lord Cobham and syr Roger Acron. &c.) why may not this accusation of the Duches and Onley, be as false as that in the time of king Edward the 5. whiche was layd to the charge of the Queene, and Shores wife by the Protectours, for inchaunting & bewitching of his withered arme? which to be false, all the world doth know, and but a quarell made, only to oppresse the life of the L. Hastings & y^e L. standley. &c. And thus mayest thou see, gentle reader, according to y^e wise mans saying: Nihil nouū es•e sub sole• Nihil que dictum, quod non sit dictum prius. xc.

Althoughe these w^t many mo coniectures, may be alledged in some part of Defence of this Duches, and of her Chaplaines and Priestes: yet because it may be not vnpossible againe, the matter laide against them, to be true, I leaue it therfore at large as I finde it: saying as I saide before, that if it be true which the stories say in this matter, thinke I beseech thee gentle Reader, that I haue saide nothing hereof. Onely, because the matter may bedisputable, and not vnpossible to be false, I haue but moued thereof a questiō,* and brought my coniectures, leauing the determi, natiō, and iudgement hereof, to thy indifferent and free arbitrement. And if M. Cope, be so highly offended with me, because in my first edition of Actes and Monumentes I durst name

y^e Lady Eleanor Cobham, and Roger Onely: let him take this for a short aūswer, because my leisure serueth not to make long braules w^t him: y^t if I had thought no imperfectiōs to haue passed in my former editiō before, I would neuer haue taken in hand the recognition thereof now y^t secōd time, wherby to sponge away such motes, as I thought would seeme great stombling blockes in suche mens walkes, which walke with no charitie to edefie: but with malice to carpe and reprehend, neither admonishing what they see amisse in others, neither tarying while other men reforme themselues, & finally finding quarels where no great cause is iustly geuen. And here an end with M. Cope for this time.

Forsomuch as in the processe before,* mentiō was touched concerning the grudge betweene y^e Cardinall, cal•ed the rich Cardinal of Wintchester, and the good duke Humfrey duke of Glocester, the kings vncle, and protector of y^t realme: order of story now requireth to open some parte of y^t matter more at large. Wherein this first is to be vnderstand, that long before,* great flames of grudge and discorde did burst out betweene these two. For as the noble hart of the Duke could not abide the proud doinges of the Cardinall: so much againe the Cardinall in like maner sore enuied & disdayned at the rule of the Duke of Glocester. Notwithstanding by the meanes of the Duke of Bedford, the brasting out betweene them was before appealed & cured: yet not so, but that vnder imperfect amitie, priuy hatred, as sparckes vnder the imbers, did still remaine: So that the Cardinal, ioyning with the Archbishop of Yorke, attempted many thinges of their owne presumption, contrary to the consent, not onely of the king (being then vnder age) but also of the protectour & gouernor of the realme. Wherwith the Duke (like a true harted prince) being not without iust cause offended, declared in writing to the king certaine complaintes contained in 21. Articles, wherein the Cardinall and Archbishop had transgressed,* both against the king & his lawes. The tenour whereof, more at large is in other stories expressed, y^e briefe abstract therof followeth in a short summarie here to be seene.

*First complayned to his soueraigne Prince his right redoubted Lord duke Humfrey, his vncle and protector of the realm, that the bishop of Winchester, in the dayes of his father king Henry the 5. took vpon him the state of a cardinall, being denied by the king, saying that he had as lief set his owne crowne beside hym, as to see him weare a cardinals hatte, and that in Parliamentes, he not beyng contented with the place of a bishop among the spirituall persons presumed aboue hys order, whiche the sayd Duke desired to be redressed.

*2. Item, whereas he being made Cardinal, was voyded of his bishopricke of Winchester, he procured from Rome the Popes Bull, vnknowing to the king, whereby he took agayne his bishopricke, contrary to the common lawe of this realme, incurring therby the case of prouision, and fore'feiting all his goodes to the king, by the law of premuniri facias.

*3. Item, he complayned that the said Cardinall, with the Archbishop of Yorke, intruded themselues to haue the gouernaunce of the king, and the doing vnder the king, of tēporall matters, excluding the kings vnclē, and other temporall Lordes of the kinges kinde, from hauing knowledge of any great matter.

4. Item, whereas the king had borrowed of the Cardinall 4000. pounds,* vpon certayne Iewels, and afterward had his mony ready at the day to quite his iewels: the Cardinall caused the treasurer to conuert that mony, to the payment of an other armye, to keepe the Iewels still to hys owne vse and gayne.

*5. Item, he being then bishop of Winchester, and Chancellour of England, deliuered the king of Scottes, vpon his own authoritie, contrary to the act of parliament, wed'ding his nece afterward to the sayd king. Also where the said king of Scottes shoulde haue payd to the king forty thousand pounds, y^e cardinall procured x. thousand marks therof to be remitted, and yet the rest very slenderly payd.

*6. Item, the sayd cardinall, for lending notable sommes to the king, had the profite of the port of Hampton: where he, setting his seruantes to be the Customers, wolle and other marchaundise was, vnder that clok, exported not somuch to his singular vauntage, being the chiefe marchant, as to the greate preiudice of the king, and detriment to his subiectes.

7. Item, the cardinall, in lending out great summes to y^t king, yet so differed and delayed the loane thereof, y^t comming out of season, the same did the king litle pleasure, but rather hinderaunce.

8. Item, where iewels & plate were prised at a 11. thousand poundes in weight,* of the sayd Cardinall forfeited to the king: the cardinall for loane of a little peere, gat him a a restorement thereof, to the Kings great dammage, who better might haue spared the commons if the somme had remayned to him cleare.

9. Item, where the kinges father had geuen Elizabeth Bewchampe. CCC. markes of liuelode, with this condition if the wedded with in a yeare, the Cardinall, notwithstanding she was maryed two or three yeares after, yet gaue her the same, to the kinges great hurt, and diminishing of hys inheritaunce.

10. Item, the Cardinall hauing no authoritie nor interest to the crown,* presumed notwithstanding to cal before him, like a King, to the kinges high derogation.

11 Item, that the Cardinall sued a pardon from Rome, to be freed from all dismes, due to the Kyng by the church of Winchester, geuing thereby example to the Clergye, to withdraw their disines likewise, and lay all the charge only vpon the temporalitie, and poore commons.

12. 13. Item, by the procuring of the sayd Cardinall and Archbishop of Yorke, great goodes of the kings were lost and dispended vpon needles Ambassades, first to Arras, then to Calice.

14. Item it was layd to the charge of the sayd Cardinall and archbishop, that by their meanes, goyng to Calice, the ii. enemies of the king, the Duke of Orleance, and Duke of Burgoyne, were reduced together in accorde & alliaunce, who being at warre before betwene themselues, and now cōfederate together, ioyned both together agaynst y^e kings townes and countryes ouer the sea, to the great daunger of Normandy, and destruction of the kinges people.

*15. Item, by the archbishop of Yorke, and the Cardinall perswasiōs were moued opely in the kings presence, with allurementes and inducementes, that the king shoulde leaue hys right, his title and honour of his crowne, in nominating him king of Fraunce, during certayne yeeres, & that he shoulde vtterly absteyne, and be content onely in writing, with Rex Angliae, to the great note and infamy of the king and of all his progenitours.

16. 17. Item, through the sleight and subtlety of the sayde Cardinall and his mate, a new conuention was intended betweene the king and certayne aduersaryes of Fraunce. Also y^e deliuerance of the Duke of Orleance was appointed in such sort, as therby great disworship & inconueniēce was like to fall, rather of the kinges side then of the other.

18. Item, that the Cardinall had purchased great landes and liuelodes of the king, the Duke being on the other side the sea occupied in warres, whiche redounded little to the worship and profite of y^e king: * and moreouer had the kinge bound, to make him as sure estate of all those landes by Easter next, as could be deuised by any learned councel, or els y^e said cardinal to haue and enioy to him and his heyres for euer, the landes of the Duchie of Lancaster in Northfolke to the value of 7. or 8. hundred markes by the yeare.

19. Item, * where the Duke the kinges vncle, had oftenoffered his seruice for the defence of the Realme of France, and the duchie of Normandy, the Cardinall euer laboured to the contrary, in preferring other, after this singular affection: whereby a great part of Normandy hath bene lost.

20. Itē, * seeing y^t Cardinall was risen to such riches & treasure, which could grow to him, neyther by his Church, nor by enheritāce (which he then had) it was of necessitie to be thought, that it came by his great deceites, in deceiuinge both the king, and hys subiects, in selling offices, prefermentes, liuelodes, captaynships both here and in y^t realm of Fraunce and in Normandy, so that what hath beu there lost, he hath bene the greatest causer thereof.

21. Furthermore, when the sayd Cardinal had forfeited al hys goods by the statute of prouision, * he hauing the rule of the king, and of other matters of the realme: purchased frō the pope a charter of pardon, not onely to the defeating of the lawes of the Realme, but also to the defrauding of the king, who otherwise might and should haue had where w^t to susteine his warres, without any tallage of his poore people. &c.

When the king heard these accusations, he committed y^t hearing therof to his counsaile: whereof y^t most part were spirituall persons. * So, what for feare, and what for fauour the matter was wincked at, & delied out, and nothing said thereunto, and a fayre countenaunce was made to y^t Duke as though no displeasure had bene taken, nor malice borne in these spirituall stomaches. But shortly after, the smoke hereof, not able to keepe in any longer within the spiritual brestes of these charitable churchmen, brast out in flames of mischief. For vpon the necke of this matter, as witnesseth Fabian Polychronicon, and Hall whiche followeth Polych, first ensued the condemnation of L. Elianour the Duches and her Chapleynes, * as ye haue heard before. Whereby it may appeare the sayd Duches more of malice, then any iust cause, this to haue bene troubled. Also within vi. yeares after, followed the lamentable destruction of the Duke himselfe, as hereafter more is to be declared.

About which time,* or not long after, an. 1443. the steeple of Paules was set on fire by lightening, and at last by dilligent labour of helpers, the fire was quenched.

And after the condemnation of lady Elianour the Duches, aforesayd,* within few yeares. an. 1445. followed the death of Henry Chichesley Archbishop of Cant. by whom she was condemned in S. Stephens chappell at Westin.* for penaunce to beare a taper through cheapside three sondry times, and afterward outlawed to the Ile of Manne, vnder the custody of syr Iohn Standly knight. This Hēry Chichesley builded in hys time, 2. Colledges in the vniuersitie of Oxford, the one called Alsolne Colledge, the other named Barnard Colledge.

Proceeding now to the yeare, wherein suffered Humfrey y^t good Duke of Gloucester, which was the yeare of y^t Lord. 1447. first we will begin in few words to intreat of his life & conuersation: then of the maner and cause of hys death. As touching the ofspring and dissent of this Duke, first he was the sonne of Henry the fourth, brother to kyng Henry the fift,* and vncle to kyng Henry the sixt, assigned to be the gouernour and protector of his person. Of manners he seemed meeke and gentle, louing the common wealth, a supporter of the poore commons, of wit & wisdom discrete and studious, well affected to religion, and a frend to veritie, & no les enemy to pride & ambitio, especial|ly in hauty prelates, which was his vndoing in this presēt euil world: And, which is seldome & rare in such princes of y^t calling, he was both learned himselfe: & no lesse geuen to study, as also a singular fauourer & patron to them which were studious & learned. And that my commendation of him may haue the more credite, I wil produce the testimony of learned writers, who liuing in hys time, not only do cōmend his famous knowledge, and ripenes of learning in him: but also commit & submit their works to his iudge|ment to be examined. Of whiche writers one is Petrus de Page 705 Monte,* writing De virtutū & vitiorum differentia: who in his Epistle dedicatory beginning with the singuler commendation of this Duke, and afterward speaking De optimarum artium, liberaliumque scientiarum peritia, sayeth thus: Cui tu quidem omni conatu, omni ingenio, atque studio incumbis: adeo vt nihil tibi sine librorum lectione, iocundum gratum, aut certe delectabile videatur. &c. And in further processe of his worke, thus he further declareth, saying: Delectaris autem non vna tantum arte, aut scientia, quanquam & id quidem esset satis: verum fere omnibus, earum{que} codices magna quadam auiditate legisti. &c. Besides this Petrus de Mōte, let vs heare also the iudgement of an other writer of the same age,* named Lapiscastellius, who likewise dedicating to the sayd Duke Humfry, his booke intituled Comparatio studiorum & rei militaris, amongst diuers other words cōmēdatory, hath these as follow: Ad te potissimum mitto, quod horum te optimum, & sapientissimum iudicem fore existimo, qui vt ex integerrimo pat. domino, Zenone Baiocensi episcopo, homine tuae laudis cupidissimo, accepi: ita in his humanitatis studiis inuigilares, vt nullus toto terrarū orbe princeps, nec doctrina, nec eloquentia, nec humanitate tecum comparandus sit. &c. Many other argumentes and places may be brought, to declare what is to be esteemed of the learning and studious wit of this noble Prince.

Furthermore, as the learning of this Prince was rare and memorable, so was the discrete wisdom and singular prudence in him no lesse to be considered: as for y^e more manifest prooffe thereof, I thought here good amongst many other his godly doings, to recite one example, reported as well by the penne of syr Thomas More, as also by M. William Tindall, the true Apostle of these our latter dayes, to the intent to see and note, not only the craftye working of false miracles in the clergie, but also that the prudent discretion of this high and mighty prince, the fore sayd Duke Humfrey, may geue vs better to vnderstand what man he was. The story lyeth thus.

In the yong dayes of this king Henry the sixt, beyng yet vnder the gouernance of this Duke Humfrey his protector, there came to S. Albones a certayne begger wyth his wife,* and there was walking about y^r towne, begging fiue or sixe dayes before the kinges comming thether, saying y^t he was borne blind and neuer saw in his lyfe, & was warned in hys dreame, that he shuld come out of Barwik, where he sayd he had euer dwelled, to seek S. Albon, and that he had bene at his shrine, and had not bene holpē, and therefore he would go and seek him at some other place: for he had heard some say, since he came, that S. Albones body shoulde be at Colon, and in deede suche a contention hath there bene. But of truth as I am surely informed, he lyeth here at S. Albones, sauing some Reliques of him, whiche they there shew shryned. But to tell you foorth, when the king was comen, and the towne full, sodainly this blynde man at S. Albones shrine had hys sight agayne, and a miracle solemnly ronge, and Te Deum song, so that nothing was talked of in al the towne, but this miracle. So happened it thē, that Duke Humfrey of Glocester, a man no les wife, then also well learned, hauing great ioye to see suche a miracle, called the poore man vnto him, and first shewing himselfe ioyous of Gods glory, so shewed in the getting of his sight, and exhorting him to meekenes, and to no ascribing of any part of y^t worship to himself, nor to be proud of the peoples prayse, which would call him a good & godly man therby, at last he looked well vpon his eyne, and asked whether he could see nothing at al, in al his life before. And when as well his wife as himselfe affirmed fastly no, then hee looked aduisedly vpon his eyen againe, and sayd: I beleue you very well, for me thinketh ye cannot see well yet. Yes syr, quod he, I thanke God and hys holy martyr, I can see now as well as any mā. (Yea can (quod y^e duke) what colour is my gowne? Then anon the begger tolde him. What colour (quoth he) is this mans gowne? He told him also, and so forth without any sticking, he told him the names of all y^t colours that could be shewed him. And when the Duke saw that, he had him walke traytour, and made him to be set openly in the stockes: For though he could haue seene sodenly by miracle the difference betwene diuers colours,* yet could he not by the sight so sodeinly tell the names of al these coulours, except he had known them before, no more then the names of all the men, that he shuld sodaynly see.

By this may it be seene howe Duke Humfrey had not onely an head to disserue and disseruer trueth from forged and fayned hipocrisie, but study also and dilligence lykewise was in him,* to reforme that which was amisse.

And thus much hetherto for the noble prowesse & vertues, ioyned with y^e like ornamentes of knowledge, & literature shining in this Princely duke. For the which, as he was both loued of the poore commons, and wel spoken of all men, & no les deseruing the same, being called the good Duke of Glocester, so neither yet wanted hee his enemies and priuy enuiers,* whether it was through the fatall and vnfortunate lucke of the name of that house which is but a vayn & friuolous obseruation of Polydore, & Halle which followeth hym, bringing in the examples of Hugh Speser of Thomas of Woodstock, sonne of •. Edward the thyrd of this Duke Humfry,* and after o• king Richard the thyrd Duke likewise of Gloucester: or whether it was that y^r nature of true vertue cōmonly is suche, that as the flame euer beareth his smoke, and the body his shadow: fo• the brightnes of vertue neuer blaseth, but hath some disdayne or enuy wayting vpon it: or els whether it was rather for some diuorcement from his wife, or for some other vice or trespasse done (as seemeth most like truth) which God as well in dukes houses correcteth, as in other inferiour parsons, especially where he loueth: But howsoeuer the cause is to vs vnknowne, this good Duke of Glocester, albeit beyng both y^t kinges sole vncle, & hauing so many well willers thorough y^r whol realme, yet lacked not hys Sathan: lacked not his secret maligners. Of whom specially was Hēry Beuford Cardinal, Bish. of Wintchester and Chaunceller of England: * who of long time disdayning and enuying the rule and authoritie of this Duke: first had disposed and appoynted himselfe, to remoue the kings person from Eltham vnto Winsor out of the Dukes handes, and there to put in such gouernours, * as him listed. After that, entēding the Dukes death, he set men of armes and Archers at the end of London bridge, and for barring the hie waye wyth a draw chain, set men in chambers, sellers and windowes with bowes and arrowes and other weapons, to the purposed destructiō both of the duke & his retinue, if God had not so disposed, to turne his iourney another way. Beside other manifold iniuries and molestations, the Ambitious Cardinall, seeking by all meanes to be Pope, procured such trouble agaynst him, that great deuision was thereby in the whole Realme: in somuch that all the shops within y^r city of London, were shut in, for feare of the fauourers of these two great personages, for each part had assembled no small number of people. For the pacifying whereof y^t archbishop of Caunterbury, and the Duke of Dumber, called the prince of Portingall, rode 7. tymes in one day betwene those two aduersaryes. Such were then the troubles of this tumultuous diuision within the realme, and al by the excitation of this vnquiet Cardinall.

Ouer and beside, * this Cardinall afore mentioned, an o'ther Capitall enemy to the said Duke, was William de la Pole, first Earle, then Marques, at last Duke of Suffolke a man very ill reported of in storyes, to be not only y^t orgā & instrument of this good mans death, but also to be the noyance of the common wealth, & ruine of the realme. For by him and hys onely deuise, was first concluded the vnprofitable and vnhonourable mariage betweene the kyng & Lady Margaret daughter of y^e Duke of Angeow: * where as the king had concluded & contracted a mariage before w^t the daughter of the Earle of Armi•k, vpon conditions so much more profitable and honourable, as more conuenient it is for a Prince to mary a wise with riches & frends then to take a mayd w^t nothing, & disherite himselfe, & hys realme of old rightes, & ancient inheritance, which so came to passe. And all this the good Duke did well foresee, & declared no lesse: but hys counsel would not be taken. Wherupon followed first the geuing away the Duchy of Angeow: & the Citie of Mayne, with the who•e Country of Mayne, to Reyner Duke of Angeow & father of the Damo•ell, called then K. of Sicile & of Hierusalē, hauing ther'of no peny profite, but onely a vayne name to play withal.

An other sore enemy and mortall plague to this Duke was the Queene her selfe, * lately before married to the king. Who being of haute stomack, and all set vpon glory of wit and wilynes lacking nothing, and perceiuing her husband to be simple of wit, and easy to be ruled, tooke vpon her to rule and gouerne both the king & kingdome. And because the aduise & counsaile of Humfrey duke of Glocester, was somewhat a stay that her authoritie and regimēt could not so fully proceede, and partly because the sayd Duke before dyd disagree from that mariage, this manly women and couragious Queene ceased not by all imaginations and practises possible, * to set forwarde his destruction, hauing also for her helper herein the Duke of Buckingham. &c.

These being his principall enemies and mortall foes,* fearing least some commotion might arise, if such a Prince so uere the kinges blood, and so beare to the people, & of all men so beloued, shold be openly executed & put to death, deuised how to trap him, and circumuēt him vnknowing and vnprouided. For the more speedy furtherance wherof, Page 706 a Parliament was sūmoned to be kept at Bery,* an. 1447. sacre •rom the citizens of London, as William Lindall in his booke of practise,* writeth. Where resorted all the peres of the realme, and amongst them the Duke of Gloucester, thinking no harme to any man, & lesse to himselfe. Who on the second day of the Ses•on, was by the Lord Beamonde high Constable then of Englande, accompanied with the Duke of Buckingham and other, arrested, apprehended, and put in ward, and vpon the same all his seruants discharged and put from him, of whome 32. of the principall being also vnder arrest, were dispersed into diuers prisōs to the great murmuring and greuaunce of the people. After this arrest thus done, and the Duke put in to Warde, the night after (saith Halle) 6. nightes after (sayth Fabian and Polychron,* he was found dead in hys bed the 24. of Febru^r ary and his body shewed to the Lordes and Commons, as though he had bene taken naturally with some sodayne disease. And although no woūd in his body could be seene: yet to al indifferent persons it might wel be iudged, that he dyed of no naturall pang, but of some violent hand. Some suspected him to be strangled, some that a whole spytt was priuily forced into his body, some affirme y^t he, was styfeled betweene to fether beds. After the death of this Duke, and hys body being enterred at S. Albons, after he had po^litically by the space of 25. yeares gouerned this realme, 5. of his housholde to wit, one knight, 3. Esquiers, and a Yeoman, were arreigned, & conuict to be hanged, drawn & quartered. Who being hanged and cut downe halfe aliue, y^e Marques of Suffolke, there present shewed the charter of the kinges pardon, and so they were deliuered. Notwithstanding, all this could not appease the grudge of the people, saying that the sauing of the seruantes, was no amends for the murdering of the mayster.

In this cruell facte of these persons, which did so conspire and consent to the death of this noble man,* & whiche thought thereby to worke their owne safety, the meruailous work of gods iudgement, appeareth herein to be noted: who as in all other like cruell pollices of mā, so in this also turned al theyr pollices clean contrary. So that where y^e Queene thought most to preserue her husband in honor, and her selfe in state, thereby both she lost her husband, her husband lost his realm, the realm lost Angeow, Normādy the Duchy of Aquitane, with all her partes beyond y^t sea, Calice only except, as in sequele of the matter, who so will read the storyes, shall right well vnderstand.

The next yeare following, it followed also, that y^t Cardinall, who was the principall artificer and ringleader of all this mischief,* was suffered of God no lōger to liue.* Of whose wicked conditions being more largely set foorth in Edward Halle, I omitte here to speake. What he himselfe spake in his deathbed for example to other, I thought not best to pretermitt. Who hearing that he shuld dy, & that ther was no remedy, murmured & grudged, wherfore he shuld dye,* hauing so much riches, saying: that if the whole realm would saue hys life, he was able either by pollicy to get it, or by riches to buy it: adding & saying moreouer, fit (quod he) will not death be hyred? nor will money doe nothing? whē my nephew of Bedford dyed, I thought my selfe halfe vp the wheele, but whē I saw mine other nephew of Glocester deceased, then I thought my selfe able to be equal w^t kinges, and so ought to encrease my treasure, in hope to haue worne the triple crown. &t. Ex Edou Hallo. And thus is the rich byshop of Winchester, with all his pompe and riches gone, with the which riches, he was able not onely to build scholes, colledges and Uniuersities, but also was able to susteine the kinges armies in warre (as is specified in storyes) without any taxing of the commons.

In whose seate next succeeded William Wanflet, prefer'd to the byshopricke of Winchester who though he had lesse substaunce, yet hauing a minde more godly disposed, did found and erecte the Colledge of Mary Magdalen in Oxford. For the which foundation, as there haue ben, and be yet many studentes bound to yeld gratefull thanks vnto God, so I must needes confesse my selfe to be one, except I will be vnkinde.

Among y^t other mischieuous aduersaries which sought and wrought the death of Humfrey Duke of Gloucester, next to the Cardinall of Winchester (who,* as is sayd, dyed y^t next yere following) was William de la Pole, Marques of Suffolk, who also liued not long after, nor long escaped vnpunished. For although he was highly exalted, by the meanes of y^e Queene (whose maryage he onely procured) vnto y^e fauour of y^e king, & was made Duke of Suffolke, & magnified of the people, and bare the whole sway in the re'alme, whose actes and facts his vayne glorious head caused also by the assent of the commons, to be recorded, & substantially to be registred in the rolles of the Parliament, for a perpetuall renowne to him,* and all his posteritie for euer: yet notw^tstanding the hand of Gods iudgement still hanging ouer hym, he enioyed not long this his triūphant victory. For within 3. yeares after the death and ruine of y^e Cardinall, the voyces of the whole commons of England were vtterly turned against him, accusing him in the Parliament at the blacke Fryers, for deliury of the Duchye of Angeow, and Barledome of Maine: also for the death of y^r noble Prince Humfry Duke of Glocester. They unputed moreouer to hym the losse of all Normandye, saying vnto him that he was a swallower vp and consumer of y^r kings treasure,* the exp[•]iler of al good and vertuous counsaylers from the king, and aduancer of vicious persons, apparant aduersaryes to the publicke wealth: so that he was called in euery mouth a traytour, a murderer, and a robber of the kinges treasure.

The Queene, albeit she tenderly loued the Duke, yet to appease the exclamation of the commons, was forced to committe hym to the tower, where he, with as much pleasure and liberty as could be, remayned for a month whiche being expired, he was deliuered and restored agayne into his old place, & former fauour with the kyng: where at the people more grudged then before. It happened by the occasion of a commotion then beginning amongst the rude people, by one whom they called Blewbeard, that the parliament, was for that tyme, adiourned to Leycester, thinking to the Queene, by force and rigour of lawe to rep[•]esse there the malice and euill will conceiued against the duke. But at that place few of y^r nobilitie would appeare, Wherefore it was againe reiourned vnto Londō, & kept at Westminster, where was a whole company, & a full appearance with the king and Queene, & with them the duke of Suffolke, as chiefe counsailour. The commons not forgetting their old grudge, renewed agayn their former articles and accusations agaynst the sayde duke, agaynst the byshop of Salisb.* & syr Iames Fynics, Lord Say, and other. When the kyng perceaued y^r no glosing nor dissimulation would serue to appease the continual clamour of the importunate cōmons, to make some quiet pacificatiō, first he sequestred from hym the Lord say, treasurer of Englande, & other the Dukes adherentes from theyr offices. Then he put in exile the Duke of Suffolke, for the terme of 5. yeares, supposing by that space the furious rage of y^r people would asswage.

But the hand of God woulde not suffer y^t giltles bloud of Humfrey Duke of Glocester,* to be vnreuenged, or that flagitious person further to continue. For whē he shipped in Suffolke, intending to be transported into Fraunce: he was encountred with a shippe of warre belonging to the tower: whereby he was taken, and brought into Douer rode, and there on the side of a ship boat, one strake of his head: which was about the yeare of our Lord. 1450.

And thus haue ye heard the full storye, and discourse of Duke Humfrey, and of all hys aduersaries, also of Gods condigne punishment vpon them for their bloody cruelty. But before I remoue from the sayde story of the foresayde Duke, and of the proud Cardinall his enemy, I will hers by the way, annexe a certaine instrument by the kyng and aduise of his counsayle, made agaynst the sayde Cardinall, taking vpon him to enter into this realme, as Legate frō the Pope, contrary to the old lawes and customes of thys realme, as by the wordes of the sayd instrument here in Latine may well appeare.

The summe and effecte whereof in Englishe is this, that in the yeare of our Lord. 1428. as the King with Duke Humfrey Lord protectour,* & the rest of the counsaile, were in the Dukes house in the Parish of S. Bennets by Paules warfe, one Richard Candray procuratour, in the kinges name and behalfe did protest and denounce by thys publicke instrument, that where as the kyng and all hys progenitours, kinges before him of thys realme of Englād haue bene heretofore possessed tyme out of mynde, with speciall priuiledge and custome vsed and obserued in thys Realme from tyme to time, that no Legate from the Apostolicke sea should enter into thys land or anye of the kynges dominions, without the calling, petition, request, inuitement or desire of the kyng, and for so much as Henry byshop of Wint. and Cardinall of S. Eusebius, hath presumed so to enter as Legat from the Pope, beyng neyther called, sent for, required, or desired by the kyng: therfore the sayd Richard Candray in the kynges name doth protest by this instrument, that it standeth not with the kinges minde or intent, by the aduise of hys counsaile, to admit, approue, or ratifie the cōming of the sayd Legate in anye wise, in derogation of the rightes, customes and lawes of this hys realme: or to recognise, or assent to any exercise of this hys authoritie Legantine, or to anye actes, attempted, or hereafter by hym to be attempted in this respect cōtrary to the foresayd lawes, rightes, customes, and liberties of this Realme, by these presentes. &c.

And thus much as an Appendix, annexed to the story of Duke Humfrey, and the Cardinal of Wint. extracte out of an olde written volume, remaining in the handes of maister William Bowyer.

The benefite and inuention of Printing.

IN following the course and order of yeares, we find this foresayd yeare of our Lord. 1450.* to be famous and memorable, for the diuine and miraculous inuention of printing. Naucerus,* and Wymselingus folowing him, referre the inuention thereof to the yeare 1440. In paralipom. Abbatis Vrsp. it is recorded this facultie to be found. an. 1446. Auentinus and Zieglerus do say, an. 1450. The first inuētour thereof (as moste agree) is thought to bee a Germaine dwelling first in Argentine, afterward Cittizen of Mentz, named Iohn Faustus, a goldsmith. The occasiō of this inuention first was by engrauing y^e letters of y^e Alpha^bet in mettall: who then laying blacke incke vpon the mettall, gaue the forme of letters in paper. The man being industruous, and actiue, perceiuing that, thought to proceed further, and to proue whether it woulde frame as well in words, and in whole sentences, as it did in letters. Which when he perceaued to come well to passe, he made certayne other of his counsaile, one Iohn Guttemberge & Peter Schafferd, binding them by their othe, to keepe silence, for a season. After x. yeares, Iohn Guttemberge compartner w^t Faustus, began then first to broch the matter at Strausbrough. The Arte beyng yet but rude, in processe of tyme, was set forward by inuentiue wittes, adding more and more to the perfection thereof. In the number of whome, Iohn Mentell, Iohn Prus, Adolphus Ruschius, were great helpers, Ulrirus •an• in latine called Gallus, first brought it to Rome. Whereof y^e Epigram was made.

Anser Tarpeij custos, vigilando quòd alis

Constreperes,* Gallus decidit vltor adest

Vlricus Gallus, nequem poscantur in vsum,

Edocuit pennis nil opus esse tuis.

Notwithstanding, what man soeuer was the instrument, without all doubt God himselfe was the ordayer and disposer thereof,* no otherwise, then he was of the gifte of congues, and that for a singuler purpose. And well may this gift o^r printing be resembled to the gift of tongues: for like as God then spake with many tongues,* and yet all y^t would not turne the Iewes, so now, when the holy ghost speaketh to y^e aduersaries in innumerable sorts of bookes, yet they will not be conuerted: nor turne to the Gospell.

Now to consider to what ende and purpose the Lorde hath geuen this gift of Printing to the earth, and to what great vtility and necessity it serueth, it is not hard to iudge who so wisely perpendeth both the time of the sending, & the sequele which therof ensueth.

And first,* touching the time of this faculty geuen to the vse of man, this is to be marked: that when as the Byshop of Rome, with all the whole & ful consent of the Cardinals, Patriarches, Archbishops, byshops, Abbots, Priours, Lawyers, Doctors, Prouostes, Deanes, Archdeacons, assembled together in the councell of Constance, had condemned poore Iohn Hus, & Hierom of Prage to death for heresie, notwithstanding they were no heretickes, and after they had subdued the Bohemians, and all the whole world vnder the supreme authority of the Romish sea: and had made all Christē people abedienciaries & vassals vnto the same, hauing (as one would say) all the worlde at theyr will, so that the matter now was past not only the power of al men, but the hope also of any man to be recouered. In this very time so daungerous and desperate, where mans power could do no more, there the blessed wisdomē & omⁿipotent power of the Lord began to work for his church not with sword and tergate to subdue his exalted aduersary, but with Printing, writing, and reading to conuince darkenes by light,* errour by truth, ignorance by learning So that by this meanes of printing, the secret operatiō of God hath heaped vpon that proud kingdome a double cō^fusion. For where as the byshop of Rome, had burned I. Hus before, and Hierome of Prage, who neither denyed his transubstantiation, nor hys supremacie, nor yet hys Popishe Masse, but sayd Masse, and heard masse themselues, neither spake agaynst his purgatory, nor anye other great matter of his popishe doctrine, but onely exclaymed agaynst his excessiue and pompous pride, hys vnchristian or rather Antichristian abomination of life: thus while he could not abide his wickednes onely of life to be touched, but made it heresie, or at least matter of death, what soeuer was spoken agaynst hys detestable conuersation, and maners, God of hys secret iudgement, seing tyme to helpe his Church, hath found a way by this facultie of Printing, not onely to confound his life, and conuersation, which before he could not abide to be touched, but also to cast downe the foundatiō of his standing, that is, to examine, confute, and detect his doctrine, laws, and institutions most detestable in such sort, that though his life were neuer so pure: yet his doctrine standing, as it doth, no man is so blinde, but may see, that eyther the pope is Antichrist, or els that Antichrist is neare cosine to the pope: And al this doth, and wil hereafter more and more appeare by Printing.

The reason whereof is this: for y^t hereby tongues are knowne,* knowledge groweth, iudgemēt increaseth, books are dispersed, the Scripture is seene, the Doctours be read stories be opened, times compared, truth decerned, falshod detected, and with finger poynted, and all (as I sayd) thorough the benefite of printing. Wherefore I suppose that ey^rther the pope must abolish printing, or he must seek a new world to raygne ouer: for els, as this world standeth, prin^ting doubtles will abolish hym. But the pope, and all hys Colledge of Cardinals, must this vnderstād, that through the light of printing, the worlde beginneth nowe to haue eyes to see, and heades to iudge. He cannot walke so inuisible in a net, but he will be spyed. And although thorough might he stopped the mouth of Iohn Hus before, and of Hierome, that they might not preache, thinking to make his kingdome sure: yet in stede of Iohn Hus & other God hath opened the presse to preach, whose voyce the Pope is neuer able to stop with all y^e puissance of his triple crown. By this printing, as by the gift of tongues, and as by the singular organe of the holy Ghost, the doctrine of the Gospell soundeth to all nations and cuntryes vnder heauen: and what God reuealeth to one man, is dispersed to many Page 708 and what is knowne in one nation, is opened to all.

*The first and best were for the bishop of Rome, by the benefite of printing, to learne and know the trueth. If he will not, let him well vnderstand that printing is not set vp for naught. To striue against the streame, it auayleth not. What the pope hath lost, since printing and the presse began to preach, let hym cast hys counters. First when Erasmus wrote, and Frobenius Printed, what a blow ther by was geuen to all Fryers and monks in the world? And who seeth not, that the penne of Luther following after Erasmus and set forward by writing, hath set the triple crown so awry on the popes head, that it is like neuer to be set streight agayne.

Brieflye, if there were no demonstration to leade, yet by this one argument of printing, the bishop of Rome might vnderstand the counsayl and purpose of the Lord to worke agaynst him, hauing provided such a way in earth, that almost how many printing presses there be in y^e world so many blockhouses there be agaynst the high castle of S. Angell.* So that eyther the pope must abolishe knowledge and Printing, or printing at length will roote him out. For if a man wisely consider the holde and standing of the pope, thus he may repute with himselfe, that as nothing made the pope strong in time past, but lacke of knowledge and ignoraunce of simple Christians: so contrariwise now nothing doth debilitate and shake the high spire of his Papacie so much as reading, preaching, knowledge & iudgement, that is to say, the fruit of printing: Whereof some experience we see already, and more is like (the Lord before) to follow. For although, through outward force and violēt cruelty, tonges dare not spake, yet the hartes of men dayly (no doubt) be instructed through this benefite of printing. And though the pope both nowe by cruelty, and in tymes past by ignoraunce, had all vnder hys possession: yet neyther must he thinke, that violence will alwayes continue, neyther must he hope for that now, which he had then: for so much as in those former dayes, bookes then were scarce & also of such excessiue price, that few coulde attayne to the buying, fewer to y^e reading & studying therof: which bookes now by y^e meanes of this arte, are made easie vnto al men. Ye heard before, pag. 665, how Nicholas Belward, bought a new testament in those dayes for foure markes and 40. pence, where as now the same price will serue well 40. per^sons with so many bookes.

Moreouer in the pag. 411. col. 1. it was noted and declared by the testimony of Armachanus, how for defect of bookes and good authors, both vniuersities were decaied and good wits kept in ignoraunce, while begging Fryers scaping all the wealth from other priestes, heaped vp all bookes that could be gotten, into theyr owne Libraryes: where eyther they dyd not diligently applye them, or els did not rightly use them, or at least kept them from such as more fruitfully would haue perused them.

In this then so great raritie, and also dearth of good books, when neither they which could haue books, would well vse them, nor they y^r would, could haue them to vse, what maruell if the greedines of a few prelates did abuse the blindnes of those daies, to the aduauncement of themselues? Wherefore, almighty God of hys mercifull prouidence, seeing both what lacked in the church, and how also to remedy the same, for y^t aduauncement of his glory, gaue the vnderstanding of this excellent arte or science of printing, whereby three singular cōmodities at one time came to the world. * First, the price of all bookes diminished. Secondly toe speedy helpe of reading, more furthered. And thirdly the plenty of all good authours enlarged: according as Aprutinus, doth truely report.

The presse in one day will do in printing,

That none in one yeare can do in writing.

By reason whereof, as printing of bookes ministred matter of readyng: * so readyng brought learning: learning shewed light, by y^r brightnes wherof blind ignorance was suppressed error detected, & finally Gods glory, w^t trueth of hys worde, aduaunced. This facultie of Printing was after the inuention of Gunnes, the space of 130. yeares: which inuention was also found in Germany, an. 1380. And thus much for y^e worthy commendation of printing.

The lamentable losing of Constantinople.

*ANno. 1453. Constantinus Paloelogus, beyng Emperour of Constatinople, the 29. day of the month of May, the great Cittye of Constantinople was taken by the Turke Mahometes, * after the siege of 54. dayes, which siege began in the beginning of Aprill. Within the city, beside the Citizens were but onely 6000. rescuers of the Greekes. And 3000. of the Uenetians & Gennues. Against these, Mahometes brought an army of 400. thousand, collected out of the cōuntries and places adioyning nere about, as out of Grecia, Illirico, Wallachia, Dardanis, Triballis, Bulga'nis, out of Bithynia, Galatia, Lydia, Cecilia, and suche other: which places had the name yet of Christians. Thus one neighbour for lucre sake, helped to destroy all other.

The Cittie was compassed of the Turkes, both by the sea & land. Mahometes the Turke deuided his armye in 3. sondry partes, which in 3. partes of the citty, so bette the walles and brake them downe, that they attempted by the breaches therof to enter the citty. But the valiauntnes of the Christians there in wanne much cōmendation, whose Duke was called Iohn Iustinianus, of Genua. But for so much as the assaultes were great, and the number of the Christian souldiours daily decreased, fighting both at the walles and at the Hauen, agaynst such a multitude of the Turkes, they were not able long to hold out. Beside the armyes which lay battering at the walles, the Turke had vpon the sea his nauy of 200. and 50. sayle, lying vpon the hauen of the City, reaching from the one side of the hauens mouth vnto the other, as if a bridge should be made frō

the one banke to the other. Which hauen by the cittizens was barred with yron chaines, whereby the Turks were kept out a certayne space. Agaynst whiche nauy 7. ships there were of Genua, within the hauen, and 3. of Creta, and certayne of Chio, which stoode agaynst them. Also the souldiours issuing out of the Cittie, as occasion would serue, did manfully gaynstand them, and w^t wild fire, set their ships on fire, that a certayn space they could serue to no vse. At length the cheynes being brast, & a way made, the Turkes nauy entred the hauen, and assaulted the Cittie, whereby y^e Turke began to conceiue great hope,* and was in forwardnes to obtain the Citie. The assault and skirmish thē waxing more hoate, Mahometes the tyraunt stode by vppon an hill, with hys warriours about him, crying & houling out vnto them to skale the walles and enter the towne, otherwise, if any reculed, he threatned to kill them, and so he did. Wherefore a great number of his souldiours in theyr repulse and retire, were slaine by the turkes men, being sēt by his commandement to slay them: and so they were iustly serued, and well payd theyr hyer.

Although this was some comfort, to the Christians, to see and behold out of the Cittie, the Turkes retinue so con'sumed, yet that hope lasted not long. Shortly after by rage of warre, it happened Iustinian the Duke aboue named, to be hurt, who notwithstanding that he was earnestly de'sired by Paloelogus the Emperour,* not to leaue his Tower which he had to keepe, seeing hys wound was not deadly daungerous, yet could he not be intreated to tary, but lefte his standing, and his fort disfurnished, setting none in his place to award the same. And so this donghty Duke, hurte more with hys false hart, then with force of weapon, gaue ouer and fled to Chius, where shortly after for sorrow, rather then for sorennes of wound, he died. Many of his souldiours seeing their captayne flee, followed after, leauing their fort vtterly destitute without defence. The Turkes vnderstanding y^r vantage, soone brast into the cittie. The Emperour Paloelogus seeing no other way but to flee,* making toward the gate, eyther was slayne, or els troden down w^t the multitude. In the which gate 800. dead mēs bodies were found and taken vp.

The Cittie of Constantinople thus being gotte, the Turkes sacking and raunging about the streetes houses,* and corners, did put to the sword most vnmercifully, whō soeuer they found, both aged and young: matrones, virgins, children, and infants: sparing none, the noble matrones and virgins were horriblye rauished, the goods of y^e cittie, the treasurers in houses, the ornaments in chur'ches were all sackt and spoyled, the pictures of Christ approbriously handled, in hatred of Christ. The spoyle and hauocke of the citie lasted three dayes together, while y^e bar'barous souldiours murdered and rifeled what them listed.

These thinges thus being done, and the tumult ceased, after three dayes, Mahometes the Turke, entreth into the Citie, and first calling for the heades and auncientes of thē Citie:* such as he found to be left aliue, he commaunded the to be mangled and •ut in peeces. It is also (sayth my author) reported, that in the feastes of the Turks, honest matrones and virgins, and such as were of the kinges stocke, after other co•umeties, were he 〈◇〉 and cut in peeces for their disport.

And this was the end of that princely and famous 〈◇〉 of Constantinople, beginning first by Constantinus, and Page 709 ending also with Constātinus:* which for the princely royalty therof, was named and euer honoured, from the time of the first Constantine, equally with the City of Rome, & called also by the name thereof new Rome, & so continued the space of 1120. yeares. I pray God that olde Rome may learne of new Rome, to take heed and beware by tyme.

This terrible destruction of the Citty of Constantinople, the Queene of Cittyes,* I thought here to describe, not so much to set forth y^e barbarous cruelty of these filthy rake hels and mercilesse murtherers: as specially for this, that we being admonished by the dolefull ruine and misery of these our euen christened, may call to minde the plagues & miseryes deserued, whiche seeme to hang no lesse ouer our owne heades, and thereby may learne betime to inuocate and call more earnestly vpon the name of our terrible and mercifull God, that he for his sonnes sake, will keepe vs, & preserue his church among vs, and mitigate those plagues and sorrowes, whiche we no lesse haue deserued, then these aboue minded, before vs. Christ graunt it. Amen. Ex hist. Wittenbergica Peucer.

The history of Reynold Peeocke Byshop of Chichester, afflicted and imprisoned for the Gospell of Christ.

*After the death of Henry Chichisley before mentioned, pag. 657. next succeeded Iohn Stafford. an. 1445. who continued 8. yeares. After hym came Iohn Kempe. ann. 1453. who sate but three yeares. Then succeeded Thomas Burschere. In the time of which Archbishop, fell the trouble of Reynold Pecoocke, Bishop of Chichester, afflicted by the Popes Prelates for hys fayth and profession of the Gospell. Of this Byshoppe, Halle also in his Chronology toucheth a little mention, declaring that an ouerthwart iudgement (as he termeth it) was geuen by the Fathers of the spirituality agaynst him. Thys man (sayth he) beganne to moue questions not priuatly, but openly in the Uniuersityes, concerning the Annates, Peter pence, and other iurisdictions and authorities pertheyning to the sea of Rome, and not onely put forth the questiōs, but declared his mind and opinion in the same: wherefore he was for thys cause absured at Paules Crosse. Thus muche of hym wryteth Hall. Of whom also recordeth Polychronycon, but in few wordes. This bishop, first of S. Assaphe, then of Chichester, so long as Duke Humfrey lyued (by whome he was promoted and much made of) was quiet and safe, and also bolde to dispute and to write hys mynde, and wrote (as Leland recordeth) diuers bookes and treatises. But after that good Duke was thus (as ye haue heard) made away, this good man lacking his backstay, was open to his enemies, and matter soone found agaynst hym. Wherupon he being complayned of, and accused by priuy and malignant promoters vnto the Archbishop, letters first were directed downe from the Archbishop, to cite al men to appeare that could say any thing agaynst hym. The forme of which citation here ensueth.

The copy of the Citation sent by the Archbyshoppe.

*Thomas by the permission of God, Archb. of Canterbury, primate of all England and Legate of the Apostolicke Sea, to all and singuler Parsons, Vicars, Chaplaynes, Curates, & not Curates, Clerkes and learned men, whatsoever they be, constitute & ordeined in any place throughout our prouince of Caunterbury, health, grace and benediction.

We haue receiued a greeuous complaint of our reuerend felow brother, Reynold Pecoocke Byshop of Chichester, conteyning in it, that albeit our sayd reuerend felow brother, the Byshop, deliuered vnto vs certayne bookes written by him in the English tongue, by vs and our authority to be examined, corrected reformed and allowed: notwithstanding many (the examination and reformation of the sayde bookes depending and remayning before vs vndiscussed) haue openly preached and taught at Paules crosse in London, and in diuers other places of our prouince of Canterbury, that our sayd felow brother the Byshop, hath propounded, made and written, or caused to be written in the sayde bookes, certayne conclusions repugnaunt to the true fayth, and that he doth obstynately hold and defend the same.

By the pretence of which preaching and teaching, the state & good name and fame of the sayd Lord Reynolde the Byshoppe; are greuously offended and hurt, and he and his opinion maruellously burdened. Wherefore we charge you all together, and seuerally apart do commaund you, firmly enioyning you, that openly and generally you doe warne or cause to bee warned, all and singular such persons, whiche will object any thing contrary and agaynst the conclusions of our sayd reuerēd felow brother the Bishop, had or conteyned in his bookes or writings: that the 20. day after such monition or warning had, they do freely of theyr own accord appeare before vs and our Commissaryes in this behalfe appoynted wheresoeuer we shall then be in our Citty, Dioces, or prouince of Canterbury, to speake, propound, alledge, and affirme fully & sufficiently in writinge, whatsoeuer hereticall or erroneous matter they wil speak, propound, or object agaynst the sayde conclusions conteyned in his sayde bookes: and both to satisfye and receiue, whatsoeuer shall seeme meete and right in this behalfe by the holy institutions and ordinaunces.

And for so muche as this matter depending yet vndetermined and vndiscussed, nothing ought to be attempted or renewed: we charge you that by this our authority, you inhibite and forbid all and euery one so to preach and teach hereafter. Vnto whom also we by the the tenour of these presents, do likewise forbid, that during the examination of the conclusions and bookes aforesayde, depending before vs and our Commissaryes vndiscussed, they do not presume by any meanes, without good aduise and iudgemēt, to preach, iudge, and affirme any thing to the preiudice or offēce of the sayd Lord Reynold the Byshop and if so be, you do finde any in this behalfe gayne saying or not obeying this our inhibitiō, that you do cite or cause thē peremptorily to be cited, to appeare before vs or our Commissaryes, in this behalfe appoynted, the 10 day after theyr citation, if it be a courte day or els the next courte day following, wheresoeuer we shall then be, in our City, Dioces, or prouince of Canterbury, to make further declaration by form of law of the cause of their disobediēce & to receiue such punishment as iustice and equity shall determine in that behalfe: & that by your leters you do duely certify vs or our Commissaries, what you haue done in the premisses at the day and place aforesayd: or that he which hath so executed our commaundement, do so certifie vs by his letters. Dated at our Manour of Lambeth the xxij. day of October. an. 1457 and in the 4. yeare of our translation.

This citation being directed, the Byshop vpon the sūmon thereof,*was brought, or rather came before y^e iudges and Bishops, vnto Lambeth, where the foresaid Thomas the Archbishop, with his doctors and Lawyers, were gathered together in the Archbishops Court. In which conuention also the Duke of Buckingham was present, accōpanied with the Bishop of Rochester, and of Lyncolne. What were the opiniōs and articles agaynst him objected, after in his reuocatiou shall be specified. In his answering for himselfe in such a company of the Popes frendes, albeit he coulde not preuayle, notwithstanding he stoutly defending himselfe declared many thinges worthye great commendation of learning, if learning agaynste power coulde haue preuayled.

But they on the contrary part,*with all labor and trauel, extended themselues, either to reduce him, or els to cōfound him. As here lacked no blustering wordes of terrour and threatning: so also many fayre flattering wordes and gentle persuasions, were admixt with al. Briefely, to make a short narration of a long and busy trauers, here was no stone left vnturned, no wayes vnprooued, eyther by fayre meanes to entreat him, or by terrible manasses to terrifye his mind, till at the length, he being vanquished and ouercome by the bishops, began to faynt and gaue ouer. Wherupon, by & by a recantation was put vnto him by the Byshops, which he should declare before the people. The copy of which his recantation here foloweth.

The forme and maner of the retractation of Reynold Pecocke.

IN the name of God Amen.* Before you, the most reuered Father in Christ and Lorde, the Lorde Thomas, by the grace of God, Archbishop of Canterbury, priuate of England and Legate of the Apostolicke sea, I Reynolde Pecock, vnworthy Bishop of Chichester, do purely, willyngly, simply, and absolutely, cōfesse and acknowledge, that I in times past, that is to say, by the space of these 20. yeares last past and more, haue otherwise conceiued, holdē, taught and written, as touching the Sacramentes and the Articles of y^e fayth, then the holy Church of Rome and vniuersall Church:* and also that I haue made, written, published and set forth many & diuers pernicious doctrines, bookes, workes, writings, heresy'es, contrary and agaynst the true Catholicke, and Apostolicke fayth, contayning in them, errorrs cōtrary to the Catholicke fayth, & especially these errorrs and heresies here vnder written.

- 1. First of all,* that we are not bounde by the necessitie of fayth, to beleue that our Lord Iesus Christ after his death descended into hell.
- 2. Item, that it is not necessarye to saluation to beleue in the holy Catholicke Church.
- 3. Item, that it is not necessary to saluation, to beleue the Page 710 communion of Sayntes.
- 4. Item, that it is not necessary to saluation, to affirme the body materially in the Sacrament.
- 5. Item that the vniuersall Church may erre in matters which pertain vnto fayth.
- 6. Item, that it is not necessary vnto saluation, to beleue, that that, which euery generall Councell doth vniuersally ordeine, approue, or determine, should necessarily, for the helpe of our fayth, and the saluation of soules, be approued and holden of all faythfull Christians.

Wherefore I Reynold Pecocke wretched sinner, which haue long walked in darcknesse, and now by the merciful disposition and ordinaunce of God, am reduced & brought agayne vnto the light and way of truth, and restored vnto the vnity of our holy mother the Church: renoūce and forsake all errors and heresy'es aforesayd.

Notwithstanding (godly reader) it is not to be beleued that Pecocke did so geue ouer these opinions, howsoeuer the wordes of the recantation pretend. For it is a pollicy & play of the bishops that when they do subdue or ouercome any mā, they cary him whither they list, as it were a yōūg Stere by the nose, and frame out his words for him before hand, as it were for a Parate, what he should speake vnto the people: not according to his owne will, but after theyr lust and fantasy. Neither is it to be doubted, but that thys Bishop repented him afterward of his recantation: which may easely be iudged hereby, because he was committed agayn into prison, & deteined captiue, where as it is vncertaine, whether he was oppressed with priuy and secret tyranny, and there obtained the crown of Martyrdom, or no.

The Dictionary of Thomas Gascoigne, I haue not in my handes present. But if credite be to be geuen to such as haue to vs alledged the booke,* this we may finde in the 8. Century of Iohn Bale. chapter 19. that the sayd Thomas Gascoigne in his third part of his sayd dictionary, writing of Reinold Pecocke, maketh declaration of his articles cōteining in them matter of sore heresy. First (saith he) Reynold Pecock, at Paules crosse preached openly, that the office of a Christen Prelate, chiefly aboue all other things is, to preach the word of God. That mans reason is not to be preferred before the Scriptures of the old and new Testament. That the vse of Sacraments, as they be now handled, is worse, then the vse of the lawe of nature. That Byshops which buy theyr admissions of the Bishop of Rome do sinne. That no man is bound to beleue and obey the determination of the Church of Rome. Also that the riches of Bishops, by inheritance, are the goods of the poore. Item that the Apostles themselues personally were not the makers of the Creed, & that in the same Creede, once was not the Article he went downe to hell. Item, that of the foure senses of the Scripture, none is to be taken, but the very first and proper sense. Also, that he gaue litle estimation in some poyntes, to the authority of the olde Doctors. Item, that he condemned the wilfull begging of the Friars, as a thing idle and needles. This out of Thomas Gascoigne. Leland also adding this moreouer, sayth: that he, not contented to folow the Catholicke sentence of the Church in interpreting of the Scripture, did not thinke soundly (as he iudged it) of the holy Eucharist.

At length, for these and suche other Articles, the sayde Reynold Pecocke was condemned for an hereticke by the Archbishops, and Bishops of Rosse. Lyncolne and Win|chester, with other diuines moe. Wherupon he being driuē to his recantation,* was notwithstanding deteyned still in prison. Where some say, that he was priuily made away by death.

Halle addeth that some say, his opinions to bee, that spirituall persons by Gods lawe, ought to haue no temporall possessions. Other write that he sayde, that personall tithes were not due by Gods lawe. But whatsoever the cause was, he was caused at Paules Crosse to abiure, and all his bookes brent, and he himselfe kepte in his owne house, during his naturall life. I maruell that Polydore, of this extremity of the Bishops handling, and of his Articles,* in his history, maketh no memoriall. Belike it made but little for the honestye of his great maister the Pope.

From persecution & burning in England, now out of the way, to digresse a little, to speake of forraine matters of the church of Rome: you remēber before, in y^e latter end of the Councell of Basill,* howe Eugenius was deposed. Of whose conditiōs and martiall affayres, how he made war agaynst Sfortia a famous Captaine of Italy, and what other warres he raised beside, not onely in Italy, but also in Germany, agaynst the City and Councell of Basill, I shal not need to make any long rehearsall. After his depositiō, ye heard also how Foelix duke of Sauoy was elected pope. Wherupō another great schisme folowed in the church during all the life of Eugenius.*

After his death,* his next successor was pope Nicholas the fift, who (as you before haue heard) brought so to passe with the Emperour Fredericke the third that Foelix was contented to renounce and resigne his papacy to Nicolas, and was therfore of him afterward receiued to the rowme of a Cardinall, for his submission: & Friderick for his working, was confirmed at Rome to be full Emperour,* & there crowned. an. 1451. For Emperors before they be cōfirmed & crowned by the pope, are no Emperors, but onely called kinges of Romaynes.

This Pope Nicholas here mentioned, for to get & gather great sūmes of mony, appoynted a Iubile in the yeare of our Lorde 1450. at whiche time there resorted a greater number of people vnto Rome, thē hath at any time before bene seene.* At which time, we reade in the story of Platina to haue happened, that I thought here not vnworthy to be noted for the example of the thing. As there was a great concourse of people resorting vp to the mount Uaticane to behold the Image of our Sauior, which there they had to shew to Pilgrimes,* the people being thicke going to & fro betwene the mount & the City, by chaunce a certayn Mule of the Cardinals of saynt Marke came by the way, by reason whereof the people not being able to auoyde the way, one or two falling vpon the Mule, there was such a prease and throng vpon that occasion on the bridge, that to the nū|der of two hundred bodyes of men, and three horses, were there strangled,* and on each side of the bridge many besides fell ouer into the water and were drowned.

By meanes of which occasiō, the Pope afterward caused the smal houses to be plucked downe, to make the way broder. And this is the fruite that commeth by Idolatrye. Ex Platin.

In the time of this Pope,* one Mat. Palmerius wrote a booke De Angelis, in defending whereof, he was condemned by the Pope, and burned at Corna. an. 1448 Ex Tritemio.

After him succeeded Calixtus the thyrd, who amongst diuers other things ordeined both at noone and at euening the bell to tole the Aues,* as it was vsed in the popish time, to helpe the souldiours that fought agaynst the Turkes: for which cause also he ordeined the feast of the transfiguration of the Lord, solemnising it with like pardons and indulges, as was Corpus Christi day.

Also this Pope proceding contrary to the Councels of Constance and Basill,* decreed that no man should appeale from the Pope to any Councell. By whome also Sayncte Edmunde of Caunterbury with diuers other, were made Sayntes.

Next after this Calixtus,* succeeded Pius secundus, otherwise called Aeneas Syluius, who wrote the two bookes of Commentaries vpon the Councell of Basill before mētioned. This Aeneas, at the time of the writing of those hys bookes, seemed to be a man of an indifferent and tollerable iudgement and doctrine,* from the which he afterward being Pope, seemed to decline and swarue, seeking by all meanes possible, how to deface & abolish the bookes which heretofore he had written.

Sentences attributed vnto this Pius.

THE diuine nature of God may rather be comprehended by fayth,* then by disputation.

Christian fayth is to be considered, not by what reason it is proued, but from whom it proceedeth.

Neyther can a couetous man be satisfied with money, nor a learned man with knowledge.

Learning ought to be to poore men, in stead of siluer, to noble men in stead of golde, and to Princes in stead of precious stones.

An artificiall oratiō moueth fooles, but not wise men.

Suters in the Lawe, bee as Byrdes, the Courte is the bayte, the Iudges be the nettes, and the Lawyers be the Foulers.

Men are to bee geuen to dignities, and not dignities to men.

The office of a Byshoppe is heauy, but it is blessed to him that doth wel beare it.

A Bishop without learning may be likened to an Asse.

An euill Phisition destroyth bodies, but an vnlearned Priest destroyeth soules.

Mariage was taken from Priestes,* not without great reason, but with much greater reason it ought to be restored agayne.

Page 711The like sentence to this he vttereth in his second book of the Councell of Basil before specified, saying, peradventure it were not the worst, that the most part of priestes had theyr wiues: for many shoulde be saued in Priestly mariage, whiche nowe in vnmaryed Priesthoode are damned. The same Pius also, as Celius reporteth, dissolued certayne orders of Nunnes, of the order of S. Briget and S. Clare, bidding them to depart out, that they should burne no more, nor couer a Harlotte vnder the vesture of Religion.

This Pius, if he had brought so much piety and godlinesse, as he brought learning vnto his Popedome, had excelled many Popes that went before him.

It shall not be impertinent here to touch, what the said Eneas called Pius, the Pope, writeth touchinge the peace of the church, vnto Gaspee Schlick, the Emperors Chaūcellor, in his 54. Epistle.

All men do abhorre and detest schisme. The way to remedye this euill Charles the French king hath shewed vs both safe and briefe,* which is, that princes or their Oratours should conuent &c assemble together in some cōmon place, where they may cōclude vpon matters amongst themselues. To bring this to passe, it were needfull, writinges to be sent agayne to all Kynges and Princes, to send theyr Oratours to Strawes borow, or to Constance, with theyr full authority: there to entreate of matters appertayning to the peace of the Church.* Neyther woulde it require so great expenses: Forasmuch as we see the yere before 300. gildernes to be sufficient. Constantine the Emperour bestowed not much more in the congregation of the Councell of Nice. And this way could not be stopped: neyther could the Pope or the Councell withstād it, or make excuse: as though this might not easily be done without them. For why? the secular princes may conuent and assemble together, will they, nill they: and yet notwithstanding, vnity may there be concluded.* For he should be an vndoubted Pope, whom all Princes would obey. Neyther do I see any of the clergy so constant to death, which wil suffer Martirdom either for the one part or the other. Al we lightly hold that faith which our princes hold, which if they would worship Idols, we would also do the same, & not onely deny the Pope, but God also, if the secular power strayn vs thereunto, for charitye is waxed colde, and all fayth is gone. Howsoever it be, let vs all desire and seeke for peace, the whiche peace, whether it come by a councell, or by assemblye of Princes, call it what you will, I care not: for we stand not vpon the terme, but vpon the matter. Call breade if you will, a stone, so you geue me to asswage my hunger. Whether you call it a Councell or a conuenticle, or an assembly or a congregation, or a synagogue, that is no matter, so that schisme may be excluded and peace established.

Thus much out of the Epistle of Pius.

*By this may it appeare, of what sentence and minde this Pius was in y^e time of the Councell of Basill, before he was made Pope. But as our common prouerbe sayth, honors chaungeth maners, so it happeneth with this Pius, who after he came once to be Pope, was much altered from that he was before. For where as before he preferred generall Councils before the Pope, nowe being Pope, he did decree that no man should appeale from the high Byshop of Rome: to any generall Councell.

And likewise for priestes mariage, where as before he thought it best to haue theyr wiues restored,* yet afterward he altered his mind otherwise: In so much that in his book intreating of Germany, and there speaking of the noble city of August, by occasion he inueyed agaynst a certayne Epistle of Hulderike once bishop of the sayd City, written agaynst the constitution of the single life of priests. Wherby it appeareth how the minde of this Pius was altered frō that it was before. This Epistle of Hulderick is before expressed at large in the pag. 137.

Here also might I touch something concerning the discord betwixt this Aeneas Syluius and Diotherus, Archbish. of Mentz, and what discorde was styrrd vp in Germany vpon the same betwene Frederick the Palatine, and duke of Wittenberge, with others, by the occasion whereof, besides the slaughter of many, the City of Mentz, which was free before, lost theyr freedome, and became seruile.

The causes of the discord betwixt Pope Pius and Diotherus, were these.

First, because that Diotherus would not consent vnto him in the imposition of certaine tallages and taxes, within his country.

Secondly, for that Diotherus would not be boūd vnto him, requiring that the said Diotherus being prince Electour, should not call the other Electors together, wythout hys licence that is, without the licence of the Bishop of Rome.

And thirdly, because Diotherus would not permit to the Popes Legates, to conuocate his Clergy together after theyr owne lust.* This Pope Pius began his lea, about the yere of our Lord. 1458.

After this Pius secundus, succeded Paulus secūdus, a pope wholly set vpon his belly and ambition, and not so muche voyd of all learning,* as the hater of all learned men. Thys Paulus had a daughter begotten in fornication, which because he sawe her to be had in reproch, for that she was got ten in fornication, began (as the storyes reporte) to repent him of the law of the single life of priestes, and went aboute to reforme the same, had not death preuented him. Ex Stanislao Rutheno.

After this Paulus, came Sixtus the fourth, whiche builded vp in Rome a stewes of both kindes, getting therby no small reuenues and rents vnto the church of Rome. This Pope amongst his other actes,* reduced the yeare of Iubely from the 50. vnto the 25. He also instituted the feast of the Conception, and of the presentation of Mary & of Anna her mother, and Ioseph. Also he canonised Bonauenture, and S. Fraunces for Sayntes.

By this Sixtus also, beades were brought in, and instituted to make our Ladyes Psalter, thorowe the occasion of one Alanus and his order, whome Baptista maketh mention of in thys verse. Hi filo insertis numerant sua murmura baccis. That is, these menne putting theyr beades vpon a string number theyr prayers. This Sixtus the Pope made xxxij. Cardinals in his time, whom Petrus Ruerius, was the first,* who for that time that he was Cardinall, which was but two yeares, spent in luxurious ryot, wasted and consumed, 2, hundred thousand Floreines and was left 60000. in debt. Wesellus Groningensis, in a certayne Treatise of his, de Indulgentijs papalibus, writing of thys Pope Sixtus, reporteth this, that at the requeste of the foresayde Peter Cardinall, and of Ierome his brother the sayd Pope Sixtus permitted and graunted vnto the whole family of the Cardinall of S. Lucy, in the iij. hoate monethes of sommer, Iune, Iuly, and August (a horrible thing to be spoken) free leaue and liberty to vse Sodomitry, with this clause, Fiat vt petitur: That is, be it as it is asked.

Next after this Sixtus,* came Innocentius the eight as rude and as farre from all learning, as his predecessor was before him. Amongst the noble factes of this Pope, this was one,* that in the towne of Polus apud Aequicolos, he caused 8. men and 6. women, with the Lord of the place to be apprehended and taken, and iudged for hereticks, because they sayd that none of them was the vicare of Christ which came after Peter, but they which folowed onely the pouerty of Christ.* Also he condemned of heresy, George the king of Boheme, and depriued him of his dignity, and also of his kingdome, and procured his whole stocke to be vtterly reiected and put downe, geuing his kyngdome to Mathias king of Panonia.

Now from the Popes to descend to other estates, it remayneth likewise somewhat to write of the Emperours incident to this time, with matters and greuaunces of the Germaines, as also of other princes, first beginning with our troubles & mutations here at home, perteing to the ouerthrow of this King Henry and of his seate nowe following, to be shewed. And briefly to cōtract long proces of much tumult and busines,* into a short narration, here is it to be remēbred, which partly before was signified, how af'ter y^e death of the Duke of Glocester, mischiefes came in by heapes vpon the king and his realm. For after the geuing away of Angeow,* and Mayne to the Frenchmen, by y^e vnfortunate mariage of Queen Margaret aboue mentioned, the sayd frenchmen perceiuing now by the death of y^e duke of Glocester, the stay and pillar of this common wealth to be decayed, and seing moreouer the harts of the nobility, amōg themselues to be deuided, foreslacked no time, hauing such an open way into Normandy, that in short time they recouered the same, & also gate Gascoigne, so that no more now remayned to Englād, of al the parts beyond y^e sea but onely Calice. Neither yet did all the calamity of y^e realme onely rest in this: For the king now hauing lost his frendly vncle,* as the stay & staffe of his age, whiche had brought him vp so faythfully from his youth, was now therby the more open to his enemies, & they more emboldened, so set vpon him: As appeared first by Iacke Cade, the Kentishe Captayne, who encamping first in Blackheath, afterward aspired to Londō, and had the spoyle therof, the king being driuen into Warwickshyre. After the suppressing of Cade, ensued not long after the duke of York, who being accompanied with 3. Erles, set vpon the king next to S. Albons where the king was taken in the field captiue, & the Duke of York was by Parliamēt declared protector, which was Page 712 in the yeare of our Lord 1453. After this folowed long diuision and mortal warre betwene the two houses of Lancaster and Yorke, continuing many yeares. At length about the yeare of our Lord 1459,* the Duke of Yorke was slayne in battell by the Queene, neare to the towne of Wakefield, and with him also his sonne Earle of Rutlande. By the which Queene also shortly after, in y^e same yeare, were discomfited the Earle of Warwicke and Duke of Northfolk, to whom the keeping of the king was committed by the Duke of Yorke, and so the Queene agayne deliuered her husband.

After this victory obtained, the Northren men aduaūced not a litle in pride and courage, began to take vpon thē great attemptes, not onely to spoyle and robbe Churches, and religious houses, & villages, but also were fully entēded partly by themselues, partly by the inducemēt of theyr Lords and Captaynes, to sacke, waste, and vtterly to subuert the City of London, and to take the spoyle therof: and no doubt (•ayth my history) woulde haue proceeded in thyr cōceiued gredy intēt, had not y^e oportune fauor of God prouided a speedy remedy. For as these mischiefes were in bruljng, sodenly commeth the noble Prince Edward vnto Lōdon, w^t a mighty army,* the 27. day of February, who was the sonne and heire to duke of Yorke aboue mentioned, accompanied with the Earle of Warwicke, and diuers moe. King Henry in the meane time, with his victory, went vp to York: when as Edward being at London, caused there to be proclaymed certayn articles concerning his title to y^e crowne of England, which was the 2. day of March.

Wherupon, the next day following, the Lords both tēporall & spirituall being assēbled together, the sayd articles were propounded, and also well approued. The fourth day of the sayd moneth of March, after a solemne generall procession (according to the blinde superstition of those dayes) the Bishop of Exceter made a Sermon at Paules Crosse, wherin he commended and proued by manifold euidēces, the title of Prince Edward to be iust and lawfull, aunswering in the same, to all obiections whiche might be to the contrary.

*This matter being thus discussed, Prince Edward accompanied with the Lordes spirituall & temporall, & with much concourse of people, rode y^e same day to Westminster Hall, and there by the full consent, as well of the Lordes, as also by the voyce of all the Commons, tooke his possession of the Crowne, & was called K. Edward the fourth.

These thinges thus accomplished at London, as to such a matter apperteined, and preparation of money sufficiently being ministred of the people and commons, wyth most ready and willing mindes, for the necessary furniture of his warres: he with the Duke of Northfolke, and Earle of Warwicke; and Lord Fauconbrige, in all speedy wise, tooke his iourney toward king Henry: who being now at Yorke, and forsaken of the Londoners, had all his refuge onely reposed in the Northren men.

When king Edward with his army had past ouer the Riuer of Trent and was commē nere to Ferebrig: where also the host of king Henry was not far of,* vpō Palm sonday, betwene Ferebrig and Tadcaster, both the armyes of the Southren and Northren men, ioyned together battell. And althoughe at the first beginning, diuers horsemen of king Edwardes side, turned theyr backes, and spoyled the king of cariage & victuals, yet the courageous prince, with his Captaynes little discouraged therewith, fiercely and manfully set on theyr aduersaryes. The whiche battell on both sides was so cruelly fought, that in the same conflict were slayne to y^e nūber, as is reported, beside men of name, of 30000. of the poore commons. Notwithstanding, the cōquest fell on king Edwardes part,* so that king Henry hauing lost all, was forced to flye into Scotland, where also he gaue vp to the Scottes, the towne of Barwicke after he had raigned 38. yeares and a halfe.

The clayme and title of the Duke of Yorke, and after him,* of Edward his sonne, put vp to the Lords & cōmons, wherby they chalenged the crowne to the house of York, is thus in the story of Scala mundi, word for word, as hereunder is conteyned.

The title of the house of Yorke to the crowne of England.

EDward the 3. right king of Englande, had issue first prince Edward the 2. W. Hatfield. 3. Lionell, 4. Iohn of Gaunt. &c. Prince Edward had Richard the 2. which dyed without issue,*W. Hatfelde dyed without issue. Lionel duke of Clarence, had issue lawfully begot, Phillip his onely daughter and heyre, the which was lawfully coupled to Edmund Mortimer, Earle of March, and had issue law fully begotte, Roger Mortimer Eare of March and heyre: Whych Roger had issue Edmund Earle of March, Roger, Anne, and Alienor, Edmund and Alienor died without issue, and the sayd Anne by lawfull matrimonye was coupled vnto Richard Earle of Cambridge, the sonne of Edmund of Lāgley,*who had issue & lawfully bare Richard Plantagenet now Duke of Yorke, Iohn of Gaunte gate Henry, which vnrightfully entreated king Richard: then being alieue Edmund Mortimer Earle of Marche, sonne of the sayde Philip, daughter to Lionell To the which Richard duke of Yorke, and sonne to Anne, daughter to Roger Mortimer Earle of March, sonne and heyre to the sayde Philip daughter and heyre to the sayd Lionel, the 3. sonne of king Edward the 3. the right & dignity of the crowne apperteyned & belonged, afore any issue of the sayd Iohn of Gaunt. Notwithstanding the sayd title of dignity of the sayde Richard of Yorke, the sayd Richard desiring the wealth, rest, and prosperity of England, agreeth and consenteth that king Henry 6. should be had and taken for king of England, during his naturall life from thys time without hurt of his title.

Wherefore the king vnderstanding the sayd title of the sayde duke to be iust, lawfull, true and sufficient, by the aduise and assent of the Lordes spirituall and temporall, and the commons in the Parliament, and by the authoritye of the same Parliament declareth, approueth, ratifieth, confirmeth, accepteth the sayde title for iust, good, lawfull and true, and there unto geueth his assent and agreement of his free will and liberty. And ouer that, by the sayde aduise and authority, declareth, calleth, stablisheth, affirmeth and reputeth the sayd Richard of Yorke very true and rightfull heyre to the crowne of England and Fraunce: and that all other statutes and acts made by any of the Henryes late, contrary to this aduise, be annulled, repelled, damned, cancelled, voyd, and of no force or effect. The king agreed and consented, that the sayd Duke and hys heyres shall after his naturall life enioy the crowne. &c. Also, that all sayinges and doinges agaynst the duke of Yorke shall be hygh treason, and all actes of Parliamentes contrary to this principall act, be voyd and of none effect. &c.

And thus much for the reign of king Henry the 6.* Who now lacked his vncle and protector, Duke of Glocester, about him. But commonly the lacke of such frendes, is neuer felt before they be missed.

In the time of this king was builded the house in Lōdon called Leadē hall,* fōūded by one Simon Eyre, Maior once of the sayd City of London. an. 1445.

Also the standard in cheape builded by Iohn Wels, an. 1442. the Conduite in Fleetstreet by William Castfield. an 1438. Item, Newgate builded by goods of Rich. Whittington, an. 1422.

Moreouer the sayde Henry 6. founded the Colledge of Eton, and another house hauing then the title of S. Nicolas in Cambridge, now called the kinges Colege. Ex Scal. mundi.

In the reigne of this Henry 6. it is not be passed ouer in silence which we finde noted in the Parliament rolles how that Lewes Archbishop of Rhoen, after the death of the late Bishop of Eley, had graūted vnto him by y^e popes Bulles, during his life, all y^e profites of the sayd bishopricke by the name of the administratour of the said Bishopricke, Lewes the foresayde Archbishop sheweth his Buls to the king, who vtterly reiected his Bulles. Notwithstanding for his seruice done in Fraunce, the king graunted to hym the administration aforesaid, the which to all intents at the petition of the sayd Lewes, should be affirmed to bee of as great force as though he were bishop, touching profits, liberties and hability.

Neither agayn is here to be ouerpast a certayn tra gicall Acte done betweene Easter and Whitsontide of a false Britone,* an. 1427. Which murdered a good widdow in her bed (who had brought him vp of almes, without Algate in the suburbes of London) and bare away all that she had, & afterward he tooke succor of holy church at S. Georges in Southwarke: but at the last he tooke the crosse & forswore the kings land. And as he went his way, it happened him to come by the same place where he had done that cursed deed, and women of the same parish, came out with stones and cannell dong, and there made an end of him in the hye streete, so that he went no further, notwithstandinge the Constables and other men also which had hym vnder gouernaunce to conduct him forward: for there was a great company of them,* so that they were not able to withstande them.

KIng Edward,* after his conquest and victorie achieued agaynst king Henry, returned again to London, where, vpon the Uigil of S. Peter and Paul, being on Sonday, he was crowned Page 713 king of England, & raigned 22. yeares, albeit not without great disquitnes, and much perturbation in his reigne.

Queene Margaret hearing how her husband was fled into Scotland, was also fayne to flye the land, and went to her father Duke of Angeow: From whence the next yeare following she returned again to renue warre against king Edward, with small succor and lesse lucke: For being encountred by the Earle of Warwicke, about Nouember she was driuen to the seas agayne, and by tempest of weather, was driuen into Scotland.

*In this yere we read that king Edward in the cause of a certayne widow for rape, sate his owne person in Westminster hall vpon his owne Bench, discussing her cause. Ex Scal. mundi.

The yeare folowing, king Henry issuing out of Scotland with a sufficient power of Scottes and Frenchmen came into the Northcuntry to recouer the crowne,* vnto whom the Lord Radulph Percy, & Lord Radulph Grey flying from king Edward,* did adioyn, themselues: but the Lord so disposing, king Henry with his power was repulsed in the battaile of Exham by the Lord Mountacute, having then the rule of the North: where the Duke of Somerset, Lord Hungerford, Lord Rosse with certayne other were taken. The Lord Radulph Percy was slayne, the residue fled. Albeit the history of Scal. mūdi, referreth this battel to the yeare 1464. the 15. day of May. In the which moneth of May, were beheaded the duke of Somerset, Lorde Hungerford, Lord Rosse, L. Philip Wentworth, L. Tho. Husly, L. Tho. Findern, beside 21. other belonging to the retinue and household of king Hēry 6. Queene Margaret finding no resting place here in England, took her progres agayne from whence she came, learning in her own country to drinke that drinke, which she her selfe had brued here in England.

And not long after, the next yeare, an. 1465. on the day of S. Peter and Paule, king Henry being founde & knowne in a wood by one Cantlow (as they say) was arested by the Earle of Warwicke, and at last of a king made prisoner in the tower of London.

In this meane time, king Edward (after the motion of mariage for him being made, and first the Lady Margaret sister to Iames the 4. K. of Scottes thought vpon, but that motion taking no effect, afterward the Lady Elizabeth sister to Henry king of Castelle, being intended, but she being vnder age, the Earle of Warwick turning then his legation and voiage to the French king Lewes the II. to obteyne Lady Bona, daughter of the duke of Sauoy, and sister to Carlot the French Queen, and obtaining the same) had cast fauour vnto one Elizabeth Grey,* widow of Syr Iohn Grey knight, slain before in the battell of S. Albōs, daughter to the Duches of Bedford, and Lord Riuers, and first went about to haue her to his concubine: But she, as being vnworthy (as she sayde) to be the wife of such a high personage, so thinking her selfe to bee to good to be his concubine, in such sort wanne the kings hart, that incontinent, before the returne of the Earle of Warwicke, he married her:* at the which mariage were no moe then onely the Duches of Bedford, two gentle women, the priest & clark. Upō this so hasty & vn lucky mariage, ensued no litle trouble to the king, much bloudshed to the realme, vndoing almost to all her kyndred, and finally confusion to the K. Edwardes 2. sonnes, which both were declared afterward to be bastards and also depriued of theyr liues: For the Earle of Warwicke, who had bene the faythfull frend, and chiefe mayntainer before of the king, at the hearing of this maryage, was therwith so greuously moued and chaffed in hys mind, that he neuer after sought any thing more, then how to worke displeasure to the king, and to put him beside his cussion. And although for a time he dissembled his wrathfull mood, till he might spye a time conuenient, and a world to set forward his purpose, at last finding occasion somewhat seruing to his mind,* he breaketh his hart to his two brethren: to witte, the Marques Mountacute, & the Archbishop of Yorke, conspiring with them how to bring hys purpose about. Then thought he also to proue a farre of, the mind of the duke of Clarence, king Edwards brother, & likewise obtained him, geuing also to him his daughter in Mariage.

This matter being thus prepared agaynst the kyng, the first flame of this cōspiracy began to appeare in y^e north country. Where the Northrenmen in short space gathering theselues in an open rebellion, & finding certaines of their wicked purpose, came down from Yorke toward London. Against whom was appoynted by the king. W. lord Harbert Earle of Penbroke, with the Lord Stafford, and certayne other Captaynes, to encounter. The Yorkeshyre mē geuing the ouerthrow first to the lord Stafford, thē to the Earle of Penbrok and his company of Welch mē, at Banbery field, at last ioyning together with the army of the Earle of Warwicke, and Duke of Clarence, in the dead of the night, secretly stealing one the kinges field at Wolney by Warwick,* killed the watch, and tooke the king prisoner, who first being in the castle of Warwicke, then was conueyed by night to Middleham Castle in Yorkeshyre, vnder the custody of the Archbishop of Yorke, where he hauinge loose keeping and liberty to go on hunting, meeting wyth syr William Standley, syr Thomas of Brough, and other his frendes, was to good for his keepers, and escaped the hands of his enemies, and so came to York, where he was well receiued: from thēce to Lankester, where he met with the Lord Hastings his Chamberlayne, well accompanied, by whose helpe he came safe to London.

After this tumult, when reconciliation could not come to a perfect peace & vnity,* although much labor was made by y^e nobility, the Earle of Warwick raiseth vp a new war in Lincolnshyre, the captaine wherof was Sir Rob. wels knight, who shortly after being taken in battell wyth hys father, and sir Thomas Dunocke were beheaded, the residue casting away their coates, ran away and fled, geuing y^e name of the field,* called Losecoat field. The erle of Warwicke after this put out of comfort and hope to preuayle at home, fled out of England. An. 1470. first to Calice, then to Lewes the French king, accompanied with the Duke of Clarence. The fame of y^e Earle of Warwicke and of his famous actes, was at that time in great admiration aboue measure, and so highly fauoured, that both in England & Fraunce all men were glad to behold his personage. Wherefore the comming of this Earle & of the Duke of Clarence, was not a litle gratefull to the French king, and no lesse oportune to Queene Margaret, King Henryes wife, and Prince Edward her sonne, who also came to the Frenche Courte to meete and conferre together, touching their affayres: where a league betwene thē was cōcluded, & moreouer a mariage betwene Edward prince of Wales, & Anne the secōd daughter of the Erle of Warwick was wrought. Thus all things fasting luckely vpō the Erles part beside the large offers, and great promises made by the Frenche king, on the best maner, to set forwarde their purpose, the Earle hauing also intelligence by letters that the harts almost of all men went with him,* and lōged sore for his presence, so that there lacked now but onely hast with al speed possible to returne: he with the duke of Clarence wel fortified with the French nauy, set forward toward England: For so was it betwene them before decreed, that they two should proue the first venture, and then Queen Margaret with Prince Edward her sonne,* should folow after. The ariuell of y^e Earle was not so soone heard of at Dartmouth in Deuonshyre, but great cōcourse of people by thousands went to him from all quarters to receiue & welcome hym, who immediatly made proclamation in the name of kyng Henry the sixt, charging all men able to beare armour, to prepare themselues to fight agaynst Edward Duke of Yorke vsurper of the Crowne.* Here lacked no frendes, strength of men, furniture, nor pollicy conuenient for such a matter.

When king Edward (who before not passing for the matter, nor seking how, either to haue stopped his iāding, or els straight wayes to haue encountred with him before the gathering of his frendes, but passing forth the time in hunting, in hauking, in all pleasure & daliance) had knowledge what great resort of multitudes incessantly repaired more and more dayly about the Erle and the Duke began now to prouide for remedy, when it was to late. Who trusting to much to his friendes and fortune before,* dyd nowe right well perceiue what a variable and inconstant thyng the people is, & especially here of Englād, whose nature is neuer to be contēt long with the present state, but alwayes delighting in newes, seketh new variety of chaunges, eyther enuying that which stādeth, or els pitying that which is fallen. Which inconstant mutability of the light people, chaunging with the winde, and wauering with the reede, did well appeare in the course of this kinges story. For he, through the people when he was down, was exalted: now being exalted of the same, was forsaken. Wherby this is to be noted of all princes, that as there is nothing in this mutable world firme and stable: so is there no trust nor assurance to be made, but onely in the fauor of God and in the promises of his word, onely in Christ his sonne, whose only kingdome shall neuer haue ende, nor is subiecte to anye mutation.

These thinges thus passing in England on the Earles side agaynst king Edward,* he accompanied with y^e Duke of Glocester his brother, and the Lord Hastings, who had married the erle of Warwicks sister, and yet was neuer vntrue Page 714 to the king his maister: and the Lord Seales brother to the Queene, sent abroad to all his trusty frendes for furniture of able souldiors for defence of his person to w^tstand his enemies.* Whē litle rescue & few in effect would come, the king himselfe so destitute, departed to Lincolneshyre, where he perceiuing his enemyes dayly to encrease vpon him, & all the countryes about to be in a tore, making fiers & singing songs,* crying king Henry, king Henry, a Warwicke, a Warwicke, and hearing moreouer his enemyes y^e Lancastrians to be within halfe a dayes iourney of him, was aduised by his frendes to flie ouer the Sea to y^e Duke of Burgoyne, which not long before had maryed king Edwardes sister.

* Here might be thought, by the common iudgement and pollicy of man, peraduētnre that king Edward, as he had in his handes the life of king Henry of his Queene and Prince: so if hee had dispatched them out of the way, when as he might, he had not fallen into this misery: but because he tooke not the vantage, whiche time rather then godly reason gaue him, therefore that sparing pittty of hys turned now to his confusion and ruine. And certes, I suppose no lesse, but if the same case had fallen in these our pittlesse dayes, in which charity now waxeth vtterly colde, and humanitye is almost forgotten, the occason of suche a tyme should not be so neglected. But let vs here note and learn, how godly simplicity alwayes in the end of thinges gayneth more then mans pollicy, forsomuche as man worketh with the one, but God worketh with the other.

And so farre is it of, that the euēt and successe of thinges be gouerned by mans aduised pollicy, or vnaduised affection in this world,* that that is iudged to be weaker that florisheth in man, then that which is cast downe in the Lord: as in the double case of both these kings may wel appeare. And first let vs consider the case of king Edward who being so beset and compassed with euils and distresses on euery side,* first was compelled to take the washes betwene Lincolneshyre and Lynne (which was no lesse daungerous to his life then it was vnsemely for his estate.) Being come to Linne, in what perill was he there, through the doubtfull mutabilitye of the townes men, if he had beene known to his enemyes? And how could he be but known, if he had taried any space? But though men and frends forsook him, yet the mercy of God not forsaking the life of him which shewed mercy vnto other, so prouided, that at y^e same present there was an Englishe shippe, and two hulkes of Holland ready to theyr iourney. Thus king Edward w^tout prouision, without bag or baggage, without clothsacke or male, without store of money, without rayment, saue onely apparell for warre, also without all frendes, excepte onely his brother Duke of Glocester,* the Lord Seales, & Lord Hastings, with a fewe other trustye frendes, to the number of 7. or 8. hūdreth persons tooke shipping toward Holland: at which time he was in no lesse ieoperdy almost on the sea, then he was on the land. For certayne Esterlinges hauing many shippes of warre, which lay rouing the same tune on the sea, and had done much damage the yeare before, as well to the Englishe Marchauntes, as to the French nation, spying the kinges ship, with seuen or eight gallaunt shippes made sayle after the king and hys company. The kinges shippe was good of sayle, and gate some ground,* albeit not much of the Esterlinges, that she came to the coast of Halland, before Alquemare, and there cast anker: for otherwise, being an ebbing water, they coulde not enter the hauen. The Esterlings with theyr great shippes approched as nere as they could possible come for the low water, purposing at y^e flond to obtain their pray, & so were like to do, if the Lord had not there also prouided Mounsiour de Groun ture, gouernour for Duke Charles in Holland, at that season to be personally present in the towne of Alquemare, who hearing of the ieopardy of the king,* being there at anker, prohibited the Esterlings on payne of death, not to meddle with any English men, which were the Dukes frendes and alies.

*Thus K. Edward well chastised of God for his wantonnes both by sea and land, but not vtterly geuē ouer frō his protection, escaping so many hard chaūces, was set on land with his company, who there well refreshed, & newly apparelled, were conducted to Hage.

Duke Charles at the hearing of the vnprosperous case and condition of king Edward his brother in lawe,* was greatly amased and perplexed in himself, much casting and doubting what he should do: For, being then in war with the French king, he could not well prouoke the Englishe nation agaynst him, without his manifest greuaunce and decay: neither yet could he without great shame and obloquy, leaue the king his brother in that necessity. Notwithstanding, so he demannured himselfe through fayre speach, pretending to the English men to ioyne part with y^e house of Lancaster, being himselfe partly descended of the same family by his Graundmothers side: that he both was his owne frend openly, and the kinges friend couertly, pretending that he did not, and doing that he pretended not.

Whē tidings was spred in England of king Edwards flying, innumerable people of al hands resorted to y^e Earle of Warwicke,* to take his part, agaynst K. Edward a fewe onely except of his constant friends which tooke sanctuary. Among whom was also Elizabeth his wife, who desperat almost of all comfort, tooke also sanctuaries at Westminster, where she in great penury forsakē,* was deliuered of a fayre sonne called Edw. which without all pompe was baptysed like another poore womans childe, the Godfathers being the Abbot and Prior of Westminster, the Godmother was Lady Scroope.

To make the story short, the Earle of Warwick hauing now brought all things to his appetite,* vpon the 12. day of October, rode to the Tower, which was then deliuered to him, and there tooke king Henry out of the ward, & placed him in the kinges lodging. The 25. day of the sayd moneth, the Duke of Clarence accōpanyed with the Erles of Warwick,* Shrewsbury, and the Lord Standley, with a great company, brought him in a long gown of blew veluet thorow the hye streetes of London, first to Paules Church, to offer, then to the bishops palace of London, and there he re'sumed agayne the crowne royall, an. 1471. which he did not long enioy.

After this followed a Parliament, in the whiche king Edward with all his partakers were iudged traytours,* Queene Margarete with her sonne Prince Edward, all this while was tarying for a fayre winde, thinking long belike, till she came to an euill bargayne, as it proued after. For king

Edwarde within sixe monethes after his departure out of Englande vnto the Duke of Burgoyne, whether by letters from his frendes sollicitate, or whether by his aduēturous courage incited, made instant sure to duke Charles his brother, to rescue him with such power, as he would bestow vpon him, for he was fully resolved to defer the matter and to protract the time no longer.

The Duke damped in double feare, in such a daungerous case, notwithstanding ouercome by nature and affini'ty, secretly caused to be deliuered to him 50000. Florence, & further caused foure great shippes to be appoynted for him in a haven in Zeland where it was free for al men to come. Also the same Duke had for him hired 14. shippes of the Esterlinges well appoynted, taking band of them to serue him truely, till he were landed in England, and 15. dayes after.

Thus king Edwarde being furnished but onely with 2000.* men of warre, with more lucke then hope to speede, sped his voyage into England, and landed at Rauenspur in the coast of Yorkeshyre. Although there was no way for the king with such a small company of souldiors to do any good, yet to vse pollicy, where strength did lack, first he sent forth certayne light horsemen, to proue the countrey on euery side, with persuasions, to see whether the vplandyshe people would be styrred to take king Edwards part. Perceiuing that it woulde not be, king Edwarde flyeth to hys shiftes, dissembling his purpose to be, not to clayme the crowne and kingdome, but onely to clayme the Duchy of Yorke, whiche was his owne title, and caused the same to be published. This being notified to the people, that he desired no more, but onely his iust patrimony and lineall inheritaunce, they began to be moued with mercy and compassion toward him, either to fauour him or not to resiste him, and so iourning toward Yorke, he came to Beuerly. The Marques Mountacute,* brother to the Earle of Warwicke, was then at Pomfret, to whom the Earle had sent strayght charge, with all expedition to set vpon him, or els to stop his passage: and likewise to the Citizens of Yorke and all Yorkeshyre,* to shut theyr gates and take armour agaynst him, King Edward being in the streetes, proceeded notwithstanding nere to Yorke, without resistaunce: where he required of the Citizens, to be admitted into theyr Citty. But so stode the case then, that they durst not graunt vnto him,* but contrary sent him word to approach no nearer, as beloued his owne safegarde. The desolate king was here driuen to a narow strait, who neyther could retyre backe, for the opinion of the countrey and losse of his cause: neither could goe further, for the present daunger of the City.* Wherefore vsing the same pollicy as before, with louely words, and gentle speech he desired the messengers to declare vnto the Citizens, that his comming was not to demaund the realme of England, or the title of the same but onely the Duchye of Yorke, his olde inheritaunce, and Page 715 therefore determined to set forward, neither w^t armie, nor weapō. The messēgers were not so soone within y^e gates, but he was at the gates in a manner, as soone as they. The Citizens hearing his courteous answere, and that he intended nothing to the preiudice of the king, nor of the realme, were something mitigated toward him, and began to common with him from the walles, willing him to withdrawe his power to some other place, and they would be the more ready to ayde him, at least he shoulde haue no damage by them.

Notwithstanding, he again vsed such lowly language, and deliuered so faire speach vnto them, entreating them so curteously, and saluting the Aldermen by their names, requiring at their hāds no more, but only his own towne whereof he had the name and title, that at length the Citizens, after long talke, and debating vpon the matter, partly also intised with faire and large promises,* fell to this cōuention, that if he would sweare to be true to king Henry, & gentle in entertaining his citizens, they would receiue him into the Citie.

This being concluded, the next morning, at the entring of the gate, a priest was ready to say Masse, in y^e which, after receiuing of the sacrament, the king receiued a solemne othe, to obserue the ii. articles afore agreed. By reason of which othe so rashly made, & as shortly brokē, and not lōg after punished (as it may wel be thought) in his posterity, he obtained y^e city of Yorke. Where he, in short time forgetting his oth to make al sure, set in garrisons of armed soldiours. Furthermore, perceiuing all things to be quiet, and no stirre to be made against him, he thought to foreslacke no oportunitie of time, and so made forward toward Lōdon, leauing by y^e way the Marques Mountacute, which lay then with his army at Pomfrete, on the right hande, not fully foure miles distant from his campe:* and so returning to the hye waye againe, wente forwarde without anye stirring to the towne of Notingham: where came to him, sir W. Parre, sir Thomas of Borough, sir Tho. Montgomery, & diuers else of his assured frends, with their aydes, which caused him by proclamation, to stand to his own title of king Edward the fourth, sayeng that they would serue no man, but a king. At the fame here of being blowne abroad, as y^e Citizēs of Yorke were not a little offended (& that worthely) so frō other townes and cities, Lords and noble men began to fall vnto him, thinking with thēselues, that the Marques Mountagew either fauoured his cause, or was afraide to encounter w^t the mā.* Howsoeuer it was, K. Edward being now more fully furnished at al points, came to y^e towne of Leicester, and there hearing that y^e earle of Warwicke accompanied with y^e earle of Oxford, were together at Warwicke, with a great power, minding to set on the Earle, he remooued from thence his army, hoping to geue him battaile. The Duke of Clarence in the meane time, about London had leuied a great hoste cōming toward y^e earle of Warwicke, as he was by the Earle appointed. But when the Earle sawe the Duke to linger the time, he began to suspecte (as it fell out in deede) that he was altered to his brethrenes part.* The king auansing forward his host, came to Warwicke, where he found all the people departed. Frō thence he moued toward Couentry, where the Earle was: vnto whome the next day after, he boldly offered battaile. But the Earle expecting y^e Duke of Clarence his cōming, kept him within the walles. All this made for the king. For he hearing that his brother, Duke of Clarence was not farre off, comming toward him with a great army, rayased hys campe, and made toward him, either to entreate, or else to encounter with his brother. When ech hoste was in sight of the other, Richard Duke of Gloucester, brother to thē both, as arbitour betweene thē, first rode to the one, then to the other. Whether all this was for a face of a matter made,* it is vncertaine. But hereby both the brethren, leaning all army and weapon aside, first louingly and familiarly commoned: after that, brotherly and naturally ioined together. And that fraternall amitie, by proclamation also was ratified, and put out of all suspition.

Then was it agreed betwene y^e iij. brethren to attempt the earle of Warwicke, if he likewise would be reconciled; but he crieng out shame vpō the Duke of Clarence, stode at vtter defiance. From thence king Edward so strongly furnished, & daily encreasing, taketh his way to Lōdon. Where, after it was knowne y^t the duke of Clarence was come to his brethren, much feare fell vpō the Londoners, casting with thēselues what was best to do. The sodaynues of time permitted no long cōsultation. There was at London the same time, the Archbishop of Yorke, brother to y^e Earle of Warwicke, and the duke of Somerset, wyth other of K. Henries counsaile to whom the earle had sent in cōmaundement a litle before, knowing the weaknes of the Citie, that they should keepe the Citie from their enemies ij. or iij. dayes, and he would follow with all possible speede, with a puissaunt army. Who, accordyng to their cōmaundement, defended the Citie with all their power, but yet to litle purpose:.* For the Citizens consulting with thēselues for their owne most indēnitie, hauing no walles to defend thē, thought best to take that way, which seemed to thē most sure & safe, & therfore concluded to take part with kyng Edward. This was not so soone knowne abroad, but the cōminaltie rāue out by heapes to meete kyng Edward, & to salute him as their king. Wheupon the Duke of Somerset,.* with other of kyng Henries Coūsaile, hearing therof, & wonderyng at the sodayne chaunge of the world, to shift for themselues, fled away & left there kyng Henry alone: who the same day beyng caused by the Archbyshop of Yorke,.* to ryde about London like a kyng, was before night made captiue, and reduced agayne to the Tower.

It was not long after these thyngs thus done at London, but the cōming of the Earle of Warwicke was heard of, who thinking to preuēt mischiefes with making speede came a litle to late & missed of his purpose. In the Earles army were Iohn Duke of Exceter, Edmūd Earle of So'merset, Iohn Earle of Oxford, and Marques Moūtacute the Earles brother. The Earle had now passed a great part of his iourney, whē he hearing newes of the world so chaūged, & of the captiuitie of king Henry, was not a litle thereat appalled in his mynde: wherfore he stayd with his army at S. Albons,.* to see what way further to take. And for somuch as there was no other remedy, but either he must yeld, or one conflict must finish the matter: he remoued to Barnet x. myles from S. Albons.

Against him set forth K. Edward, well appointed with a strong army of piked & able persons, with artillerie, engines & instrumētes meete for the purpose: bringing with him also kyng Hēry. On Easter euē he came to Barnet, & there he embattelled himselfe.* In the mornyng vpon Easter day the battaile begā, and fiercely cōtinued almost till noone, with murder on ech side much doubtfull, till both partes were almost wery with fightyng and murderying. King Edward thē desirous to see an end, of or on, with a great crew of new fresh souldiours, set vpon his weries enemies. Wherby the Earles mē, although encouraged w^t wordes of their captaine, stoutly fought, but they sore woū'ded & weries, could not lōg hold out. The Earle rushing into the midst of his enemies, ventured so farre, that he could not be rescued: where he was strikē downe & slayne, and there lay he.* Marques Mountacute thinkyng to succour his brother whō he saw to be in great ieopardy, was likewise ouerthrowne and slaine. After that Richard Neuell, Earle of Warwike, & his brother were gone, the rest fled, & many were takē. The number of them which were in this field slayne, are iudged about x. thousand, as Polydore Virgill reciteth. Fabian numbred of them that were slayne, but xv. hundreth. The Duke of Somerset & Earle of Oxford thinkyng to flye to Scotland, turned to Iasper Earle of Pēbroke in Wales. The Duke of Exceter hardly escaped to Westminster, & there tooke sanctuary. For the death of the Earle of Warwike the K. was not so glad, as he was sory for the Marques Mountacute, whō he tooke to be his frend. The corpes of these two were brought to the Church of Paules, where they lay open in two coffins two dayes, and then were interred. Ex Polyd. & alijs.

In the narration of this Hystory,.*Polydore Virgill, whom Hall followeth word for word, doth some deale differ from Rob. Fabian. Neither doe I doubt, but both these had their authors, by whō they were directed. Notwithstādyng this I maruaile, that Polydore writyng of so many thynges which he neuer saw, doth not vouchsafe to cite vnto vs those writers of whom he borrowed. And more do I meruaile or rather lamēt, if it be true that I haue heard, that he not onely nameth no author vnto vs, but also burned an heape of our English stories vnknownen, after the finishyng of his, in the dayes of kyng Henry the 8. But now to our text agayne.

All this while yet Queene Margaret with yoūg prince Edward her sonne,* was scarce come ouer, beyng long let with contrary windes, who at length in the moneth of Aprill arriuyng at Waymouth in Dorsetshire, & hearing the sorrowfull tidings of these thinges lately happened to her husbād, and to the Earle of Warwike and his brother, and of the prosperous successe of K. Edward: was so dismayd diquieted, and pierced with sorrow, seyng all things contrary to her expectatiō, so to frame agaynst her, that she fared and tooke on with her selfe, lamenting her husbād, bewayling Page 716 hir sonne, cursing her comming, and crieng out of Fortune, as though blinde Fortune were she that gouerneth times and tides,* rewarding iust punishments to vniust deseruings of men, and not the secret power and terrible iustice of almighty God. Such was then the impacieny of that Queene, being not able to beare the vehemency of her passion (who rather should haue sorrowed the dolorous death of Duke Humfrey, whome before she neglected,* but now she lacked) that her senses failed, her spirites were taken, her speach decayed, and life almost gone, she fell to the ground as one that would rather dye, then liue. In this desolate case, Queene Margaret learning now to know her friends frō her foes, when it was too late,* fraught ful of heauines, without solace, or hope of remedy, she with her son & her company departed for her next refuge, to a Monastery of Monkes called Beaulie in Hainshire, there to take sanctuary, & priuiledge of y^e house.

Yet all harts were not sound nor subdued in England, especially Edmond Duke of Somerset, with Lord Iohn his brother, Thomas Courtney, Earle of Deuonshire, Iasper earle of Pembroke,* Lord Wenlocke, Iohn Longscrother, being Prior of the Knights of Rhodes in Saint Iohns. These hearing of y^e Queenes returne, with speede resorted to her, by whome she being somewhat quickened in her spirits, and animated to warre, began to take some hart, and to follow their counsaile: which was, in all the whote hast, to renew warre against King Edward, being now vnprouided, by reason his army was now dispersed, and chieftest of his souldiours wasted. Heere great hope of victory was shewed, great promises made. Although the Queenes mind was, beeing more carefull for the yong Prince, then for her selfe, to sende him ouer into France, before some prooffe of triall made: yet following the contrary counsaile of them, and partly cut off by shortnesse of time, which required haste, she began with all expedition to gather power. Likewise Iasper Earle of Pembroke posted into Wales to do the same.

King Edward hauing intelligence of all these doings, first sendeth out certain light horsemē, to espy abroad thorough the West parts, what waies his enemies did take. In the meane time, he vsing al celeritie to meete them before they came to London, gathered a power, such as hee could make about Lōdon, and first cōmeth to Abyngdon: from thence to Marlebridge, hearing that y^e Queene was at Bathe, thinking to encounter with them, before they diuerted into Wales to the Earle of Pembroke, whether he thought (as they in deede intended) that they woulde take. But y^e Queene vnderstanding the king to be so nie, remoueth from Bathe to Bristow, sending word in the meane while to y^e citizens of Gloucester, that they would graunt her leaue safely to passe by their Citie. Which whē it could not be obtained, with her army she departeth frō Bristow to Teukesbery: where the D. of Somerset knowing king Edward to be at hand at his very backe, willed the Queene there to stay, & in no wise to flie backward for certaine doubts that might be cast. Although this coūsaile was against the consent of many other captaines, who thought it best rather to draw aside while the Earle of Pembroke with his army were with them associate: yet the mind of the Duke preuailed.* The place was prefixed, the field pitched, the time of battaile came, the King was loked for: who being within one mile of Tewkesbury, with like industry & policy, as his enemies had done, disposed his army likewise in their aray. This celeritie of the King taking the time,* was to him great aduantage: who otherwise, if he had differed, till they had conioined with the Earle of Pembroke, had put the matter in great hazard. Such a matter it is to take a thing in time.

Of this battayle Hall this reporteth, adding more then Polidore, y^t the D. of Somerset, although he was strögly intrenched, yet through y^e occasion or policie of the Duke of Glouc•ster, which had the fore ward of the kings part, a little reculing back, followed the chase, supposing that y^e Lord Wenlock, who had y^e middle ward, would haue followed hard at his backe. The duke of Gloucester, whether for shame, rather then of policie, espieng his aduātage, sodenly turned face to his enemies. Whereupon the cōtrary part was estsoones discomfited, and so much the more, because they were separate frō their company. Tho Duke of Somerset not a litle aggyeued at this so vnfortunate case, returneth to y^e middle ward, where he seeing the L. Wenlocke abiding still, reuileth him, and calleth him traytour; and with his are striketh the braine out of his head. Thus much addeth Hall besides Polydor, but sheweth not his author where he had it. Polydore writing of this conflict, writeth no more but this, that y^e Queenes army being ouerset with the number and multitude of their enemies, and she hauing no fresh souldiours to furnish y^e field was at last ouermatched, and for y^t most part slaine or taken. In which battaile were named to be slaine, y^t Earle or Deuonshire,* the Lord Wenlocke, Lord Iohn Duke of Somerset his brother, beside other. Among thē that were taken, was Queene Margaret foūd in her chariot almost dead for sorow, Prince Edward, Edmund D. of Somerset, Iohn Prior of S. Iohns, with xx. other knights: all which were beheaded within ij. dayes after, the Queene only and the yong prince excepted. Which prince Edward being then brought to the Kings presence, was demaunded of him, how he durst be so bold to stand in battaile against him. To this Edward Hall addeth more, and saith: that after the field was finished, the King made Proclamation, that whosoever would bring Prince Edward to him,* should haue annuitie of an C. li. during his life, and the Princes life to be saued. Whereupon sir Rich. Croftes not mistrusting the kings promise, brought forth his prisoner, &c. And so the king demanding of the Prince (as is said) how he durst so presumptuously enter this Realme with his banner displayed against him, he answered, sayeng: that he came to recouer his fathers kingdome and inheritance from his grandfather and father, to him descending: whereat (said Polydor) the King with his hande disdainingly thrust him from him. Other say that the king stroake him on the face with his gauntlet.

At the speaking of these words was present George Duke of Clarence,* Richarde Duke of Gloucester, and the Earle Lord William Hastings. Who vpon the same, vncourteously falling vpon the Prince, did slaye hym. Queene Margaret being brought prisoner to London, was afterwarde raunsomed of hir father Duke of Angeow, for a great summe of money which he borrowed of the French King, and for the paiment therof, was faine to yeeld vnto him the title of the kingdome of Sicile, and Naples, &c. King Edward for these prosperous warres, rendred to God his hartie thanks,* and caused publicly through his realme, solemne processions to be kepte three daies together. And thus much, and too much, touchyng the warres of King Edward the fourth, which was done anno.* 1471. Ex Polid. & alijs.

The same yeare, and about the same tyme, vppon the Ascension euen,* king Henry being prisoner in the Tower, departed, after he had reigned in all xxxviij. yeares, and vi. moneths. Polydore and Hall folowing him, affirme that he was slaine with a dagger by Rich. Duke of Glocester, the Kings brother, for the more quiet and sauegard of the King his brother. In the history intituled Scala mundi,* I finde these words, Quod in turri, in vigilia Ascensionis Dominicae ibidem feliciter moriens, per Thamesiam nauicula vsque ad Abbathiam de Chertesey deductus, ibi sepultus est. That is, that king Henry being in the Tower vpon the Ascension euen,* there happely or quietly departing, was brought by Thames in a boate, to the Abbey of Chertesey, and there buried.

Polydore, after he hath described the vertues of thys king,* recordeth that king Henry y^e seuenth did afterwarde translate the corps of him frō Chertesey to Windsore, and addeth moreouer, that by him certayne myracles were wrought. For the which cause the sayde King Henry the seauenth (sayth he) laboured with Pope Iulius, to haue him canonised for a Saint, but the death of the king was the let, why y^t matter proceeded not. Edward Hall writing of this matter,* addeth more, declaring the cause, why king Henries sancting went not forward, to be this: for that the fees of canonising of a King, were of so great a quantitie at Rome (more then of another Bishop or prela•e) that the said king thought it better to keepe the money in his chestes, then with y^e empouering of y^e realme to buy so deare, & pay so much for a new holy day of saint Henry in the Calender,* &c. Ex Hallo. which if it be true, it might be replied then to the Pope Iulius, that if Popes be higher then kings in the earth, and especially in heauē, why then is a Pope Saint so cheape in y^e market place of Rome, and a King Saint so deare? Againe, if the valuation of things in all markets and buries, be according to the price & dignity of the thing that is bought, what reason is it, seing the sancting of a king beareth a bigger sale then the sancting of any Pope in heauen, but that Kings should be aboue Popes also vpon the earth? *Sed extra iocunt• as I do not doubt, but that K. Henry was a good & a quiet prince, if he had not otherwise bin abused by some: so touching the ruine of his house, I thinke not contrary, but it came not without the iust appointmēt of the Lord, either for that Henry of Lancasters house were such enemies to Gods people, & for the burning of the Lord Cobham and many other: or else for the vniust displacing of Page 717 King Richard 2. or else thirdly for the cruell slaughter of Humfrey the good Duke of Gloucester his vncle: whereof sufficiently hath bene said before.

During the time of these doings, being about y^e yeare of our Lord 1465. There was here in England a certaine Frier Carmelite,* who about the tearme of Michaell the Archangel preached at Paules in London, that our Lord Iesus Christ, being heere in this present worlde, was in pouertie,* and did beg. To whose opiniō and doctrine, the prouinciall of that order semed also to incline, defending y^e same both in his reading and preaching, with other Doctours moe and brethren of y^e same order: vnto whom also adioined certaine of the Iacobites, and stifly did take their partes. On y^e cōtrary side, many doctours & also lawyers, both in their publicke lectures & preaching, to the vttermost of their cunning, did withstād their assertion, as being a thing most pestiferous in the Church to be heard. Such a bitter cōtention was among them, that the defendent part was driuen for a while to keepe silence.* Much like to those times I might well resemble these our dayes now present, with our tumultuous contention of formes and fashions of garments. But I put my selfe here in Pythagoras schoole, and keepe silence with these Friars. In the story moreouer it foloweth, that this beggerly questiō of the begging Friars, whether Christ did begge, or no, went so far, y^t at length it came to y^e Popes eares, Paulus 2. who was no beggar ye may be sure. After that, the fame of this doctrine, mounting ouer the Alpes, came flieng to the court of Rome, which was about y^e Assumption of the virgin Mary, y^t yeare next folowing, an. 1465. it brought with it such an euill sinell to y^e fine noses there, that it was no neede to bid them to stirre: for begging to them was worse thē hie heresie. Wherefore the holy father pope Paulus the 2. to repress the sparkles of this doctrine, which otherwise perhaps might haue set his whole kitchin on fire,* taketh y^e matter in hand, & estsoones directeth downe his Bull into England, insinuating to the Prelates here, Haeresim illam pestiferè asserentem,* quod Christus publice mendicauit, esse antiquitus a Romanis pontificibus, cum suis Concilijs damnatam, & eam pro damnata, vndique declarandam, & conculcandam, &c. That is, that this heresie, which pestiferously doth affirme that Christ did openly begge, was condemned of old time by the Bishops of Rome, and his Councels, and that the same ought to be declared in all places for a damned doctrine, and worthy to be troden downe vnder all mens feete, &c. This was in the same yeare when Prince Edward, King Edwards sonne was borne in the Sanctuary at Westminster an. 1465.*

As touching the rest of the doings and affaires of thys king (which had vāquished hetherto ix. battailes, himselfe being present) how afterward he, through the incitemēt of Charles duke of Burgoine his brother in law, vētrede into France with a puissant army, & how the Duke fayled him in his promise, also how peace betwene y^e two kings was at length cōcluded in a solēne meeting of both y^e sayd kings together (which meeting is notified in stories, by a white doue sitting the same day of meeting, vpō the top of king Edwards tent) also of y^e mariage promised betwene y^e yong Dolphin & Elizabeth K. Edwards eldest daughter, but afterward broken of the French kings part: moreouer as touching the death of the duke of Burgoine slaine in war, & of his daughter Mary, neece to King Edward, spoiled of her lands & possessions wrōgfully, by Lewes y^e French king, & married after to Maximilian: furthermore, as touching the expeditiō of king Edward into Scotlād, by reason of King Iames, breaking promise in marieng with Cecilie the ij. daughter of king Edward, & of driuing out his brother, & how y^e matter was composed there, & of the recouery againe of Barwicke: of these (I say) & such other things mo, partly because they are described sufficētly in our cōmon english stories, partly also because they be matters not greatly pertaining to the Church, I omit to speake, making of thē a supersedeas. Two things I finde here among many other, specially to be remembred.

The first is concerning a godly and constant seruant of Christ, named Iohn Goose, which in the time of this king was vniustly condemned and burnt at the tower hill. an. 1473.* in the moneth of August. Thus had England also his Iohn Hus, as well as Boheme. Wherein moreouer this is to be noted, that since the time of King Richard 2. there is no reigne of any King to be assigned hetherto, wherein some good mā or other hath not suffred the paines of fire, for y^e Religion & true testimonie of Christ Iesus. Of this said Iohn Goose, or Iohn Hus, this moreouer I find in another English monumēt recorded, that the sayd Iohn being deliuered to Robert Belisdone, one of y^e Shiriffes, to see him burnt the after noone: the Shiriffe like a charitable man, had him home to his house, and there exhorted him to deny (sayth the story) his errors.* But the godly man after long exhortation heard, desired the Shiriffe to bee content, for he was satisfied in his conference. Notwithstādyng this he desired of the Shiriffe, for Gods sake to geue him some meate, saying that he was very sore hungered. Then the Shiriffe commaunded him meate: whereof he tooke and did eate, as he had bene toward no maner of daunger: and sayd to such as stode about him: I eate now a good and a competent dinner: for I shall passe a litle sharpe shower, ere I goe to supper. And when hee had dyned, he gaue thanks, and required that he might shortly be lead to the place, where hee should yeld vp his spirite vnto God. Ex Polychron.

The burnyng of Iohn Goose.

The second thyng herein to be noted,* is the death of George Duke of Clarence, the kynges second brother: Of whom relation was made before, how he assisted K. Edward, his brother, agaynst the Earle of Warwicke at Bar'net field, and helped him to the crowne, and now after all these benefites,* was at lēgth thus requited, that (for what cause it is vncertaine) he was apprehended and cast into the Tower, where he beyng adiudged for a traytor, was priuely drowned in a but of Malmesey. What y^e true cause was of his death, it can not certainly be affirmed. Diuers coniectures and imaginations there be diuersly put forth. Some partly impute it to the Queenes displeasure.* Other suppose it came for taking part in the cause of his seruauant, which was accused and cōdemned for poysonyng, sorcery, or inchantmēt. An other fame there is, which surmiseth the cause hereof to rise vpō the vayne feare of a foolish Prophecie,* commyng no doubt (if it were true) by the craftie operation of Sathan, as it doth many tymes elles happen among infidels and gentiles, where Christ is not knowen: where among high Princes and in noble houses, much mischief groweth, first murther and parricide, & thereby ruine of auncient families, and alteration of kingdomes. The effect of this Prophecie (as the fame goeth) was this, that after kyng Edward, should one reigne, whose name should begyn with G.* And because the name of the Duke of Clarence, beyng George, began with a G. therfore he began to be feared, and afterward priuely (as is aforesayd) was made away.

By these experimentes and mischieuous endes of such Prophecies,* and also by the nature of them, it is soone to be seene, from what fountaine or author they proceede: that is (no doubt) from Sathā, the auncient enemy of mākynd, and Prince of this world: agaynst whose deceitfull delusions. Christen men must be well instructed, neither to maruell greatly at them, though they seeme straunge, nor yet to beleue them,* though they happen true. For Sathā being the Prince of this world, in such thyngs worldly can foresee what will follow, and cā say truth for a mischieuous Page 718 end,* and yet for all that is but a Sathan. So the dreame of Astiages, seeing a vine to growe out of his daughter, which should couer all Asia, and fearing thereby that by his nephew he should lose his kingdome, proued true in the sequeale thereof, and yet notwithstanding of Sathan it came, and caused cruell murther to folow, first of the shepheards child, then of the sonne of Harpagus,* whome he set before his owne father to eate. Ex Iust. lib. 1. Likewise Cyrus was Prophetically admonished by his dreame, to take him for his guide, whome he first met the next morow. In that also his dreame fell true, and yet was not of God. In the same number are to be put all the blind Oracles of the Idolatrous Gentiles, which although they proceede of a lieng spirit,* yet sometime they hit the truth, to a mischieuous purpose. The like iudgement also is to be giuen of Merlynes Prophecies. The Sorceresse, mentioned 1. Reg. 28. raising up Samuell, told Saule the truth, yet was it not of God. In the 16. chap. of the Actes, there was a Damosell hauing the spirit of* Pytho, who said truth of Paule and Syllas, calling them the messengers of the high God, and yet it was a wrong spirit. The vncleane spirits in geuing testimonie of Christ, saide the truth, yet because their testimony came not of God, Christ did not allow it.

Panlus Diaconus recordeth of Ualence the Emperour that he also had a blinde Prophecie, not much vnlike to this of king Edward,* which was, that one should succeed him in the Empire, whose name should begin with 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . whereupon one Theodorus, trusting vpon the prophecie, began rebelliously to hope for the crowne, & for his labour felt the paines of a traitour.* Notwithstanding the effect of the prophecy folowed: For after Ualence succeded Theodosius. Wherefore Christen Princes, and noble men, & all Christes faithfull people must beware & learne.

- 1. First, that no man be inquisitiue or curious in searching to knowe what things be to come, or what shall happen, beside those things only which are promised, and expressed in the word.
- 2. Secondly, to vnderstand what differēce there is, and how to discerne y^e voice of God, frō the voice of Sathan.
- 3. Thirdly, how to resist and auoide the daunger of false and diuelish prophecies.

Many there be, which being not cōtented with things present, curiously occupy their wittes to search what is to come, and not geuing thanks to God for their life whiche they haue, will also know, what shall be chance them, how & when their end wil come, how lōg Princes shal reigne, and who after shall succede them, and for y^e same, get vnto thē southsaiers, astrologers, sorcerers, coniuers, or familiars. And these are not so much inquisitiue to search or aske, but the deuill is as ready to aunswere them: who either falsly doubleth with thē, to delude thē: or else telleth them truth, to worke them perpetuall care & sorow. Thus was Pope Siluester the sorcerer,* circumuented by the diuell, who told him that he should be at Hierusalem, before he died, and so it fell. For as he was saieng his Masse, at a chappell in Rome, called Hierusalem, there he fell sicke, and within three daies after died, vide sup. pag. 167. To King Henry the fourth also it seemeth it was prophecied, that he should not die, before he went to Hierusalem, who being brought to the Abbots chamber of Westminster,* and hearing the name of the chamber to be called Hierusalem, knew his time to be come, and dyed, pag. 557.

By such deceitfull prophecies, it can not be lamented enough to see what inconuenience both publikely and priuately groweth to the life of men,* either causing thē falsly to trust where they should not, or else wickedly to perpetrate that they woulde not: as may appeare both by this king, and also diuers moe. So was Pompeius, Crassus, and Caesar (as writeth Cicero) deceiued by the false Chaldeis, in declaring to them, that they should not but die in their beds, and with worship, and in their olde age. Of such false trust, rising vpon false prophecies, S. Ambrose in his booke of Exameron, writeth, speaking of rayne, which being in those parties greatly desired, was promised and prophecied of one certainly to fall vpō such a day, which was at the changing of the new Moone: but (sayth S. Ambrose) there fell no such raine at all,* till at the praiers of the Church, the same was obtained: geuing vs to vnderstand, that raine commeth not by the word of man, nor by the beginnings of the Moone, but by the prouidēce and mercie of our creatour.*Ex Ambros. in Examer.

Ioan. Picus Earle of Mirandula, in his excellent bookes written against these vaine startellers and Astrologers, Lib. 2. writeth of one Ordelaphus a prince, to whom it was prognosticate by a famous cunning man in that science,* called Hieronimus Manfredus, y^t he should enioy long continuance of health, and prosperous life, who notwithstanding, the selvesame yeare, and in the first yeare of his mariage, deceased: and after diuers other examples added moreouer vpon the same, he inferreth also mention, and the name of a certaine rich matrone in Rome, named Constantia, who in like maner departed the same yeare, in which she receiued great promises by these Southsayers and Astrologers, of a long and happy life, saieng to her husband these words: behold (saith she) how true be the prognostications of these southtellers? If it were not for noting of thē, which now are gone, and whose names I would in no case to be blemished with any spot, otherwise I could recite the names of certaine, especially one, which taking his iourney, in a certaine place, after diligent calculation, and forecasting of the successe and good speede of his iourney,* was notwithstanding in the same iourney, apprehended and brought where he would not, after that neuer enioieng good day, in short time he departed. In Basill this I my selfe heard of one, which knew and was conuersant with the partie, who hauing a curious delight in these speculations of chances and euent to come, by his calculation noted a certaine day, which he mistrusted should be fatall vnto him,* by something, which at that day should fall vpon him. Whereupon he determined with himselfe, all that day to keepe him sure and safe within his chamber, where he reaching vp his hand to take downe a booke, the booke falling downe vpon his head, gaue him his deathes wounde, and shortly after he died vpon the same. Of these and such like examples, the world is full, and yet the curiosnes of mans head will not refraine, still to plucke the apple of this vnluckie and forbidden tree.

Beside all this, what murther and parricide commeth by the feare of these prophecies, in great blouds and noble houses. I referre it vnto them, which reade and well aduise the stories, as well of our Kings heere in England, as in other kingdomes moe, both Christened, and Turkish, whereof another place shall serue as well (Christ willing) more largely to entreat, and particularly to discourse. To this pertaineth also the great inconuenience & hinderance that groweth by the feare of such Prophecies. in the vocation of mē, forsomuch as many there be, which fearing some one danger, some another, leaue their vocations vndone, and follow vnordinate waies. As if one hauing a blinde prophecie, that his destruction should be on the day, would wake and do all his busines by night and candle light: and so forth in other seuerall cases of mē and women, as euery one in his owne conscience knoweth his owne case best.

The second thing to be considered in these prophecies,* is rightly to discerne and vnderstand, as neare as we cā, the differēce betwene the prophecies proceeding frō God, and the false prophecies counterfeited by Sathan. For Sathan sometime plaieth Gods Ape, and transformeth himselfe into an Angell of light, bearing such a resemblaunce and colour of truth and Religion, that vnneth a wise man is able to discerne the one from the other, and the most part is begiled. Concerning prophecies therefore, to know which be of God, which be not, three things are to be obserued.

- 1. First,* whether they go simply and plainly, or whether they be doubtful and ambiguous: wherof the one seemeth to taste of Gods spirit, such as be the Prophecies of the scripture: the other to come otherwise hauing a double or doubtfull interpretation. Although y^e time of Gods prophecies, as also of miracles is commonly, and ordinarily expired: yet if the Lord in these daies, now extraordinarily do shew any prophecie, by the simplenes & plainenes thereof, partly it may be discerned.
- 2. Secondly, this is to be expended, whether they bee priuate,* tending to this familie, or that family, or publike. For as the Scriptures, so commonly the Prophecies of God haue no priuate interpretation, but generall: for so much as the care of Gods holy spirit is not restrayned partially to one person, more then to another, but generally and indifferently respecteth the whole Church of his elect in Christ Iesus his sonne. Wherefore such Prophecies as priuately are touching the armes of houses, or names of men, rising or falling of priuate and particular families, are worthely to be suspected.

- 3. The third note & speciall argument to discry the true prophecies of God,* from the false prophecies of Sathan, and his false Prophets, is this, to consider the matter and the end thereof, that is, whether they be worldly, or whether they be spirituall, or whether they tende to any glory or state of this present world, or whether they tend to the spirituall instruction, admonition, or comfort of the publicke Page 719 Church.

Now remayneth thirdly, after we know what prophecies be of God, and what not, that we be instructed next, how to eschew the feare and perill of all diuelish Prophecies, which make against vs. Wherein two speciall remedies are to be marked of euery Christen man, whereby he may be safe and sure against all daunger of the enemye. The first is, that we set y^r name of Christ Iesus the sonne of God against them, through a true faith in him: knowing this, that the sonne of God hath appeared, to dissolue the works of the Diuell. And againe, this is the victory (saith the Scripture) that ouercommeth the world, euen our faith. Whatsoeuer then Sathan worketh or cā worke against vs, be it neuer so forceable, faith in Christ will vanquish it. Such a maiestie is in our faith, beleeuing in the name of the Sonne of God.

*The other remedy is faythfull prayer, which obtineth in the name of Christ, all things with the Lord. So that wicked feende, which had killed before seuen husbands of Tobias wife, could not hurt him, entring his matrimony with earnest praier: so no more shall any sinister prophecie preuaile, where praier out of a faithful hart, doth striue against it. Neither am I ignoraunt, that against such temporall euils and punishments to this life inflicted, a great remedy also lieth in this, when Sathan findeth nothing, wherein greatly to accuse our conscience. But because such a conscience is hard to be founde, the next refuge is to flie to repentaunce, with amendment of life. For many times where sinne doth reigne in our mortall bodies, there also the operation of Sathan is strong against vs, to afflict our outwarde bodyes heere, but as touching our eternall saluation, neyther worke nor merite hath any place, but onely our fayth in Christ. And thus much briefly touching the two speciall remedies, whereby the operation of all diuelishe Prophecies may be auoyded and defeated.

Now, many there be, which leauing these remedies aforesayd, and the safe protection which the Lorde hath set vp in Christ,* take other wayes of their owne, seeking by their owne policie, how to withstande and escape suche Prophecies, either in eschuing the place and time subtilly, or else cruelly by killing the partie whome they feare: whereof commeth iniury, murther, and parricide, with other mischiefes in cōmon weales vnspeakable. To whom commonly it cōmeth so to passe, that whereby they thinke most to saue themselues, by the same meanes they fal most into the snare,* being subuerted and confounded in theyr owne policie, for that they trusting to their owne deuise, and not vnto the Lord, which only can dissolue the operation of Satan, the Lord so turneth their deuise into a trap, thereby to take them, whereby they thinke most surely to escape. Examples whereof we see not onely in Astyages King of the Medes aforesaid, and Cyrus: but in infinite other like euent, which the trade of the world doth dayly offer to our eies. So Queene Margaret thought her then cockesure, when Duke Humfrey was made away: when nothing else was her confusion so much, as the losse and lacke of that man.

So if King Richard the second had not exercised suche crueltie vpon his vnckle Thomas, Duke of Gloucester, he had not receiued such wrong by King Henry the fourth as he did, pag. 594. Likewise this King Edward the fourth, if he had suffered his brother George, Duke of Clarence to haue liued, his house had not so gone to wracke by Richard, his other brother, as it did. What befell vpon the Student of Astrology in the Uniuersitie of Basill, ye heard before, who if he had not mewed himselfe in hys chamber for feare of his diuination, had escaped the stroke that fell. Now, in auoiding such Propheticall euentues, which he should not haue searched, he fell into that which he did feare. These few examples for instruction sake, I thought by occasion to inferre, not as though these were alone: but by these few to admonish the Reader of infinite other which dayly come in practise of life, to the great daunger & decay, as well in priuate houses, as in weales publicke.

Wherefore briefly to repete, what before simply hath bin said touching this matter,* seeing that Sathan thorough such subtile Prophecies, hath & yet doth dayly practise so manifold mischiefes in the world, setting brother against brother, nephew against y^e vnckle, house against house, and realme against realme, gēdring hatred, where loue was, & subuerting priuely y^r simplicity of our christian faith, therefore y^r first thing & best is, for godly men not to busie there braines about such phātasies, neither in delighting in thē, nor in harkening to thē, nor in searching for thē, either by southsaier, or by cōiuratiō, or by familiar, or by astrologer: knowing and considering this, that whosoever shalbe desirous or ready to search for them, the Deuill is as ready to aunswere his curiositie therein.* For as once in the old tyme of Gentilitie, hee gaue his Oracles by Idols, and Priestes of that tyme: so the same deuill, although he worketh not now by Idols, yet he craftely can geue now aunswere by Astrologers, and coniurers in these our dayes, & in so doyng, both to say truth, and yet to deceaue men whē he hath sayd. Wherefore, leauyng of such curiositie, let euery Christen man walke simple in his present vocation, referrying hid thynges not in the word expressed, vnto him which sayth in his word:*Non est vestrum scire tēpora & momenta temporum. &c. It is not for you to know the tymes, and seasons of tymes, which the Father hath kept in his owne power. &c.

Secondly, in this matter of Prophecies, requisite it is (as is sayd) for euery Christen man to learne, how to discerne and distinct the true Prophecies, which proceede of God, and the false Prophecies, whiche come of Sathan. The difference wherof, as it is not hard to be discerned: so necessary it is, that euery good man do rightly vnderstand the same, to the entent that he knowing & flying the daunger of the one, may be the more certaine and cōstant in adhering to the other.

Thirdly, because it is not sufficient that the deceitfull Prophecies of the deuill be knowen, but also that they be resisted, I haue also declared, by what meanes the operation of Sathans workes and Prophecies are to be ouercome: that is, not with strength and policie of mā, for that there is nothyng in man, able to counteruayle the power of that enemy. Under heauen there is nothyng elles that can preuayle agaynst his workes, but onely the name of the Lord Iesus the sonne of God, not outwardly pronou|ced onely with our lippes, or signed in our foreheads with the outward crosse, but inwardly apprehended and dwellyng in our hartes by a silent fayth, firmly and earnestly trustyng vpon the promises of God, geuen and sealed vnto vs in his name: For so it hath pleased his fatherly wisdom, to set him vp,* to be both our righteousnesse before himselfe, and also to be our fortitude agaynst the enemy, acceptyng our fayth in his sonne, in no lesse price, then he accepteth the workes & worthynesse of the same his sonne, in whom we do beleue.

Such is the strength and effect of faith both in heauen, in earth, & also in hell: In heauen to iustifie, in earth to pre|serue, in hell to cōquere. And therefore when any such Prophecie, or any other thing is to vs objected, which seemeth to tend agaynst vs, let vs first consider whether it sauour of Sathan, or not. If it doe, then let vs seeke our succour, not in our selues, where it doth not dwell, neither let vs kill, nor slay, nor chaunge our vocation therefore, folowing vnordinate wayes: * but let vs runne to our Castle of refuge, whiche is to the power of the Lord Iesus, remembring the true promise of the Psalme: Qui habitat in adiutorio altissimi, in protectione Del coeli commorabitur. That is. who so putteth his trust in the succour of the Lord, shall haue the God of heauen to his protector. And then shall it afterward follow in the same Psalme. Ipse liberabit te a laqueo venantium, & a verbo aspeto. That is. And he shall deliuer him from the snare of the hunter, and from all euill wordes, and Prophecies, be they neuer so sharpe, or bitter agaynst him, &c. And thus much by the occasion of kyng Edward, of Prophecies.

Now hauing lōg taried at home in describyng the tumultes and troubles within our owne land, we will let out our story more at large, to consider the afflictions and perturbatiōs of other parties and places also of Christes Church, as wel here in Europe vnder the Pope, as in the East partes vnder the Turke, first deducyng our story frō the tyme of Sigismund,  where before we left: Which Sigismund, as is aboue recorded, was a great oder in the Councell of Constance agaynst Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage.  This Emperour had euer euill lucke, fightyng agaynst the Turkes. Twise he warred agaynst them, and in both the battailes was discomfited and put to flight: once about the Citie of Mysia, fightyng agaynst Baiazetes the great Turke.  an. 1395. the second tyme fightyng against Celebinus the sonne of Baiazetes, about the towne called Columbacium. But specially, after the Councell of Constance, wherein were condemned and burned those two godly Martyrs, more vnprosperous successe did then folow him  fightyng agaynst the Bohemians, his owne subiectes. an. 1420. by whom he was repulsed in so many battailes, to his great dishonour, during all the life of Zisca, & of Procopius, as is afore more at lēgth expressed: who was so beaten both of the Turkes, & at home of his owne people, that he neuer did encounter with the Turkes after. Page 720 Then followed the Councell of Basill, after the beginnyng wherof, within vi. yeares, this Sigismūdus, which was Emperour, king of Hungary, and kyng of Boheme, dyed, in Morauia. an. 1437.

Albertus Emperour.

THis Sigismund left behinde him one only daughter Elizabeth, who was married to Albert, Duke of Austrich: by reason whereof, he was aduanced to the Empire, and so was both Duke of Austrich, Emperour, king of Hungary, and king also of Boheme. But this Albert (as is afore declared) being an enemy and a disquieter to the Bohemians, and especially to the good men of Thabor, as he was preparing and setting foorth against the Turkes,  in the meane time died, in the second yeare of his Empire, an. 1439. leauing his wife great with child, who lieng then in Hungary, and thinking to be great with a daughter, called to her the Princes and chiefetaines of the Realme, declaring to them that she was but a woman, and vnsufficient to the gouernāce of such a state: and moreouer how she thought her selfe to be but with childe of a daughter, and therefore required them to prouide among them, such a Prince and gouernour, (reseruing the right of the Kingdome to hir selfe) as were fit and able vnder her, to haue the regiment of the land committed.* The Turke in the meane while being eleuated and encouraged with his prosperous victories against Sigismundus aforesaide, began then more fiercely to inuade Hungary and those parties of Christendome. Wherefore the Hungarians making the more haste, consulted among themselues, to make Duke Uladislaus, brother to Casimi•us King of Polony, their King.

But while this was in working betwene the Hungarians and Uladislaus the Duke, in the meane space Elizabeth brought forth a sonne called Ladislaus, who being the lawfull heire of the kingdome, the Queene calleth backe againe her former word, minding to reserue the kingdome for her sonne, being the true heire thereof, and therefore refuseth marriage with the saide Uladislaus, which she had before pretended. But Uladislaus ioyning with a great part of the Hungarians, persisting stil in the condition before graunted, would not geue ouer: by reason whereof, great contention and diuision kindling amōg the people of Hungary, Amurathes y^r great Turke, taking his aduantage of their discord, and partly surpressed with pride of his former succeſse against Sigismund aforesaid, with his whole maine & force, inuaded the realme of Hūgary: where Huniades surnamed Uaiuoda, Prince of Transiluania, ioining with the new King Uladislaus, did both together set against the Turke, anno. 1444. and there Uladislaus the new King of Hungary, the fourth yeare of his kingdome was slaine. Elizabeth with her sonne, was fled in y^r meane while, to Fridericke the Emperour. Of Huniades Uaiuoda the noble Captaine, and of his Actes and also of Ladislaus (Christ willing) more shall be sayd heereafter, in his time and place.

Fridericus the third Emperour.

After the deceasse of Albert, succeeded in the Empyre Fridericus the third,* Duke of Austria, an. 1440. By whome it was procured (as we haue before signified) that Pope Foelix elected by the Councell of Basill, did resigne his Popedome, to Pope Nicholas the fift, vpon this condition, that the said Pope Nicholas should ratife the acts decreed in the said Councell of Basil. In the daies of this Emperour, much warre and dissention raged almost thorough all Christian Realmes, in Austria, Hungaria, Polonia, in France, in Burgoine, and also heere in Englād, betwene King Henry the sixt, and King Edward the fourth, as ye haue already heard: whereby it had bene easie for the Turke, with little maistry, to haue ouerrunne all the Christian Realmes in Europe, had not the prouidence of our mercifull Lord otherwise provided to keepe Amurathes the Turke, occupied in other ciuill warres at home in the meane while. Unto this Fridericke came Elizabeth (as is aforesaide) with Ladislaus her sonne: by whome he was nourished & entertained a certaine space,* till at length, after the death of Uladislaus aforesaid, king of Ungarie (which was slaine in battaile by the Turkes) the men of Austria, through the instigation of Ulricus Eizingerus, and of Ulricus Earle of Cilicia rising vp in armour, required of Fridericke the Emperour, either to giue thē their yong king, or els to stād to his own defence.

When Fridericke heard this, neither would he render to them a sodaine answere, neither would they abide any longer delay: and so the matter growing to warre, the new Citie was besieged, where many were slaine, and much harme done. At length the Emperours part beyng y^r weaker,* the Emperour through the interuētion of certaine Nobles of Germany, restored Ladislaus vnto their hands, who being yet vnder age, committed his in. kingdomes to three gouernours. Whereof Iohn Huniades the worthy Captaine aboue mentioned, had the ruling of Ungarie: George Pogiebracius had Boheme: and Ulricus the Earle of Cilicia, had Austria. Which Ulrice, hauing the chiefe custody of the King, bare the greatest authority aboue the rest, a man as much full of ambitiō and tirannie, as he was hated almost of all the Austrians, and shortly after by the meanes of Eizingerus, was excluded also from the King and the Court, but afterwarde restored againe, and Eizingerus thrust out. Such is the vnstable condition of them which be next in place aboute Princes. But this contention betwene them I ouerpasse.

Not long after,* Ladislaus the yong King went to Boheme, there to be crowned, where George Pogiebracius (as is said) had the gouernaunce. But Ladislaus during all the time of his being there, though being much requested, yet would neither enter into the Churches, nor heare the seruice of them, which did draw after the doctrine of Hus.* In somuch that when a certaine Priest in the hygh tower of Prage, was appointed and addressed, after the maner of Priests, to say seruice before the King, beeyng knowne to hold with Iohn Hus and Rochezaua, the King disdainig at him, commaunded him to giue place and depart, or else he woulde sende him downe headlong from the rocke of the Tower: and so the good minister repulsed by the King, departed. Also another time the sayde Ladislaus, seeing the Sacrament carried by a Minister of that side, whome they called then Huslites, woulde doo thereunto no reuerence. Ex Aene. Syluiο.

At length the long abode of the King, although it was not very long, yet seemed to the godly disposed to be lōger then they wished: and that was not to y^e king vnknownen, which made him to make the more hast away. But before he departed, he thought first to visit the noble Citie Uratislauia in Schlesia. In the which Citie, the foresaid King Ladislaus being there in the high Church, at seruice many great Princes were about him: Among whome was also George Pogiebracius, who then stode nearest to the King,* vnto whome one Chilianus, plaieng the Parasite about the King (as the fashion is of such as faine themselues fooles, to make other men as very fooles as they) spake in this wise as foloweth: with what countenance you do behold this our seruice, I see right well, but your hart I do not see. Say then, doth not the order of this our Religion seeme vnto you decent and comely? Do you not see how many and how great princes, yea the king himselfe, do follow one order and vniformitie? And why do you then follow rather your Preacher Rochezana then these? Do you thinke a few Bohemians to be more wise then all the Church of Christ besides? Why then do you not forsake that rude and rusticall people, and ioine to these Nobles, as you are a noble man your selfe.

Unto whome,* thus Pogiebracius sagely againe doth aunswere. If you speake these words of your selfe, sayth be, you are not the man whome you faine your selfe to be: and so to you I aunswere, as not to a foole. But if you speake this by the suggestion of others, then must I satisfie them. Heare therefore. As touching the Ceremonies of the Church, euery man hath a conscience of his owne to follow. As for vs, we vse such Ceremonies, as we trust do please God: Neither is it in our arbitrement to beleue what we will our selues. The mind of man being perswaded with great reasons, is captiuated, wil he, nill he: and as nature is instructed and taught, so is she drawne, in some one way, and in some another. As for my selfe, I am fully perswaded in the Religion of my preachers. If I should follow thy Religion, I might perchance deceiue men, going contrary to mine owne conscience, but I can not deceiue God, who seeth the harts of all: Neither shall it become mee to frame my selfe lyke to thy disposition. That which is meete for a Iester, is not likewise conuenient for a noble man. And these wordes eyther take to thy selfe, as spoken to thee, if thou bee a wise man, or else I referre them to those which set thee a worke. Ex Aen. Sylu. in Hist. Bohem.

After the King was returded from the Bohemians againe to Austria, y^e Hungarians likewise made their petitions to the king, that he would also come vnto thē. The gouernour of Hūgarie (as ye before haue heard) was Ioannes Huniades,* whose victorious acts against y^e Turks are famous. Against this Huniades, wicked Ulricus Earle of Cilicia, did all he could with the King, to bring him to destructiō, and therfore caused the king to send for him vp to Uienna, and there priuely to woorke hys death. But Huniades hauing thereof intelligence, offereth hymselfe wythin Hungary to serue hys Prince, to all affaires: Out of the lande where he was, it was neyther best (sayde hee) for the Kynge, nor safest for hym selfe, to come. The Earle being so disappoynted, came downe wyth certaine Nobles of the Courte, to the borders of Hungarie, thynking eyther to apprehend him and bryng hym to Uienna, or there to dispatch hym. Huniades, without in the fieldes, sayde hee would common wyth hym, wythin the Towne he would not be brought. After that, an other trayne also was laide for hym, that vnder pretence of the kings safeconduct, he shoulde meete the king in the broade fieldes of Uienna. But Huniades suspecting deceit, came in dede to the place appoynted,* where hee neither seeing the Kyng to come, nor the Earle to haue any safe conduct for hym, was mooued (and not without cause) against the Earle, declaring howe it was in hys power there to slay him, which went about to seeke hys bloud, but for the reuerence of the king, he would spare him and let him goe.

Not long after this, the Turke wyth a great power of fighting men,* to the number of an hundreth and fyfteene thousande, arriued in Hungarie, where he laid siege to the Citie Alba. But through the mercifull hand of God, Iohn Huniades,* and Capistranus a certaine Minorite, wyth a small garrison of Christian souldiours, gaue him the repusse and put him to flight, wyth all hys mighty hoste: Whereof more (Christ willing) heereafter. Ex hist Bohemie. Aen. Syluij. Huniadés shortly after this victorie, deceased. Of whose death when the king and the Earle did vnderstande, they came the more boldly into Hungarie, where hee being receiued by Ladislaus Huniades tonne, into the Towne of Alba, there vewed the places where the Turkes before had pitched theyr tentes. When thys Ladislaus heard that the king was comming first toward the towne, obediently he opened to hym the gates. Foure thousand only of armed souldiours he debarred from entring the Citie.

In the meane time while the King was there resident in the Citie, the Earle with other nobles did sitte in counsaile, requiring also Ladislaus to resorte vnto them: who first doubting with hymselfe what he might doe, at length putteth on a priuie coate of maile, and commeth to them. Whether the Earle first beganne wyth him, or he wyth the Earle, it is not knowen. The opinion is of some, that Ulricus first called him traitor, for shutting the gates against the kings soldiours. Howsoever the occasion began, thys is vndoubted, that Ulricus taking his sworde from hys page, let flie at his head. To breake the blowe, some putting vp their hands, had their fingers cut of. The Hungarians hearing a noise & tumult wythin the chamber, brake it vpon them, & there incontinent slewe Ulrike the Earle, wounding and cutting him almost alto peeces: The King hearing thereof, although he was not a little discontented thereat in his minde: yet seeing there was then no other remedy, dissembled his grieve for a time, Frō thence the king tooke his iourney againe to Buda, accompanied wyth the foresayde Ladislaus,* who passyng by y^e towne, where the wife of Huniades was mourning for the death of her husband, seemed w^t many faire wordes to comfort her: and after he had there sufficiently repasted hym selfe, wyth such pretence of dissembled loue, and fained fauour,* that they were without all suspition & feare: from thence he set forward in hys iourney, taking wyth him the two sonnes of Huniades, Ladislaus and Mathias, who were right ready to wait vpon him. The king being come to Buda (whether of his owne head, or by sinister counsell set on) when hee had them at a vauntage, caused bothe the sonnes of Huniades: to witte, Ladislaus and Mathias, to be apprehended. And first was brought foorth Ladislaus the elder sonne, to the place of execution, there to be beheaded: where meekely he suffered, being charged wyth no other crime, but thys, published by the voyce of the cryer, saying: Thus are they to be chastened, which are rebelles against their Lord.* Peucerus wryting of his death, addeth thys moreouer, that after the hangman had 3. blowes at his necke, yet notwithstanding the sayd Ladislaus hauing his hands bound behinde hym, after the thirde stroke, rose vpriight vppon hys feete, and looking vp to heauen, called vpon the Lord, and protested his innocency in that behalf: and so laying downe his necke againe,* at the fourth blowe was dispatched. Mathias the other brother was led captiue with the king vnto Austria. The rest of the captiues brake the prison and escaped.

It was not long after thys cruelty was wrought vppon Ladislaus, the king being about the age of twentye & two yeares, that talke was made of the kings marryage, wyth Magdalene daughter to the French king. The place of the marryage was appoynted at Prage, where greate preparation was for the matter.* At the first entraunce of the King into the Citie of Prage, Rochezana wyth a company of Ministers, such as were fauourers of Iohn Hus, and of sincere Religion, came with all solemnity to receiue the king, making there hys oration to gratulate the kings most ioyful and prosperous accesse into the same his owne Realme and countrey of Boheme. Unto which Rochezana, after he had ended hys Oration,* scarce the king woulde open hys mouth to geue thanks to him, nor any cheareful countenaunce vnto hys companye, but fiercely seemed to frowne vppon them. In the next Pagen after these, came foorth the Priestes of the high Minster, after the most Popish maner, meeting him wyth Procession, and wyth the Sacrament of the aultare: For as Panacea among Phisitions serueth for all diseases, so the sacrament of the popes aultare serueth for all pompes and Pagens. First it must lie vppon the aultare, then it must be holden vp in hands, then it must hang in the pixe, it must serue for the quicke, it must also helpe the dead, it must moreouer visite the sick, it must walk about y^t churchyard, it must go about the streets, it must bee caried about the fieldes to make the grasse to growe, it must be had to the battaile, it must ride on horsebacke before the Pope. And finally, it must welcome kings into Cities. Wherein these Catholicke fathers doe seeme somewhat to forget themselues. For if the Pope, being inferiour to the Sacrament of the aultar, at the commying of kings, doe vse to sitte still while the kings come and kisse hys feete, what reason is it that the Sacrament of the aultare, whyche is (I trowe) aboue the Pope, shoulde meete kings by the way, and welcome them to the towne? But thys by the way of parenthesis: Let vs nowe continue the text.

When Ladislaus thys Catholicke king, who had shewed hymselfe before so stoute and sterne against Rochezana and his company,* had seene these Catholique priests with theyr Procession, and especially wyth their blessed Sacrament, to come: wyth all reuerence and much deuotion, hee lyghted downe from his horse, hee embraced the crosse and kyssed it, and wyth chearefull countenaunce saluted the Priestes in order. All thys while his young wife was not yet come out of Fraunce, but Legates were sent, after most sumptuous wise, to conduct her. Other Legates also were sent the same time, to the Emperour Fredericke, for conconclusion of peace. The thirde Legacie was directed likewise to Pope Calixtus about Religion, howe to reduce the Bohemians to the Church of Rome. The authour of thys story (which was Pope Pius hymselfe) declareth further the opinion of some to be, that king Ladislaus y^e same time had entended, to make a finall ende and destruction of all that secte in Bohemia, whych helde with the doctrine of Iohn Hus,* and Hierome, by the assemble and cōcourse of the Catholique Princes, and popish Prelates, whyche were appoynted there to meete together at that marriage in Prage. For there shoulde be first the Emperour Fredericke, Elizabeth the kings mother, and hys sisters Elizabeth, and Anna, the Princes of Saxonie. Baioria, Slesia, Franconia, the Palatine, and other Princes of Rhene: many also of the Lordes of Fraunce, besides the Popes Cardinals, Legates, Prelates and other potestates of the Popes Church. Who if they had all together conuented in Boheme, no doubt but some great mischiefe hadde beene wrought there against the Hussires:* against whome thys Ladislaus, following the steppes of Sigismundus hys graundfather, and Albertus hys father, was euer an vtter enemy. But when man hath purposed, yet God disposeth as pleaseth hym,

And therefore,* truely it is wrytten of Aeneas Syluius in the same place, saying: De regimine Ciuitatum, de mutatione regnorum, de orbis imperio, minimum est, quod homines possint (tum vero De religionis constitutione multo minus) magna magnus dispoit Deus.* That is. In regiment of Cities, in alteration of kingdomes, in ruling and gouerning the world, it is lesse then nothing that man can do: it is the hygh God that ruleth high things. Whereunto then I may wel adde thys moreouer, and say: that if the gouernance of worldly kingdomes standeth not in mans power, but in the disposition of God, muche lesse is it then, that mans power can doe in the regiment and gouerning of Religion. Example whereof in this purposed deuise of Princes,* doth euidently appeare. For as thys great preparation and solemnitie of mariage was in doing, and the Princes ready to set foorth, with a litle turne of Gods holy hand, al these great purposes were sodeinly turned and dashed. For in the middest of this busines, about the 21. day of Nouember. An. 1461. this great aduersarie of Christes people, king Ladislaus, king of Boheme, of Hungarie, and Prince of Austria sickened, Page 722 and wythin 36. houres died, some say of a Pestilent fore in hys grine,* some say of poyson. But howe so euer it was, as it came not wythout the iust iudgement of God, reuenging the innocent bloude of Ladislaus Huniades sonne, wrongfully put to death before: so by the oportune deathe of thys King, the poore Churches of Boheme were gratusly deliuered. And thys ende made Ladislaus, one of the mightiest Princes at that time in all Europe:* in whome three mighty kingdomes were conioyned and combined together, Austria, Hungaria, and Bohemia: which countreys doe lie Southeast from Englande, in the farthest partes of all Germanie, towarde Constantinople, and the dominion of the Turks, & contain these principal townes in them.

After the deathe of Ladislaus, the kingdome of Boheme fell to George Pogiebracius aboue mentioned,* whō Pope Innocent the eight, did excommunicate and depose for hys religion, as is afore declared.

Furthermore, the kingdome of Hungary, was geuen to Mathias sonne of Huniades,* who was in captiuity (as is sayd) with king Ladislaus, and should haue bene put to death after his brother, had not the king before bene preuented wyth death, as is aboue recorded. Moreouer, heere is to be noted that the sayde king Ladislaus, thus dying wythout wife and issue, left behinde hym two sisters aliue: to witte, Elizabeth, which was married to Casimirus king of Polonia: and Anna, married to William, duke of Saxonie, Elizabeth by her husbande Casimirus, king of Polonia, had Uladislaus, who at length was king both of Boheme and Hungarie. This Casimirus, first was maryed to Beatrix, wife before to Mathias. Then being diuorced from her by the dispensation of Pope Alexander, maryed a newe wife a Countesse of Fraunce, by whome he had two children, Lewes, and Anna, Lewes which was heire of both kingdomes of Boheme, and Hungarie, was slayne fighting against the Turkes, Anna was married to Ferdinandus, by whome he was Archduke of Austria, kyng of Boheme. &c.

- Vladislaus, kyng of Baheme and Hungary, who by hys seconde wife, Countesse of Fraunce, had
 - Ludouicus, King of Boheme & Hungarie.
 - Anne, wife to Ferdinandus, Father to thys Maximilian nowe Emperour.

Ye heard before, howe after the decease of Ladislaus, the Hungarians by their election preferred Mathias surnamed Coruinus,* which was sonne of Huniades, to y^e kingdome of Hungary. For which cause dissention fel betwene Friderick the Emperour and him, for that the said Friderick was both nominated himselfe by diuers vnto that kyngdom, & also because he had the crown of Hungary then remaining in his hands, which Elizabeth mother to K. Ladislaus, had brought to the Emperor, as was before declared. But this warre betweene them, was ceased by the intercessiō of the Princes of Germany, so that Mathias ransomed that crowne of Fridericke for 8000. Florences.

Not long after, Pope Innocent being displeased with George Pogiebracius (or Boiebracius) king of Bohemia,* for fauouring of Iohn Hus, & his Religion, that is to say, for playing the part of a godly Prince, dyd excommunicate & depose him, conferring his kingdome to Mathias. But for somuch as Fridericke the Emperour would not thereto consent, and especially after the death of the foresayde George, when the Emperour and the Bohemians, leauing out Mathias, did nominate Uladislaus sonne of Casimirus, king of Polonie, and of Elizabeth, to be kyng of Boheme, therefore great warre and trouble kindled betweene him and Fridericke the Emperour: wherein the Emperour had vtterly gone to ruine,* had not Albertus Duke of Saxonie rescued the Emperour, and repressed the vehemencie of Mathias.

The noble actes of Iohn Huniades,* and of this Mathias hys sonne, were not onely great staves to Hungary, but almost to al Christendom, in repelling backe y^e Turke. For beside the other victories of Iohn Huniades the father, afore mentioned, thys Mathias also his sonne succeeding no lesse in the valiantnes, then in the name of hys father, did so recouer Sirmium, and the confines of Illyrica, from the hands of the Turks, & so vanquished their power, that both Mahometes, and also Baiazetes hys sonne, were enforced to seeke for truce.

Ouer and besides, the same Mathias, conducting hys army into Bosna (which lyeth South from Hungary) recouered againe Iaitza, the principall towne of that kyngdome, from the Turkes possession. Who, if other Christen Princes had ioyned their helpes withal,* would haue proceded farther into Thracia. But behold here the malicious subtilty of Sathan, working by the Pope. For while Mathias was thus occupied in hys expedition agaynst the Turkes, wherein he should haue bene set forward and aoded by Christen Princes, and Byshoppes: the Byshop of Rome, wickedly and sinfully ministreth mater of ciuil discord betwene him & Pogiebracius aforesayd, in remouing him from the right of hys kingdome, and transferryng the same to Mathias. Whereupon, not only the course of victory against the Turkes was stopped, but also great warre Page 723 and bloudshed followed in Christen realmes, as well betweene thys Mathias, and Pogiebracius, wyth hys two sonnes Uictorinus and Henricus, as also betweene Casimirus, Uladislaus, and Mathias warring about Uratislauia, till at length the matter was taken vp by the Princes of Germanie.

*Albeit, for al the execrable excōmunication of the Pope against Pogiebracius, a great part of Boheme would not be remooued from the obedience of their King, whome the Pope had cursed, and deposed: yet Mathias toke from him Morauia, and a great portion of Slesia, and adioyned it to his kingdome of Hungarie. An. 1474.

Where this by the way is to be noted, that the Religion in Bohemia, planted by I. Hus, could not be extinct or suppressed withall the power of foure mightie Princes, Uenceslaus, Sigismundus, Albertus, and Ladislaus, notwithstanding they wyth the Popes, did therein what they possibly coulde: but still the Lorde maintained the same, as ye see by thys Pogiebracius king of Boheme, whome the Pope coulde not vtterly remooue out of the kingdome of Bohemia.

This forementioned Mathias, beside his other memorable actes of chivalry, is no lesse also commended for hys singulare knowledge and loue of learning and of learned men, whom he with great stipends, procured into Pannonia: where by the meanes of good letters, and furniture of learned mē, he reduced in short space the barbarous rudenesse of that countrey, into a flourishing common wealth. Moreouer, such a Library he did there erect, and replenish with all kinde of authors, sciences, and hystories, which he caused to be translated out of Greeke into Latine, as the like is not thought to be foūd, next to Italy, in all Europe beside. Out of which Librarye we haue receaued diuers fragments of wryters, as of Polybius, and Diodorus Siculus which were not extant before. Ex Peucer.

The constante fortitude also of Georgius Pogiebracius king of Boheme, is not vnworthy of commendation: of whom also Pope Pius himselfe, in Descriptione Europae, doth honestly report (as a Pope may speake of a protestāt) in these words wryting: *Magnus vir alioqui, & rebus bellicis clarus. &c. Who although Pope Innocent did execrate w^t hys children, yet hee lett not of the profession of the veritie & knowledge which he had receyued. Moreouer, the Lord so prospered hys sonnes, Uictorinus, and Henricus, that they subdued their ennemies, and kept their estate: In so much, that when Fredericke the Emperor at Uienna was in custody enclosed by the Citizens. Uictorinus did restore and deliuer him out of their hands: wherefore the Emperour afterward aduaunced them to be Dukes. Also God gaue them sometimes prosperous victory against Mathias, as at the City of Glogonia. &c.

After the decease of Georgius Pogiebracius, King of Boheme, *Friderike the Emperor assigned that kingdom, not to Mathias, vpon whome the Pope had bestowed it before, but vpon Uladislaus sonne of Casunirus, king of Polonye, and of Elizabeth, daughter of the Emperor Albert, and sister to Ladislaus. For the which, Mathias being discontented, and for that the Emperor had denied him his daughter Runegunda, went about to exclude Uladislaus out of Boheme, and also proclaimed warre agaynst Fridericke. But before he accomplished his purposed preparation, death preuented him, who wythout issue departed. Anno 1490.

*After the death of Mathias, departing wythout issue, Uladislaus sonne of Casimirus, king of Polonie, and of Elizabeth daughter to Albert Emperour, and sister to K. Ladislaus married his wife Beatrix, whom Mathias left a widow, and with her was elected king of Hungary, with this condition made betwene him and Friderike the Emperour, that if he died without lawfull issue, then the kingdomes of Hungary and of Boheme, *shoulde retourne to Maximilian, sonne to Fridericus. But Uladislaus not long after, did repudiate his wife Beatrix, and depriuing her of her kingdome, caused the said Beatrix to swear and to consent to the marying of an other woman, whych was the daughter of the French king, *named Anne, procuryng from Pope Alexander, a dispensation for the same, as is before signified. By this Anne, Uladislaus had Lewys, & Anne, which Anne afterwarde was married to Ferdinandus.

Lewys succeeding after hys father, had both the sayde kingdomes of Boheme and Hungarie. An. 1492. and married Mary sister to Charles the 5. Emperour. Anne, as is sayd, was coupled to Ferdinandus. &c.

Of Charles Duke of Burgoine, somewhat was before touched, who had maryed king Edwardes sister: and what troubles by him were stirred vp in Fraunce, partly was before notified. Thys

Charles after hee had besieged the Citie Nussia,* or Nouasium, the space of a whole yere, went about to alienate the territorie of Colen, from the Empire to hys owne dominion: wherefore warre began to be mooued betweene him and Fredericke the Emperour. At length through communication had, peace was concluded, and a marriage appoynted betweene Mary the only daughter of Charles,* and Maximilian the Emperours sonne. Anno 1475. Then from Nouasium, Charls leadeth hys armie towarde Heluetia, against Renatus or Reinhardus Duke of Lotharing: then against the Heluetians. Where hee being thrise ouercome, first at Granson, then at Moratum or Murta, in the hier parte of Heluetia, at last at the towne of Nanse, was ouerthrowne and slain. Anno 1477. The procurer of which warres: was chiefly Lewys the 11. the French king, to the entent hee might compasse the dominion of Burgundie vnder hys subiection: whych afterwarde by open wrong and priuie fraude,* hee brought about, defrauding Mary the daughter of Charles, of her rightfull inheritance: For the whych cause the Burgundians were the more willing to ioine her in marriage wyth Maximilian, sonne of Friderike the Emperour: by reason whereof the title of Burgundie, was firste ioyned to the house of Austria.

And thus haue you the miserable vexations and contentions among our Christian Princes heere in Europe described, vnder the raigne of thys Fredericke the thyrde Emperour, so that almost no angle nor portion of al Christendome (whether we consider the state of the Church,* or ciuill gouvernement) was free from discorde, tumults, and dissentions. Thys cankerde worme of ambition so myghtely creepeth, and euey where preuaileth in these latter endes of the worlde, that it suffereth neither rest in common weales, nor peace in the Church, nor any sparckle of charitie almost to remaine in the life of men. And what maruaile then, if the Lorde seeing vs so farre to degenerate, not onely from hys preceptes and counsailes, but almoste from the sense and bounde of nature, that brother wyth brother, vnclie wyth nephewe, bloude wyth bloude cannot agree in striuing,* killing, and fighting for worldly dominions, do send therfore these cruell Turkes vpon vs so to scourge and deuoure vs? Of whose bloudy tyranny & daily spilling of Christian bloude, heereafter (by the grace of Christ) we will discourse more at large, when wee come to the peculiar consideration of the Turkishe storyes. In the meane time, thys shalbe for vs to note and obserue, not so much the scourge howe greeuous it is: but rather to beholde the causes which being the whippe vpon vs, whych is our owne miserable ambition and wretched warres among our selues.

And yet if this Christian peace and loue,* left and commended so heartely vnto vs by the mouth of the sonne of God being nowe banished out of Christian realmes and ciuile gouernaunce, myght at least finde some refuge in the Church, or take Sanctuarie among menne professing nothyng but Religion, lesse cause we had to mourne. Nowe so it is, that as we see little peace and amitie amonge ciuil Potentates: so lesse we finde in the spiritual sorte of them, which chiefly take vpon them the administration of Christes Church. So that it may well be doubted, whether the scourge of the Turke, or the ciuill sworde of Prynces haue slaine moe in the fieldes, or the Popes keyes haue burnt moe in Townes and Cities. And all be it such as be professed to the Church, do not fight wyth sword and targate for dominions and reuenues,* as warlike Princes doe: yet thys ambition, pride, and auarice, appeareth in them nothyng inferiour to other worldly potestates: especially if wee beholde and aduise the doings and insatiable desires of the court of Rome. Great argument and prooffe hereof neither is hard to be found, nor farre to be soughte. What realme almost through all christendom hath not only seene with their eyes, but haue felt in their purses the ambitiō intollerable, and auarice insatiable of that deuouring church, and also haue complained vpon the greuance thereof, but neuer coulde be redressed? What exactions and extortions haue bene here in England out of bishopricks, monasteries, benefices, deanries, Archdeaconries, and all other offices of the Church, to fill the Popes coffers: and when they had all done, yet euery yeare brought almoste some newe inuention from Rome, to fetch in our English money: and if all the floudes in Englande (yea in all Europe) did runne into the sea of Rome, yet were that Ocean neuer able to be satisfied.

In Fraunce lykewise, what floudes of money were swallowed vp in this sea of Rome, it was openly complained Page 724 of in the councel of Basil as is testified by Henry Token, Canon and Ambassadour of the Archbishop of Maidenburge,* written in his booke intituled Rapularium, where as hee wryteth that in the Councell of Basill. An. 1536. the Archbyshop of Lions did declare, that in the time of Pope Martine, there came out of France to the court of Rome, 9. millions of golde, which was gathered of the Byshops and Prelates, besides those whych could not be counted of the poore clergy, which daily without number, runne vnto the court of Rome,* carying with them all their whole substance, The archbishop of Turonne sayde also at Basil, in y^e yeare of our Lord 1439. that three millions of gold came vnto Rome in his time, within the space of 14. yeres, from the prelates & prelacies, wherof no accompt could be made beside the poore cleargy, which daily run to that court. Let the man which feareth God, iudge what a deuouring gulf this is.* A million containeth x.C.M.

And what made Pope Pius the 2. to labor so earnestly to Lewes the 11. the French Kinge (who as is aforesayde was a great enemy to the house of Burgoin) that he wold (according to his former promise) abolishe & vtterly extinct the constitution established before at the Counsell of Bitures, by king Charles the 7. his predecessour, called Pragmatica Sanctio, but onely the ambition of that sea, which had no measure, and their auarice which had no ende, the storie is this. King Charles 7. the French king, willing to obey and folow the councel of Basil, did sommon a Parliament at Bitures. Where by the full consent of all the states in Fraunce,* both spiritual and temporal, a certain constitution was decreed and published, called Pragmatica Sanctio. wherein was comprehended, briefly the pith and effect of all the Canons and decrees cōcluded in the councel of Basil. The which constitution the saide king Charles willed and commaunded through all his realme,* inuiolably to be obserued and ratified for the honor and increase of Christian religion for euer. This was An. 1438.

It followed, that after the decease of thys foresayde Charles the 7. succeded king Lewys 11. who had promised before,* being Dolphine to Pope Pius, that if he euer came to the crowne, the foresayd Sanctio Pragmatica should be abolished. Wherupon Pope Pius hearing him to be crowned, did send vnto him Iohn Balueus a Cardinall, wyth hys great letterg patent, willing him to be mindful of hys promise made. The king eyther willing, or els pretending a will to performe, and accomplish what he had promised, directed the Popes letters patēt, wyth the sayd Cardinal, to the counsaile of Paris, requiring them to consult vpon the cause.

Thus the matter beyng brought and proposed in the Parliament house, the kings Atturney named Ioannes Romanus, a man wel spoken, singularly witted, and wel reasoned, stepping foorth, with great eloquence, and no les boldnes, prooued the sayd Sanction to be profitable, holy, and necessary for the wealth of the realme, and in no case to be abolished.* Unto whose sentence the Uniuersity of Paris adioyning their consent, did appeal from the attempts of the Pope, to the next generall Councell. The Cardinall vnderstanding this, toke no litle indignation thereat, fretting and fuming, and threatning many terrible things against them: but al his minatory words notwithstanding, he returned againe to the king, hys purpose not obtained, An. 1438. Ex Ioan. Mario.

Thus the Popes purpose in France was disappointed, which also in Germanie had come to the like effect, if Fredericke the Emperor had there done his part lykewise toward the Germaines: Who at the same time bewailing their miserable estate,* wēt about wyth humble sute to perswade the Emperor that he should no longer be vnder the subiection of the Popes of Rome, except they had first obtained certaine things of them as touching the Charter of Appeales, declaring their estate to be far worse (although vnderdeserued) then the Frenchmen or Italians: whose seruants (and especially of the Italians) they are worthely to be called, except that their estate were altered. The nobles & comminalty of Germanie, did instantly intreate w^t most waighty reasons & examples, both for the vtilitie and profite of the Empire, to haue the Emperours aide and helpe therin, for that which he was bound vnto them by an oth: alledging also the great dishonor & ignominie in that they alone had not the vse of their owne lawes, declaring how y^e French natiō had not made their sute vnto their king in vaine against the exactions of Popes: by whom they were defended, whych also prouided decrees and ordinances for the liberty of his people, & caused the same to be obserued: the which thing the Emperor ought to foresee within hys Empire, & to prouide for hys people and states of his empire, as well as other Kings doe. For what shall come to passe therby, if that forreine nations hauing recourse vnto their kings, being relieued and defended by them from the said exactions, and the Germains, & states of the Empyre flying vnto theyr Emperour, be by him forsaken or rather betraied & depriued of their owne lawes and decrees? The Emperor being moued, & partly ouercome by theyr perswasions, promised that he wold prouide no lesse for them, then the king of Fraunce had done for the Frenchmen, and to make decrees in that behalfe: but the graue authoritie of Aeneas Syluius, as Platina wryteth in the history of Pius the second, brake of the matter, who by his subtile and pestiserous perswasions did so bewitch the Emperour, that hee contemning the equall, iust, and necessary requestes of hys subiects, chose the sayd Aeneas to be hys Ambassadour vnto Calixtus then newly chosen Pope, to sweare vnto hym in his name, & to promise the absolute obedience of al Germany, as the only cōtry (as they call it) of obedience, neglecting the ordinances & decrees of their country, as before he had done vnto Eugenius the 4. being Ambassadour for the sayd Fredcrike, promising that he & all the Germaines would be obedient vnto him from hēceforth in al matters, as well spirituall as temporall.

Thus twise Friderike of Austrich contemned and derided the Germaines, & frustrating them of their natiue decrees and ordinances, brought them vnder subiection and bondage of the Pope: whych partly was the cause that 7. yeres before his death, he caused his sonne Maximiliā, not only to be chosen, but also crowned king of Romaines, and did associate hym to y^e ministration of the Empire, least after hys death (as it came to passe) the Empire shoulde bee transported into an other family,* suspecting y^e Germains, whom he had twise cōtrary to his lawes made subiect and in bondage vnto the Popes exactions: first be fore he was crowned in the time of Eugenius the 4. and again the second time after hys coronation, and death of Pope Nicholas the 5. denying their requests. Wherupon Germany being in this miserable pouerty and greuous subiection vnder the Popes tyranny and polling, with teares and sighs lamenting their estate, continued so almost vnto Luthers time, as the hystories hereafter following do testify.

And here ceasing with the story of Fredericke,* we will now procede to the raigne of Maximilian his sonne, omitting diuers things els incident in the time of this Emperour: as first touching the vnbrotherly contention & conflicts betwene this Fredericke and Albertus his brother, and Sigismundus his vnckle, for the dukedome of Austria, after the death of Mathias afore mentioned: Omitting also to speake of the long and cruel war betwene the Prussians, and Polonians, with the religious sect of them, which were called Tentones fratres sanctae Mariae, in the time of Uladislaus: Omitting also the strife and variaunce for the dukedome of Millain,* betwene Fredericus the Emperour, Alfonsus, Carolus duke of Orleance, & Franciscus Sfortia: And howe the sayde Princedome being after geuen to Sfortia, great warres were kindled & long continued betwene Sfortia and the Milleners, then betwene the Milleners and Uenetians, and after betwene the Frenchmen and the Milleners. All which tumultes and commotions, as not pertinent greatly to the purpose of this story, I referre to other wryters, where they are to be founde more amply discoursed.

Thys as more properly belonging to the storye of the Church, I thought good not to passe ouer touching such as were condemned, & suffered the paines of fire for testimony of Christ and his truth: Of whom one was Iohn a pastor or a neteheard, which was a keeper of cattel: The other was Ioannes de Wesalia, although not burned, yet persecuted neere to death vnder the raigne of thys Emperour Fredericus the 3.

And first touching thys Iohn the Netehearde,* Thus wryteth Sebast. Munsterus. That the Bishop of Herbypolis, condemned and burned for an hereticke one Iohn, whych was a keeper of cattel at a towne called Niclas Hausen in Franconia,* because hee taught and helde that the lyfe of the cleargy was ignominious and abhominable before God. An. 1476. Ex Munstero.

The other was Doctour Ioannes de Wessalia,* who was complained vpon vnto Dietherus the Archbishop of Mentz, by the Thomists, vpon certaine articles and opinions, gathered out of hys bookes. Wherefore the sayde Dietherus, fearing else to be deposed againe from his Bishopricke, directeth forth commission to the vniuersities of Heidelberg and Colen, to haue the mater in examination, who conuenting together the yere aboue mentioned, called thys Doctour de Wessalia before them, making hym to sweare that he shuld present and geue vp all his treatises, workes and wrytings, what so euer hee had made or preached: Page 725 that being done, they deuided hys bookes amongst themselues, seuerally euery man to find out what heresies and errors they could. His articles & opinions were these.

That all men be saued freely, and through meere grace by faith in Christ.*Free will to be nothing. Onely that we shoulde beleue the word of God, and not the glose of any mā, or fathers. That the worde of God is to be expounded with the collation of one place with an other. That Prelates haue no authoritie to make lawes, or to expounde the scriptures by any peculiere right, geuen them more then to an other. That mennes traditions, as fastings, pardones, feasts, long prayers, peregrinations and such like, are to be reiected. Extreme vnction and confirmation to be reprooued: confession and satisfaction to be reprehended. The primacie of the Pope also he affirmed to be nothing.

Certaine other articles also were gathered out of hym by his aduersaries, but in such sort, that they may seme rather to followe their owne malicious gathering, then any true intelligence of his minde: whereof more is to be vnderstanded in this processe hereafter.

Thus when Wesalianus was commanded to appear, there conuented together, first the Archbishop, the inquisitor, the doctors of Colen, and the doctors of Heidelberge, with the masters of the same, and the Rector of the vniuersity of Mentz, the Deane of faculties, Bachelers of diuinity, and many other maisters of the same vniuersitie, Canons, doctors, with the bishops Chancellor, and his counsellors, besides many religious prelates, schollers, wyth a doctor of Franckforte, the sumner & bedels, which all met together in the great hall of the Minorites, for the examination of this Ioannes de Wesalia.

Frier Elton the Inquisitor, first sitteth in the hyghest place, then after him others according to their degree. In the beginning of the examination, first the Inquisitor beginneth with these wordes: Most reuerent father and honorable doctors.* &c. Our reuerent father and prince Elector hath caused this present cōuocation to be called, to hear the examination of M. Iohn de Wesalia, in certaine suspected articles concerning the catholique faith. But something I will say before, that may doe hym good, and desire that two or three of them that fauoure hym, or some other, will rise vppe and geue him counsaile, to forsake and leaue his errours, to recognise himselfe, & to aske pardon, which if he wil do, he shal haue pardon: if he wil not, we wil procede against him without pardone. And thus Wesalianus being cited and brought in the midst betwixt 2. minorites, being very aged, and hauing a staffe in his hand, was sette before the Inquisitor. Who beginning to answer for hym self with a long protestation,* could not be suffred to prosecute his Oration, but was cutre off and required briefly, to make an end, and to tell them in fewe woordes whether he would stand to his opinions, or to the determination of the church. To this he aunswered, y^t he neuer spake any thing against the determination of the Church,* but sayde that he had written diuers and sondry treatises, in the which if hee had erred, or were found to say otherwise then wel, he was content to reuoke and cal backe the same, and do al things that was requisite. Then said the Inquisitor, do you aske then pardon? The other answered, why shuld I aske pardon, when I know no crime or error committed? The inquisitour sayd: well we will call you to the remembraunce thereof, and procede to the examination.

In the meane time, others called vppon him instantly to aske pardone. Then sayd Wesalianus. I aske pardone. Notwithstanding the Inquisitor proceeded to the examination, reading there two instruments,* declaring that hee had authority from the Apostolicke sea: after this cited the said Iohn to appear to hys examination. Thirdly he commaunded him vnder paine of disobedience, in the vertue of the holy Ghost, and vnder paine of excōmunication of the greater curse,* (from the which no man coulde absolue him, but onely the Pope or the Inquisitour, except onely at the poynt of death) to tell plainly the truth vppon such things as should be demanded of him concerning his faith, without ambages and sophistication of wordes. And so being demanded first, whether he did beleue vpon his oth taken, that hee was bounde to tell the trueth, although it were against himselfe or any other: to this he answered, Scio, that is:* I know: Thē the Inquisitour biddeth him say, Credo, that is, I beleue. To the which hee aunswered agayne, what nede I say that I beleue that thing I know. There the Inquisitor something stirred wyth the matter, as hote as a toste (as they say) cried out with a loude voice, maister Ioannes, maister Ioannes, maister Ioannes, say Credo, say Credo. Then he answered Credo.

After thys, being demaunded whether he had wrytten any treatise, concerning the binding of humaine lawes, to one Nicolas of Boheme, and whether he had written any treatise of the Ecclesiasticall power of indulgences & pardons, and of fasting and other treatises: he beleued that he had so wrytten, and had conferred w^t diuers learned men: Also that he had sent to the Bishops of Wormes, a certaine treatise of fasting.

Many other interrogatories were ministred vnto him, whereof some were vaine, some false. Such as were more principal, here we will briefly touch, leauing out superfluiti•s.

Being demaunded whether hee was a fautour of the Bohemians,* he sayde he was not. Also being demaunded concerning the Sacrament of the holy body and bloude of our Lorde, whether he thought Christe there to be contained really, or only diuinely, and whether he dyd beleue in the sayde Sacrament the substaunce of breade there to remaine, or onely the fourme thereof: to thys he aunswered, not denying but the body of Christe was there really contained, and also wyth the body of Christe, the substaunce of bread to remaine.

After this he was demaunded his opinion concerning religious men,* as Monkes, Nunnes, or begwines, whether he thought them to be bound to the vow of chastitie, or to the keping of any other vow, and whether he said to the Friars Minorites any such worde in effecte: I can not saue you in this your state and order. Thys he confessed, that he had sayde, howe that not your religion saueth you, but the grace of God, &c. not denying but they might be saued.

Item,* being required whether he beleued or had wrytten, that there is no mortall sinne, but whyche is exprest to be mortal in the canon of the holy Bible: to this he answered, that he did so beleue as he hath written, til he was better informed. Likewise being required what he thought of the vicar of Christ in earth, he aunswered, that he beleued that Christe left no vicare in earth: For the confirmation whereof he alledged and sayde,* that Christ ascending vp to heauen, said: Ecce ego vobiscum sum. &c. Behold I am with you. &c. In the which wordes he plainly declared, that hee would substitute vnder him no vicare in earth, and sayde moreouer, if a vicare signified any man, which in y^e absence of the principal hath to do the works of the principall, then Christ hath no vicar here in earth.

In like maner,* concerning indulgences and pardons, such as the church doth vse to geue, they demanded of him, whether they had any efficacy, & what he thought thereof: who answered againe that he had written a certaine treatise of that matter, & what hee had wrytten in that treatise, he would persist therein,* which was thus: that he beleued, that the treasure boxe of the merits of Saints could not be distributed of the Pope to others, because that treasure is not left here in earth: For so it is wryttē in the Apocalips: Opera enim illo•um, sequuntur illos, &c. that is: their workes follow them.

Item, that theyr merites could not be applied to other men, for the satisfaction of theyr paine due vnto them, and therefore that the Pope and other Prelates cannot distribute that treasure to men.

It was objected to him moreouer,* that in the sayde his treatise, he called pardons & indulgences, Pias fraudes fidelium, that is, holy fraudes and deceits of the faithful.

Also, being demaunded what he thought of the halowing and blessings of altars, chalices, vestiments, wax cande•s, palmes, herbes, holy water and other diuine things, &c. Hee aunswered that they had no spirituall vertue and power in them to driue away deuils, and that holye water hath no more efficacie then other water not hallowed, as concerning remission of veniall sinnes, and driuing away deuils and other effectes, which the schoole doctours do attribute to it.

Item, for degrees of mariage forbidden in the Scryptures, he beleueth that all Christian men vnder deadly sin, are bound vnto the same.

Item, that he beleueeth that God may geue grace to a man hauing the vse of reason, without all motion of Free wil. Also he thinketh that S. Paule in his conuersion, dyd nothing of his owne free wil for his conuersion. He beleueeth moreouer, that God may geue such grace to a manne hauing the vse of reason, not doing that which in hym is.

*Item, he affirmed that nothing is to be beleued, which is not conteined in the Canon of the Bible.

Also, that the elect are saued onely by the grace of God.

Besides al these moreouer, he was charged with y^e old opinion of the Grecians, which they dyd holde contrary to the Romaine church, vnto the time of the councell of Ferrara aboue mentioned, concerning the proceeding of the holy Ghost.

The Wednesday next following, 3, Doctours, the suffragane, Herwicus & Iacobus Sprenger, were sent vnto Page 726 him with perswasions to exhort him, and when he would not stand to their Canons, * wherby they went about to refute his doctrine, he was then demanded of Herwicus, why he would beleue rather the 4. Euangelists, then the Gospel o• Nicodemns. To whō he answerd, because he wold. Being asked againe why he beleued the 4. Euangelists, he said: because he so receiued of his parents. Then being demaunded, why he would not beleue the Doctours, because (said he) their doctrine is not canonical scripture. Againe, it was to him objected, why he would be credited himself, when he preached, seing he would not beleue the holy doctors? To whome hee answered in this wise, saying, that he did preach as his duety was, but whether they gaue credit to his words, he did not care.

*Thys examination being ended, after these Articles were condemned by the Inquisitour & his assistance, then said he after this maner: As you do with me, if Christ himselfe were here, he might be condemned as an heretike. After this they sent diuers to him to haue communication w^t him, and to perswade him, sending also to him w^t his Articles a forme of asking pardone: at length within 3. or 4. daies after, hee was content to condescend vnto them, and to submit himselfe to their holy mother Church, and the information of the Doctors. * In the boke of Orthuinus Gratius, and in Paralypomena, adioyned to Abbas Vrspergensis, we reade these woordes wrytten of this Ioannes de Wesalia: *Dempto solo articulo de processione spiritus sancti, in alijs videtur non ita graui censura &c. That is: except onely the Article of the proceeding of the holy Ghost, in other Articles it semeth that he was not to be chastened with so sharpe censure, if respit and space had ben geuen him, if good counsellours had bene aboute him, * if all they which did accuse and molest him, had not bene de via realium, as Thomistes, that is, of the sect of Thomas: which Thomists were set at that time, against the other sect of the seculars, which were called Nominales, and therefore, they so spited this Doctour because he did not hold with their Thomas, against whome otherwise (had it not ben for that cause) they would neuer haue ben so fierce and malicious in proceeding against him. I take God to witnesse, which knoweth all things, y^t this processe, which was made against him for his reuoking & burning of his bookes, did greatly displease M. Engeline of Brunswick, a great diuine, and also M. Iohn Reisersberge, being both learned, and famous men, but namely M. Engeline thought, that too much malice and rashnesse was shewed in handling of that same man, and did not feare to say, that many of his articles, and the greater part thereof, might be holden well inough, and greatly blamed the mad and phantasticall dissention of the Thomists,* seeking by all maner of wayes, how to get the triumph ouer the seculare deuines, &c. Haec ille.

*Although thys aged and feble old man, by weakenesse was constrained to geue ouer vnto the Romish clergy, by outward profession of his mouth: yet notwithstanding, his opinions and doctrine declared his inward heart, of what iudgement he was, if feare of death present had not otherwise enforced him to say, then hee did thinke. Agayne, although he had reuoked after their minds, yet we reade no such fourme of recantation to be prescribed to hym to read opely vnto the people, as the vse is here in England. The story of this man is more fully to be found in the bokes of Orth. Gratius. &c.

As touching the raigne of this Fredericke Emperour, seeing we haue comprehēded hetherto sufficiently the most principal matters in his time incurrent, we wil now passe forwarde (the Lorde guiding vs) to Maximilian, after I haue first geuen a brieue memorandum of 3. valiant Princes and Captaines,* flourishing in the same time of thys Fredericke, in Germaine: Of the whych, was one Albert Duke of Saxonie, who for his renowned and famous acts, was called by publike voyce, Dextera manus Imperij. The ryght hande of the Empire. The other was Albert, Marques of Brandenburge, to whome also the name was attribute, named of Pope Pius to be Achilles Germanicus. The third was Fredericke Earle Palatine, surnamed Victoriosus, who manfully defended the fredome and maiesty of y^e Empire, from the fraudulent oppressions of the popes tirāny.

In the yeare of our Lorde 1484. in this Emperours time dyed Pope Sixtus the 4. a little before touched, a monster rather of nature,* then a prelate of the Church. Of him writeth Platina, that vniustly he vexed al Italy with warre and dissension. Agrippa writing of hym, sayeth that among all the bawdes of these other latter dayes, whych were builders of brothelhouses, this Pope Sixtus 4. surmounted all other: who at Rome erected a stewes of double abomination, not onely of women, but also. &c. wherupon no small gaine redounded to his coffers: For euery suche common harlot in Rome paide to him a Iuly peece, the summe wherof grew in the yere, some while to 20000. at length to xl. M. duckets. Wherunto accordeth right wel the Epitaphe of Iohn Sapidus, which in the ende heere of we will annexe.

Iohn Carion,* also speaking of this Bishop, witnesseth him to be a man rather borne to warre, then to Religion: For hee warred against Uitellius Tiphernates, agaynst the Florentines, the Uenecians, whome he excommunicated, and did not absolue till hee died:* also against Columnenses, against Ferdinandus king of Apulia, and Duke of Calabria: also against other nations and Princes moe. Ex Ioan. Laziardo.

Of the sayde Pope it is recorded, that he was a speciall patron and tutor to al begging Friers, graunting them to haue and enioy reuenues in this worlde, & in the world to come euerlasting life. Among the which Friers there was one named Alanus de rupe, a Blacke Frier, which made the Rosary of our Ladies Psalter (so they terme it) and erected a certaine new fraternitie vpon the same, called Fraternitas Coronariorum, pertaining to the order of the Dominickes, of the which order Iacobus Sprenger, one of the condemners of Ioannes de Wesalia aboue mentioned, was a great aduācer, and especially this Pope Sixtus 4. who gaue to the sayd fraternities large graces and priuilegies.

Concerning the institution of this Rosary, there was a booke set forth about the yere of our Lord 1480. in the beginning wherof is declared, that the blessed virgin entred into the celle of this Alanus, and was so familiar with him, that not onely she did espouse him to her husband, but also kissed him with her heauenly mouth,* and also for more familiaritie, opened to hym her pappes, and powred great plentie of her owne milke into his mouth. For the confirmation whereof the sayde Alanus, this holy babe (sayth the storie) did sweare deeply, curssing himselfe, if it were not thus, as he had made relation.

This fabulous figment, when I read in the centuries of Iohn Bale, I began with my selfe to mistrust the credite therof, and had thought not to trouble the reader with suche incredible forgeries. But as the prouidence of God worketh in all things, so also it appeared in thys, that the very same booke came to my hands at the wryting hereof, wherein this selfe same narration is contained, wherein I found not onely this to be true, which in Ihon Bale is expressed, but also found in like manner, an other wonder as prodigious as this: where in an other place not farre off, is storied in the same booke, howe that about the time of S. Dominicke, there was a certaine matrone in Spaine, named Lucia, which being taken captiue by the Saracenes, hauing her husband killed, was caried great with childe into the Turkish land.

When the time of her labour came, shee being left desolate among beastes and hogs, and remembring thys twise holy Rosary, (first instituted sayth the booke by S. Dominicke, and afterwarde renued by Alanus) eftsoones the holy virgin was ready and stode by her,* & receiued the childe at her trauaile, supplying all the partes of a diligent midwife: and moreouer causing a Priest sodenly to appeare, gaue the childe to be Christened, calling it after her owne name, Marianus: and so was shee wife to Alanus, midwife to Lucia, and Godmother to Marianus. Which story if it be true, then is the Popes Canon, by thys example, to be controlled, whiche permitteth midwiues in time of necessity,* to baptise, seeing the blessed Uirgine, playing the parte her selfe of a midwife, durst not Baptise thys childe without a priest.

It followeth more in the storye, that by the helpe of the sayd blessed virgin, this Lucia our Ladies gossip, after her Purification, was restored w^t her childe safe to her country againe.* Thys booke being in Latine and Printed, beareth thys title: Rosacea Augustissimae Christiferae Mariae Corona: and in the front it sheweth the name of Iodocus Bisselaius a noble manne of Aquine. And this by the occasion of Pope Sixtus. Which Sixtus, what a maintainer of blind superstition hee was, partly by that aforespoken, partly by the ende following it may be seene. For we reade in certaine wryters, y^e after thys Pope had vnderstanding that Hercules Estensis,* Duke of Ferraria, had ioyned peace wyth the Uenetians against hys will, he was so greeued therewith, that for rancour of minde, wythin 5. dayes after, hee died: whereunto hys Epitaph following geueth sufficient record. About whose time also died Platina, a man not vnlearned, but yet a shamefull flatterer and bearer wyth the wicked liues of the Popes.

But leauing here pope Sixtus with hys verses, & vices, let vs nowe proccede,* as we before promised, to enter the story of Maximilian, keeping notwithstanding the order of our kinges here in England: For a little before the reigne of Maximilian, king Edward the fourth ceased his life. an. 1483. after he had raigned 22. yeares. In the tyme of which K. Edward, this also is not to be forgotten, y^t one Burdet, a marchant dwelling in Cheapside, at the signe of the crowne, whiche is the signe nowe of the flower de luce merely speaking to his sonne, sayd that he wold make him inheritour of the crown, meaning in deed his own house. For the which words, when K. Edward caused to be misconstred, & interpreted, as though he had ment the crowne of the Realme, w^tin lesse space then 4. houres, he was apprehended, iudged, drawne, and quartered in Chepeside.

THis king Edward left behinde hym by hys wife Elizabeth 2. sonnes, Edward, & Richard & 2. daughters, Elizabeth and Cicilie. Which 2. sonnes Edward & Richard, for somuche as they were vnder age and not ripe to gouern, a consultation was called among y^e pieres, to debate whether y^e foresayd yong prince & king, shold be vnder the gouernment of his mother, or els y^t Rich. Duke of Glocester brother to K. Edward the 4. & vnclie to the child, should be gouernor of the K. and protector of the realme, there hath bene and is an old adage, the wordes whereof rather then the true meaning, is wrasted out of Salomon: Vae regno cuius Rex est puer. &. 1. Wo to y^e kingdom, the king whereof is a child. &c. But if I may finde leaue herein to thrust in a glose, I would this adde and say: Vae illi puero, qui fui regni Rex non est. 1.* Wo to that childe, whiche is a king in a kingdome vnruely and ambitious. There was the same season among other noble peeres of y^e realm, the Duke of Buckingham, a man of great authoritie, who had maryed King Edwards wifes sister. Because the duke being so neare alⁱliaunt to the K. had bene vnkindely (as he thought) of the king entreated, hauing by him no anauncement nor anye great frendship shewed, according to his expectation, took part therfore w^t Richard Duke of Glocester, both against the Queene & her children,* to make the foresayd Duke, the chiefe gouernour and protector. The whiche thinge being broughe to passe, by the ayde, assistaunce, and workinge of the Duke of Buckingham, the Queene tooke sanctuarye with her yōger sonne: the elder brother, which was y^e king remayned in the custody of the Duke of Glocester his vnclē. Who being now in a good towardnes to obtayne that which he lōg loked for, sought all the means, & soone compassed the matter, by false collour of dissembled words, by periurie, and labour of friendes, namely of the Duke of Buckingham, and the Cardinall Archbishop of Caunterburye, that the other brother also shoulde bee committed to his credite. Thus the ambitious protector and vnnaturall vnclē, hauing the possession of his two nephewes, and and innocent babes, thought himselfe almost vp the whele where he woulde clime•: Although he could not walke in such mistes and cloudes, but his deuised purposes began to be espyed: which caused him more couertly to goe about to remoue from him all suspicion and to blinde the peoples eyes. But before, he could accomplish hys execrable enterprise, some there were, whom he thought first must be ridd out of his way, as namely the Lorde Hastings, and the Lord Stanley, who as they were sitting together in counsaile within the tower, the protectour (the matter beyng so appoynted before) sodainly rushed in among them, and after a few words there commoned, he sodainly hasted out agayne: his minde belike, being full of mischiefe and furye was not quiet. Who within the space of an houre, returned agayn into y^e chamber with a sterne countenance and a frowning look, and so there set him downe in hys place. When the Lordes were in great meruell and muse at the meaning hereof: then he out of a cankered hart, thus begā to bray, asking them what are they worthy to haue, which go about to imagine the destruction of him being so neare to y^e kings bloud, and protectour of the Realme? At the which question,* as the other Lords sate musing, the Lord Hastings, because he had bene more familiare wyth him, thus aunswered, that they were worthy of punishment, whatsoeuer they were. Which when the other Lordes also had affirmed,* that is (quoth the protectour) yonder sorceresse, my brothers wife, meaning the Queene and other with her, adding moreouer, and saying: that sorcere•• & other of her counsaile, as Shores wife, with her affinitie, haue by their witchcraft, thus wasted my body: and therewith shewed forth his left arme a wearish withered thing as it was neuer otherwise, as was well knowne.

This Shores wife had bene before a Concubine to K. Edward,* & afterward was kept by the same Lorde Hastings. Moreouer here is to be noted, that by the consent of the said Lord Hastings, the cruell protectour had deuised about the same time,* the kindred of the Queene, innocently to be headed at Pomfret, of mere despite and hatred. Wher^fore, this punishment not vnderuedly, by the iust hand of God, fell vpon the said Lord Hastings.

It followeth then more in the storye, that when the L. Hastings had heard these false accusations of the tyraunt which he knew to be vntrue: certaynly (my Lord) sayd he, if they haue so done, they be worthy of haynous punishment. Why quoth the protector, doest thou serue me with if and with and? I tel thee, they haue so done, and that I wil make good on thy body traytour: and therewith geuing a great rap on the boord (for a token or watchword) one cry^ded treason without, and forthwith the chamber was full of harneysed men, The protector then approchyng to the L. Hastings,* arrested him as a traytour. An other let flye at the Lord Standley: who to auoyd the blowe shronke vnder y^e table, or els his head had bene cleft a sonder: notwithstanding he receaued such a wounde, that the bloud ranne about hys eares. There were in that counsaile y^e same time the Archbishop of Yorke,* and Doctour Morton Byshop of Ely (by whose procurement afterward king Henry the vii. was sent for into England, and he made archbishop af^ter that of Canterbury) these with the Lord Standley diuersly were bestowed in diuers chambers. The Lorde Hastings was commaunded to speede and shriue hym a pace,* for before dinner the protector sware by S. Paule, y^t he should dye: and so incontinently, without farther iudge^{ment}, his head was stricken of,* by whose counsaile the Queenes kindred were at the same time and daye, beheaded at Pomfret.

After this tyrannous murder accomplished, the mischienous protectour aspiring still to the crowne, to set his deuises forward, first through giftes and fayre promises, dyd subordinate Doctor Shaw a famous preacher then in Lō^don, at Paules Crosse to insinuate to the people, that neyther king Edward with his sonnes,* nor the Duke of Clarence were lawfully begotten, nor the very children of the Duke of York, but begotten vnlawfully by other persons in adultery on y^e Duches their mother, and y^t he alone was y^e true and onely lawfull heyre of the Duke of York: More^{ouer} to declare and to signifie to the audience, that K. Edward was neuer lawfully married to the Queene, but hys wife before was dame Elizabeth Lucy, and so the 2. childrē of king Edward to be base and bastardes, and therfore the title of y^e crown most rightly to pertain to y^e Lord protector. That this false flatterer, and loud lying preacher, to serue y^e protectors humour, shamed not most impudently to abuse that holy place, that reuerent auditorye, the sacred word of God,* taking for hys theame: Adulterae plantationes nō dabūt radices altas &c which he most impiously did apply against the innocent children & right heyres of this realm.* Whereupon such grudge and disdayne of the people wyth worldly wonder followed him, that for shame of the people crying out of him, in few dayes after he pynd way.

When this sermon would take no effect with the people the protector vnmercifully drowned in ambitioⁿ, rested not thus,* but wⁱn few dayes after, excited y^e Duke of Buckingham, first to breake the matter in couert talke, to the Mayor and certayne of the heades of the Cittie, picked out for the purpose: that done, to come to y^e Guildhall, to moue the people by all flattering and lying perswasions to the same which shameles Shaw before had preached before at Paules Crosse. Whiche the Duke with all dilligence and helpes of eloquence, being a man both learned and well Page 728 spoken,* endeouored to accomplish, making to the people a long and artificiall Oration, supposing no lesse, but that y^e people allured by his crafty iusinations would cry, king Rich. K. Ric. But there was no king Rich, in their mouthes lesse in their hartes. Wherupon the Duke looking to the Lord Mayor, and asking what the silence ment, contrary to the promise of the one, & the expectation of y^t other It was then answered of the Mayor, that the people peraduenture wel vnderstood him not: wherfore the Duke rei^{ter}ating his narration in other wordes, declared agayne y^t he had done before.* Likewise the thyrd time he repeted hys Oration againe and agayn. Then the commons which be fore stood mute, being now in a mase, seeing this importuⁿitie, began to mutter softly among themselues, but yet no king Richard could sound in their lips, saue onely that in the nether end of the Hall,* certayn of the Dukes seruantes with one Nashfield, and other belonging to the protector, thrusting into the Hall among the prease, began sodaynly at mens backes to cry king Richard k. Rich, throwing vp theyr cappes, whereat the cittyzens turning back theyr heades, marueiled not a little, but sayd nothing.

The Duke and the Lord Mayor with that side, taking this for sufficient testimony, incontinent came blowing for hast to the protector, then lying at Baynardes Castle. Where the matter being made before,* was now so contriued, that forsooth, humble petition was made in the name of the whole commons, and that with 3 sundry sutes, to y^e humble and simpel protector, that he, although it was vt^rterly against his will to take it: yet would of his humilitey stoupe so low, as to receane the heauy kingdome of England vpon his shoulders. At this their tender request and sute of the Lords and commōs made (ye must know how) y^e milde Duke seing no other remedy,* was contented at length to yeld, although fore against his will (ye must so imagine) and to submit himselfe so low, as of a protector to be made king: not much herein vnlike to our prelates in y^t Popish church, who when they haue before well compounded for the popes Bulls, yet must they for maner sake make curtesy, and thrise deny that for whiche they so long before haue gaped, and so sweetly haue payed for.

*AND thus Richard Duke of Gloucester tooke vpon to be made & proclaymed king of England, the yeare aforesayd. an. 1483. in the mōth of Iune. Who then comming to the Tower by water, first made his sonne a childe of x. yeare old, prince of Wales, & Iohn Haward (a man of great industry & seruice) he aduaūced to be Duke of Northfolke, & Sir Tho. Haward his sonne, he ordained Erle of Surry. Also William Lord Barkeley was appoynted Earle of Notingham. Frances L. Louell, was made Uicunt Louell. L. Stanley for feare of his sonne, was deliuered out of the Tower, and made Steward of the kings houshold. Likewise the Archbishop of Yorke was set free: but Morton Bishop of Ely was committed to the Duke of Buckingham, by whome was wrought the first deuise to bring in Henry Erle of Richmond into England, and to cōioin mariage betweene Elizabeth king Edwardes daughter, and him, whereby the two houses of Yorke and Lancaster were vnited together.

*After the kingdome of England was thus allotted to king Rich. the vsurper, as in maner aboue remembred, he taried not long for hys coronation, which was solemnised the month next ensuing, the 6. day of Iuly.

The triumph and solemnitie of this vsurped coronation, being finished, & al thinges to the same appertayning, this vnquiet tyraunt yet coulde not thinke himselfe safe, so long as yong Edward the right king & hys brother, were aliue: Wherefore the next enterprise which he did set vpon was this, how to rid these innocent babes out of the way, that he might reigne king alone.

In the meane time while al this ruffling was in hand what bread & sorow the tender harts of these fatherles and friendles children were in, what little ioy of them selues what smal ioy of life they had, it is not so hard as dolorous for tender harts to vnderstand. As the yonger brother lingered in thought and heauines, so the prince which was a 11. yeare old, was so out of hart and so fraught with feare that he neuer tyed his poyntes, nor ioyed good day, till the trayterous impictie of their cruell vnclē had deliuered thē of their wretchednes, whiche was not long in dispatching For after king Richard their vnclē, first attempting to cōpasse his diuelishe deuise by Robert Brakenbury

Constable of the tower,* and could not winne him to suche a cruell fact (to die therefore) then he got one Iames Tyrell, ioyning with him Iohn Dighton, and Miles Forrest, to per'petrate this heinous murder. Which Dyghon and Forest about midnight entring into their chamber, so be wrapped and entangled them amongst the clothes, keeping downe the fetherbed and pilowes hard vnto their mournes, that within a while: they smothered and stifeled them pitiously in their bed.

And thus ended these two yong princes their liues, tho'rough the wretched cruelty of these forenamed tormentors who for their detestable and bloody murder committed, es'caped not long vnpunished by the iust hand of God. For first Miles Forest, at S. Martines le grand, by peecemeale miserably rotted away, Iohn Dighton liued at Callis lōg after so disdained and hated, that he was pointed at of all men, and there died in great misery. Sir Iames Tyrell was beheaded at Tower hill for treason. Also King Richard himselfe within a yeare and a halfe after, was stayne in the field hacked and hewed of his enemies handes, torne and tugged like a curre dogge.

Furthermore, the said iustice of gods hand left not the Duke of Buckingham escape free: Whiche was a greate maintainer and setter vp of this butcherly vsurper: for les then within a yeare after so God wrought, that hee was himselfe beheaded for treason by the sayd king, whom he so vniustly before had aduanced and set vp.

In the same catologue and order of these wicked doers afore recited, we haue also to comprehende two other, as well worthy of memoriall, as the best or rather as y^t worst. The name of the one was doctour Shawe,* aboue rehearsed: The other doctor Pinkie, prouincial of the Austen Fri'ers: both famous preachers, and both Doctors in diuinitie both of more learning then vertue (sayth the story) of more same thē learning, & yet of more learning thē truth. Shaw made a Sermon in the prayse of the Protector, before hys coronation. Pinkie preached after thys coronation. Both were so full of tedious flatterye, that no good cares coulde abide them.* Pinkie in his sermon so lost his voyce, that he was sayne to leaue of & came downe in in the midst. Doctour Shaw by his sermon lost his honenesty, and soone after, his life for very shame of the world, so that he neuer durst after that, shew his face againe. But as for the Fryer, he was so farre past shame, that the losse therof did little touch him.

Mention was made a little before,* of Doctor Morton Bishop at Ely, by whose meanes the deuise was first broched, for the conioyning the two houses of Yorke & Lanca'ster together. This deuise was first broken to the Duke of Buckingham, which soone after cost hym his life. But y^t bishop more crafty to saue hymselfe, incontinent fled into Brittain. Notwithstanding, the deuise once being broched was so plausible, and tooke such effect, that message was sent ouer the sea to Henry Earle of Richmond, by his mo'ther and by the Queene, mother to the Ladye Elizabeth, that if he would make hys returne, and promise to marry with the sayd Lady Elizabeth King Edwards daughter, he should be receaued. To make a longer discourse of thys matter, which is sufficiently set forth by S. Tho. More so ornatly, it needeth not.

Briefely (to contract that in a small compasse of wordes, which was not so small a thing in doing) after that the Earle Henry, with such other banished mē, as fled out of Englād at the taking of the Duke of Buckingham,* had perfect intelligence by his mother and by the Queene and other frends moe out of England, how the case of y^t realm stode, and how it was here purposed by his frendes, that is, that he should with all conuenient speede, hast hys returne ouer into England, promising to mary with Ladye Elizabeth: he with all diligence as tyme and preparation would serue, aduaūced forward his iourney, being wel helped and furnished by Fraunces Duke of Britayne, and so shipped his mē. Albeit his first voyage sped not, for that the winds turning contrary: by force of weather his ships were disparced, and he repulsed backe into Fraūce agayn. His second viage was more prosperous. Who taking the seas at Harslet,* in the moneth of August. an. 1485. accompanied onely with two thousand men, and a smal number of shippes, aryued at Milford Hauen in Wales, and fyrste came to Dale, then to Harford West, where he was ioyfully receiued, and also by the cōming in of Arnolde Butler and the Pēbroke men, was in power encreased. Frō thēce he remoued by Cardigan to Shrewsbury, & then to Newport, and so to Stafford, from thence to Liechfield, his army still more and more augmented. Lyke as a great floud by comming in of many small riuers, gathereth more aboundaunce of water: so to this Earle diuers noble Captaynes Page 729 and men of power adioyned themselues as Richard Griffith, Iohn Morgan. Rice ap Thomas, thē sir Georg Talbot, with the yong Erle of Shrewesbery his warde, Sir William Stanley, Sir Tho. Burchier, and Sir Wal'ter Hungerford, knightes. At last the said Erle hearing of the kinges comming, conducted his whole army to Tam worth.

King Richard first hearing of the arriual of the Erle Henry in the partes of Wales after such a slender sort, did giue little or no regard vnto it. But after, vnderstanding that he was come to Lichfield, without resistance or incombraunce, he was sore moued, and exceedingly tooke on cursing and crying out against them which had so deceaued him, & in all post speed, sent for Iohn Duke of Northfolke, Hen. Erle of Northumberlād. Tho. Erle of Surrey with other his frendes of special trust. Robert Brakenbury also liesetenaunt of the tower was sent for, with Sir Tho. Burchier, and Sir Walter Hungerforde, with certaine other knightes and Esquiers, of whome he partlye misdoubted, or had some suspicious gelousy. Thus K. Richard, after most forceable maner well fortified and accompanied, leauing nothing vndone y^t dilligence could require set forward toward his enemies. The Earle by this time was come to Tamworth, to whō secretly in the Euening resorted sir Iohn Sauage, sir Bryan Sanford, sir Simon Digby, and many other, forsaking the part of K. Richard, whome all good men hated, as he no otherwise deserued. The king hauing perfect knowledge the Earle to be encamped at Tamworth, embatled himselfe in a place neare to a village called Bosworth, not farre from Leicester, appointing there to encounter with his aduersaries. Here y^t matter lay in great doubt and suspense concerning y^t Lord Stanley (which was y^e Erles father in law & had maryed his mother) to what part he would encline. For although his hart went (no doubt) with the Earle, & had secret conference with him the night before, yet because of his sonne and heyre George Lord Straunge, being then in the hāds of king Richard, least the king should attempt any preiudiciall thing against him, durst not be seene openly to goe that way, where in hart he fauoured, and therefore closely kept himselfe betweene both, till the push came that hys helpe might serue at a pinch.

The number of the Erles part exceeded not to the one halfe of the side of king Richard. When the time and the place was appointed, where the two battailes should encounter and ioine together, fore stripes and great blowes were geuen on both sides, and many slayne. If number & multitude might gouerne the successe of battaile,* king Richard had double to the erle. But God is he, not man, that geueth victorie, by what meanes it seemeth to his diuine prouidence best.* In what order and by what occasion this field was wonne and lost, the certain intelligence we haue not certainly expressed, but onely by the historye of Polydore Vergile, whom sir Thomas More doth follow word for word. In the which history it doth appeare, y^t as these 2. armies were coupling together, king Richard vnderstanding by his espials where the earle of Richmond was, and how he was but slenderly accompanied, and seeing him to approch more neare vnto him, he rather caryed with courage, then ruled with reason, set spurres to the horse and raunging out of the compasse of hys ranckes, pressed toward the Erle, setting vppon him so sharply, that first he killed sir William Brandon,* the Erles standard bearer, fa|ther to y^e Lord Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolke,* thē af|ter ouerthrew sir Iohn Cheny, thinking likewise to oppresse the Erle. But as the Lorde by his secret prouidence disposeth the euent of all thinges, as the earle with his mē about him being ouermatched, began to dispayre of victory, sodeinly & oportunely came syr William Stanley with 3.* thousand well appointed able men, whereby king Richardes men were driuen backe & he himselfe cruelly fighting in the thick of his enemies, was there slaue, & brought to his confusion and death, which he worthely deserued.

In the meane time the Earle of Oxford, who had the guiding of the forewarde, discomfited the forefrunt of king Richards hoast,* and put them to flight, in which chase ma|ny were slayne, of noble men especially aboue other, Iohn Duke of Northfolke, Lord Ferrers, sir Richard Radcliffe and Robert Brakenbury Lieutenaunt of the Tower. &c. Lord Thomas Haward Earle of Surrey, there submitted himselfe, and although he was not receaued at first to grace, but long remayned in the Tower, yet at length for his fidelitie, was deliuered and aduanced to his recouered honour and dignitie againe.

This king Richard had but one sonne, who shortly after the cruell murder of king Edwardes sonnes, was taken with sicknes and died. The wife of the sayd king Richard (whether by poyson or by sickenes) dyed also a little before the field of Bosworth:.* After whose decease, the storie of Polydore & of sir Tho. More affirmeth: that he inten|ded himself to mary the Lady Elizabeth his own brothers daughter, and so to preuent the Earle of Richmond.

Moreouer as touching the Lord Stanley, thus reporteth the story,* that king Richard being in Bosworth field, sent for the Lord Stanley by a purseuaunt, to auauce forward with his company, and come to hys presence: otherwise he sware by Christes passion, that he would strike off his sonnes head before dinner. The L. Stanley sent word agayne, that if he did, he had more sonnes aliue. Wherupō the kyng immediately commaunded the Lord Strange to be beheaded:.* which was the very time whē both y^e armies were within fight, & were ready to ioyne together. Wherefore the kinges counsailers pondering the tyme and y^e case perswaded the king, that it was now time to sight, & not to doe execution, aduising him to delay the matter tyll the battail were ended. And so (as God would) king Richard breaking hys othe, or rather keeping hys othe, for he hymselfe was slayne before dyner, the Lord Straunge was cōmitted to be kept prisoner within the kinges tente: who then after the victory gotten, was sought out and brought to his ioyfull father. And thus haue ye the tragicall life and end of this wretched king Richard.

Henry the Erle of Richmond, after harty thanks geuen to almighty God, for hys glorious victorie obtained, proceeded to the towne of Leicester, where was brought to him by the Lord Straunge, the Crowne and put on the Earles head.

In the meane time the dead corpes of king Richarde was shamefully caried to the towne of Leicester,* being na|ked and despoyled to the skinne, & being trussed behinde a purseuaunt of armes, was caryed like a hog or a dog, hauing his head & armes hanging on the one side of y^t horse, and the legges on the other side, all sprinkled with myre & bloud.* And thus ended the vsurped reign of king Richard who reigned two yeares, and two monthes. Ex Polydo. & Thom. Moro.

King Henry the vij.

When king Henry,* by the prouidence of God had obtayned this triumphant victory, & Diademe of the realme, first sending for Edward Plantaginet Earle of Warwicke, sonne to George Duke of Clarence,* & committing him to safe custody w^e in the tower, frō Leicester remoued to Lō'don, & not long after, according to his oth & promise made before, espoused to him the yong Ladye Elizabeth, heyre of y^e house of Yorke:* whereby both the houses of Yorke and Lancaster were conioyned together, to the no little reioysing of all English hartes, & no lesse quyet vnto the realme which was. an. 1485. This king reigned 23. yeares, and 8. monthes, and being a Prince of great pollicie, iustice and temperance, kept his realm in good tollerable rule & order. And here interrupting a little the course of our Englishe matters, we will now (the Lord willing) enter the story aboue promised, of Maximilian the Emperour, & matters of the Empire, especially such as pertayneth to y^t Church.

Maximilian Emperour.

IN the yeare of our Lord.* 1486. Fridericus waxing aged and partly also mistrusting the hartes of the Germayns who had complained before of theyr greuances,* and could not be heard, and therefore misdoubting that hys house after his decease,* should haue the lesse fauour amonge them, for that cause in hys life tyme did associate hys sonne Maximilian to be ioyned Emperour with him: with whom he reigned the space of 7. yeares till the death of the sayd Fridericke hys father, who departed. an. 1494. after he had reigned ouer the Empire. 53. yeares, lacking onely but iii yeares of the reigne of Augustus Caesar, vnder whome was the byrth of our Lord and Sauour Christ.

This Maximilian, as he was a valiaunt Emperoure, prudent and singularly learned:* so was hys reigne intangled in many vnquiet and difficile warres: first in the lower Countrys of Flaunders and Brabant, where the saide Maximilian was taken captiue, but shortly after, reschued & deliuered agayne by hys father.* 1487. It was signified before how this Maximilian by the aduise of y^t Bur'gundians, had to wife Mary y^e onely daughter of Charles Duke of Burgundy afore mentioned, by whome he had 2. children, Phillip and Margarete. an. 1477. Whiche Mary not long after, about the yeare of our Lorde. 1481. by a fall Page 730 from her horse, fell into an agew, and departed. Other warres many mo, the same Maximilian also achieued, both in France, in Italy, in Hungary and diuers besides.

So happy was y^t education of this Emperour in good letters:* so expert he was in tongues and sciences, but especially such was his dexteritie and Promptnes in the latin stile, that he imitating the exāple of Iulius Caesar, did write and comprehend in Latine historyes, his owne actes and seates done, and that in such sort, that when he had geuen a certayne tast of his history, to one Pircamerus a learned man, asking his iudgemēt how his warlike stile of Latine did like him, the sayd Pircamerus did affirme and reporte of him to Iohn Caron (the witnes and writer of this story) that he did neuer see nor read any Germane storye,* a thing more exactly (and that in such hast) done as this was of Maimilian. Moreouer, as he was learned himselfe, so was he a singular patrone and aduancer of learned studentes, as may well appeare by the erecting and setting vp the vniuersitie of Wittenberge.* By this Emperour many in those dayes were excited to the embrasing as wel of other liberall artes, as also namely to the searching out of old antiquities of historyes, whereby diuers were then by him first occasioned in Germany, to set their mindes & to exercise their dilligence, in collecting & explicating matters pertayning to the knowledge of history, as well of an'cient as also of latter times, as namely Cuspinianus, Nauclerus, Conradus Peutingerus, Manlius, and other.

*Here now it began right well to appeare, what great benefite was broched to the world, by the Arte and facultie of Printing, as is before mentioned. Through the meanes of which printing, the church and common wealth of christ began now to be replenished with learned men, as bothe may appeare by this Emperour being so induced himselfe with such excellent knowledge of good letters, and also by diuers others famous and worthy wittes, whiche began now in this age exceedingly to encrease and multiplie, as Baptista Mantuanus, Ang. Politianus, Hermolaus Barbarus, Picus Mirandula, and Franciscus his cousin, Rodol. Agricola, Pōtanus, Philippus, Bero aldus, Marsilius Ficinus, Volateranus, Georgius Valla, with infinite other.

Among whom is also to be numbred Weselus Groningensis, otherwise named Basilius,* who was not longe after Ioan de Wesalia aboue recited, both muche about one tyme, and both great friendes together. This Weselus dyed the yeare of our Lord. 1490. After that Ioannes Doctor De Wesalia aforesayd was condemned this Weselus being familiar with him,* thought that the Inquisitour woulde come and examine hym also, as he himselfe in a certaine Epistle doth write. He was so notable and worthye a man that of the people he was called Lux Mundi. That is: The light of the worlde.

*Concerning his doctrine, first he reprehended the opinion of the papistes, as touching repentaunce, which they deuided in three partes, of the which three partes, satisfaction and confession he did disallow. Likewise Purgatorye and supererogation of workes & pardons he did disproue, both at Rome and at Paris. He spake agaynst the popes indulgences, by the occasion whereof diuers of the Popes court, perswaded by him, began to speake more freely agaynst the same matter, then he himselfe had done.

The abuses of Masses and praying for the dead he disallowed: and likewise the supremacy of the Pope, he vtterterly reiected (as appeareth in a booke of his De Sacramento poenitentiae) denying vtterly that any supreme head or gouernour ought to be in the world ouer all other:* affirming also & saying many times, y^t the pope had no authoritie to do any thing by commaundement but by truth: that is,* so farre as trueth goeth with hym, so farre hys sentence to stand: neither y^t he ought to preuayle by commaunding but onely by teaching, so as euery true christian Bish. may preuayle ouer an other. Also in some place in his writings he denyeth not, but that popes and their spirituall Prelates, proceeding agaynst Christes doctrine, be playne An'tichristes: such as were infirm and not able to perform the bond of chastitie taken vpon them, he sayd they might wel breake their vow.

Also the sayd Weselus witnesseth, that the forefathers which were before Albert and Thomas, did resiste and w^estand the popes indulgences, calling them in theyr wrytinges playne Idolatry, mere fraude and erreure: adding moreouer that vnles the seueritie of some good Diuines, had not withstand these pardons and indulgences of the Pope: innumerable erreures had ouerflowne the church.

Amongest these workes of Weselus, there is a certaine Epistle of one written to hym, •in which the authour of the Epistle confesseth, that in hys time there was a certayne learned man at Paris called maister Thomas de Curselis a Deane: who being in the councell of Basill, whereas diuers began to aduaunce the power of the pope to farre,* de'clared and affirmed, to be sayd to him of Christ: Quicquid ligaueris super terram erit ligatum & in coelo: &c. Et non, quicquid dixeris esse ligatum. That is. What soeuer thou shalt bynde vpon earth shall be bound in heauen, but not, what soeuer thou sayst to be bound. As who should say the pope cannot nor doth not binde therefore, because he so sayth, except truth and righteousnes go also with him: then he doth so bynde in deed. There is a certayne booke of this man amongst diuers others, which he intituleth, De subditis & superioribus, in y^t which he disputeth greatly against y^t pope & his Prelates: affirming that the pope vnlesse hys faith & doctrine be found, ought not to be obeyed. He affirmeth also that the pope may erre, and when he erreth, men ought by all manner of meanes to resist him. Item, that great & superfluous riches in the clergy do not profite, but hurt y^t church. That the pope doth wickedly distribute the rentes of the Church, and the Church it selfe, to vnworthy Ministers by Simony for hys owne profite and gayne, wherby it may appeare that he neyther careth for GOD, nor the health of the Church. Item, that the preceptes and commaundementes of the pope and prelates be no otherwise but as the Councels and preceptes of Phisitions, binding no further then they are founde to be wholesome and standing with the trueth of the word. Item, that the Pope can commaunde no man vnder payne of deadly sinne, except God commaund him before. He sayth that the keyes of the Pope and of the prelates be not such, wherwith they open the kingdome of heauen, but rather shut it, as the Phariseis did. Concerning vowes, he disputeth that such as be foolish and impossibile, ought to be brokē: that the hearers ought to discern and iudge of the doctrine of their Prelates, and not to receiue euery thing that they say, without due examination.

He sheweth moreouer that the sentence or excommuni'cation is of more force, proceeding from a true godly honest, simple and learned men, then from the Pope, as in y^e Councell of Constance, Bernard was more esteemed then Eugenius. Also if the pope with hys prelates, gouern and rule naughtely, that the inferiours, be they neuer so base, ought to resist him.

Writing moreouer of two Popes, Pius the second and Sixtus the fourth, he sayth, that Pius the second dyd vsurpe vnto hymselfe all the kingdomes of the whole world & that Sixtus the pope did dispense with al maner of othes in causes temporall, not onely with suche othes, as haue bene already, but also with all suche, as shalbe made hereafter: which was nothing els but to geue libertie and licence for men to forswear themselves and deceiue one an other.

This Weselus beyng a Phrisian borne,* and now aged in yeares, vpon a certayne time, when a yong man called mayster Ioannes Oftendorpius, came to hym, sayd these wordes: Well my childe, thou shalt lyue to that day, when thou shalt see the doctrine of these new and contentious di'uiues, as Thomas and Bonauenture, with others of the same sort, shalbe vtterly reiected and exploded from al true Christen deuines: And thys which Oftendorpius then being young, heard Weselus to speake, he reported himselfe to Nouiomagus, which wrote this story. an. 1520. & heard it of the mouth of the sayd Weselus, an. 1490. Martij. 18.

Philippus Melanchton writing of the lyfe, of Rodolphus Agricola, sayth: that Iosquinus Groningonsis, an auncient and a godly man, reported that when as he was young, he was oftentimes present at the Sermons of Rodolphus and Weselus, wherein they many times lamented the darckenes of the church, and reprehended the abuses of the Masse: and of the single life of priestes. Item, that they disputed oftentimes of the righteousnes of sayth, why S. Paule so oftentimes did inculcate, that men be iustified by faith and not by workes,* the same Iosquine also reported, that they did openly reiecte and disproue the opinion of monks, which say that men be iustified by their works. Item, concerning mens traditiōs their opinion was, that all suche were deceiued, whatsoever attributed vnto those traditions any opinion of Gods worship, or y^t they could not be broken. And thus much for the story of doctour Wesellianus and Wesilus.

By this it may be seene and noted, how by the grace of God and gift of printing, first came forth learning: by lear'ning came light to iudge and discerne the errors of y^e pope from the truth of Gods word, as partly by these abouesaid may appeare partly by other that followe after by y^e grace of Christ) shall better be seene.

About the very same tyme and season, when as y^e Gospell began thus to braunch & spring in Germanie: the host Page 731 of Christes church began also to muster & to multiply likewise here in Englād, as by these historyes here consequent may appeare. For not long after the death of this Weselus in the yeare of our Lorde 1494.* and in the 9. yeare of the reigne of K. Henry 7. the 28. of Aprill, was burned a very old woman named Ioane Boughton widow, and mother to the Lady Young, which Ladye was also suspected to be of that opinion which her mother was. Her mother was of foure score yeares of age or more, & held 8. of Wickleffes opinions (which opiniōs my author doth not shew) for the which she was burnt in Smithfield the day abouesayd. My author sayth, she was a Disciple of Wickleffe, whome she accompted for a Saint, and helde so fast and firmly viij. of his x. opinions, that all the Doctours of Lōdon coulde not turne her from one of them, and when it was told her that she shoulde be brent for her obstinacie & false beliefe, shee set nothing by theyr manacing wordes, but defied them, for the sayde she was so beloued of God, and hys holy aungels, that she passed not for the fire, & in the midst therof she cryed to God to take her soule into his holy handes. The night following that she was burnt, the most parte of her ashes were had awaye of suche as had a loue vnto the doctrine that she dyed for.

Shortly after the martyrdome of this godly aged mother in the yeare of our Lord, 1497. and the 17. of Ianuary, being Sondag, two men, the one called Richard Milderale, and the other Iames Sturdy, bare Fagots before the procession of Paules, and after stode before the preacher in the time of hys Sermon. And vpon the sondag following, stood other two men at Paules crosse all the sermon tyme:* the one garnished with paynted & written papers, the other hauing a Fagot on hys necke. After that in Lent season vppon Passion Sondag, one Hugh Glouer bare a Fagot before the procession of Paules,* & after wyth the Fagot stode before the preacher all the sermon while at Paules crosse. And on the sondag next following foure men stode, and did there open penance at Paules as is aforesayd, in the sermon time many of their bookes were burnt before them at the Crosse.

*Furthermore the next yeare following, whiche was the yeare of our Lord. 1498. in the beginning of Maye, the king then being at Canterbury, was a priest burnt, which was so strong in his opinion that all the clerkes & doctors then there beyng, coulde not remoue him from his sayth: whereof the king beyng enformed, caused the sayd priest to be brought before hys presence, who by hys perswasions caused him to reuoke, and so he was burnt immediately.

*IN the same yeare aboue mentioned, which was the yere of our Lord. 1499. after the beheading of Edward Plantagenet Earle of Warwicke, and sonne to the Duke of Cla|rence, the king and Queene being remooued to Calys, a certaine godly man and a constant Martyr of Christ, named Babram in Northfolke', was brent in the moneth of Iuly, as is in Fabian recorded after y^t copy, whiche I haue written. Albeit in the book of Fabian printed, his burning is referred to the next yeare following, which is, an. 1500. Ex Fabiano, & alio scripto codice.

ABout which yere likewise or in the yere next folowing y^t xx. day of Iuly,* was an old mā burnt in Smithfield

IN the same yeare also,* which was of the Lord. 1499. fell the martyrdome and burning of Hieronimus Sauonarola, a man no lesse godly in hart, then constant in his profession. Who being a Monke in Italy, & singularly well learned,* preached fore agaynst the euill lyfe & liuing of the spiritualty and specially of hys own order, compsayning fore vpō thē, as the springes and authors of all mischieues & wickednes. Wherupō by y^e helpe of certeine learned men he begā to seek reformatiō in hys own order. Which thyng the pope perceauing, and fearing that the sayde Hierome, which was now in great reputation amōgst al men, shold diminish or ouerthrow his authoritie, he ordained his vicar or prouinciall to see reformatiō of these matters: which vicare w^t great superstition began to reforme thinges, but the sayd Hierome did alwayes withstand hym, wherupon he was complayned of to the Pope, and because that contrary vnto y^e popes commaundement, he did w^tstand hys vicare,* he was accursed. But for all that Hieronimus lefte not of preaching, but threatned Italy with y^e wrath and in dignation of God, and prophecied before vnto them, that the land should be ouerthrowne for the pride and wickednes of y^e people, and for the vntruth, hipocrisie and falshood of y^t clergy, which God would not leaue vncenēged, as of^tterward it came to passe,* when as king Charles came into Italy and to Rome, and so straitly beset the pope Alexander, y^t he was forced to make composition with the king.

Now for somuch as the said Hierom would not leaue of preaching, he was commaunded to appeare before the pope,* to geue accompt of his new learning, (for so thē they called the truth of the Gospell,) but by meanes of the manifold perilles, he made his excuse that he could not come. Then was he againe forbidden by the pope to preach, and his learning pronounced and condemned as pernicious, false and sedicious.

This Hieronimus, as a man wordly wise, foreseeing the great perils and daungers that might come vnto him, for feare, left of preaching. But when as the people, which fore hungred and longed for Gods word, were instant vpon him that he would preach agayne, he began agayne to preach in the yeare of our Lord.* 1496. in the Cittie of Florence, and albeit y^t many counsailed him that he should not so do without the Popes commaundement, yet did he not regard it, but went forward freely of his owne good will. When as the Pope and his shauelinges heard newes of this, they were greuously incensed and inflamed agaynst him, and now againe cursed him, as an obstinate and stifnecked hereticke. But for all that, Hieronimus proceeded in teaching and instructing the people, saying that men ought not to regard such curses, whiche are agaynst y^e true doctrine and the cōmon profite, whereby the people shold be learned and amended, Christ kingdome enlarged, and the kindome of the deuill vtterly ouerthrowne.

In all his preaching he desired to teach no other thing then the onely pure and simple word of God, making often protestation that al men should certifie him if they had heard him teach or preach anye thing contrary thereunto, for vpon his owne conscience he knew not y^t he had taught anye thing but the pure word of God.* What his doctrine was all mē may easely iudge by his books y^t he had writtē.

After this, in the yeare of our Lord. 1498. he was takē and brought out of S. Markes cloyster, & two other Fryers with hym, named Dominicke and Siluester, whiche fauoured hys learning, and was caried into prison, wheras he wrote a godly meditation vpon that most comfortable 31. psalme In te Domine speraui non confundar in aeternū|sed in iusticia tua libera me. Wherein he doth excellently describe and set forth,* the continuall strife betweene the flesh and the spirite.

After this the Popes Legates came to Florence, & called forth these three good men, threatning thē marueilously but they continued still constant. Then came the chief coūsailers of the citty, with the popes commissioners, whiche had gathered out certain Articles against these men, wher|upon they were condemned to death: the tenour of which Articles hereafter ensue.

- 1. The first article was as touching our free iustification through fayth in Christ.
- 2. That y^e communion ought to be ministred vnder both kyndes.
- Page 7323. That the indulgences and pardons of the pope, were of no effect.
- 4. For preaching against the filthy and wicked liuing of the Cardinals and spiritualitye.
- 5. For denying the popes supremacie.
- 6. Also that he had affirmed, that the keyes were not geuen vnto Peter alone, but vnto the vniuersal Church.
- 7. Also, that the pope did neither follow the life nor doc|trine of Christ, for that he did attribute more to his owne pardons and traditions, then to Christes merits, and ther|for he was Antichrist.
- 8. Also, that the popes excommunications are not to be feared, and that he which doth feare or flye them, is excommunicate of God.
- 9. Item, that auricular confession, is not necessary.
- 10. Item, that he had moued the Cittizens to vpror and sedition.
- 11. Item, that he had neglected and contemned the popes Citation.
- 12. Item, that he had shamefully spoken agaynst, & slandered the pope.
- 13. Itē, that he had taken Christ to witnes of his naughtines and heresie.

- 14. Also, y^t Italy must be clesned through Gods scourge, for the manifold wickednes of the princes and clergy.

These & such other like Articles, were layd vnto them & read before them. Then they demaunded of the said Hierome and his companions, whether they would recant & geue ouer their opinions. Whereunto they answered, that through Gods help, they would stedfastly continue in the manifest truth, and not depart from the same. Then were they disgraded one after an other,* by the byshop of Uasion and so deliuered ouer to the secular rulers of Florence, w^t straight commaundement, to cary them forth, and handle them as obstinate and stifnecked heretickes,

The Martyrdome of Hierome and his two companions.

Thus, was the worthy witsse of Christ, with the other two aforesaid, first hanged vp openly in the market place, and afterward burnt to ashes, and the ashes gathered vp, & cast into the Riuer of Arum, the 24. day of May in the yeare of our Lord 1499. Ex Catal. testium. Illyrici.

This man foreshewed many thinges to come, as the destruction of Florence and Rome, and the reuening of the Church: which three things, haue happened in these times within our remembraunce. Also he foreshewed that the Turkes and Mores in the latter dayes, should be conuerted vnto Christ. He also declared that one should passe the Alpes into Italy, like vnto Cirus, which should subuert and destroy all Italy. Whereupon Iohannes Franciscus Picus, Erle of Mirandula, called him a holy prophet, and defended him by his writings against the pope. Many other learned men also, defend the innocencie of the saide Sauonarola. Marsilius Ficinus also in a certayne Epistle doth attribute vnto him the spirit of prophecie, greatly commending and praying him. In the like maner Philippus Comineas a French historiographer,* which had conference with him witnesseth that he was a holy man, and full of y^e spirit of prophecie, for so much as he had foreshewed vnto hym so many thinges, which in euent had proued true.

There were besides these, many other, not to be passed ouer or forgotten: as Phillip Norice an Irishman, profes|sour at Oxford, who albeit he was not burned (yet as it is sayd) he was long time vexed and troubled by the religious route. But would to God, that such as haue occupied themselues in writing of histories, and haue so dilligently committed vnto memory all other thinges done in foreign common wealthes, had bestowed the lyke dilligence & labour, in noting and writing those thinges, which pertayn vnto the affayres of the Church: whereby the posteritie might haue had fuller and more perfecte vnderstanding & knowledge of them.

This Sauonarola aboue mencioned, suffered vnder pope Alexander the 6. of which pope, more leysure & oportunitie shall serue hereafter (Christ willing) to entreat, after that we shall first make a little digression to entreate of certayn cases and complayntes of the Germainrs, incidēt in the meane time, which as they are not to be ouerpast in silence, so can they haue no place nor tyme more conueniēt to be inferred. What complayntes of the Germaines were made and moued vnto the Emperour Fredericke agaynst the popes suppressions and exactions, mencion was made before pag.* 724. where also was declared, howe the sayde Germaines at that time, were wise put backe and forsakē of the Emperour: whereby they continued in y^e same yoke and bondage, vntill the time of Luther. Wherefore it commeth now to hand, and we thinke it also good, here briefly to declare, how the sayd Germaines, in the tyme of Maximilian the Emperour: renewing their complayntes agayn, deliuered vnto the Emperour, x. principall greuaunces. whereby the Germaines haue bene long time oppressed: shewing also the remedies agaynst the same, with certayne aduisements vnto the Emperours maiesty, how he might withstand and resist the popes subtleties and craftes: The order and tenour whereof here ensueth.

The x. greuaunces of the Germaines.

1. THat the Bishops of Rome,* successors one vnto an other, do not thinke themselues bound to obserue & keepe the bulles, couenauntes, priuiledges, and letters, graunted by theyr predecessours, without all derogation: but by often dispensation, suspension and reuocation, euen at the instance of euery vile person, they doe gaynsaye and withstand the same.
2. That the elections of prelates are oftētimes put back.
3. That the elections of Presidentships are withstande, which the chapterhouses of many churches haue obtained with great cost and expence, as the Church of Spyre and Hasell do well know: whose bull, touchyng the election of theyr president, is made frustrate, he being yet alieue which graunted the same.
4. That benefices and the greatest ecclesiasticall dignities, are reserued for Cardinalles and head notaries.
5. That expectatiue graces, called vowsans, are granted without number, and many oftentimes vnto one man: Whereupon continuall contentions do ryse, and much mo|ney is spent, both that whiche is layd out for the Bulles of those vowsōs which neuer take effet, and also that whiche is consumed in goyng to lawe. Whereupon this prouerbe is risen, whosoeuer will get a vowson from Rome, must haue C. or CC. peeces of golde layde vp in his chest, for the obtayning of the same, which he shall haue neede of, to presecute the law withall.
6. That Annates or yearly reuenewes, are exacted w^tout delay or mercy, euen of the bishops lately dead, and oftentimes more extorted then ought to be, through new offices and new seruauntes, as by the examples of the churches of Mentz and Strausburgh, may be seene.
7. That the rule of the churches are geuen at Rome vnto those that are not worthy, which were more fitt to keep and feede Mules, then to haue the rule and gouernance of men.
8. That new indulgences and pardons, with the suspen'sion and reuocation of the old, are graunted to gather and scrape money together.
9. That tenthes are exacted vnder the pretēce of making warre agaynst the Turke: when as no expedition doth fol'low thereupon.

10. That the cause whiche might be determined in Germany, wheras there are both learned and iust iudges, are Page 733 indistinctly caryed vnto the Court of Rome, which thing S. Bernard, writing to Pope Eugenius, seemeth wōderfully to reprove.

Here ensueth the remedy agaynst the sayd greuaunces.

IF it shal seeme good vnto the Emperors maiesty, let it be declared vnto the bishop of Rome, how greuous and intollerable a thing it is vnto the Germaynes, to suffer continually so great charge & greuances, to pay so great Annates for the confirmation of the Bishops & Archbishops, and especially in such Bishoprickes, whereas the Annates by successe of time, are enhaunced, & in many (as it is sayd) doubled. For the Archbishops sea of Mentz (as it is sayde) sometime payd onely 10000. floreines: which summe, whē as one which was chosen there, refused to geue, and so cōtinued euen vnto his death, he which was afterward elect, being desirous of confirmation, fearing to withstande the Apostolicke sea: offered the old summe of 10000. floreines: But notwithstanding, he could not get his confirmation, except he would pay y^r other 10000. which his predecessour before him had not payd.

By this meanes he was compelled to pay 20000. floreines. which being enrolled in the register of the chamber hath bene exacted of euery archbishop since, vntil these our dayes: and not onely 20000. but also 25000. for theyr newe offices, & new seruants. At last the summe drew to 27000. floreines, which Iames the Archbishop of Mentz was cōpelled to paye, as his Commissary did report. So by this meanes, in a litle time, there was 7. tymes 25000. floreines payd out of the Archbishopricke of Mentz, vnto Rome for the confirmation of the Archbishop. And when this Archbishop Iames had kept the Archbishopricke scarce foure yeares, the Lord Uriel was elect after him, who was compelled to pay at the least 24000. or 25000. foreines. whereof a part he borrowed of Marchauntes:* but to satisfy and pay them agayne, he was forced to exact a subsidye of his poore subiectes and husband men, whereof some haue not yet satisfied and payd the tribute for the Bishops Palle, to that by this meanes, our people are not onelye tormented and brought to extreme pouertye, but also are moued vnto rebellion to seeke theyr liberty by what meanes soeuer they may, greuously murmuring agaynste the crueltye of the Clergy.

The pope also should be admonished, how that, through diuers and sundry wars and battels, the lands of Germany lye desolate & waste, and through many mortalityes the number of mē is diminished, so that for y^r scarcenes of husbandmen, the fieldes, for the most part, lye vntild, the roles are by diuers meanes diminished, the mines consumed, & the profites dayly decay, whereby the Archbishops & Byshops should pay theyr annates vnto the Apostolicke sea: besides their other necessary and honest charges: insomuch that not without iuste cause, Iames the Archbishoppe of Mentz being euen at the poynt of death, sayde that he dyd not so much sorrow for his own death, as for that his poore subiectes should be agayne forced, to pay a greuous exaction for the Palle, wherfore let the high Bishop as a godly father and loue of his children,* and a faythfull and prudēt pastor, deale more fauourably with his children the Germaynes, least that persecution happen to rise agaynst the Priestes of Christ, and that men folowing the example of the Bohemians, do swarue from the Church of Rome.

At the least, let him be more fauorable, as often as any Archbishop or bishop happeneth to rule his Church but a few yeares: as it happened to the Bishops of Bamberge, wherof 3. dyed within few yeares. The like also might hap'pen by other bishoprickes, whereof (as Aeneas Syluius witnessed) there are in Germany to the number of 50.* besides Abboes, whereof a great number are confirmed at Rome.

And admitt that in Germany there were greater profite and reuenewes rising of the ground, mines and toles: notwithstanding the Emperour and the other Princes, should lacke treasure and munition of warre agaynst their enemies, and specially the infidels, and to preserue Germa'ny in peace and quietnesse, & to minister iustice vnto euery man: for which purpose, the Councell of the chamber being most holyly instructed and furnished with great cost & char'ges, doth chiefly serue. Besides that the Emperour hath need of treasure, to suppress the rebelles in the Empyre, to banish and driue away theeues and murtherers, whe rofa great nūber are not ashamed to spoyle churches onely, and to robbe them of theyr goods, but also to assaile the Clergy themselues. Finally our nation and country of Germany, hath need of great riches and treasure, not only for the repaying of Churches & monasteries, but also for hospitals, for children thar are layd out in the streetes, for widowes, for women with childe, for Orphanes, for the mariage of y^e daughters of poore men, that they be not destoured, for such as haue neede and necessity, for the olde and weake, for the sicke and the sore, whereof (the more is the sorrow) Germany is fully replenished and filled.

Aduertisementes vnto the Emperours Maiesty.

LEt the Emperours maiesty foresee and prouide,* that the begging friers do not preach against his maiesty which are wont to complayn gladly vnto the Apostolick sea, fearing to lose their priuiledges, which I would to god, were aswel grounded vpon Christ, as they are vpon profite. Let the Emperours maiesty also beware that the Pope do not geue cōmaundement vnto the Electours, to proceed to the electiō of a new king of Romaines, as he did agaynst Frederick the second, when as the Lantgraue of Churm, and William Earle of Holland, were elect by the commaundement of the Pope. Let the Emperours maiesty also feare and take heed of all the Prelates of the Churches, and especially of the Presedentes, which by theyr oth are bounde to aduertise the Pope. Let the Emperours Maiesty also feare and beware that the Pope do not take away from his subiectes, their obedience, & prouoke the people bordering vpon him, to make inuasiō into y^e Emperours dominiōs and Archduchy of Austrich: which those men, vnder colour of shewing obedience vnto the Popes commaundemēt, be ready to do.

Let the Emperours Maiesty also take heede of the Apostolicke censures, frō which the pope will in no case refraine. Finally let y^e Emperours maiesty diligently foresee & take heede, that the pope do not perswade the people w^t most subtile argumētes, contrary to the pragmaticall sanction, excusing himselfe,* and getting the good will of y^e simple, alledging y^t w^e great costes & charges, he will repayre y^e Church of S. Peter in Rome, & build in certaine places, against the Turkes, and recouer againe the landes & patrimony pertaining vnto the Church of S. Peter, as he is boūd by his office. Therefore, let your maiesty diligētly forsee and deliberate, how through your most wise & discrete counsaile, if neede shall require, you will answere to those subtilties of the Pope.

YOur maiesty cā do nothing better,* nothing more acceptable, or more worthy eternall remembrāce, thē to moderate the great exactions and oppressions of the Germanes: to take away all occasion frō the laitie, to persecute the Clergy: also to take away y^e benefices out of the handes of courtisans, which can neither preach, comfort, nor counsaile any man (of which benefises, as Aeneas Syluius writeth some are equall to the Byshoprickes of Italye) to encrease Gods honour and worship: and so to bridle the auarice & vngodlines of those courtisans, wherby your maiesty may the better prouide for the children of many noble & famous men and Cityzens in Germanie, which being brought vp from their youth in the vniuersities, learning both the Scriptures and other humaine letters, may without vnquiet vexations, and most sumptuous charges & contentions, aspire to the Ecclesiasticall promotions: who by their cōsaile & prayers, may be helpes vnto the whole Church: For there is no small occasion, why the realme of Fraunce should so flourish, hauing so many notable learned mē in it. If the Emperour would abolish this un•iety, and restore Germany vnto their auncient liberty, which is now oppressed with greuous tributes, and would make way for learned & honest mē vnto Ecclesiasticall promotions: then might he truely & perpetually be called of all men, & in all places, y^e restorer of Germany to his aūciēt libertie, & y^e father of his countrey, & should obtayne no lesse glory thereby vnto himselfe, and profite vnto Germany, then if he had by force of armes, subdued any prouince vnto th ē: And so shall Germany render no lesse thanks vnto y^e saide Maximilian, then vnto all the rest, which hauing translated the Empire from the Grecians vnto Germany, haue raigued many yeares before.

Hereafter ensueth the copy of a certaine letter of y^e Emperour Maximiliā, geuen out in maner of a decree or cōmaundemēt, against certaine abuses of the Clergy. Wherunto we haue also annexed the aunswere of Iacobus Selestadiensis, vnto the Emperours letters, wherein he seemeth also to haue sought aduise for the remedy of the like abuses▪ which we thought good here not to be omitted.

An Edict of Maximilian Emperour.

WE according to the example of our dearly beloued father Fredericke Emperour of Rome, reuerensing the chiefe Pastour of the Church, and all the Clergy, haue suffered no small reuenewes of the Ecclesiasticall dignities, to be caryed out of our dominion by the Prelats and Clergy that are absent, whose faultes committed by humayne frailty, with Constantine our predecessor, we haue not disdeyned to hide and couer. But for so much as thorough our liberality, the decay of Gods honour is risen, it is our part to foresee (which are elect vnto the Empyre without any desert) that amongst all other affayres of peace and warre the Churches do not decay, Religion quayle not, or Gods true worship be not diminished: which we haue manifestly experimented and dayly doe perceiue by the insatiable couetousnesse of some, which are neuer satisfied in getting of benefices: through whose absence (being but resident onely vpon one) Gods honour and worship is diminished, houses decay, Churches decrease, the Ecclesiasticall liberty is hurt, learning and monuments are lost and destroyed, hospitality and almes diminished, and by their vnsatiable greedinesse, such of the Clergy as for theyr learning and vertue were worthy of Benefices, and theyr wisdom, profitable in common wealthes, are hindered and put backe. Wherefore according to the office and duety of our estate, for the loue of the encrease of Gods honour,* we exhort and require that no man from henceforth, hauing any Canonship or Vicarage in one City of our Empyre, shall occupy or possesse a prebend in an other Church of the same City, except he geue ouer the first, within a yeares space, vnto some person fitte and profitable for the Church: neither that he doe by vniust quarelles, vexe or trouble any man in getting of benefices, neither that any man doe falsely fayne himselfe to haue bene of the Emperors houshold, which hath not ben comprehended within the league and agreement made by the Princes, neither that any man attempt to take away the patronages from any lay man, or aggrauate the small prebendes of Curates of Churches, with pensions, neyther that they doe vse in getting of benefices and Bulles, any fraude, deceite, false instrumentes, corrupte witnesses and cloaked Simonye, neyther that any man presume to obteyne any regresfe, or other thing contrarye to the sacred Canons, right, honesty, equity and reason, vpon payne of the most greuous offence of treason: the whiche we will that, not onelye they, going so contrary to God and all honesty: but also all theyr fauourers, which doe helpe, counsell, harbour or geue them any thing, all theyr messengers and writers, proctours, suretyes and other theyr friendes, shall incurre, and receiue condigne punyshment for so great offence and contempt of our commaudemēt. From Oenopont. &c.

Here ensueth the cotype of a letter written vnto the Emperour Maximilian,

To our most victorious Lord Maximilian the Emperour, Iacobus Selestadiensis, most humble commendations.

MOst victorious Emperour,

when I had read your maiestyes Epistle, and receiued instructions of your Secretary, I prepared my selfe with all my whole endeouour, to satisfye your maiestyes desire: For euen from my youth hitherto, I haue applyed all my care and study, fyrst for the honour of your maiesty, and consequently for the amplifying of the Germayne nation, and sacred Romaine Empire. Albeit I knowe my selfe farre vnable to satisfye your desire and purpose, and there are many which can fulfill thys matter much better, which haue greater learning and experience of these common matters. There be also with other Princes, and in the Senates of common wealthes, many excellent learned men, which can exonerate and beautify Germany, and perswade to reduce all the Clergy vnto a Christian discipline, and to an vnity & peace of the vniuersall Church. Wherein not onely your Maiesty, but also your predecessours, as Charles the great, and his sonne Ludouicus Pius, the Othoes, Conrades, Frederickes, and Henrikes, and last of all, Sigismundus, haue with all labour and diligence trauelled, being stirred thereunto, vndoubtedly throughe the zeale & charity which they bare vnto almighty God, & thakfulnes vnto Christ, for his benefites which he hath bestowed vpon mankinde, and specially for the benefite of his most bitter passion. For Christ became not poore for vs, that we should liue in all riote and wantonnes vpon his patrimony, and shew sorth our ambition and couetousnesse: neither did he suffer hunger that wee should glut vp our selues: or suffered labors, chastity, and greuious torments, that we shuld liue in idlenesse, wantōnes, and al kind of voluptuousnesse. Neither they which were contributors, and benefactours to Churches, induing the ministers thereof with theyr temporall riches, had any suche respecte herein, that the Clergye shoulde liue onely in idlenesse, hauing all thinges at theyr wyll, without labour Surely there was another cause why that they in times past did empouerish themselves and theirs to endow the Church: verily that they might the better attend vnto diuine seruice, without care of want of liuing (which they might easily get and gather out of the fieldes, woodes, medowes, and waters) and to the intent that they should liberally geue almes vnto the poore Christians, Widdowes, Orphanes, aged and sicke persons. For in the institutions of the canonicall profession, whiche we suppose waa written by the commaundement of Ludouicus Pius the emperour, and allowed by the counsell of the Byshoppes, thus it is read: The goodes of the Church (as it is alledged by the fathers, and conteyned in the chapters before) are the vowes of the faythfull, and patrimony of the poore. For the faythfull, thorow the seruentyes of theyr fayth, and loue of Christ being inflamed, hauing an earnest desire of that heauenly kingdome, haue enriched the holy Church with theyr owne goodes, that thereby the souldiors of Christ might be nourished, the Church adourned, the poore refreshed, and captiues according to the oportunitie of time, redemed Wherefore such as haue the administration of those goods, ought diligently to bee looked vpon, that they doe not conuert them vnto theyr owne proper vse, but rather, according to theyr substaunce and possibility, they doe not neglecte them in whome Christ is fed and clothed. Prosper is also of the same minde, affirmyng that holy men did not challenge the Church goods to their owne vse, as their owne proper goodes, but as thinges commended vnto the poore, to be deuided amongst them: For that is to contemne that which a man possesseth, not to possesse a thing for himselfe, but for others, neyther to couet the Church goods with couetousnesse, to haue them himselfe, but to take them with a godly zeale to helpe other. That which the church hath, is commō to all them which haue nothing, neyther ought they to geue any thing of that vnto them, (sayth he) which haue of theyr owne: for to geue vnto them whiche haue enough, is but to cast thinges away.

Ex Illyrico.

To returne now to the order of Popes where we left before speaking of Innocentius the eight,* after the sayde Innocentius, next succeeded Pope Alexander the 6. In which Alexander, among other horrible thinges, this is one to be noted, that when Gemes (Peucerus named him Demes) brother to Balazetes the great Turke, was committed by the Rhodians, to the sate custodie, first of Pope Innocent, then of Alexander the 6. for whose keeping the Pope receiued euery yeare 40000.* crownes: yet notwithstanding, whē pope Alexander afterward was cōpelied to send the sayd Gemes to Charles the eight the French king for a pledge: because the Frēch king should not procure the great Turkes fauour, by sending his brother Gemes to him to be slayne, he being hyred by the Turke, caused the sayde Gemes to be poysoned, who in his iourney goinge toward the French king, dyed at Terracina. Ex Hieronymo Mario.

Moreouer in the sayd Dicronymus Marius it appeareth, that this Alexander taking displeasure with the foresayd Charles the French king, about the winning of Naples, sent to Baiazetes the Turke, to fight against the foresayd Charles. Ex eodem.

Munsterus lib. 4. Cosmog Declaring the foresayd hystorye of Gemes, something otherwise, first calleth him Zizymus, and sayth, that he was first committed by the Rhodians to the french king. And when as Ioannes Huniades afore mentioned, did labor to the French king to haue him, thinking by that meanes to obtain a noble victory against the Turke, as it was not vnlike: this Alexander the pope, thorow his fraudulent flatterye, gotte him of the Frenche King, into his owne handes: by whose meanes the sayd Gemes afterwarde was poysoned, as is in maner before expressed.

Unto these poysoned actes of the Pope,* let vs also adioin his malicious wickednes, with like fury exercised vpō Antonius Mancinellus, which Mancinellus being a mā of excellent learning, because he wrote an eloquēt oratiō against his wicked maners & filthy life, with other vices, he therfore commaunded both his hands & his tong to be cut of, playing much like with him, as Antonius y^e tirant once did with M. Cicero, for writing agaynst his horrible life. At length,* as one poyson requireth another, this poysoned Pope, as he was sitting with his Cardinals, & other ryck Senatours of Rome at dinner, his seruantes vuwares brought to him a wrong bottell, wherewith he was poysoned, and his Cardinals about him.

In the time of this Pope Alexander,* also it happened (whiche is not to bee pretermitted) how that the Aungell whiche stood in the high toppe of the Popes Church, was beaten downe with a terrible thunder: which thing semed then to declare the ruine and fall of the Popedome. After this Pope next succeded Pius the 3. about the yeare of our Lord 1503. After whome came next Iulius the second a man so farre passing all other in iniquity, that Wicelius, & Page 735 such other of his owne friendes writing of him, are compelled to say of him, Marti illum quam Christo deditorem fuisse: that is, that he was more geuen to warre and battayle, then to Christ. Concerning the madnesse of this man thys is most certaynely knowne, that at what time he was going to warre, he cast the keyes of S. Peter into the riuer of Tybris, sayinge, that for as much as the keyes of Peter would not serue him to his purpose, he woulde take himselfe to the sword of Paule. Wherupon Philip Melancthō, amongst many other writing vpon the same, maketh this Epigrame.

Gesturus▪ sicūt fama •etusta docet:

Ingentes martis turmas contraxit, & •rbem

Eg•essus saeuas edidit ore minas.

Iratus'{que} sacras claues in flumina iecit

Inde manu strictum Gagina diripit ensem,

Exclamans'{que} truci talia •ocere fert:

Hic gladius Pauli nos nunc defendet ab hoste,

Quandoquidem clauis nil iuuat ista Petri.

Whereupon also Gilbert Ducherius maketh this Epigrame.

In Gallum •• fama est, bellum gesturus acerbum,

Armatum educit Iulius •rbe manum:

Accinctus gladio, clauus in Tibridis amnem

Proicit, & soeuus talia •erba faecit:

Quum Petrinihil efficiant ad praelia clauus,

Auxilio Pauli forsitan ensis erit.

The sense of these Epigrammes in English is this.

When Iulius Pope agaynst the French determined to make warre:

As fame reportes, he gathered vp great troupes of men from farre.

And to the bridge of Tybur then, marching as he were wood:

His holy keyes he tooke, and cast them downe into the floud.

And afterward into his hand, he tooke a naked sword:

And shaking it, brake forth into this fierce and warlike word.

This sword of Paule (quoth he) shall now defend vs from our foe:

Since that this key of Peter doth nothing auay le thereto.

Of this Iulius it is certaynely reported, that partly w^t his warres, partly with his cursinges, within the space of 7, yeares, as good as 200000. Christians were destroyed. Fyrst he besieged Rauenna agaynste the Uenetians, then Seruia, Imola, Fauentia, Foroliuium, Bononia and other cities,^{} which he gate out of Princes handes, not with out much bloudshed. The Chronicles of Iohn Steban ma^keth mention, that when this Iulius was made Pope he tooke an oathe, promising to haue a Councell within two yeares: but when he had no leysure thereunto, being occupied with his warres in Italy amōg the Uenetians, and with the French king, and in Ferraria, and in other countryes: 9. of his Cardinales departing from him, came to Millayne, and there appoynted a Councell at the Citty of Pise, amongst whome the chiefe, were Bernardus, Cruceius, Gulielmus Prenestinus, Franciscus Cōstantinus, with diuers others: amongst whome also were adioyned the Procuratours of Maximilian the Emperour, and of Charles▪ the French king. So the Councell was appoynted the yeare of our Lord 1511.^{*} to begin in the Kalendes of September. The cause why they did so call this Councell was thus alledged, because the Pope had so brokē his oth, and all this while he gaue no hope to haue any councell, & also because there were diuers other crimes, whereupō they had to accuse him. Theyr purpose was to remoue him out of his seat, the which he had procured through bribes and ambition. Iulius hearing this, geueth out contrary commaundement vnder great payne, no man to obey them, & calleth himselfe another councell agaynst the next yeare, to be begon the 19. day of Aprill. The French king vnderstading Pope Iulius to ioyne with the Uenetians, and so to take theyr part agaynst him, couented a councell at Thurin in the month of September, in the which council these questions were proposed.

Whether it was lawfull for the Pope to moue warre agaynst any prince without cause.

Unto the which questions it was answered,* that neither the bishop ought to inuade, and also that it was lawfull for the king to defende himselfe. Moreouer that the Pragmaticall sanction was to bee obserued thorowe the realme of Fraunce: Neyther that any vniust excommunications ought to be feared, if they were founde to be vniust. After this the king sent vnto Iulius, the aunswere of his counsell, requiring him either to agree to peace, or to appoynt a generalll Councell some other where, where thys matter myght bee more fully decided. Iulius woulde neyther of both these, but forthwith accursed Charles the French king, with all his kingdome. At the lenth, at Rauenna in a great war, he was ouercome by the frēch king, and at last, after much slaughter and great bloudshed, and mortall warre, this Pope dyed in the yeare of our Lorde 1513. the 21. day of February.

If it were not that I feare to ouerlay this our volume w^t heapes of foreigne historyes,* which haue professed chiefly to entreat of Actes and Monuments here done at home: I woulde adioine after these popes aboue rehearsed, some discourse also of the Turkes story: of theyr rising, and cruell persecution of the say•tes of God, to the great anioance and perill of Christendome: yet notwithstanding certayne causes there be which necessarily require the knowledge of theyr order and doinges, and of theyr wicked procedings, theyr cruell tyranny, and bloody victories, the ruine & subuersion of so many Christen Churches, with the horrycle murders and captiui•ye of infinite Christians to bee made playne and manifest, as well to this our countrey of England, as also to other nations:

First for the better explayning of the Prophecies of the new Testament,* as in S. Paules Epistle ad Chessall, and also in the reuelation of S. Iohn. Which Scriptures otherwise, without the opening of these historyes, can not so perfectly bee vnderstand. Ofthe whiche Scriptures we mynde hereafter (Christ graunting) orderly, as the course of matter shall lead vs, to make rehearsall.

An other cause is,* that we may learne thereby eyther with the publique Church, to lament with our brethren such a great defection and decay of christian fayth, through these wicked Turkes: or els may feare thereby our owne daunger.

The thyrd cause,* that we may pōder more deeply with our selues, the scourge of God for our sinnes, and corrupte doctrine, which in the sequele hereof, more euidently may appeare to our eyes, for our better admonition.

Fourthly,* the consideration of this horrible persecution of the Turkes, rising chiefly by our discord and dissention among our selues, may reduce vs agayn from our domesticall wars, in killing and burning one of an other, to ioyne together in Christian patience and concorde.

U.* but chiefly these great victoryes of the Turkes and vnprosperous speed of our men fighting agaynst thē, may admonish & teach vs, folowing the example of the olde Israelites, how to seek for greater strēgth to encounter with these enemyes of Christ, then hitherto we haue done. First we must cōsider, that the whole power of Sathan y^e prince of this world, goeth with the Turkes. Whiche to resist, no strēgth of mans arme, is sufficient, but onely the name, spirite, and power of our Lord Iesus the sonne of god, going with vs in our battels,* as among the olde Israelites, the Arcke of Gods couenaunt and promise wente with them also, fighting agaynst the enemies of God. For so are wee taught in Scripture, that we christen mē haue no strength, but in Christ onely. Whether we warre agaynst the deuilt, or agaynst the Turke it is true that the Scripture sayeth: Sine me nihil potestis facere. i. without me you ea do nothing. Otherwise there is no puissaunce to stand agaynst y^e deuill or to conquere the world, Nisi fides nostra: that is, our fayth onely all the promises of God (touching saluation) be annexed, beyonde which promises we muste not goe, for the worde must be our rule. He that presumeth beyond the pro|misses in the word expressed, goeth not, but wandereth, hee can not tell whether. Neither must we appoynt God, how to saue the worlde, but must take that way whiche he hath appointed. Let vs not set our God to schoole, nor cōprehēd his holy spirite within our sculles.* He that made vs w^tout our counsell, did also redeeme vs as pleased hym. If he be mercifull, let vs be thankfull. And if his mercyes surmoūt our capacity, let vs therefore not resist, but search his word, and thereunto apply our will: which if we will doe, all but Page 741 contentious wil soone be at a poynt. Let vs therefore search the will of our God in his word, and if he will his saluation to stand free to all nations,* why do we make marchandise thereof? If he haue graciously offred his waters to vs, without mony or mony worth, let vs not hedge in the plētuous springes of his grace geuen vs.

And finally, if God haue determined his owne sonne onely to stand alone, let not vs presume to admixt with his maiesty any of our trumpery. He y^t bringeth S. George or S. Deuise as patrons, to y^e field to fight against y^e turk, leaueth Christ (no doubt) at home. Now how we haue fought these many yeres agaynst the Turke: though storyes keep silence, yet y^e successe declareth. We fight agaynst a persecutour, being no lesse persecutours our selues. We wrastle against a bloody tyraunt, and our handes be as full of bloud as his. He killeth Christes people with the sword: and we burne them with fire. He obseruing the works of the law, seeketh his iustice by the same: the like also do we. But neither hee nor we seeke our iustification as we shoulde, that is, by fayth onely in the sonne of God.

And what maruell then, if our doctrine being as corrupt almost, as his: and our conuersation worse, if Christe fight not with vs, fighting agaynst y^e Turke? The Turke hath preuayled so mightely, not because Christ is weake, but because that Christians be wicked, and theyr doctryne impure. Our temples with Images, our hartes with idolatry are poluted: Our priestes stinck before God for adultery, being restrayned from lawfull matrimony. The name of god is in our mouthes,* but his fear is not in our harts. We warre agaynst the Turke with our workes, Masses, traditions and ceremonies: but we fight not agaynst hym with Christ and with the power of his glory, whith if we did, the field were wonne.

Wherefore briefly to conclude,* saying my iudgement in this behalfe, what I suppose: this hope I haue, & do beleue that when the Church of Christ with the Sacramentes therof, shalbe so reformed, that Christ alone shall be receaued to be our iustifier, all other religions, merites, tradition, images, patrons and aduocates set a part: the sword of the Christians, with the strength of Christ, shall soone vanquish the Turkes pride and fury. But of this more largely in the processe of this story.

The sixte and last cause,* why I thinke the knowledge of the Turkes history, requisite to be considered, is this: be cause that many there be, which for y^e they be farther frō the Turkes, and thinke therfore themselues to be out of daūger, take little care and studye, what happeneth to theyr other brethren. Wherefore to the intent to excite theyr zeale and prayer to almighty God, in this so lamentable ruin of Christes church: I thought it requisite by order of history, to geue this our natiō also something to vnderstand, what hath bene done in other nations by these cruell Turkes, and what detriment hath bene and is like more to happen by them, to the Church of Christ, except we make our earnest inuocatiō to almighty God,* in the name of hys sonne, to stop the course of the deuill by these Turkes, and to stay this defection of Christians falling daylye vnto them, and to reduce them agayn to his fayth which are fallen frō him. Which the Lorde Iesus of his grace, graunt wyth speede. Amen.

Before we enter into this story of the Turks and Saracens, first let vs call to remembraunce the Prophecy and forewarning of S. Paule writing to the Thess. in his 2. Epistle, in these words:* Be not moued nor troubled in your myndes, eyther by preaching, or by writing, or by letter frō vs, as though the day of the Lorde were at hande: for the Lord will not come except there come a defection first, and the wicked person be reuealed. &c. Of this defection sundry mindes there be,* of sundry expositours: some thinking this defection to meane a falling away from the Empyre of Rome: some from the obedience of the Pope. But as S. Paul little passed vpon the outward glory of the Romain Empyre: so lesse he passed vpon the proud obedience of the Pope. What Saynt Paule ment by this defection, the reading of these Turkishe storyes, and the miserable falling away of these Churches by him before planted, will soone declare.

Another mistery there is in the Re•lations, Apoc. 13. where the number of the beast is counted 666. Whereby may seeme by all evidences, to be signified the first origene and springing of these beastly Saracens, as by sequele hereof may appeare by the first rising of this deuilish sect of Mahumet.

*Moreouer, an other place there is, cap. 16. Apoca. where we read that by powring out of the Phial of Gods wrath. of the sixt Aungell, the great flood Euphrates was dried vp, to let in the kinges of the East: the openyng of which Prophecy, may also more euidently appeare, in cōsidering the order and maner of the comming in of these Turks into Europe.

Some also apply to the Turkes certayne Prophecyes of Daniell, Ezechiell, and other places of the old Testamēt moe, which here I omit, for so much as the Prophecyes of the old Testament, if they be taken in their proper & natiue sence, after my iudgement, do extend no further, then to the death of our Sauior, and the end of the Iewes kingdome. Albeit herein I do not preiudicate to any mans opiniō, but that euery man may abound in his owne sense.

As touching the yeare and time when this pestiferous sect of Mahumet first began,* histories do not fully consent: Some affirming that it began, an. 621. and in the 10. yeare of Heraclius Emperour of Constantinople: in whyche minde is Ioannes Lucidus. As Munsterus counteth, it was in the yeare of our Lord 622. Martin Luther, & Iohn Carion referreth it to the 18. yeare of the raigne of Heraclius, which is the yere of our Lord 630. Unto the which nūber the computation of the Beast signified in the Apocali,* doth not farre disagree, whiche numbrell the name of the Beast, with three Greeke letters 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 whiche Greeke letters after the supputation of the Greciās, make the number of 666.

In this all writers agree, that this damnable Mahumet was borne in the country of Arabia, bordering on the East part of Iewry.* His father was a Syrian, or a Persian, his Mother was an Ismalite, which Ismalites being a people of Arabia, were called then Agarens: which term Mahumet afterward turned to the name of Saracens. Of this wretched Mahumete mention was made before. pag. 124. where we shewed, how he making himselfe the highest Prophet of all other, yet denyeth not Christ to be an holy Prophet and next to him, and Moses also to be an other. Moreouer he denieth not Mary the mother of Christ to be a uirgin, and to haue conceived Christ by the holy ghost, affirming further that Christ in his owne person was not crucified, but another called Iudas for him. He greatly cōmendeth also Iohn the sonne of Zachary for a virgin: * whē he himselfe permitteth a man to haue 4. wiues, and as many concubines as he is able to finde: & sayth that where as Christ & other Prophets had the gift geuen them to worke myracles, he was sent by force of sword, to compell men to his religiō. The prodigious vanities, lyes, & blasphemies conteyned in his lawe called Alchoran, are rather to be laught at, then recited.

It is thought that Sergius a Nestorian, was a great doer with Māhumet, in cōtriuing of this lying Alchorā & so it doth well appeare by the scope and pretence thereof which especially tēdeth to this end, to take the diuinity frō the person of Christ, whom he graunteth notwithstanding to be a most holy man, & also that he is receiued vp to God and shall come agayne to kill Antichrist. &c.

Moreouer this ridiculous Alchoran is so blaunched & poudered with so diuers mixtures of y^e Christians,* Iewes and the Gentiles lawes, geuing suche liberty to all wantonnesse of flesh, setting vp circumcision, absteining from swines flesh and Iudaicall lotions, and so much standeth vpon Father Abraham, that it is supposed of some, this filthy Alchorā, not to be set out in the dayes of Mahumet, but that certayne Iewes had some handling also in this matter, and put it out after his death: and so semeth first to take his force about the number of yeres limited in the Apocal. as is aforesayd,* where thus it is written: He that hath intelligence, let him count the number of the beast: For it is the number of a man, and his number is sixe hundred, sixe score and sixe.

After this deuilish Mahumet had thus seduced y^e people, teaching thē that he came not by miracles, but by force of sword, to geue his law, & that they which wil not obey it must either be put to death or els pay tribute (for so be the wordes of the Alchoran) and after that hee had gathered strength about him, of the Arabians, which Arabians thē had occasion to rebell agaynst the Emperor, because theyr stipendes were not paid them of Heraclius the Emperors officers: he began to raunge with force and violence in the partes of Syria bordering nere vnto him,* and first subdued Mecha, then Damascus: and further encreasing in pow^rer, entred into Egypt, and subdued the same. From thence he turned his power agaynste the Persians, with whome Cosroes the king of Parsia, encountring with a puissaunt army,* ouerthrew the Saracens, & put Mahumet to fight. Of these Persians came the Turkes, which afterward ioining with the Saracens, maynteyned them agaynst the Christians. Ex Munster.

After the death of this beast, which as some say, was poisoned in his house succeeded Ebocara, or Ebubecer his Page 737 father in law, or as Bibliander affirmeth, his sonne in law who tooke vpon him the gouernmēt of the Saracens, and gotte the Cittye Gaza,* and besieged also Hierusalem two yeares. He raigned two yeares, hauing for his chiefe City, Damaicus.

After him folowed Omar, or Ahumar, who conquered a great part of Syria, and got Egypt.

*The 4. king of the Saracens after Mahumet, was Odmē, then folowed Haly, & after him Muhantias: which after the siege of 7. yeares, obtained & got the christian Cittie of Cesaria: also ouercame the Persians, with theyr king Orunasda, and subdued that country to his law.

Thus the wicked Saracens in the space of 30. yeares subdued Arabia, got Palestina, Phenicia, Syria, Egypt, and Persia: whiche came directly to the 666. yeares, prophesied of in the Reuelations of S. Iohn, as is aforesayd. And not long after they proceded further, and got Affrike, and then Asia, as in the processe of theyr story shal appeare, the Lord willing.

Not long after, Heraclius Emperour of Constantinople, succeeded Constans his nephew, who in the 13. yere of his Empyre, fighting vnluckely agaynst the Saraceus in Licia, was ouerthrown of Muhamas aforesayd in y^e yere of our Lord 655. Which Constans if he were not prospered by the Lord in his warres, it was no great maruell, considering that he had slaine his brother Theodosius before at home: moreouer liued in incestious matrimony: also being inclined to certayne new sects, could not abide the cōtrary teachers, but slew thē which admonished him thereof. The sayd Constans going afterward to Italy, was also ouercome of the Lumbardes, &c. the Saracens after this victory spoyled also Rhodes.

Although these cursed Saracens, in these theyr greate victories & conquests, were not without domesticall seditions and deuisions among themselues,* yet the princes of y^e Saracens, being called then Sultans, had in theyr possession, the gouernment of Syria, Egypt, Affrike, & of a great part of Asia, about the terme of 400. yeares: till at length the Saracen king which ruled in Persia, fighting agaynst the Saracene of Babilon,* sought ayde of the Turkes, to fight with him agaynst y^e Sultane of Babilon. The which Turkes by litle and litle surprised vpō y^e Sultan of Persia, & not long after putting him out of place, vsurped the kingdome of Persia: which afterward went further, as ye shall heare the Lord willing. And this is the first beginning of the Turkes dominion.

These Turkes after they had thus ouercome great cōūtries and prouinces: and made their power large & mighty both in Asia and Europa, begā to deuide theyr kingdōes & countryes amongst themselues. But when they coulde not agree, but with deadly war contended for the boundes of those kingdomes and dominions: in the meane tyme 4. of the principall families conquering and subduing all the rest,* parted the whole Empyre amongst thēselues. And yet they also not so contented, fell to such cruell hatred, contētion, warre, and slaughter (no doubt by the iust iudgement of God against his blasphemous enemies) that there was no end thereof, vntill the remnant of the auncient Turkes was vtterly rooted out.

For it is euident, that there are fewe nowe remayning which are Turkes in deed by birth and bloud, and that the state of that great empyre is not upholdē, but by y^e strength an• power of souldyors, which haue bene Christians, and now are turned to Mahumetes Religion: so that euen theyr owne naturall language is now out of vse amongst them, sauing in certayne families of theyr nobility and gētlemen.

These foure families aboue mentioned, with theyr Captaynes and armyes, about the yeare of our Lorde. 1330, went raging throughout all Asia and Europa, and euery one of them conquered some parte of the countreyes where they passed.

The causes of these great inuasiōs and victoryes were the dissention and discorde, falsehoode, idlenesse, vnconstancy, greedy auarice, lacke of trueth and fidelity among Christian men of al states and degrees, both high and low. For by the wilfull defection and backesliding of the Christians, the Turkish power did exceedingly encrease, in that many •rsiring the licentious life & liberty of war, & allured with the prosperous successe of thynges, forsooke the Church of God, and made themselues bond slaues to Mahumet and his deuilish sect: b•th because that fleshly liberty is delighting to all men, and partly also because, as fortune fauoreth, so commonly the willes of men enclyne: And agayne suche as be prophane and without the feare of God, (whereof there is an infinite number in the Church) in all ages, are wont commonlye to iudge of Religion, according to the successe of realmes and kingdomes. For if any, not onelye for the variety of opinions, but also for the diuersitye of euentes and fortune amongst men, haue inquired and doe inquire, whether there be any Church of God distyncte from other nations: what it is, and where it is: especially, for so muche as the greatest part of men, bothe in the olde time, when as the foure Monarchyes flourished in order, was ignoraunt of this doctrine, whiche is peculier to the Church alone, and nowe also the barbarity of Mahumet preuayleth & raigneth in the moste part of the worlde. And how standeth this with mans reason, that a small number both miserable and also feebled and broken with manye battayles, shoulde be regarded and loued of God, and the other flourishing in all wealth, prosperity, victoryes, authority and power, should be reiected and despised of God, seing there is no power and authoritye, but by the ordynaunce of God? Albeit therefore, the power of the Turkes hath bene, for these two hundreth yeares, of greater force, then any other Monarchy of the world besides: yet is there no Imperiall dignity to be esteemed in that Turkish tyrāny: but amongst those nations onely, where the heauenly doctrine of the Gospell is preached, & other disciplines necessary for the Church of God, & the common life of man mayntayned and regarded: where the lawes of God, & other honest and ciuil ordinaunces agreable to the same, doe flourish and reigne: where lawful iudgement is exercised: where vertue is honoured and rewarded: where sinne and wickednes is punished: where honest families are mayntayned and defended.

These thinges are not regarded amongst the Turkes,* the enemies of the sonne of God, and all lawfull Empyres: because they dissolue and reiect all godly focietyes, honest discipline, good lawes, policyes, righteous iudgemēts, the ordynaunce of matrimony, and godly families. For what hath the Empyre of the Turkes bene hetherto, but moste deadly, cruell, and perpetuall warre, to worke all mischief, destruction and desolation? to subuert good lawes, Cityes, kingdomes, policies, and to enlarge theyr cruell power & dominion? The stay and strength whereof, is not loue and fauour proceeding of vertue and iustice, as in lawefull and well gouerned Empyres: but feare, violence, oppression, swarmes and infinite thousandes of barbarous and most wicked people, ministers of Satans malice & fury. Whiche kinde of dominion and tyranny hath bene condēned by the voyce of God,* many yeares agoe: the •stimonyes wherof the Lord would haue to remayne in the Church, least the godly being moued with y^e power & successe therof, should fall away and forsake the sonne of God.

Wherefore, let vs not se•ke for any Imperiall state in that barbarity: but let vs be thankefull, & acknowledge the great benefite of God, for that he hath reserued to vs certayne remnaunts of the Romain Empyre: And let vs call vpon him dayly with hartly petitions and grones & wyth zeale and loue to the house of God, that this Turkish power ioined with the malice of Sathan, against the sonne of God, preuayle not agaynst the poore congregations & litle remnant of his Church, as it hath hitherto done agaynst those strong and noble christian kingdoms and churches, were now we see the Turkish tyranny to raigne & Sathā to haue taken full possession.* Whose state was once farre better then ours is now, and more like to continue without such horrible ouerthrowes and desolation Oh that we might foresee a litle the great daunger that hangeth ouer our heades. For though the Turke semeth to be farre of, yet doe we nourishe within our brestes at home, that maye soone cause vs to feele his cruell hand and worse, if worse may be, to ouerrunne vs: to lay our land waste: to scatter vs amongst the Infidels, the enemies and blasphemers of the sonne of God.

Nowe,* although these 4. families aboue mentioned, long continued together in bloudy warres and deadly hatred, yet one of them passed the rest in all crueltye and tyranny, and subduing the other 3. familyes, tooke vpon him the gouernement alone,* and so became the first Monarch, or Emperour that reigned amōg thē, called Ottomannus, of whome all that raigned after him, were called Ottomanni. Who succeeding orderly of his lyne, haue occupied the same dominion and seate of the Turkes, from the yeare of our Lord 1300. vnto this present time, which haue bene to the number of 12. Of the which 12. in suche order as they liued and raygned, I intend (Christ so permitting) scuerally and compendiously something to entreat, briefly abstracting out of prolix and •edious writers, such specialties, as for vs Christians, shall be chiefly requisite to be knowne.

Ottomannus the first great Emperour or Tyraunt of the Turkes.

THis Ottomannus was at the first, of poore estate and obscure amongst the common sort of men, comming of a base progeny and of rusticall parentes: but through hys valiantnes and actiuity in warre, he got him a great name amongst the Turkes. For he being a man of fearece courage, refusing no labour and delighting in warre, and gathering together by great subtlety and multitude of common souldiours, began to make warre, and by conquestes and victories, to aduaunce himselfe and his family. Fyrst he began to robbe and spoyle with a great band of rousers and afterward he attempted to set vpon all men. Neither did he vexe and destroy the Christians onely, but set vpon his owne nation also, and sought al occasion to subdue thē wholly vnto him. For now the Princes and Captaynes of the Turkes, inflamed with ambition and desire of rule, began to fall out and contend among themselues, in so much that they fell to domesticall and inward warre, with all the power they could.

Ottomannus hauing this occasion very fitte & meete to accomlishe that whiche he long had sought for, gathering vnto him all such as he thought to be geuē to robbing and spoyling, and sette all vpon mischiefe, in short time began to grow in authority, & first set vpon certayn townes, as he saw oportunitie to serue him: Of which townes, some he tooke by force, some by yielding, other some he spoyle & ouerthrew, to terrify the rest, thus laying the first foundation of his rising. In the meane time, the discorde whiche was among the Christians, was no small aduantage to this Ottomannus, by occasion whereof, he within x. yeres space, subdued Bethinia, and al the prouinces about Pontus: Also Natolia, which comprehendeth all the dominion of the Greekes within Asia: Ancyra a City in Phrigia: Sinope a Cittye in Galatia: and Sabastia a Cittye in Capadocia: and thus still preuayling, he encreased in short time, to a mightye power, either through the secret iudgemente of God agaynst that nation, or els because God woulde haue them so farre & so cruelly to preuayle, for the punishmen of the sinnes of other nations, like as it was prophesyed before,* that such a kingdome there shoulde be of Gog and Magog.

This Ottomannus, after he had raigned 28. yeares in the yeare of our Lord 1527. dyed, and departed to his Mahumet, leauing behind him three sonnes, of whom Orchanes being the youngest, killed his two brethren, whilest they were at variaunce betwene themselues.

Orchanes the second Emperour after Ottomannus.

ORchanes, the youngest of the sonnes of Ottomannus, after he had slayne his two brethren, tooke the regimēt of the turkes after his father. Who after he had drawne to him the hartes of the multitude, such as had theyr dispositions set vpon the licētious life of warre, cōuerted his power, further to enlarge his fathers dominion: winning & subduing Mysia, Lydia, Lycaonia, Phrygia, and Caria: All whiche countreyes, being within the compasse of Asia, vnto the sea side of Hellespontus, and the sea Euxinus, he added to the Turkishe Empyre. Also he wanne Prusia: which was the metropolitane City of Bithynia, which thē he made the chiefe seate of the Turkes Empyre. Besides these moreouer, he conquered Nicea, & got Nicomedia: all which were before Christian Cities & regions. And yet all this could not make the Christian Princes in Grecia, to cease theyr ciuill warres, & to ioine & accord among themselues: Such debate and variaunce was thē betwene Cātacuzenus, on the Greeks part, & Paleologus y^e Emperour of Constantinople. By reason whereof, y^e turkes ayd was sent for out of Asia, to helpe our Christians one to kil an other, and at length to get all those partes of Europe from them both. Who if they had according to theyr profession, so well ioined in brotherly vnity, as they did in cruel hostility dissent, neither had Orchanes so preuayled in gettynge Prusia from the Grecians, neither had the turkes so soone presumed into Europe as afterward they did. Orchanes after these victories, when he had raigned 22. yeares was strokē, as some say, with a dart in the shoulder, at the siege of Prusia. The opiniō of others is, that he fighting against the Tartariās, where he lost a great part of his army, was there also slayne himselfe. an. 1349.

Amurathes the 3. after Ottamannus.

The Greeke writers doe holde that Orchanes had two sonnes, Solimannus, and Amurathes. Of which two, first Solimannus raigned albeit not long.* After him folowed Amurathes, who after that Asia nowe was subdued by his predecessors, sought by all meanes and wayes how to proceede further & to inuade Europe. To whose ambitious purpose the domestical warres of the Christians gaue vnprosperous occasion:* which occasion is thus declared. Certaine discord fell betwene the princes of Greece (whose captayne was Cantaguzenus) and Paleologus Emperour of Constantinople. Wherupō Paleologus, for that he was not able to make his party good with the Grecians, moste vnwisely sent for Amurathes, to helpe him. Who beinge glad to haue such an occasion offered, which he so long had sought, sent to ayde him 12000. Turkes into Thracia: but first vsed all delayes he could, of crafty pollicy to the entent that the Greekes first shoulde waste theyr strength and power vpon themselues, whereby he might be more able afterward to set vpō them, and to accomplish his conceiued desire.

The Turkes thus being called into Europe, by the Christians, whether they tasting the sweetnesse of the soyle incensed Amurathes theyr Emperour to make inuasion,* or whether Amurathes of his owne head thought good to vse the time, in the yeare of our Lord 1363. he came himselfe ouer into Europe with 60000. Turkes, falling vpon the Grecians, being wasted and spent with their long warres and battelles before.* The pretence of the deuilishe Turke was to ayd and to assist the Emperour Peleologus, whether he would or no, and to subdue such as had fallen from him. The Christian shippes of the Ligurians for money were hyred to conduct them ouer, taking for euery souldiour a peece of gold. Ex Pucer. & alijs.

Thus the Turkes armye being conueyed ouer by the Grecianssea called Hellespōtus, first got Callipolis wyth other townes and Cityes bordering about the sea, & there planting themselues, and preparing shippes of theyr own for transporting theyr munitions out of Asia, aduaunced their power further into Thrasia, and there wanne Philip polis, then gotte Adrianopolis, which was not farre from Constantinople, & there Amurathes made his chiefe seat. Then beganne Paleologus the Emperour at lenth to bewayle his offer & couenaunt made with Amurathes.* Whē the Turkes had expugned thus a greate part of Thrasia, they extended forth theyr armye vnto Mysia, whiche they soone subdued: from thence proceding and conquering the Bessos and Triballos, they entred into Seruia, and Bulgaria: where they ioyning battell with Lazarus Despota prince of Seruia, and with other Dukes of Dalmatia, and Epirus, wanne of them the field, & put them to the worse: where Lazarus Despota being taken,* and committed to prison, ended his life. This Lazarus had a certayne faythfull client or seruauant, who to reuenge his maisters death, with a bolde courage, although seing death before his eies, yet ventred his life so far, that he came to the tyraūt & thrust him through with his dagger. This Amurathes reigned. 23. yeares, and was slayne in the yeare of our Lord 1372.

The power of the Turkes began to encrease in Europe, what time Baiazetes, the first of that name, after the death of his father, entred the possession of the turkes kingdome. This Baiazetes had 2. brethrē, Solimānus & Saucos. Whiche Saucos had his eyes put out by his father for striuing for the kingdome. Solimānus was slayne of hys brother. Thus Baiazetes beginning his kingdome wyth the murther of his brother, reduced his Imperiall seat frō Prusia a city of Bithynia, vnto Adrianople, entēding with himself to subdue both Asia & Europe to his own power.* First he set vpon the Seruians and Bulgarians, thinking to reuenge his fathers death, where he gaue the ouerthrow to Marcus Despota, with all the nobility of the Seruians and Bulgarians, and put all those partyes vnder his subiection vnto the fines and borders of the Illyrians. All Thracia moreouer hee brought likewise vnder his yoke, onely Constantinople and Pera excepted. That done, he inuaded the residue of Grecia, preuaylyng agaynste the countryes of Thessalia, Macedonia, Phocides, and Attica, spoyling and burning as he passed, without anye resistance: and so returning with innumerable spoyle of the Christians, vnto Adrianople, layd siege to Constantinople the space of viij. yeares, and had expugned the same, but that Paleologus beyng brought to extremitye, was driuen to craue ayde of the frenchmen, and of Sigismund the Emperour. Who being accompanied with a sufficient power of Frenchmen & Germaines, came downe to Hūgaria & toward Seruia agaynst the Turk. Baiazetes hearing of theyr comming, raised his siege frō Cōstantinople, Page 739 and with 60000. horsemen,* came to Nicopolis, where he encountring with them, ouerthrew all the Christian army, tooke Iohn the Captaine of the French power prisoner: Sigismundus, which before in the Councell of Constance, had burned Iohn Hus & Hierome of Prage, hardly escaped by flieng. Baiazetes after the victory got, carried away Duke Iohn, with fiue other in hands, into Prusia, where before his face he caused all the other christian prisoners to be cut in peeces.

Afterwarde the sayde Iohn beeing raunsomed wyth 200000. crownes, was deliuered. Some authors referre this story to the time of Calepinus, as followeth heereafter to be seene.

Baiazetes the cruell tirant after this victory wonne, & tirannie shewed vpon the Christians, returned againe to his siege of Constantinople, fully bending himselfe to cōquere and subdue the same, whiche thyng no doubt he had accomplished,* but that the prouidence of God had founde such a meanes that Tamerlanes King of Parthia, wyth an 100. thousand horsemen, and swarmes of footemen, like a violent floud, ouerrunning Asia, and pressing vpon Siria and Sebastia, had taken Orthobules the sonne of Baiazetes, prisoner, and afterward slue him, exercising the like crueltie vpō his prisoners, as Baiazetes had done before vpon the Christians: insomuch that he spared neither sexe nor age of the Turkish multitude: of whome he caused xij. thousand at one time, to be ouerriden and troden downe vnder his horses feete. By reason whereof, Baiazets the tirant was enforced to raise his siege from Constantinople, & to returne his power into Asia: where he, neere the hill called Stella, pitched his tents there to encounter with Tamerlanes.

The fight betweene these ij. was long & great on both sides, which was in the yeare of our Lord 1397. and the second yeare after the slaughter of our Christians at Nicopolis in Ponnonia: but the victorie of this battaile fell to Tamerlanes at lēgth.* In the which battaile as Munsterus writeth, were slaine 2000000. Turkes. Among whome, Baiazetes the tirant, hauing his horse slaine vnder him, was takē prisoner, and to make a spectacle of his wretched fortune, was bounde in golden fetters, and so beeing enclosed in an iron grate (whome before all Grecia could not holde) was ledde about and shewed through all Asia, to be skorned & laught at: and moreouer was vsed in stead of a footestool to Tamerlanes,* or a blocke, as often as he mounted vpon his horse. Some adde also, that he was made like a dogge to feede vnder Tamerlanes table. The tirannie of which Baiazetes against the Christians, as it was not much vnlike to the crueltie of Ualerianus y^e Romaine Emperour aboue mentioned, pag. 73. so neither was the example of his punishment much discrepant, for as Sapoires King of the Persians did then with Ualerianus in time of the eight persecution of the primatiue Church: so likewise was Baiazetes this persecutor worthely handled by Tamerlanes king of the Parthians, as in maner abouesayd.

Tamerlanes after thys conquest, passed wyth hys army into Mesopotamia, to Egypt, and all Syria, where he victoriously subduing the Cities and munitions of the Turkes, at length also conquered Damascus. In his sieges his maner was, the first day to go all in white attire, the seconde daye in red, the third day in blacke: signifieng thereby mercie the first daye to them that yeelded, the seconde day the sword, the third day fire and ashes. At last, after great victories, and spoiles gotten of the Turkes, he returned into his Countrey againe, and there dyed, anno 1402.

Seb. Munsterus writing of this Tamerlanes, recordeth that he had in his army 200. thousand men: * and that hee ouercame the Parthians, Scythians, Hiberians, Albans Persians, Medes, and conquered all Mesopotamia: and after he had also subdued Armenia, passing ouer the riuer Euphrates with sixe hundred thousande footemen, * and 4000000. horsemen, he inuaded all Asia Minor, conquering and subduing from the floud Tanais vnto Nilus in Egipt, and was called terror orbis, the terror of the world. He lefte behinde hym two sonnes, who falling in discorde for theyr possessions, lost all agayne that their father gotte.

In the meane time Baiazetes in the second yeare of his captiuitie, died, leauing behind him diuers sonnes, Iesus or Iosua the eldest, * Mulsumanes, Moses, Celebinus, or Calepinus, Iesus the yonger, Mustaphas, and Hali, of whome first Iesus the eldest was ouercome and slaine of Mulsumanes: which Mulsumanes afterwarde was deliuered to Moses his brother, and by him was slaine likewise, which Moses had also the like ende by his brother Calepinus, hauing his necke broken with a bowe string, which was then the vsuall maner among the Turkes in killing their brethren. The same Calepinus sparing onely the life of Mustaphas his other brother, condemned him to perpetuall prison. Iesus the yonger was Baptised, & shortly after departed at Constantinople. In these such disorders and diuisions among the Turkes, what occasions were geuen to the Christias to haue recouered agayne of the Turkes that they had lost, if they had not bene either negligent, or in their own priuate warres otherwise occupied with themselues.

Calepinus the 5. after Ottomannus.

Calepinus, * or Celebinus was the sonne of Baiazetes, and of foure brethren, the eldest: who beyng all taken captiues of the Parthians, he onely escaped and obtained his fathers kyngdome. This Calepinus encouraged by the sloth and negligence of the Princes of Europe, and by the discord of the Grecians amongst them selues and other nations neare about them, long troubled and vexed the Bulgarians, Seruiās, and Macedonians, euen to the tyme of Sigismundus. Which Sigismundus seyng now Baiazetes to be ouercome and taken of Tamerlane, and the power of the Turkes weakened in Europe, & hauing such occasion offered him, as it were from heauen, to destroy and vtterly to roote out, not onely out of Asia but also all Europe, that barbarous nation, and cruell enemies to the name and Religiō of Christ: and also to reuenge the great slaughter and discomfiture of his army fighting before with Baiazetes at Nicopolis a Citie in Mysia: with great power made warre agaynst Calepinus at Columbatium a Towne in Seruia, * as is also before mentioned. pag. 719. but as vnluckely and with as little successe as he did before agaynst Baiazetes his father: For in that battaile were slayne of the Christiās to the nūber of xx. thousand, and the rest vtterly discomfited, the kyng himselve escaping so hardly, that he entred not agayne into his kingdome for the space of 18. monethes after. Some write that this was done vnder Baiazetes, other some referre this battaile to Amurathes, but howsoeuer it was, most pernicious was it to the Christiās. He raigned but vi. yeares and dyed very young. an. 1404.

Orchanes and Moses his vnclē, the sixt after Ottomanus.

AFTER the captiuitie of Baiazetes aboue mentioned,* histories diuersly doe dissent. The Greeke writers making no mention at al of Calepinus, onely make mētion of the sonnes of Baiazetes, & of the contention among them. vntill the time of Muhumetes. The Latin stories writing of the children of Baiezetes and of their succession, doe not therein agree, some affirmyng that Baiazetes had two sonnes, Orchanes surnamed Calepinus, & Mahumetes his brother, which within two yeares slew the sayd Calepinus, and entred his dominion. Other attribute to Baiazetes moe sonnes, as is aboue rehearsed. Some agayne doe geue to Baiazetes onely these two sonnes Celebinus and Mustaphas: and hold that Calepinus or Celebinus had two sonnes,* to wit, Orchanes and Mahumetes, and adde moreouer that the sayd Orchanes beyng somewhat yōg, was slayne of his vnclē Moses, who gouerned but ij. yeares. For Mahumetes to reuenge his brothers death slew Moses, and inuaded his dominion. The Greeke stories make no mention at all of Orchanes.

Mahumetes the 7. after Ottomannus.

THIS Mahumetes,* whether he was the sonne of Baiazetes, or els of Calepinus, conuerted to himselfe alone the kingdome, or tyrāny rather, of the murdering Turks. Who afflicted the Christiāns with sore warres within Europe, especially the countrey called Wallachia, lying not farre frō the floud Danubius, betwene Hungary & Thracia. From thence he remoued into Asia, where he recouered diuers partes in Galatia, Pontus, Capadocia, Cilicia, whiche before Tamerlanes had alienated from the Turkes.* This Mahumetes planted his chief Imperiall seate in Adrianople not farre from Constātinople, within the countrey of Thracia. In some writers the conflict betwene Sigismund & the great Turke, wherein the Christians were so discomfited, is referred rather to this Mahumetes, then to Calepinus: of which conflict mention is aboue made in the story of Sigismundus. pag. 719. This Mahumetes reigned,* as some say 14. yeares, & dyed in the yeare of our Lord. 1419. Other affirme 17. yeares.

Amurathes the second, 8. after Ottmannus.

AMurathes, as Philelphus sayth, was the son of Celebinus, as Laonicus Chalcondiles testifieth, of Mahumetes: whose son soeuer he was, a wretched traunt he was, and permitted as a scourge of God, to correct y^e sins of the Christians. In the story of Baiazetes, mentiō was made before of Mustaphas his sonne, who was cōdemned to perpetual prison by Calepinus his brother. This Mustaphas escaping out of his brothers prison, was conueied to the Grecians, where he remained long in custody, til at length they vnderstanding the purpose of Amurathes, set him vp with sufficient habiliments and furniture of war, to fight against the sayde Amurathes his nephew. But in cōclusion, he being not able to make his partie good, came into y^e hands of his enemie, and had his necke broke with a bowstring, after the maner of the Turkish execution.

The Grecians then terrified with this sinister aduersity required truce of the Turke, but when that would not be graunted, they procured vnto them Mustaphas, the other brother to Amurathes, being of the age of xiiij. yeares: who likewise being armed of y^e Grecians, got the City of Nice in Bithynia, from Amurathes his brother: Albeit it was not long but he was circumvented in the same Citie,* and brought to Amurathes: who caused him likewise to taste of the same whip, as the other Mustaphas had done before. Amurathes being now out of all feare and doubt of brethren & kinsfolke to rise against him, conuerted all his power against the Grecians: and first raunging through out Thracia, where diuers Cities yelded vnto him, which before belonged to the Emperour of Constantinople, frō thence he set forward to the noble and famous City Thessalonica, being then vnder the league and protectiō of the Uenetians. This Thessalonica is a Citie in Greece, bordering vpon Macedonia, to y^e Citizens wherof, S. Paule writeth, foreshewing vnto them in his 2. Epistle, of a defection to come before the comming of the day of the Lord 2. Thess. 2. By the which apostacie or defection, what the holy Apostle doth meane, this story of the Turkes maye easely declare. After Thessalonica was subdued, Phocis, with all the countrey about Athens, Beocia likewise, Aetolia, Acarnauia, with all the region beyond Peloponesus, vnto the coast of Corinth, to whome S. Paule also wrote other two epistles, were brought in bondage and slauery vnto the Turke.

In Epirus, and in that quarter that adioyneth to Macedonia, named Albania, reigned then one Ioannes Castriotus, who perceiuing himselfe too weake to matche with the Turkes power, made with the Turke this cōuention, that he should haue Croia, a famous Citie in Grecia, and also gaue to him his three sonnes for hostages, to wit, Constantinus, Reposius, and Georgius.

In this George, such towardnes of noble courage, such vigour of minde, and strength of body singularly did appeare, that the Turke caused him more freely to be instructed after the Turkish religion and maner in his owne court: where he being traded vp, did so shoote vp as well in feates of actiuitie, as in strength of body, that he excelled all his equals: in so much that he was named Scanderbeins, which soundeth as much as Alexander Magnus.

After this Alexander was grown vp to mature ripenes of age, and was well trained vp in feates of war, he was sent out by the Turke,* to warre against Caramannus of Cilicia, The Turkes enemy. In which expedition he sped himselfe most manfully, fighting hand to hande, first with a footeman of Scythia, then with an horseman of Persia, being chalenged by them both to encounter, first with the one, after with y^e other: whom he so valiantly ouerthrew, y^e he wan great renoun with y^e Turk: In so much that he trusting to y^e Turks fauour, whē he heard of the decease of his father, durst aske of y^e Turke the graunt of his fathers dominion to be giuen vnto him. Which request, although Amurathes y^e Turke did not denie him: yet notwithstanding he perceiuing the matter to be dalied out with fayre wordes, by subtill meanes and policie * slipt out of the Turks court, and came to Epirus his owne inheritance: where first by forged letters he recouered Croia. The other Cities of their voluntary minde, yeelded themselues vnto him, who then gathering vnto him the people of Epirus & Macedonia (which were not so many in nūber, as with good willing minds they stucke vnto him) so māfully and valiantly behaued himselfe, that against all the puissance both of Amurathes, and also of Mahumete, he maintained his owne, repulsed their violence, and put to flight their armies, many yeres together. But to returne againe to the course of Amurathes victories, after he had thus preuailed (as is before signified) agaynst the East parts of Europa and Grecia,* and had conuented thus for the dommion of Epirus, he inuaded Iliricum, (otherwise called now Sclauonia) conteining in it Dalmatia, Croacia, Isiria, and Liburnia: which Countreys after he had spoiled and wasted, he continued his course to Albania, and Bosna. In which regions, when he had subdued a great part, and had led away an innumerable multitude of captiues, he moued further to Walachia and Seruia, vpon hope to conquere all Pannonia.

There reigned at the same time in Seruia a certayne prince named Georgius Despota,* who made great sute to the Turke for truce & peace, promising to giue his daughter to mariage: for by y^r Turkes lawe they may marry as many wiues as they lust. It was not long after Amurathes had married the daughter of Despota, but he contrary to his league and promise, made warre vpon Despota his father in law, and expelled him out of his kingdome, taking from him diuers Cities, as Scopia, Nouomonte, Sophia, and all Misia. Georgius himselfe fled into Hungary, leauing behind him his son to defend y^e town of Sinderonia. Amurathes vnderstāding of the flight of Despota his father in law, compassed the Citie of Sinderonia with a strōg siege, which whē he in few daies had expugned, he tooke his wiues brother, sonne of Despota, and without regard of all mercy and affinitie, after the barbarous tyranny of the Turkes, put out his eies, with a basen red hoat set before his eies, and after that led him about with him, in derision and despite of his cowardly father. Ex Christof. Rhicherio Gallo. & Gasp. Peuc & alijs.

Seruia beeing thus wonne and gotten, Amurathes thinking to go further into Hungary, besieged the Citie called Belgradum, and no doubt, had also suppressed the same, had not the prouidence of God found a meanes, that partly through slaughter of his men, partly for lacke of victuall and other forage, he was compelled to raise his siege and retire.

In the meane time Ioannes Huniades (of whom mention was made before,* pag. 720.) had got great victories against the Turkish power, and had recouered parte of Seruia, and all Muldauia: against whome, Amurathes the Turke, with a mighty army, moued into Pannonia. But Huniades with the power and ayde of Ladislaus King of Polonia (but specially by the power of the Lord) did soone infringe the puissance of the Turke, and gaue him the ouerthrow, recouering vnto the Christians the greatest part of Seruia and Bulgaria.

In this battaile Huniades had fiue sundry conflictes with the Turks vpō one day,* and with fiue victories put them to the worse, and toward night did so discomfit and ouerthrow the great captaine of Amurathes, called Bassa, the Duke of Anatolia (which is otherwise named Asia Minor) that he slue of the Turks that day, to the number of 30. thousand. Amurathes, although he was not a little thereat discouraged, yet dissembling his feare, with stout countenance sent for Carambeius his principal stay & captaine, with a new power brought out of Asia, to assist him in his warres. Then Carambeius, in y^e downes of Trasiluania, Ladislaus the foresaid king of Polonie (the Lord so working) through the industrie of Ioannes Huniades,* so receiued & with such celerity oppressed him vnprovidēd, that all his stout & sturdy army either was slaine downe right, or else put to flight & disparcled, Carambeius the Captaine being himselfe taken prisoner in the same field.

These victories of Huniades strooke no little terror to Amurathes, in somuch y^t for distresse of minde he was ready to destroy himselfe (as some do write) but being cōfirmed by Helibeus Bassa his cōsailer, he kept himselfe wⁱn y^e streites of y^e moūt Rhodope. Who then hearing that Caramannus inuaded the same time the countrey of Bithinia and Pontus in Asia:* was glad to take truce wyth Ladislaus and Huniades vpon such conditions as they listed to make themselues: which conditions were these, that Amurathes should depart clearely from all the region of Sernia,* and should remoue from thence all his garrisons, which were placed in the Castles and forts of the same: Also he should restore George Despota (which is to say) Prince of Seruia vnto his possession, and set his children free, whome he had in captiuitie, and restore them to their inheritance. Item, that he shoulde make no more claime nor title to the countrey of Moldonia aboue mentioned, nor to that part of Bulgrauia which he had lost:* and that he should desist heereafter from all wrongs and iniuries against the Christians. Upon these conditions the Turke being agreed, so was truce concluded on both parts for tenne yeares, and with solemne othe betweene them confirmed.

Page 736*This done, Amurathes the tyraunt addresseth himselfe toward Asia, to resist the inuasion of Caramannus aforesaid. At what time Pope Eugenius so soone as he heard the Turke to be returned into Asia, sendeth Iulianus Caesarianus his Cardinall (whose story is before touched, page. 683.) vnto Ladislaus the foresaid king, with full dispensation and absolution, to breake his othe and league wyth the Turke, promising moreouer great hope of aide, if he would go in armes stoutly against the tirant.

Where by the way is to be noted, that as there is no truth of promise in that pestilēt sea of Rome,* neither was there euer any war prospered, which was taken in hande by the Popes counsaile: so was there neuer any counsaile of the Pope, that brought with it more detriment to Christianitie, then this. But the Pope belike thought, that as he might lawfully breake promise with Iohn Hus, and with other Christians, so also he needed not to obserue anye league or truce taken with the Turke: but it turned much otherwise then the Popes blinde braines imagined, as by the sequele is to be seene. For Ladislaus being thus excited by the vnadvised and sinister instigation of Pope Eugenius, contrary to the truce stablished a little before, set out with his army from Seledinus, and so proceeding to Walachia and Burgaria, came to Uarna, a towne of Bulgary, where he fell sicke.

It was not long but the Turke hauing thereof intelligence, left his warres begon with Caramannus in Asia, and with great iourneis made haste into Europe, passing ouer by y^e straites neare to Calipolis, where all y^e Italian navy still looking on, and whether of purpose, or whether for cowardlines, would not stirre one ore to stop the passage of the Turkish army. When Amurathes was come to Adrianopolis in Thrasia, vsing such celeritie as no mā looked for, within viij. daies he was in Burgaria, & there encamped himselfe against Ladislaus. The day of battaile being set, the armies ioined on both sides. Huniades was himself there present, but all the matter was ruled by Iulianus the Cardinall, and y^e Popes Clergy. The fight cōtinued three daies and three nightes together, with great courage & much bloudshed on each side: insomuch that the field did stand with lakes of bloud. They semed at the first to incline to the Christians, by breaking the first ranks of the Turkes. But the Priests and Prelates which were at the field (which had bene more fitte to haue bene in the Church) seeing the Turkes to begin to flie, vnskilfully left their array to pursue the enemy, so that they leauing the other standings of the Christians naked, gaue great aduantage to the Turks, with their darts & shot to disturbe the Christian rankes. By the which occasion, Amurathes inclosing y^e Christiās with his army roūd about, obtained the victory. In the which field, Ladislaus the yong king of Polony, hauing his horse first killed vnder him, was strooken downe,* & slaine. The Popes Bishops flieng to saue themselues, fell into the marishes, and there were destroied, susteining a durtey death condigne to their filthy falshode and vntruth. Iulianus y^e Cardinall, which with the Pope was the chiefe doer in breaking the league, in the way was found dead, being full of wounds, and spoiled to his naked skinne. Of the rest of y^e army that escaped by flieng, part was drowned in y^e marishes, some perished miserably for hunger, some for cold, watching & wādering in the woods. Huniades hardly escaped the danger, by the mercifull prouidence of God, being reserued to the further profite and commoditie of Christendome.

This Iohn Huniades the worthy warriour was borne in Walachia, being Earle of Bistrice, of all Captaines y^t euer went against the Turkes, most famous & singular, prudent in wit, discret in counsaile, expert and politike in warre, prompt of hand, circumspect before he attempted, quicke in expedition: in whom wāted almost no good propertie requisite in a warlike Captaine. Against two most mighty and fierce tirants, Amurathes and Mahumetes, through the Lords might, he defended all Pannonia, and therefore was called the thunderbolt and terroure of the Turkes. Like as Achilles was vnto y^e Grecians, so was he set vp of God to be as a wal or bulwarke of al Europe against the cruell Turkes and enemies of Christ, and of his Christians. Neither was there any King or Prince that euer achieved such noble victories, either so many in number, or so profitable for y^e publike vtilitie of all Europe, as did he, and that not onely in the daies of this Amurathes, but also of Mahumetes his successour, as heereafter remaineth further to be seene. This battaile of Amurathes against the Christians at Uarna in Bulgaria, was fought in the yeare of our Lord 1404.

Amurathes by reason of this victorious ouerthrow againste the Christians, surprised with no small pride, directed his iourney incontinent toward the Grecians, where Castriotus was,* otherwise called Scanderbecius. And first commyng to Peloponesus, and breaking downe the wall about the straits of Corinthe, encoūtered with the brother of the Emperour of Constantinople, whom with his sodeine commyng he oppressed, with all the Greekes army, ere they were prouided. Paleologus the Emperour after that, did build vp the wall againe: but at the Turkes bidding he was cōpelled to vndoe it agayne: which wall afterward the Uenetians did repayre. After the demolitiō of the wall, Amurathes entring into * Peloponesus, tooke diuers townes and Cities, as Sycione, and Patris, and moreouer made all the parts of Thessalia and Achaia tributaries vnto him.

The next yeare after this battaile of Amurathes fought agaynst the Christians at Uarna, the Turke beyng now about the partes of Grecia, purposed to bend all his force and mayne agaynst the cuntry of Epyrus belongyng to Georgius Castriotus Scanderbeius. Of this Scanderbeius mētion was made before, how he was brought vp in the Turkes Court, from whence we declared also how subillie he conueyed him selfe, and came to the possession of his owne patrimony of Epyrus.* Which Epirus this noble and victorious Scanderbeius (whom the Lord also had raysed vp the same tyme with Huniades, to bridle the fury of the Turkes) valiaūtly defended agaynst all the power of Amurathes: In so much that he discomfited and vanquished vij. of the most expert Bassas or Dukes of the Ottomā Emperour, one after an other, with all their armies of most piked and chosen souldiours, dislodged them of their tentes, and expelled them vtterly out of all Epyrus. Also when Amurathes himselfe with his whole puissance, had enuironed about the Citie of Croia, with cruell siege and ordinaunce out of measure, yet notwithstanding the sayd Scāderbeius (through the power and blessing of the Lord) beate him out of the field, & repulsed him from his siege.

After this discomfiture,* the saying is that Amurathes, to keepe his vow made before, after his victory at Uarna, gaue himselfe into a religious order, liuyng a contemplatiue life with certaine other Priestes ioyned vnto him, in the forest of Bithynia, renouncing the gouernement of his realme to the handes of Haly one of his Princes (for thou must vnderstād, good Reader, that the Turkes also be not without their sondry sectes of Religion, no more then we Christians are without our Friers and Monkes.)

In the meane tyme while Amurathes this Turkishe tyrāne was cloystered vp in his Monkish Religion,* Ioannes Huniades in the kyngdome of Hungary, and Castriotus Scanderbeius in Grecia, kept great sty•re against the Turkes. By reason wherof Amurathes was takē againe from his Monkish vow and profession, & brought agayne into the field: For first Huniades had rescued the whole coūtrei of Hungary: and had propulsed moreouer all the might of the Turkes farre frō Seruia.* And although the peuishe practise of Grgins Prince of Serbia had oft tymes disclosed his counsailes vnto the Turkes, whereby twise he was brought in daunger, yet notwithstanding (through the Lordes gracious protection) he was preserued, and deliuered by the sayd George vnto the Hungarians agayne, & after that manfully vāquished the Turkes, so that they had no resting place about those parts of Seruia and Bulgaria, so long as he liued.

On the other side in Grecia,* Castriotus Scāderbeius so foyled the Turke in defence of his coūtrei Epirus and Macedonia, and kept Amurathes so short, that not ouely he was not able to wyne any great Towne in all Epyrus: but also commyng from Epyrus in the straites, was so intāgled by Castriotus, that he was forced to geue bataille: In the which bataille he was so vanquished, & most part of his army slayne,* that for grief and sorrow conceaued, he fallyng into a rauyng sicknesse, was trāsported out of his pauillon vnto Adrianople, and there in fury & madnesse dyed, after he had reigned 34. yeares, which was about the yeare of our Lord. 1450.

This Amurathes first ordained the order of Ianizarites. Which were the men children of such Christians as he conquered & tooke captiue: whom he forced to renounce the faith of Christ, wherein they were Baptized & brought them vp in Mahumetes law, & exercised them in the same feates of warre as he did his owne people:* and after that they came to mens estate, he named them Ianizari (that is to say) souldiours of a straunge countrey, and made them to garde his person. They weare on their head is stead of an helmet, a white attire made of the grossest sort of woll, and in so manifolde aboute their head, that it can not bee pierced with a sword. It hāgeth downe on the backe with Page 742 a taile, and before on the forehead it is garnished with golde and siluer. They were woont to vse bowes and launces in the fielde, but nowe they vse dagges as oure horsemen do.

At the first institution there were but 8000. in theyr garrison, but now they be twise so many. This of all bondage and seruitude that the Christians suffer vnder the Turke is most intollerable, and greatly to be of all true Christians lamented. For what can godly mindes behold more to their grieffe, then to see their children pulled from the faith of Christ, wherein they were baptised, and by whose bloud they should eternally be saued, and to be instructed and nourished with the blasphemous doctrine of Mahumet, and to be professed enemies of Christ and hys Church,* to make warre against heauen, and to perish euerlastingly? And finally, what a lamentable thing is it, to see and beholde our owne children borne of our owne bodies, to become our mortall and cruell enemies, and to cut our throtes with their owne hands? This seruitude of minde is farre greater then death it selfe, which if oure Princes would well consider, it would cause them the rather to agree, and bende their whole force and power against this cruell enemy.

Mahumetes second, the ix. after Ottomanus.

AMurathes left behind him three sonnes, Mahumete borne of the daughter of Despota, Prince of Seruia, being twentie yeares of age, the second sonne called Turcines, the third named Calepinus. This Turcines being an infant, and but eighteene moneths old, was strangled at the commandement of the Turke, by his seruant Moses, himselfe being there present, and beholding the horrible murther. And when Moses the executour of y^e murther had desired him not to pollute his handes with the bloud of his brother, he answered, that it was the manner of all the Ottoman Turkes, that all the other breethren being destroyed, none should be lefte alieue but one to gonerue the Empire. Wherefore Moses was commaunded by the tirant, there presently, and in his sight, to kill the infant. This horrible fact when the mother of the childe vnderstoode, she crieng out, and almost mad for sorrowe, cursed the tirant to his face. But he to mitigate the rage of his mother, at her request being desirous to be reuenged vpon the executour of her sonnes death, deliuered the said Moses bound into her hands, who then in the presence of the tirant, thrust him to the hart with a knife, and opening his side, tooke out his liuer, and threw it to the dogges to be deuoured.

The third sonne called Calepinus, which was but sixe moneths old, the foresaid Amurathes his father commended to the custody of Halibassa one of his Nobles,* who to gratifie and please y^e tirant, betrayed the infant, & brought him vnto him, and thereupon he at the tirants commandement was strangled. Some affirme, that in the stead of Calepinus, another child was offered vnto the tirant, and that Calepinus was conueied to Constantinople, and after the taking of Constantinople, was caried to Uenice, and then to Rome to Pope Calixt, where he was baptised, and afterward came into Germany to Fridericke the Emperour,* and there was honorably entertained, & kept in Austrich during his life. Where note how the mercifull prouidence of God, whom he list to saue, can fetch out of y^e diuels mouth. And note moreouer touching the foresayde Halibassa the betraier of y^e infant, how he escaped not vnreuēged: For Mahumet vnderstanding him to be a man of great substance and riches, thorough forging of false crimes, with great torments put him to death to haue his riches: for this tirant was geuen to insatiable auarice. Thus this bloody Mahumete began his regiment with horrible murther, after y^e example of other cursed tirants his predecessours.

Although this Mahumete, notwithstanding that hee came of a Christen mother, being the daughter of Despota prince of Seruia, and by her was brought vp and instructed from his childhood in the precepts of Christian religiō and maners, yet he soone forgetting all, gaue himselfe to Mahumetes religion, and yet so, that he being addicted to neyther Religion, became an Atheist, beleeuing and worshipping no God at all, but onely the Goddess of good Fortune, irriding and mocking y^e mindes and iudgemēts of men, which beleue that God by his prouidence, gouerneth and regardeth the state of humaine things on earth.

After that this Mahumete heard of the victories and conquests of other his predecessours, and had vnderstanding how Baiazetes lay eight yeares about Constantinople, and could not winne it: he dispraising Baiazetes, and disdaining that so long time should be spent aboute the siege thereof,* and yet no victory gotten, bent all hys studie and deuce how to subdue the same. But first hauing a priuie hatred against the Citie of Athens, and hauing his hands lately embrued with the bloud of his brethren, this murdering Mahumete first of all taketh his v•age to subuert and destroy the Citie aforesaid, being a famous Schoole of all good learning and discipline. Against the which Citie he did so furiously rage for the hatred of good letters,* that he thought he ought not to suffer the foundation thereof to stand, because that Citie was a good nurse and fosterer of good Artes and Sciences: wherefore, he commaunded the Citie to be rased, and vtterly subuerted: and wheresoeuer any monuments or bookes could be found, he caused them to be cast into durty sinkes, and the filthiest places of the Citie, or put to the most vile vses that could be deuised,* for extirping and abolishing of all good literature, and if he vnderstood any to lament the case and ruine of that noble place, those he greeuously punished and put to death.

Thus the famous and auncient Schoole of Athens being destroied and ouerthrowne, he returned his army & power into Thracia, where in all haste he gathering hys power together both by sea & by lād,* with a mighty multitude compassed the Citie of Constantinople about, and began to lay his siege against it, in the yeare of our Lord 1453. and in the 54. day of the said siege it was taken, sacked, and the Emperour Cōstantinus slaine. As touching the cruelty and fearcenes of the Turkes in getting of this City, and what slaughter there was of men, women, and children, what calamitie and misery was there to be sene, for somuch as sufficient relation, with a full description thereof,* hath bene made before, pag. 708. it shall be superfluous now to repeate the same. This only is not to be omitted touching three principall causes of the ouerthrow of this City: whereof was the first the filthy auarice of those Citizens, which hiding their treasures in the groūd, would not imploy the same to y^e necessary defence of their City. For so I finde it in story expressed, that when the Turke, after the taking of y^e City, had found not so much treasure as he looked for, suspecting with himselfe (as the truth was) the treasures and riches to be hidden vnder the ground, commaunded the earth to be digged vp, and the foundations of the houses to be searched: where when he had found treasures incredible,* what (quothe he) how could it be that this place could euer lacke inuention and fortification, which did flow and abound with such great riches as heere is, and plenty of all things? The second cause was the absence of the Nauy of the Uenetiās, which if they had bene ready in time, might haue bene a safegard against the inuasion of the enemies. A third cause also may be gathered vpon occasion incident in stories, either for that the City of Constantinople fifteene yeares before did yeeld to the Bishop of Rome,* as is before to be seene, pag. 76. or else because (as in some writers it is euident) that Images were there receaued & maintained in their Churches, and by the Turkes the same time destroyed.

Ioannes Ramus writing of the destructiō of this Citie,* amongst other matters maketh relation of the Image of the Crucifixe,* being there in y^e high temple of Sophia: which Image the Turke tooke, and writing this superscription vpon the head of it Hic est Christianorum Deus. 1. This is the God of the Christians, gaue it to his souldiours to be scorned, and commaunding the sayde Image with a trumpet to be carried through all his army, made euery man to spit at it most contumeliously. Wherein thou hast (good Reader) by the way to note,* what occasion of selaunder and offence we Christians geue vnto the barbarous Infidels by this our vngodly superstition, in hauing Images in our temples, contrary vnto the expresse commandement of God in his word. For if Saint Paule writing to the Corinthians, faith: we knowe Christ now no more after the flesh: how much lesse then is Christ to be knowne of vs in blind stockes and Images set vp in our Temples, seruing for none other purpose, but for the Infidels to laugh both vs & our God to scorne,* and to prouoke Gods vengeance? which by y^e like example (I feare) may also fall vpon other Cities, where such Images and Idolatrous superstition is maintained, whereof God graunt Uienna to take heede betime, which hath bene so long, and yet is in such great danger of the Turke, and polluted with so many Images, and plaine Idolatric.

In summa,* to make the story short, such was the cruelty of these Turkes in winning the Citie, that when Mahumete had geuen licence to the souldiours three dayes together, to spoile, to kill and to do whatsoeuer they listed, Page 743 there was no corner in all Constantinople, which did not either flow with Christian blood, or else was polluted w^t abhominable abusing of maids, wiues & matrones, without al reuerēce of nature. Of the which Citizēs, some they murthered, some they rosted vpon spits, of some they fleyed off their skin, hanging thē vp to consume with famine, of othersome they put salt into their woūds, the more terribly to torment them, insomuch, that one of them contended with another who could deuise most strange kinds of new torments and punishments,* exercising such crueltie vpon them, that the place where the Citie was before, seemed now to be no citie, but a slaughter house or shambles of Christian mens bodies. Amōg the dead bodies, the body also of Constantine the Emperour was found: whose head being brought to Mahun 〈◇〉, he commaunded to be caried vpon a speare through the whole City for a publike spectacle & decision to all the Turkish army. And because he would diminish the number of the captiues, which seemed to him to be very great, he neuer rose from his table, but he put euery day some of the nobles to death, no lesse to fill his cruell minde with blood,* then his body was filled with wine: which he vsed so long to do as any of the nobles of that Citie was left aliue: And of the other sorte also, as the stories do credibly report, there passed no day, in the which he did not orderly slay more then three hundreth persons, the residue he gaue to his rascal souldiours to kill, and to do with them what they would. Where is to be noted, that as Constantinus the sonne of Helena, was the first Emperour of Constantinople, so Constantinus the sonne also of Helena, was the last Emperour thereof.

Not farre from the said Citie of Constantinople, there was another little City called Pera, & once called Gallatia, situated by the Sea side: who hearing of the miserable destruction of Constantinople, and seing the City flaming with fire, sent certain of their chiesmē with speed to Mahumete, declaring vnto him that they neither had sent any helpe to the City of Constantinople, neither yet wrought any detrimēt to any of his army: wherefore they desired & praied him, that as they would gladly yeeld vnto him, so he would be fauourable vnto thē and spare them, & not to punish the giltles with the guilty. Mahumete, although he was not ignoraunt that for feare, rather then of any good will, they submitted themselues, and that they would rather resist him if they had ben able, yet he receiued for that time, the submission of the messengers: but sending wyth them his Embassadour into the Citie, he commanded also his army to follow withall, and to enter with him into the City, which, although it was greatly suspected & m•slied of y^e Citizens, yet they durst no otherwise do, but suffer them to enter: which beeing done, the Embassadour gaue a signe to y^e souldiours, euery man to do whatsoeuer he was bidden, of whom, some ranne to the walles, some to the temples and Churches, some to y^e streetes & houses of the City, plucking all things downe to y^e grounde, sacking and raūging with no lesse fury and abhominable filthines, then they had done at Cōstantinople before, sauing only that they abstained frō murther:* but the same day letters came from Mahumete to the Embassadour, that he should spare none, but destroy and murther all that euer were in the Citie: which message, because it seemed to the Embassadour to be too cruell, forsomuch as they had yeelded thēselues, he staid his hand a little vntill night came. In the meane time drunken Mahumete comming something to himselfe (whome drunkennes had before ouercome) sent his second letters to reuoke the first. Where againe is to be noted the mercifull prouidence of God towards his people in their deserued plagues, by staieng the handes, and brideling the fury many times of their enemies, when otherwise the case seemeth to be past all remedy.

Mahumete thus beeing in himselfe not a little aduanced and eleuated by the winning of Cōstantinople,* where he had now made the Imperiall seat of the Turkish dominion, the third yeare next folowing, to aduēture more masteries, he set out to y^e siege of Belgradum, a City of Hungary, lieng neare to the bankes of Danubius, thinking to haue the like successe there, as he had in the winning of Constantinople, albeit through the Lords disposing, it sel out much otherwise. Within the Citie of Belgradum the same time of the siege thereof, was Ioannes Huniades the valiant Captaine, of whom in diuers places mentiō hath bene made before, who with a sufficient strength of piked souldiours, albeit in number nothing equal to the Turkes army, valiātly defended the City with great courage, and no lesse successe. In the which siege great diligēce was bestowed, and many of the Turkes slaine. Amōg whom also Mahumete himselfe, being stricken with a pellet vnder the left arme, was faine to be caried out of y^e field for halfe dead, and the rest so put to flight, that of the Turkes the same time were destroyed to the number, or not much vnder the number of 40. thousād,* besides the losse of all their ordinaunce, which the Turkes in hast of their flight, were forced to leaue behinde them.

Hieronymus Zieglerus writyng of the siege of this Belgradum,* addeth moreouer, that whē Mahumete was at the siege therof, seyng the towne to be so small & w^ake of it selfe, that it could not be won with all his great multitude, he staryng and faryng like a mad man, commaunded all his brasen peeces to be layd, to battare downe the walles and Towers of the Towne: So that the Christians within the walles were vehemently distressed, for the siege continued both night and day without intermission. Amōg y^e rest of the Christians which defended the towne,* Hieronymus Zieglerus maketh mentiō of a certaine Bohemian, much worthy of his condigne cōmendation: Who beyng vpon the walles, and seyng a Turke with a bāner or ensigne of the Turkes to be gottē vp, by the sight wher of the whole Towne was in daunger to be cōquered and taken, runneth vnto the Turke, and claspyng him about the middle, speakyng to Iohn Capistranus standyng by low, asking him, whether it were any daunger of damnation to him, if he of his voluntary mynde, did cast himselfe with that dogge (so he termed him) downe headlong from the wall, to be slayne with him: what should become of his soule, and whether he might be saued or not. To whō when the other had aunswered that hee should be saued without doubt, hee estsoones tombleth him selfe with the Turke, downe of the wall, where by his death he saued the same tyme, the lyfe of all the Citie: Mahumete beyng so wounded and in dispayre of wynnyng the Citie, was caried (as ye heard) out of the field. Who at length commyng agayne to himselfe,* partly for feare and partly for shame, was ready to kill himselfe. And thus was y^e towne of Belgradum at that tyme rescued through Gods prouidence, by the meanes of Ioannes Huniades and this good Bohemian.

This siege of Belgradū begā in the yeare of the Lord. 1456. and endured.* 46. dayes. At the which siege were nūbred of the Turkes. 200. thousand. Of whom more then 40. thousand (as is aforesayd) were slayne: where the victory fell to the Christians through the prosperous successe geuen of God to Ioannes Huniades, & Capistranus. Which Huniades not long after the sayd victory,* through the importune labour and trauaile in defendyng the sayd towne, was taken with a sore sicknesse and thereof departed, to whose valiaunt prowes and singular courage, stories doe geue great land and commendation.

Mahumetes the Turke after this done in Europe,* returned into Asia to warre, with Vsumcassanes a Persian, one of the Turkes stocke with whō he had three battailes. The first was about the Riuer Euphrates, where the Turke lost 10. thousand men, and was put to the worse. In the second field likewise he was discomsited. The third battaile was at Arsēga, where through the terrible noyse of the brasen peece, the Persian horses disturbed the cāpe, and so was Vsumcassanes ouercome.*

From thence the Turke reduced agayne his power against the Christians, and first subdued vnto him Synope and all Paphlagonia: Also the kingdome of Trapezunce, which he besiegyng both by land and water, wanne from the Christians, and sent Dauid the kyng of the same with his two sonnes and Calus his vnle, vnto Constantinople, where they were miserably and cruelly put to death, & all the stocke of the Conneni, which were of the kynges stocke, by the Turke were destroyed. Whiche was about the yeare of our Lord. 1459. at which tyme this mischieuous Mahumete was first saluted Emperour.

Not long after, he got from the Grecians Corinthus and Mitylene, not without great slaughter of Christen men: in somuch that the whole Citie of Mitylene was vtterly to the ground almost destroyed. The Isles also of Lemnus & Lesbos he wanne from the Venetians: In the which Ilād of Lesbos is the Citie of Mitylene aforesayd.

Not farre frō this Ile of Lesbos and Mitylene, there is a countrey in Asia toward the sea side bordering next to Europe,* called Mysia, or of some called Moesia, wherein stode the Citie of Troye. This countrey Mahumete coueting to wyne rather by policie & falshode, then by doubtfull daunger of warre, secretly sent for the Prince therof to come to speake with him for certaine causes (as he pretended) which should concerne the profite and commoditie of thē both. Which when the king of Mysia, either for shame would not, or for feare durst not denye, he came to him as to conferre vpon necessary affaires in commō to them appertaining. Mahumete when he had brought that to passe Page 744 which he would, he caused the king to be apprehended, and cruelly to be slaine, or rather torne in peece: and so inuading the land of Misia, exercised the like tyrannie vpō all his kindred and affinitie.

This Misia by fraude being taken and lost, Mahumete flieth agayne toward Europe, where he assailed the Iland Euboia, otherwise called Nigroponte, making a bridge of a marueilous frame ouer the sea Euripus, to conuey ouer his army out of Grecia, and there laide his siege to the Citie Chalcis,* which at length in thirty dayes he ouercame, not without a great slaughter of his army: who in y^e siege thereof is said to haue lost 40. thousand of y^e Turkes. But y^e slaughter of the Christians was greater: for when the City was won,* the tirant commanded most cruelly, none to be spared within the whole citie, but to be put to the sword, whosoever was aboute the age of twenty yeares. This cruelty was shewed of y^e barbarous Tirant for anger and fury, because such a number of his Turkes were slaine at the siege therof,* being reckned (as is said) to 40. thousand. In the fierce siege of this Citie, it is memorable that is in stories recorded, how that the women of that Citie,* seeing the men to begin to faint, and the Citie to lie in present danger, tooke the matter themselves in hand, and plaieng the men, went to the walles, and there defended the Citie with no lesse trouble to the enemie, then the men had before done, and so for a space continued, so long as any mans strength and diligence could do anie good. A great cause of the losse of this Citie and Iland, is imputed to the cowardly timidity of the Venetians nauy: who being there present, and hauing prosperous winde, yet durst not, or would not aduenture vpon the Turkes bridge, which if they had done, the Iland of Euboia and Chalcis, had not so soone bin ouermatched of the Turks.

Thus all the East partes of Grecia being subdued to y^e Turkish tiraunt, with all Achaia, Attica, Acarnania, & Euboia,* shortly after folowed also Peloponesus, brought in like subiection to the Turke. Within this Peloponesus were these prouinces contained, Achaia, Messenia, Laconia, Argolica, and Archadia, &c. The Venetiās in this Peloponesus had great possessions, and had made vp the wall againe toward the Sea side, neare to the streites of Corinth before mentioned, where for the more speede of the worke, they had 30. thousand workemen to the building thereof, which when it came to the knowledge of the Turke, he brast into the countrey of Peloponesus wyth an army of 80. thousand, and first wasting the regions of the Coroneans, and Methoneans, and making a greate slaughter of the Venetians, in short time he brought the whole dominiō of Peloponesus vnder his yoke & tribute.

Long it is and more lamentable to recite all the victories of this Mahumete gotten against the Christiās both by land & sea: who after he had ouercome the Ile Lesbos aboue mentioned, and had cruelly slaine Nicolaus Catalusius the Prince thereof, turning his army towarde the sea of Pontus Euxinus,* got the countrey of Capha from the Genuans. Before was declared how truce was taken betweene Georgius Scanderbeius, and the Turke for ten yeares: which truce being expired, Mahumete leaueth no time vnspēt, no diligence vnsought, but maketh all his power to Epyrus & Albania, which he after long fatigation of siege, at length ouercame and subdued. In y^e which tract also he wanne from the Venetians, Scodra, Lysson and Dinastrum. Notwithstanding, when Scanderbeius the valiant Captaine had done against the Turke what in mans strength did lie, yet being ouermatched with power and multitude, seeing no possibilitie to make his partie good,* was forced to depart his countrey as an exile, and went to Italy, & there being sent for by y^e Popes letters, openly declared not to be possible otherwise to resist y^e furious rage of the barbarous Turkes by the strength of any one king or prince, vnlesse all Europe, with one cōsent shuld ioine their power & force together. And thus Georgius Scanderbeius, a man of puissant courage, being driuen out of his countrey, continued his age in exile. Whose courage & vehemency is reported to haue bin such, that in fighting against y^e barbarous enemie, for very egernes of spirit,* his blood was seene to burst out of his lippes. It is testified also of him, that being prouoked, he neither denied to fight, and in his fighting, neuer turned his backe, neyther yet was euer wounded, but onely once with a lyght shaft in his foote, neither euer set against the Turke wyth moe then 6000. horsemen,* and 3000. footemen: who is said with his owne hand to haue slaine aboue 2000. Turkes, whome with such violence he did strike, that many of thē he did cleane asunder from the head to the middle.

Neither yet was the vnsatiable greedines of thys Turkish helbound with all this satisfied, but still he conceiued greater things in his minde, thynking to conquere the whole world, and so passing forward towards Europe, subdued all Illiria, slaieng Stephanus the King of Bosna,* about the yeare of our Lord 1463. But afterwarde Mathias Coruinus, the sonne of Huniades afore mentioned, recouered againe the said kingdome of Bosna, with many other Cities neare vnto Croacia and Dalmatia, and moreouer repulsed Mahumete the Turke in his second siege of Iaiza, taking his tents and munitions lefte behinde him.

Moreouer, the sayd Mahumete passing vnto Walachia, set vpon Dracula the Prince thereof, by which Dracula, although he had no great power of souldiours, yet he so inclosed & enuironed y^e Turke, that he had almost lost his whole army, of whom a great part notwithstanding was destroyed, and many of his ensignes taken. Into Dalmatia was sent two Captaines of the Turke, who fighting against the prouinces of y^e Venetians,* made great spoyle and waste about y^e regions of Stiria & Carinthia: where also the Venetian power was discomfited, & Hieronimus Nouell their Captaine slaine. At length truce was taken betweene y^e Turke & the Venetians, vpon this conditiō, that Scodra, Tenarus, & Lemnus should be yeilded vnto him, and that they shoulde pay to him yearly 8. thousand duckets for the free passage of their Marchants.

After this peace concluded with the Venetians, Mahumete himselfe saileth ouer into Asia, sending two of his great captaines abroad to sundry places: of whom, Mesithes was sent against y^e Rhodes w^t a mighty nauie. The other called Acomates Bassa was sent into Italy to take Rome and all the West Empire.* Concerning the viage of which two Captaines, this was the euent, that Mesithes after his great trauaile and bloudy siege against y^e Rhodians, was faine to retire at length with great shame and losse. The other Captaine Acomates (as is said) was sent into Italy, with a nauie of a hundreth Ships, and fifteene thousand men,* who by the way in his sailing got Leucadia (which now they call S. Maure) Cephalenia, and Zacynthus, and sayling by Faelona, arriued in Apulia, and so passing along by the sea side, spoiled and wasted diuers parts by the coast, till at length he came to Hidruntum, a City of Calabria in Italy, which after long siege he ouercame and subdued, and brought such a terroure into all Italy, that the Pope forgetting all other things, yet mindfull of himselfe, with all haste fled out of Rome. After the Citie of Hydruntum was taken, and the Turkes placed in the same, which was the yeare of our Lord 1481. Mathias Coruinus Huniades son was sent for by the Italians, to set vpon the said Citie: vnto the rescue whereof, when Acomates was about to make his returne with 25. thousand Turkes, in the meane time newes came y^t Mahumete the great Turke was dead, by reason wherof the siege brake vp, and y^e Citie was deliuered to the Italians againe,* and so was Italy deliuered at that time out of that present perill and daūger. This Mahumete wanne from the Christians 200. Cities, and twelue kingdomes, and two Empires, which he ioined both together. He died in the yeare abouesayd, anno. 1481.

Baiazetes second, the 10. after Ottomannus.

MAhumetes aforesaid had three sonnes, of the which, Mustapha the eldest, through voluptuousnes & carnall iust, died before his father. The other two were Baiazetes and Demes, otherwise called Zizimus. Aboute whom, great cōtrouersie arose amongst the Turks which of them should succede in their fathers kingdome: For neither of them was present at Constantinople whē Mahumetes died, Baiazetes being in Cappadocia, & Demes in Lycaonia, wherfore when great disscution was amōg the nobles for the succession, and great strife & bloudshead for the matter, the Ianizarites, which were the Turkes garde, did proclaime Baiazetes Emperour: others in the absence of Baiazetes the father, did choose Corcuthus his sonne. Baiazetes the father cōming at length from Cappadocia, partly through yelding, partly by corrupting w^t money,* got y^e wils of the Ianizarites, & was made Emperour. Demes the other brother being in Lycaonia more neare, although he made no lesse speede in his cōming, yet was preuented of Baiazetes, and excluded out of Cōstantinople. Wherefore he being put backe from all hope of his kingdome, incited by some of his frends, moued warre against his brother,* who being ouercome in three batailles by Acomates Baiazetes Captain, who had got Hydruntum before, did flie to the greate Maister of the Rhodes, leauing in a place called Carrae, his mother, and two yong children, whom Baiazetes slue.

This Demes being wyth the maister of the Rhodes, was desired first of Pope Innocent the 4. then of Ludouicus the 2. Frenche king, but especially of Mathias Coruinus, king of Hungarie, entending by him to obtaine great victory against Baiazetes. But in conclusion the Knights of the Rhodes sent him to the B. of Rome,* where he being kept, and afterwarde sent to Charles the 8. French king, for an hostage of Pope Alexander the 6. was poysoned by the way of Terracina, by the sayde Pope Alexander, as is before declared. After whose death Baiazetes, to require the foresayde Acomates for his good seruice,* put hym to the halter, partly misdoubting his power, partly for lucre sake to haue his treasure: Whose death redounded to the great profit of the christians, for somuch as he was euer an vtter enemy to the religion and name of Christ.

Baiazetes thus being confirmed in his tyrannie, made hys first expedition against Walachia,* where hee subdued two great fortes, one called Lithostomus, the other called Moncastrum. From thence he remooued hys power, taking his voiage into Asia, thinking to be reuenged of the Sultane of Egypt, which had succoured and entertayned before hys brother Demes against hym, wh•re he lost two great batailles, the one fought at Adena, the other at Tarsus: but specially at the fielde at Tarsus the armye of the Turke tooke such a wound, that of a 100. M. brought into the fielde, scarce the thirde part remained vnslayne. But as touching the Rhodians, although they were succourers of Demes aforesayde, yet Baiazetes (whether for feare, or for subtilty) abstained to prouoke them with warre, but rather entred with them the league of peace, requiring the master of the Rhodes to kepe hys brother safe vnder his custody, promising for his yerely salary, to be paid vnto him euery yere in the moneth of August. 45000. duckets,

Thus Baiezetes being ouerthrown and terrified with euill lucke fighting against the Sultane of Egypt, remooued from Asia, and directed his army into Europe, where he got Dyrrachium neare vnto Velona,* & had a great victory ouer the Christian armye in the countrey of Croatia, wher the Illyrians, Pannonians and Croatians ioyning their power together, encountred with the Turke and lost the field, about the yeare of our Lord. 1493.

From thence the Turke leading his armye against the Venetians, had with them diuers and doubtfull conflicts, where the Turke sometimes was put to the woorse, and sometimes againe preuailing, out of Iadra and diuers other cities about Dalmatia, caried away great multitudes of Christians into captiuitie, whych was about the yere of our Lord. 1498.

Two yeares after thys, whych was the yeare of oure Lorde,* 1500. Baiazetes with 150. M. armed men, entred into Peloponesus, whych although Mahumete had expugned before, yet the Venetians had defended Methone, otherwise called Modon, all this while against the Turks. Which Methone the Turke besieged wyth three armies, hauing about the wals 500. great brasen Canons, wherof 22. were most violent and hurtfull, wherewith he battered the City both day and night: but the Citizens, which were wythin the Citie, committing themselues to God, defended their Citie as well as they could, rather chusing to dye then to yeelde vnto the Turkes tyrannie. But the Turcke preuailing, and they not able to wythstande the siege, the Christians conuented together into a certaine house prepared for the purpose, bothe menne, women, and children, where they setting the house on fire, gaue themselues rather to be burned, then to come into the tyrauntes handes, Certaine women also wyth their children, cast themselues headlong into the sea, by that meanes to auoid the turkishe captiuitie.* Some wryters there be which affirme that the Methonians, seeing 5. great shyps of the Venetians comming with men and vitailles towarde them, issued downe from the walles to the sea side to receiue them, which were all taken captiues, being aboue the number of a thousand: which al being tied with long ropes, were brought before the tyraunt, and in his sight were cruelly slaine, except certaine Nobles whom Cherseugles, sonne in lawe to Baiazetes, got to be pardoned, amongst whome was Andreas Britto.* The Citie of Coron, & also Pilus Cities in Grece being terrified with the example of the Methonians, yeelded themselues to the power of the turks. Crisseum otherwise called Caput Sancti Galli, was expugned by Cherscogles, by force of gunnes.

These thynges thus atchieues, although Baiazetes went away victor vnto Constantinople, yet notwithstanding the Venetians, through the helpe of the kynges of Fraunce and Spayne, had wonne from the Turke Chephalania an Ilande very commodious for theyr trafficke: Also had gotten other two Ilandes,* Leucas and Nericus otherwise called Sancta Maura, slaying al the garrison of the Turkes. But afterwarde peace being taken betweene the Venetians and the Turckes, by the counsaile of Andreas Gitto aforesayde, the Turkes so agreed, that Leucas and Nericus the Ilandes abouesayde, should be rendred vnto the Turke, and the Venetians should keepe stil the possession of Chephalania.

Vnto this league the Turke did the rather condescend,* for that hee had to maintaine warre agaynst Ismaell Sophus in Asia, king of Persia: Which Sophus was stirred vp by Gods prouidence to warre w^t thys Baiazetes, wher by the Christian Churches in Europe myght haue some breathing time, and freedome from the Turkes cruell tyranny & bloudshed.* This Sophus was a valiant Turke, who with great power & victories had ouerrunne a great compasse of the East partes of Asia: then passing from Assiria into Media, and returning againe into Arinenia, hee made warre against the Albanians, Hiberians, and Scythians, and from thence comming vnto Asia Minor, encountred with Corcuthus Baiazetes sonne,* and afterward cōming to Bithynia, sought with Caragius Bassa, Baiazetes Captaine, whome he ouercame and put to flight, and afterward tooke him aliue and his wise prisonners. Afterward he was encountered by Halibassa an other captaine of the Turkes, whome Techelles one of the sayd Sophus captaines meeting in the plaine of Galatia did withstand, and so by the way slue Caragius the Captain,* and hanged hym vppon a poale in the sight of Halibassa, which Halibassa shortly after was slaine in warre, and hys army scattered and put to flight.

Thus through the admirable example of Gods iustice and prouidence, were these turks kept occupied, & so came it to passe, y^t these Barbarians being blasphemous against the sonne of God, shoulde thus horribly run one to the destruction of an other,* being worthely punished w^t mutuall slaughter and bloudshed for theyr impiety and blasphemy against Christ and his religion, wherby in the meane time some rest was geuen to the Christians.

Baiazetes partly by these victories discouraged, partly diseased and languishing of the goute, and partly also broken with age, finding himselfe vnweldy to the regiment of that tumultuous kingdome, began to haue talke with his nobles about the chusing of one to succede him. The occasion whereof ministred much matter of inward warres amongst the Turkes. This Baiazetes had in all 6. sonnes, wherof three died before him, and three yet were left aliuie, to witte, Acomates, Corcuthus and Zilymus, Baiazetes himselfe had moste minde to Acomates, but the chieftest of his nobles did fauor rather Zelymus: who through theyr traiterous incitation prouoked him to stirre warre against hys father: and notwythstanding that he was ouercome in war, yet through intercession he was reconciled agayne to his father,* and afterwarde proclaimed againe Emperor against his fathers will, through the helpe & fauour of the souldiours, entring the first beginning of hys kingdome, in the murdering of hys owne father. The storye whereof in some authors is thus declared.

After that the Ianizarites had perswaded wyth Baiazetes for that he himselfe was vnweldy,* therefore he should do well to constitute some successour, and that he had assigned Acomates to succede him, y^e Ianizarites being offended with the sayd Acomates, because he would not enlarge their stipends and bribe them, compassing about the kings pallace wyth their priuy swordes whych they hadde vnder theyr garments, wyth a mighty crie, required Zelymus to be appointed for their Emperor. Vnto whom when Baiazetes had answered that he had assigned Acomates, they refused him because he was fatte, grosse, and vnable thereunto: but needes would haue Zelymus, which was stoute and warlike, to be made Emperour: and withall drew out their swords, crying Zelymus, Zelymus. Thē Baiazetes geuing place to their fury,* shewed himselfe content to geue them Zelymus: whom the Iaitizarites receiuing, brought him into the pallace: vnto whom Baiazetes his father geuing place, willed him not to be so hasty & furious in hys doings, but to be modest and take heede what hee dyd, and not to follow hys fury, but to geue place vnto time, whych reuealeth all thinges, and thinke hymselfe to be a man subiect to dangers and icoperdies as other men are: and thus speaking, he resigned hys Imperiall throne and seate vnto him, & went away all heauy, entring into a certaine order of their religion. Wherupon folowed great exclamatiōs of the people saluting Zelymus as Emperor. Who then taking the rule vpō him, begā w^t great cruelty to gouern, destroying many of his nobles, such as had stood against him Page 746 some with poyson, some by other cruel meanes, & aduauncing his owne side with great honors and promotions.

Not long after that Zelymus was thus settled in hys kingdome, Baiazetes his father entending to see & prooue howe he behaued himselfe in his gouernment, first entred into the treasure house, where he found all his riches to be scattered and gone. Afterwarde he came into hys armorie, where all the spoyles gotten by warre were likewise wasted: then entring into the Iewel house, where al his plate and gifts sent from Kings and Princes were kept, whych likewise were dispersed & geuen away. At length he came into the stable, where also he seeing his principall horses to be lacking,* sighing wyth himselfe, and crying vengeance vpon him, he prepared himself with the residue of the treasure which was remaining, to saile ouer into Natolia vnto his eldest sonne, and passing by an Orchard neare to the sea side, where he had appoynted to take ship, in the meane time whilst the shippes were in furnishing he sate downe vnder a tree, & began to curse his sonne, and to axe vengeance vpon him, for that he had so despised his father & was become so impious a wretch.

Zelymus vnderstāding of his fathers departure, came into the orchard where his father was, seeming to be very heauy, and much lamēting that hys father would so priuely depart and goe away,* seeing that hee desired not the gouernement of the Empire, but was contented onely wyth the title thereof. O father (sayd he) do not thus priuely depart away: doe not procure this shame to your sonne, who so tēderly loueth you. Let me haue but the name only: and be you the Emperor in dede. The ende of your natural life most paciently I shal expect, which I pray God may long cōtinue. And thus vsing many faire & flattering words to his father, he cōmanded a banket w^t many deinty iunkets, to be brought vnto him, but tempered and infected w^t poyson. Which,* as soone as Baiazetes had begon to tast of, and felt the strēgth of the poyson working in his body, he toke his last farewell of his sonne, and going out of the citie accompanied with a great retinue of mē, yelling and crying out in the streetes, in the middle of his iourney fell downe and miserably died, in the yeare of our Lorde, 1512. Heere mayest thou see, good Reader, a cursed broode of thys Turkish generation, where y^t father dieth in cursing the sonne, and the sonne raigneth by poysoning his father.

Zelymus the 11. after Ottomannus.

After y^t thys wretched Zelymus had exercised hys barbarous cruelty vpon hys father, w^t like impietie he seeketh the destruction of hys brethren and their children, first beginning his murther wyth the fiue children hys Nephewes, which were the sonnes of hys 3. brethren before departed. Which done, then remained his other 2. brethren yet aliue, Acomates and Corchutus wyth theyr chyldren likewise to be destroyed. Of whome the one had 3. sonnes, whom the father sent to Zelymus his brother & their vnclē, with faire and gentle wordes to entreat him to be good vnto their father, offering to him their duety and seruice in all things, honoring him also as Emperor. But cruel Zelymus commaunded forthwith his saide Nephewes to be strangled.* The father hearing of the cruell murther of hys sonnes, leauing house and home, went and hid hymselfe in mountaines, where he liued for a space with hearbes and wilde honie, but being bewrayed by one of hys men, was brought to Zelymus, and so was strangled.

Christophorus Richerius, wryting of these matters, seemeth some thing to differ from other storyes, and sayeth that Zelymus, after the death of hys brother Corchutus, came to Bursia, where hee, vnder the colour of making a great triumph,* ordeined a feast for his frends and kinsfolk, Wherunto were called especially his nephewes: who then at the end of the feast calling his nephewes aside (as vnder the pretēce of conferring with them secretly about hys necessary affaires) committed them to hys seruantes to be strangled and put to death. All this while Acomates hys brother, through the help & instruction of his mother, was kept out of the tyrants hands, till at length, after great labor and search made how to get him, certain forged letters were cast abroad, wherin was cōteined that Acomates, to reuenge the great impiety & subdue the tirāny of Zelimus his brother, should shew himself abroad. Which if he wold do, he should find frends enough to take his part. Acomates circumuented with these subtill traines, partly for hope of reuengement,* partly for desire of y^t Empire, shewed him selfe abroad with such power and strength as he had: who being set vpon incontinent by Zelymus hys brother, was ouercome in battaile, and falling from hys horse, beyng a man corpulent and grosse, and his horse falling vpon him, was so ouerpressed and slaine.

Touching the death of thys Acomates, Munsterus somewhat differing from this narration, addeth moreouer, and sayeth, that hee was not killed with the fall from hys horse, but sitting all dismayed vpon a stone, and seeing no other remeady but death, desired the Captaine, taking hys rings from his fingers, to deliuer the same to his brother, desiring hym that he might not be put to any extreme cruelty of death, but that hee gently would suffer him to be let bloud in the hath,* and so to die. But Zelymus being not ignoraunt of thys, suborneth priuy tormenters, who binding his hands behinde him, w^t their feete cast hym downe vpon the ground, and so twixing his necke with a coarde, did strangle him. This Acomates had two sonnes, who hearing of the death of their father, did flie for succour, the one to Sophus in Persia, and the other to the Sultane in Egypt.

By the meanes whereof, new occasion of warre grew vnto Zelymus, whereby hee was kept in Asia at home, to fight againste the Persians & Egyptians: so that throughe the Lordes prouidence, Christendom by that meanes was deliuered from great daunger and perill of the Turkes tirannie: For otherwise, the Turke was wholly mineded, wyth all his force and puissance, to inuade the Christians, being in doubt whether first to beginne wyth Rhodes,* or whether to assault Pannoma, or els to set vpon Italy, being then at great discorde within it selfe: but thys cause occupied the Turks mind otherwise, and kept him at home. Suche was then the prouidence of the Lorde for the safegard of hys people.

Wherefore, for somuch as the affaires and doings of this Turke were spent for the most part in the Turkish & heathenish countreys: it shal not be greatly necessary to trouble our christian stories therw^t, but onely shal suffice to contracte them in a brieft summe, declaring superficially what vnquietnes was amongst them there, which coulde neuer be quiet, but euer working some mischief either abroade, or at home.* Amurathes the Turkes nephewe aforesaide, after he had obtained aide of Sophus the king of the Persians, first inuaded Cappadocia: not long after whome folowed Ismael, Sophus the Persian king.

By reason whereof a great battell was fought betwixt the Persians and Zelymus in the fieldes of Armenia maior. In the which battaile Ismael Sophus the Persian Kyng was hurt on the shoulder with a pellet, and so being caryed out of the field, left the victory to Zelymus: who all be it had an army of 150. M. men, yet he in the same fielde lost about 30000. of hys Turkes. Which field was fought in the yere of our Lorde. 1514. Zelymus after thys victorie went to Tauricia the imperiall Citie of the Persians, whiche he by yelding subdued.

In thys meane time it happened that one Aladulus a king in Armenia the greater,* was also a helper to Ismael against the Turk, wherupon Zelymus the Turke taking great indignation, the next yere folowing, leauing y^e Persians, fought against the sayd Aladulus, & in the end ouercame him, and afterward being found in a caue in a woode, was taken out and brought to Zelymus and so beheaded: whose hed being first caried about Asia for a triumph, was afterward sent to the Senate of Uenice for a terrour vnto them. The eldest sonne of Aladulus scaping the handes of his pursuers, fled into Egypt. This battaile thus fought and ended, Zelymus after he had deuided the kingdome of Aladulus into three prouinces, went to Lycaonia, & from thence to Europe, there to defend the Citie of Samandria, against the Christians in Hungary.* But the Hungarians being sone repressed by Iuno Bassa the Turkes captaine, great preparation began to be made by the Turks against the confines of Seruia bordering vpō Hungary: The terrour whereof stirred vp Maximilian the Emperour, and Ladislaus king of Hungarie, and Sigismundus Kyng of Polonie,* to consult together, and conioyne their power for defence of Christendome. But through new incumberances incident, the turke leauing Europe, made haste againe into Asia, to renue againe his warres against the Persians, who had made a vow not to geue ouer that warre before Ismael was ouerthrowne.

But before he entred that warre, first he sent hys messengers to the Sultane of Egypte, requiring hym not to entermedle in that warre, for this sultane before had promised to assist the Persians against the Turke.* The name of the Sultane which reigned then in Egypt, was Campson, set vp by the Mamaluci. These Mamaluci were a certain order amongst the Egyptians, much like to the Ianizarites about the Turke, being the childrē of christen men, and after denyeng Christ, were the chefest doers in y^e Sultanes court, and being growne into a great multitude, did Page 747 degenerat into a turkish barbarity, or rather became wors then Turkes. This Campson vnto the messengers of the Turke gaue this aunswere againe, that vnlesse he would leaue of his warre against Ismael, and restore the sonne of Aladulus, otherwise he would not lay downe his armor.

Zelymus being incensed not a little wyth this insolent aunswere of the Sultane, leauing all other warres aside, with great celeritie aduanced hys power against the Sultane. Which Sultan partly through the falshode of his cap'taine Caierbeius,* partly by the sodeinnesse of the Turkes comming, not farre from the cite of Damascus encoūtrede with the turke, and there ouerthrowne from his horse, being a fatte and grose body, and falling vnder his horse, and his horse also falling vpon him,* was quashed in peces and so died, which was the yere of our Lord. 1516.

Mamalucie, of whome more then a M. in thys battaile were slaine, flyeng from thence to Memphis, set vp Tomoumbeius in stede of Campson:* whose captaine Gazelles was ouercome at the City of Gaza, & he afterward himselfe driuen out of Memphis, where a great part of the Mamaluci were destroyed. Then Tomoumbeius flying ouer the floud Nilus, renued his army agayne: but in the ende was discomfited and chased into a marish, where hee was found standing in the water vp to the chinne, and so being brought to Zelymus, was put to the rack and great tormentes, to make him confesse where Campsons treasures were. But when he would not declare, he was caryed about the Towne with a halter about his necke, & hanged vp vpō a hie gibber for a spectacle to all Egypt:* which was the yere of our Lorde. 1517. And thus were the two Sultanes in Egypt destroyed with the Mamaluci, whych there had borne the rule in Egypt the space of 243. yeares. The progenie of the whych Mamaluci remaining of the warres,* the Turke commaunded in pryson gates of Alexandria to be cut in peces. Zelymus frō thence, triumphing departed to Constantinople, entending to spend the rest of his time in persecuting the Christians: But in that meane space he was stroken with a cankerd sore rotting inward, and died after hee had reigned 7. yeares like a beast, in the yere of our Lord. 1520.

The raigne of this Turke was but short in number of yeres: but in number of his murthers and cruel bloudshed it might seme exceeding long: which liued more like a beast then a mā, for he neuer spared any of hys frends or kinred. His father first he poysoned, his brethren and al his cosins he quelled, leauing none of all his kinred aliue. Moreouer his chief and principal captaines for smal occasions he put to death,* as Mustapha, Calogere, Chendeme, Bostāg hys sonne in law, and Iunobassa.

It is said moreouer that he entended the poysoning of his owne sonne Solyman, sending vnto him a shirt infected w^t poison, because he seemed something freely to speake against y^e cruel demeanor of his father: But by the meanes of hys mother, the gifte being suspected, was geuen to an other which was his Chamberlaine, who putting on the shirt, was stricken with the poyson therof, and therewith all died.

As touching thys Turke Zelymus, by the way heere may be noted how y^e secret prouidēce of the Lord kept hym occupied w^t hys Turkish warres at home, while that the reformation of christian religion here in Europe the same time begō by Martin Luther,* might the more quietly take some roring without disturbance or interruption. For so it appeareth by the computation of time, that in the dayes of this Zelymus, Martin Luther first began to write against the Popes indulgences, which was in the yeare of oure Lord. 1516.

Solymannus the 12. after Ottomannus.

Solymannus the onely sonne of Zelymus succeded after hys fathers death, who in the first beginning seemed to some to be simple and shepish, and not mete for the turkish gouernmēt. Wherefore certain of his nobles cōsulting how to depose him, entended to set vp an other Emperour. In which conspiracy, especially are named Caierbeius & Gazelles. This Caierbeius was he y^t betraied before Campson the Sultane of Egypt to Zelymus, as is aforesayde: who nowe also being in consultation w^t Gazelles & other about this matter, detected thē also vnto Solyman. Wherefore the sayd Gazelles and his fellowes being thus detected, were put to death by Solyman, declaring thereby that he was not so shepish as he was thought of them to be, & as also by his acts afterward did more appeare.

Solymannus after thys execution done vpon the conspiratours, taking his voiage into Europe,* first besieged Belgradum: which being a Citye in Hungarie, was the strongest forte of all the Romaine Empire, and the chiefe defence at that time, of al christendom, which also being assaulted before time by Amurathes the 2. was valiantly defended by Ioannes Huniades as is aboue specified.* But here nowe lacked suche a one as Huniades was: For the kingdome of Hungary at that time, was vnder y^r gouernment of Ludouicus a yong king, vnexpert and of a simple wit. Whom other Princes, & specially the couetous church men did so pil and pol, that they left hym nothing but only the bare name and title of his kingdom: Whereby he being vnfurnished both of men and mony, was vnable to match with such an enemye.

An other vauntage also the Turkes had in besieging of Belgrade:* For the Christian princes at that time were in ciuill dissention and variance amongst themselues: and the Pope with his Churchmen also were so busye in suppressing of Luther, and of the Gospell then newly springing, that they minded nothing els, except it were to maintaine the welth of their own bellies. Which pope if he had set his care (as his duety was) so mucche in stirring vp Princes against the common enemy, as he was bent to deface y^r gospel, & to persecute the true professors therof: soone might he haue brought to passe, not only that Belgrade might haue bene defended against the Turk, but also y^r to be recouered againe which was lost before: and moreouer myght haue stopped the great dangers and perils which nowe are like to fall vpon the religion and church of Christ: whyche the Lord of his great mercy auert and turne away.

Certes what so euer the Pope then did,* this had bene his duty, setting al other things apart, to haue had an earnest compassiō of so many miserable & lost captiues, which were fallen from their faith & religion, vnto the misery and slauery of the Turke, & thraldome of the deuil, and to haue sought all means possible to haue reduced thē, as lost shepe into the fold againe: which then might sone haue ben done if prelates & princes ioyning together in christian concord, had loued so well the publike glory of Christ and soules of Christians, as they tendered their owne priuate, worldly, & friuolous quarels.* And admit that the Pope had conceiued neuer so much malice against Luther, hys quarell also being good: yet the publike church standing in such danger, as it then did by the inuasion of the Turke, reason woulde nature led, religion taught, time required that a good Prelate forgetting lighter matters, shuld rather haue laid hys shoulder to the excluding of so great a dāger, as then was imminent both to himselfe, and the vniuersall Church of Christ: But now his quarell being vniust, and the cause of Luther being moste iust and godly, what is to be sayde or thought of suche a Prelate, who for bearyng the Turke, whome in a time so daungerous, hee ought chiefly to haue resisted, persecuted the trueth, whych hee shoulde specially haue mainteined? But Christ for his mercy stande for hys Church, and stirre vp zealous Princes and Prelates, if not to recouer that is lost, yet at least to retaine that little which is left.

Solyman therefore taking hys occasion, and vsing the commoditie of time, while our princes were thus at variance betwixt themselues, wythout any resistance or interruption, brought his army vnto Belgrade, in y^e yere of our Lorde.* 1521. Which Citye being but slenderly defenced, the Turke through his vnderminers, guns and other engins of warre, without great difficultie, & with little losse of hys souldiours, soone subdued and ouercame.

After thys victorie, Solyman resting himselfe a whole yere, and casting in his mynde howe to make all sure behinde him, for feare of ennemies to come vppon his backe, thought it expedient for his purpose if he might obtain the Ilande of Rhodes: for that onely remained yet Christian betwixt him and Asia: wherfore the next yere following, he brought hys army of 450. ships, and 300. M. men to the besieging thereof. This Rhodes was a mighty and strong Iland,* w^tin the sea called Mare mediterraneum. The inhabitants wherof at y^e first did manfully resist y^e turke, sparyng no labor nor paines for the defence of thēselues & of al christendome: But afterward being brought to extremity, and pinched w^t penury, seing also no aid to come from y^e christians: somewhat began to languish in thēselues. The turkes in the meane time casting vp two great mountaines wyth strength of hand, 2. miles of frō the citye, like rolling trenches caried them before thē neare vnto the city, in the tops wherof they plāted their ordinance & artillery, to batter the city. The maister of the knightes of the Rhodes was then one Philippus Villadamus a Frenchman, in whome no diligence was lacking y^t appertained to the defence of the city. The Rhodians likewise so valiantly behaued themselues vpon the walles, that w^t their shot all the ditches about the city, were filled w^t the carcasses of dead Turkes.

Besides thys, suche a disease of the bloody flixe rained Page 748 in the Turkes campe, that 30. M. of them died thereof: and yet for all thys, Solyman woulde not cease from hys siege begonne: who at length by vnderminers casting downe the vamares and vttermost partes of the citie, wan groūd still more and more vpon the Rhodians, and with mortary pieces so battered the houses, y^t there was no free place almost standing in all the Citie. And thus continued the siege for the space of fiue or sixe monethes, and yet all thys while came no help vnto them from the christians. Wherefore they being out of all hope, thorough the aduise of Ualladamus, yelded themselues vnto the Turke vppon condition that hee woulde spare them wyth life and goodes, which conuention the Turke keppe wyth them faithfully and truely.

Thus Solyman with his great glory and vtter shame to all christian princes,* and also ruine of all Christendome, got the noble Ile of Rhodes, although not wythout great losse and detriment of hys army: in so much that at one assault 20. thousande Turkes about the walles, were slayne with fire, sword, stones, and other engines. Whereby it may be coniectured what these Rhodians might or would haue done,* if succor had come to them from other christian princes as they looked for. This city was wonne vpon Christmas day. An. 1522.

Thys conquest of Rhodes obtained, Solyman the 4. yeare after, bringeth backe his army againe into Hungary, where he founde none to resist him but onely Ludouike the yong king: who being accompanied with a smal army, and nothing able to matche wyth the Turke, yet of a hasty rashnes and vaine hope of victory, would needes set vpon him: who if he had staide but a little, had prospered the better. For Ioannes Uainoda being a Capitaine well exercised in Turkish warres before, was not farre off, comming with a sufficient power of able souldiors.* But Paulus the Archbishop Coloss. a Franciscane Frier, a man more bold then wise, with his temerity and rashnes troubled al their doings: For the whole summe of the army of the Hungarians, contained in all but only 24. M. horsmen and footemen, who at length comming vnto the battaile, and being compassed about wyth a great multitude of the Turkes army, were brought into great distres. The Turks twise shorte of their pieces against the Christian army: yet scarce was any Christian touched with the stroke therof: whych was thought to be done of purpose, bicause they were christians whych had the ordering of the gunnes, for then the speciall gunners of the Turkes were Christians,* whome for the same cause they spared. Then the Turkes horsmen comming vpon the backe of the christian armie, compassed them about, and by reason of their multitude, ouercharged their horsemen. Amongst whom was slaine the same tyme the Archb. Frier aforesayd, wyth the Bishops of Strigone and Uaradine & many other nobles besides.* Also the kyng himselfe being destitute of hys necessary aide and succour, was compelled to flie into a marish, where he falling from his horse, being heauy loden with his harneis, was not able to rise againe,* but there miserably perished.

Solyman the Turke marueiled at the foolyshnesse of Ludouike the King, who wyth so small an armye woulde presume to encounter wyth such a great hoste of two hundreth thousande. This battaile in Hungarie was fought, Anno. 1526.

After the deceasse of Ludouicke, Ferdinandus succeded in the kingdome,* being Duke of Austria and king of Hungarie. Then Solyman setting contention betwixt Ioannes Uaiuoda and Ferdinandus for the kingdom of Hungarie, spedde his viage to the Citie of Buda, whych also in short time he made to be yelded vnto hym vpon condition that they should escape with their liues and goodes: whych cōdition some say he kept, and some say he did not. Besides Buda diuers places and munitiōs the sayd Turk,* contrary to his league made before, did spoile and waste, as Varadinum, Quinque Ecclesias, and other fortes and munitions moe, bordering about the coastes of Hungary.

In the yeare of our Lorde 1529. Ferdinandus king of Hungarie aforesaid, recouered diuers holdes gotten of the Turke before, and also warring againste Ioannes Uaiuoda his enemy,* with whom he had variance (as ye heard before) expulsed him out of his kingdom. Wherupon Uaiuoda flying to the Turke, desired his ayde. The Turke glad to take that occasion, wyth great preparatiō addressed himselfe to returne into Hungary, where he recouering againe the Citie of Buda, which Ferdinandus had gotten from him a little before, remooued his armye into Austria, spoyling and destroying by the way all that came to hys handes, shewing many examples of great cruelty & tyranny most lamentable to here and vnderstand. For of some he put out their eies, of some he cutte of their handes, of some their eares and noses,* and of their children he cut of theyr priuy members. The maidens he corrupted, the matroues had their brestes cut of, and such as were with childe, were ript and their childrē cast into the fire. And these examples of horrible and barbarous tyranny, thys wretched Turke perpetrated by the way comming toward Uienna a noble City in Austria, besides the captiues which he tooke by the way, and led into seruitude moste miserable, mounting to the number of 30. thousand.

Among other holdes by the waye as the Turke came, there was a castle called Altenburch strongly by nature situated, and by art defenced,* which castle the Turke entending not to ouerpasse because he woulde make all thynges sure behinde him, began to make hys assault, and lay hys ordinance against it. The warders and kepers of the Castle, so soone as the Turks began to lay siege against them, making no resistance, of a womanly cowardnes sent their messengers to the Turke to yelde themselves,* ready to doe his commaundement, and further him with their vitaille. Amongest whome were three hundreth Bohemians, who were commaunded to followe the hoste, that the Turke by them might learne what strength was in the city of Uienna: also where the king was, and what was to be done for the winning therof.

Of whom when the Turke had vnderstanding howe all things stooode, and how that there was but 20. thousand men in Uienna able to beare armour, and that other cities of Austria would soone yeelde if that were gotten, and that Uienna was vitailed but for 2. monthes, and that the king was of late in Boheme, thus the Turk of all things being certified, hauing no doubt in hys minde of victorie, made speede toward Uienna: and first comming to Neapolis a city but 8. miles distant from Uienna, he required them to yelde themselves:* who notwithstanding withstoode them, and repulsed them valiantly. Then the Turkes assigned a place for the pitching of their tents, whych because it semed some thing too litle for such a great multitude, they tooke in more ground to the compasse of 7. miles circuit. The multitude of his armye, which hee there planted, is accompted of some to extend to 250. M. souldiours. The Turke thus being planted, made daily excourses ouer all the countrey of Austria, specially about the citie of Uienna, wasting and spoyling with great crueltye & murther amongst the poore Christians.

Moreouer, to make al things more sure toward y^e preparation of the siege, scoutes were sent abroade, and bushments were laid about the riuer side of Danubius, to prouide that no aid nor victual should be brought to Uienna.* So it pleased the prouidence of the Lord (who disposeth all things) that 3. daies before the comming of the Turk, Fridericus the Earle Palatine, which was then assigned by y^e Empire to take the charge of Uienna, was come downe by the riuer of Danubius with 14. M. and with a certaine troupe of horsemen well apoynted and picked for the purpose.* After the comming of thys Fridericke, prouision also of victuall was apoynted to followe shortly after, by the sayd riuer of Danubius.

In the meane time, they which had the cariage & trāsporting therof, hearing how the waies were laid, & all the passages 10. miles about Uienna, stopped by the Turkes although they knew y^e city to stand in great nede of vitail, yet seing there was no other remedy, rather then it should come to the ennemies hande, thought it best to sincke theyr boats w^t their cariage, and so they did. Wherby, all be it the christians wanted their reliefe, yet were the Turks disappoynted of their pray & purpose.* The captains whych had the keeping of the City, which were chiefly Fridericus the Earle Palatine, Gulielmus Rogendorffius, and Nicolaus erle of Salme, seing themselues so straightned contrary to their expectation, although they had great causes to be discouraged, yet calling their courage vnto them, they consulted together for the best way to be taken: and seing that the little city Neapolis (aboue mentioned) being 8. miles distaunt from them, so valiauntly withstoode the Turkes, that in one day they sustained 7. greuous assaultes against all the maine force of the Turkish armye: by their example and manfull stāding, being the more animated and encouraged, thought to abide the vttermoste before they woulde geue ouer, and first plucking downe all the suburbs, and buildings wythout the walles, wherby the enemy myght haue any succor,* they willed all the farmers & inhabitantes about the Citye to saue themselues, and to bryng in theyr goods w^tin the walles. Such places as were weake wythin the walles, they made strong. About the towers & munition of the walles, they prouided rampires & bulwarks distant 80. foote one from another, to kepe of the shot: and euery man hadde hys place and standing awarded to hym Page 749 vpon the wal, and his office appoynted what to do: but especially that side of the City which lyeth to the riuier of Danubius, they fortified after the best wise: for that way only now remained for vitail to be transported from the Bohemians vnto them. Wherefore 8. en•ignes were assigned to the keping of the bridge,* and in the plaine, which was lyke an Iland inclosed wythin the riuier, a sufficient garrison of horsmen were placed, lying within the gunshot of the city, to the entent that if any graine or vitail were sent from the Bohemians, they myght prouide y^e same safely to be brought into the Citie.

These things thus being disposed and set in order, L. William Rogendorffe, to assay the strength of the Turks, made diuers rodes out wyth his horsemen, albeit much against y^e mindes of the Austrians: who knowing the maner of the Turkes, thought it better to suffer them, while either wyth time they myght be ouerweried, or for lacke of victuals consumed.* Among many and sondry skirmishes which the Christians had with the Turkes, one especially was to our men vnprosperous: in whych certaine of the horsemen espying a small troupe of the Turkes scattering abroad from theyr company, made out after them, who sodenly & guilefully were inclosed and circumuented by the Turks, before they could recouer the gates of the citie, and so were all taken aliue:* Of whome 3. were sent from the Turkes into the Citye, to declare to the Uiennians what strength they had seene in the campe of their aduersaries, and to sollicite them to yelde their city for feare of punishment which would followe: The residue they reserued to torments and punishment, whom in the sight of the whole army, and of the Christians (whych should tell the same to the Citizens) they caused euery man to be drawne with 4. horses a piece, and so to be dismēbred and pluckt a sonder.

After thys done, the barbarous Turk immediatly sent his Herold to talke wyth the Captaines of the City, whether they would yelde the City vpon honest conditions,* or els would abide the arbitrement of warre. If they would gently submit them selues, they should haue all gentlenes to them shewed: If they would be stubburne, and stand to their defence, he wold also stand to hys siege begon, so that he neither woulde spare man, woman nor childe. To thys the captaines aunswered againe, that they were contented Solyman to stand to his siege begon,* and to do his vttermost, what he would, or what he coulde. As for them, they were at a poynte to defende them selues and their Citie so long as they might: the euent & fall of victory to be doubtfull, and many times so to happen, that they whych begin the warre, are wearied sooner then they which be prouoked: neither againe that they were so vnmindfull eyther of themselues, or of their country, but that they did remember well what they are, and what they be called, named to be Germanes: who vse alwayes first to assay the aduersary, what he is able to doe, and not rashly to committe themselues into their enemies handes.

Solymannus not a little disdaining at thys aunswer, first burning and consuming all the villages,* houses, and places round about the city, infecting also the springs and fountaines whych gaue water into the Citie, and so stopping al passages, that no reliefe should haue way vnto thē, began w^t angry moode to approche more neare to the Citie, with 3. great campes, sending them worde in skorne and contumely, by one of his captiues, that if they stood in nede of helpe of soldiours, he would send vnto them the 300. Bohemians (mentioned a little before) to aid them in theyr defence. To whom the Palatine directed answer again, that they had moe soldiours in the City then they neded. As for the Bohemians which had yelded themselues, he might do wyth them, what he would, for Uienna stooode in no great neede of them.

In the meane time a messenger comming from Ferdinandus, was priuily let in by night into the Citie,* which brought word that they should play the men in keping out the enemy a while: for it would not be long but both Ferdinandus and Carolus his brother, with the strēgth of all Germanie, would be ready to rescue them. At whych message the hearts of the soldiours began somewhat to be cheared, and to contemne the huge multitude of the aduersaries, being so great as they neuer did beholde, nor did euer almoste heare of before. The largenesse of whose army, extended to no lesse in compasse (as is aboue sayde) then of 7. miles round about the Citie walles.

Long it were to recite the whole order of thys terrible siege, with all the partes and circumstances therof. Briefly to touch so much as shal suffice for this history, with fewer words then were stripes geuen at the siege thereof: thys is to be iudged and confessed: whosoouer beholdeth the nōber and fiercenesse of the Turkes, the absence of the king Ferdinandus, the lacke of prouision and vitaille within the city, the noise of the gunnes, the violence of the shot, the terror of the sight, and yet no succour sent vnto them: that the custody of that city was no mans doing, but the arme only of the Lord God of hostes, according to the true saying of the Psalme: Unlesse the Lorde doe keepe the Citie, the watchmen watch in vaine, which watch to saue it: Unles the Lord doe build the house, the builder striueth in vayne, whych taketh vpon hym to builde it. Experience whereof in keping thys citie may well appeare.

First Solymannus bending hys shotte and ordinance against the City, beate downe to the ground the vāmures with all the vttermost suburbs of the city, and that in suche a short moment of time, that the hearts of the Uiennians a little before refreshed, were now as much appaled agayne with feare, misdoubting wyth themselues, least the Turke with the same celerity and violence woulde haue preuailed against the inwarde walles, as he did in beating down the outward vāmures. And no doubt the same time the Turk had put the city in great hazard, had not night commynge on, broken of the siege for that day.

In the meane time the Citizens laboured all night in repairing and refreshing the wals, to make all things sure against the next assault.* The next day early in y^e morning, the Turks approching the city againe with a new assault, thinking to scale the walles, were so repulsed & manfully resisted by the Germaines, that vnneth any ditches aboute the walles could be sene for the bodies of the dead Turkes, wherwith they were replenished: so that the Turks were faine to fight standing vpon the bodies of them which wer slaine. By the which calamitie the force of the enemye was not a little abated,*

It happened the same time, that a companie of the Turkes being spied oute of the Citie wandering oute of order, the Captaine Rogendorffius wyth two legions of horsemenne issuing out of the Citie gate called Salmaria, and so passing closely vnder the hilles side, did so set vpon them, that they slew a great number of them: the rest being driuen to take the riuier, whome with stones and shot likewise they destroyed, and so retired backe into the Citie againe. By thys victorie the Captaine Rogendorffius began to be terrible to the Turkes. For in the same skirmish (as after was knowen) was slayne of them so many, that of 5000. and 300. horsemen and footemen, scarce 140. escaped aliue.

Solyman disdayning at this repulse,* thought to proue an other way, & so bringing his power toward y^e gate called y^e kings gate, there making his trenches & bulwarkes, plāted his ordināce, w^t the violence wherof y^e walles were so battered & shaken, that no man was able there to stand. Wherefore the Turke seeing 2. great breaches made in the wal cōmaunded his souldiors couertly in the darck smoke of gunnepowder to prease into the City. The like also was done at y^e scottish to wer, whereby y^e city was inuaded in 2. sundry places at one time. The Uiēnians at y^e first, freshly began to withstand thē, new souldiors still cōming in the place of them that were slaine and hurt: and so this assault continuing more thē 6. houres together, our mē beganne at length to languish & faint, not onely in strength but also in courage: wherby the Citie had bene in great daunger of loosing, had not y^e two foresaid Capitaines Rogendorffius in the one place, and the Earle of Salme in the other place, manfully encouraged the souldiors to abide y^e brunt, and to beare out a while the violence of the Turkes, promising that immediately they should haue ayde from Ferdinandus.

In the meane time the Turkes came so thicke for gredines of the victory, scaling, climbing, and fighting vpō the walles, that had it not bene for the prease and throng of the great multitude of the Turkes comming so thicke that one of them could not fight for an other,* Uienna that same day had bene taken and vtterly lost: But by the pollicy of y^e cap^ttaines geuing a signe within the city, as though new souldiors were called for, our men began to be encouraged, & the Turkes hartes to be discomfited.

When Solymannus saw his army the second time, repulsed, he began to attempt a new way, purposing by vndermining to ouerthrow the city: in the which work specially he vsed the helpe of the Illyrians, of whome he had a great number in his campe, expert in that kinde of feare. These Illyrians beginning to breake the earth at the gate Carinthia and comming neare to the foundations of the Tower,* which they by strength of hand attēpted to break, could not worke so closely vnder the groūd, but they were perceiued by certayne men aboue, which were skilfull & expert in y^t kind of matter: who cōtrariwise vndermining against thē, & filling their trēches as they wēt, w^t gūpowder, Page 750 conueyed their traine, that when fire should be set vnto it, the violence thereof should brast out by the trenches of the enemies: which done, sodenly the ground beneath made a great shaking, so that the tower did cleane asunder, and all the vnderminers of the Turks woorking in their trēches, were smothered and destroyed, which came to the number (as it was supposed afterwarde) of 8000. persones: in so much that yet till thys day a great number of deade mens skuls are found in the ground.

*When Solyman saw y^t this way also would not serue and had priuy intelligence that the walles about the gates of Stubarium were negligently kept, and that hee might haue there more easy entrance: secretly he conueyeth about 10. garrisons of fresh soldiours, in such sort as the townes men should not perceiue them: who came so sodenly vpon them, that they had filled the ditches, and were vpon y^e top of the fortresses and munitions, before that our men were aware of them, or coude make themselues ready to resist them. For although there was no lacke of soldiours wythin the Citie, yet for somuch as the whole brunt of the siege did lye, specially at the 2. gates aforesaide, from whence the soldiours which were there warding, could not be wel remooued, for a shifte the rescuers (which wythin the Citie were ready for all sodaine aduentures) were sent to the walles: by whose comming, those fewe whych kept the enemies of before, * being sore hurted and woūded, were succoured and sent to surgery: and thus the sayed assault continued terrible and doubtfull vntill (the darcke night commyng vpon them) they could not wel know the one from the other. In thys vickering were counted of the Turkes to be slayne, more then 5000.

Then the Captaine Rogendorffius commendynge the valiant standing of his souldiours, misdoubting with him selfe (as it happened in dede) that the Turks would not so geue ouer, but would set vpon him the next day w^t a fresh assault, prouiding wyth all diligence for the purpose, made vp the breaches of the walles, & prepared all things necessary for resistance: The next morning following, whych was some thing darke and mistie, * the Turkes thinking to preuent our men with their sodain comming, began again busily to bicker vpon the toppe of the walles.

It would require a longe tractation heere to describe the great distres and danger that the city, those 3. daies following, was in. During all the whych time, there was no rest, no intermission, nor diligēce lacking, either in the enemies, fighting against the City, either in our men in defending the same. For the Turkes besides the multitude of the great ordinance, wherwith (as wyth a great tempest of gunshot) they neuer ceased, still battering the walles and beating the munitions of the Citie, sent also such heapes & multitudes of the Turkes, to the scaling and climing the walles, that vnneth wyth all the ordinance and shot of the city, either y^e violence of them could be broken, or the number of them diminished: til at last the soldiours of y^e Turkes perceiuing themselues able by no meanes to preuaile, but onely to runne in daunger of life, and to do no good, began to wrangle among themselues, * grudging and repining against their dukes and captaines, imputing y^e whole cause onely to them: that the City was yet vntaken, seeing there was in them neither diligence nor good will lacking: and so ceased the siege for that time.

After this, when Solymannus had purposed in hym selfe, with his last and strongest siege, to try against the city the vttermost that he was able to doe, and had encouraged hys soldiers to prepare thēselues in most forcible wise therunto: the soldyers shewed thē selues much vnwilling to retorne againe from whence they were so often repulsed before: * by reason wherof great commotion begā to rise in the Turkes campe. The rumour wherof when it came to Solymans eares, he sendeth his grand captaine to kepe all the souldiers in order and obedience, or if they would be stubborne,* to compell them whether they would or not, to accomplish his commandement. Who comming to the soldiers, shewed to them the great Turkes message, and to animate & encourage them, declared that the oportunitie of the time presēt was not to be neglected, neither could they now w^tout great shame geue ouer, after so many assaultes attempted: Who if they would sustein but one brunt more, y^e victory were in their owne handes. The townesmen, he saide, were wasted and their victualles spent: and the more to enflame their mindes, he promised them not onely great thanks and reward of their Emperour, but also the whole spoyle of the Citie, in recompence of their trauaile.

But when all thys could not stir vp y^e sturdy stomachs of the tired Turkes, vsing compulsion where perswasion would not serue, he appoynted a number of horsmen to be set at their backs, wherby to enforce them, either to go forwarde, or if they denied, w^t gunnes and speares to destroy them. The Turkes seeing themselues in such a strait, that whether they went or taried,* it was to them like perill, yet woulde they not set forwarde, except the Captaine woulde take the vēture before them. Who warding forward in his array, thus spake vnto his felows, saying: Do you forsake your faith & allegiance, and betray the Emperour of Constantinople vnto the Christians, if you wil: but I will discharge my duety towards the commune wealth and my Emperour, and with that worde auauanced his ensigne, making toward the city walles. Whō when other folowed & stil mo and mo pressed after,* so it came to pas that whole routs of them were ouerthrowen & slain of our men vpon the wals, before it was knowne what they meant. Other terrified by their example, gaue backe and left their array, and wineding them selues by bie wayes and vnder couert of hilles, retourned againe into their tentes, and so came it to passe that the strength of the ennemies daily more and more decreasing, they had lesse hope euery day more then other of obtaining the Citie. For besides the innumerable slaughter of Turkes vpon the walles, the townesmen also watching the forragers and purueyers of the Turkes, as they raunged about for victual for the campe, euer as occasion serued them, did compasse them about, and so encountered with them by the way, that of a whole Legion, scarly the tenth part returned again to their felowes aliue, by meanes wherof the courage of the enemies began greatly to faint. Wherby such a maruelous alteration hapned, that as our mē began to receiue more hope and courage,* so the Turkes began still more to droupe and to languish wyth dispaire, so that at length skarce durst they appeare wythout the bounds, where they were entrenched, but onely in light skirmishes, when they were prouoked by our men to come out, and to shew them selues.

Solymannus perceiuing his soldiers thus daily to go to wracke,* of whome he had lost already more then 80. W. and that wyth long tarying he could do no good, being also in lacke of forrage, for that the countrey about hym was wasted: beginneth to consult with hys captaines & counsailors, what remained best to be done. Of whom the most parte aduised hym to raise his siege, and betime to prouide for hymselfe. Which to doe, many causes there were that mooued hym.

First the losse of his men, which daily were cut frō him by great numbers, besides them which lay in hys campe wounded, or sicke, or famished. Secondly, lacke of perueyance. Thirdly, y^e approaching nere of winter. But y^e chieftest cause was, for that he heard Friderike Palatine aboue mētioned cōming with a great army at Ratisbone towards Uienna, and there had done great molestation to a greate number of the Turks forragers, whom by the way he preuented and so enclosed in the woods, y^t he slew them. Wherof when Solyman had intelligence, thinking it not best to abide the comming of the Palatine,* made hast wyth bagge and baggage to remooue hys campe and to retire: and first sending away his cariage before him, made speede hymself with his army, to follow shortly after.

The Uiennians, when they heard of the remoouing away of the Turkes, although at the first they scarsly beleueed it to be true, being afterwarde certified out of doubt, both of their remouing, and also of the order therof, how it was in a maner of a flight or chase, were greatly desirous to make out of the City after them. Wherein, albeit the presence of the Palatine wyth his armie, if hee had bene there present, might haue stand them in great stead, yet notwithstanding they tooke the oportunitie of the time present, and issuing out of the Citie, in moste speedy wise, set after them w^t their horsemen: and first ouerpassing the tentes (where y^e Turkes had pitched their stations or pauillions) for hast of the way,* they made such pursute after them, that wythin litle time, they ouertooke the rereward or latter end of the armie, whereof they made suche hauocke and destruction, that (as the author reporteth) there was neuer a shotte of the pursuers, nor weapon drawn, nor stroke stricken, which light in vain. Which was no hard thing for our men to doe: For as the Turkes in their flight went scattered out of order & aray, neither woulde they in the fore rancke (being so farre off from ieopardy) retourne backe to helpe their felowes, it was easie for our men, without resistance, to come vpon their backes as they would.

Yet notwythstanding in long pursute, when our men could not see the cariage of the Turkes, which was woont in armies to come away behinde after the hoast,* and suspecting (as trueth was) some ambush to be left in priuie wayte behinde them, to come betwixt them and home: called themselues to retraite, and consulted vpon the matter, thinking good, first to sende out certaine scoures, to espie Page 751 and bring them word, where the enemies lay, & what was the number of them. Wherof when intelligence was geuē them, that the remnaunt of the Turkes army was remayning in the tentes behind, word was sent to their fellowes in Uienna, to issue out, and to ioyne also with them against the tayle of the turkes, whiche had entrenched themselues within the campe. Other were appoynted to followe the chase, least peraduenture y^e turks seeing our men to recule backe might retorne again vpon thē, & help their felowes. Which thinges being thus ordered and appoynted, in the meane time, while part of the Uienians were houering af'ter the mayne armye, the rest encountered with them that were left in the campe. Who seeing themselues ouermatched, first defenced theyr campe with a deepe ditch & Bulwarke, to delay the time, vntill some helpe might come to them from the army. Secondly they directed messengers to the Christians, to entreate for peace. Thirdly they conueied their priuy letters vnto Solymā for speedy ayde and rescue. But all the wayes and passages being stopped by the Christians, there letters were intercepted, and so the miserable Turkes being destitute of all hope & sucour, seing no other remedy, made out of theyr campe, to hassarde and proue the vttermost for theyr defence:* but in conclusiō, in their desperate venture they were enclosed about by our men on euery side, and there put to the sword and slayne, a few only excepted, who escaping out very hardly by secret passages, shifted after the rest of their fellowes, as well as they could. Their carriage and other furniture lefte behind them in their tentes, was distributed amongst y^e souldiers onely such thinges reserued as might serue for the publike vse and commoditie of the Cittie.

Thus through the mercifull protection and benefite of almighty God, Austria was deliuered from the fierce and barbarous hostilitie of the cruell Turkes: notwithstanding that neither Ferdinandus the king,* nor the Emperour his brother were there present, but only y^e power of God, thorough the valiauntnes of the worthy Germanes, defended that cittie, in defence wherof consisted y^e safety & deliuerāce, (no doubt) of all these west partes of Christendome. For the which immortall prayse and thankes be vnto our immortall God in Christ our Lord, according as he hath of vs most graciously and worthely deserued.* Wherin by the way take this for a note (gentle reader) how & after what maner Gods blessing goeth with the true reformers of his religion, and so much the more is it to be noted, for that the Turkes in so many battailes & sieges heretofore, were ne'uer so repulsed & foyled, as at this present time in incountring w^t the protestantes & defenders of sincere Religion. This cittie of Uienna was besieged & deliuered y^e yeare of our Lord. 1529. The assaultes of the Turke against y^r City are numbred to be 20. and his repulses as many. The nūber of his army which he first brought, was 25000. Wherof were reckened to be slayne 80. thousand and aboue. During the time of his siege, he led away out of the country about many captiues; virgins and Matrones he quelled & cast them out naked: the children hee stucke vpon stakes.

Solymannus thus put from y^e hope of victorie of Uienna after he had breathed himselfe a while at home, the second yere after, which was an. 1531. repaying his host, returned agayne into Hungarye, with no lesse multitude, then before: where first he got the towne called Gunza being but slenderly kept with a small garrison. By reason whereof the townsmen and souldiours yelding thēselues vnto the Turke, were constrained to agree vpon vnreasonable conditions. Ex Ioan. Ramo.

Melchior Soiterus in his second booke writing De bello Pannonico, touching the foresaid Towne of Gunza, or Gunzium, differeth herein something from Ramus, declaring how this Gunza being a small town in Hungary and hauing in it but onely a 100. souldiours (or as Wolfegangus Drechslerus in his chronicle reporteth, at the most but 200. souldiours) vnder the valiaunt captayne Nicholas Iureschitz, defended themselues so manfully and won'derfully, through the notable power of God, against the whole puissance of 200. thousand Turkes, that they beyng notwithstanding distressed with lacke and penury of purueiance and sodenly of the Turkes inuaded, yet with pure courage and promptnes of hart, sustained the vttermost force and violence of xiiij. assaultes of that great multitude, for the space of 25. dayes together.

Although the narration of the authour may seeme to some incredible, yet thus he writeth, that what tyme the great ordinance and battering peeces of the Turkes were planted vpon two mountaynes much higher then y^t town whereby they within the towne were oppressed both before and behinde, in so much that 8 ensignes of the Turks were already within the towne, yet by the reason of women and children and other impotent persons,* who in the middle of the towne were congregate in an house together such a noyse and clamour went vp to heauen praying and crying to God for helpe, that the turkes within the walles supposing a new army of fresh souldiours to be sent into y^e towne for sodayn feare, voyded the towne, & leaped down from the walles agayn (which before they had got) whom no man eyther pursued or resisted: for neuer a souldiour al'most was left on the walles, which was not eyther slayne or els wounded with the Turks ordinance. At what time through the Lordes prouidence it so happened, that one Ibrahimus Bassa,* neare about the Turke, seeing bothe the town to be small, and the great destruction of the Turkes in the siege thereof, and that the captayn in no case woulde yeld, perswaded so the Turke, declaring howe the Towne being so little was not worth the losse of so many men, in y^e winning wherof there was no glory, & if he were repulsed, great dishonour might follow: wherby the Turke being perswaded, did follow hys counsaile, which was thys y^t Nicholaus the Christen captaine beyng called vnto him vnder pledges and safe conduit, should receaue the town as of his hand and gift, with condition, that he shold do no violence to hys souldiours left behinde and wounded, but should procure such meanes as he could, for the recuring of them: and so he raysing his siege departed. An other cause might be also, whiche moued him so sodaynly to rayse hys siege, for that he heard the Palatine not to be far of in pursuing after him, and therfore taking his flight by y^t mountaines of the Noricians, he returned with much spoyle of Christian mens goods into Constantinople. Ex Melchior Soit. lib: 2. de bello Panno.

For so it was prouided the same time in Germany,* after the counsaile or August and of Ratilboon (at what time the controuersie of Religion betweene the Protestantes & the papistes, was differred and set of, to the next generall Councel) that Charles the 5. and Ferdinandus his brother hauing vnderstanding of the Turke thus raunging in Hungary, should collect of the Germanynes, Hungarians, and Spanyards and others, an able army of 80. thousand footmen, and 30000. horsemen, to repulse the inuasious of the Turke. But Solymanus hauing intelligence of thys preparation of the Christian power comming toward him whether for feare,* or whether to espy further oportunitie of tyme, for hys more aduantage and our detriment, refused at that time to tary theyr comming, and so speeding hys re'turne vnto Constantinople, retired with much spoyle and pray sent before him, as is aboue premised: Whiche was in the yeare of our Lord. 1532.

Not long after,* being the yeare of our saluation, 1534. Solymanus intending ij. warres at once, first sent Corradinus Barbarossa the admiral of his nauies into Afrike to war against the kyng of Tunece: Whō the Barbarossa also dispossessed & depriued of his kingdome: but Charles the Emperour, the next yeare following, an. 1535. restored the said king agayne into hys kingdome, and deliuered in the same viage 20. thousand captiues out of seruitude.

The same tyme the Turke also sent an other captayne into Hungary,* to warre agaynst Uaiuoda while he hym selfe taking hys course to Persia, planted his siege agaynst the Citty Taurus, which he in short space subdued and expugned. Albeit he long enioied not the same: for Tahames king of the Persians, sodaynly comming vpon the Turks vnprepared,* slue of them 20. thousand, and tooke hys concubines to the great foyle and reproch of the Turke.

Two yeare after this, which was the yere of our Lord 1537. Solymanus, who coule not be quyete at home nor rest in peace,* returning agayne out of Asia into Europe w^t 270. ships, great and little, set vppon Corcyra, an other Iland belonging to y^e Uenetians, which he besieged x. daies wasting and burning the Townes and fieldes as he went beside the destruction of much people therein, whom partly he slue, partly led away captiues. From thence he sayled to Zacynthus and Cythara,* an other Ilande not farre off from Corcyra, bordering neare to the coastes of Epyrus and Grecia. Where he sodaynly by night inuading the husband men in villages and fields, sleeping and mistrusting no harme, drew them out of theyr houses and possessions, men and women, besides children, to the number of ix. hūdreth whom he made hys bondslaues: burning moreouer theyr houses, and carying away all the goodes and cattell beyng without the sayd Citties of Zazynthus and Cythara. Ex. Ioan. Crispo.

From thence these helhoundes turned theyr course to y^t siege and spoyle of Egina,* a rich and populous Iland, lying betweene Grecia and Asia. Where first the Egenians did manfully in bataille resist them, and were like to haue preuayled: but being weryed at length and oppressed with Page 752 innumerable thousandes of fresh Turkes, which stil were sent in,* to rescue the other whiche were ouercome before, were compelled to flye into the Cittie of Egina. Which city the cruell Turkes (or rather Deuils on earth) w^t much labour, & violence of their great ordinaunce fet out of their shippes, subdued and cast downe to the ground: the Cittizens and inhabitauntes whereof, the Turke after he had burned their houses, and ransackt theyr goodes commanded to be slayne and killed euery one.* The weomen both noble and vnnoble, with their infantes, were geuen to the mariners to be abused, and from thence being shipped vn^{to} Constantinople, were led away to perpetuall misery & slauery, which was in the yeare of our Lord. 1537.

In the same iourney Solyman also tooke the Ile in the sayd sea of Eugeum,* called Parum: also the Ile adioyning to the same named Naxos, and made them to him tributaries. The duke wherof was he which wrote the story both of these Ilandes aforesayd, and also of the other Ilandes called Cyclades, and other Dukes. Ex Ioan Crispo, Duce Naxi. &c.

*Thys done, Solymanus directed his Nauy vnto Apulia, where he set on land. x. thousand footmen, & 2000. horsemen, which spoiled likewise and wasted those parties while the Emperour, the pope and y^e Uenetians were together in warre and dissension. Furthermore the next yere folowing. an. 1538. great attemptes began in Stiria, but by the resistance of the inhabitantes, the force of the barbarous turks was repulsed: notwithstanding great spoyles of men & cattell were caryed from thence, and the country miserable spoiled. In the which yeare also the Turk turning into Hungary, gaue bataille vnto the Christians in Sauia: where through the fraudulent falshood of the Cap'tayne Cassianerus (Wolfgangus nameth him Calcianus beyng (as they say) corrupted with money, our men were put to the worse. an. 1538.

*After that the Turkes had inuaded the Ilande of Corcyra abouesayd, the Uenetians with Solyman the Turke had ioyned truce for a certayne time, for y^e which they gaue the turke 300. thousand crownes, with the city of Neapolis, and Ma^uasia in the borders of Macedonia. But with in 4. or 5. yeares, the Turke to get a newe stipend of the Uenetians, brake hys league, and inuaded theyr dominions: whereby they were enforced to enter new conditions agayn with him.

*In the yeare of our Lord, 1540. the restles Turke making hys return toward Hungary, by the way passing by Dalmatia, lay against the towne called Newcastle, beyng defended by the Spanyardes. In the which town because they refused to yeld themselues all the inhabitauntes and souldiours were put to the sword & slain euery one. This Nouum Castellum or Newcastle was a strong fort of y^t Christians, whiche being nowe in the Turkes power, he had great aduantage ouer all those quarters of Dalmatia, Stiria, Carinthia, and Hungaria. From thence he proceeded further, keeping his course into Hungary, where he planted his power against the City of Buda.

This Buda was a principall city in Hungary, about which great contention had bene (as ye heard before) betweene Ioannes Uaiuoda,* and Ferdinandus. By reason wherof the Turke occasioned by Uaiuoda, came into Hūgary and deliuered the City to Uaiuoda. This Uaiuoda liuing not long after, left behinde him a sonne, whome being an infant he committed to the gouernance of one Georgius Monachus: who being left tutour vnto the infant, reduced all Transilvania, Buda, Pesta, with other parties of Hungary, which belonged to Uaiuoda before, to the sub^jiection of the child. Ferdinandus hearing therof, in a great hast and anger: leuyed an armye to recouer his landes in Hungarie, and so laid siege to Buda. Monachus seing his part weake, first sent his legate to Ferdinandus, desiring him to talke and conferre with him vppon matter, as he pretended,* pertaynign to the behoofe of them both. Wherupon both the parties being agreed, the place and manner of their conuention was appoynted, and also the day and tyme assigned. Thus the parties (according to the agreement) conuenting together with their armyes, with drawing a little aside, as they were entred in communication, sodenly among Ferdinandus men, happened a dagg to be heard, which by the heate of the day (as is thought) loosing of hys own accord,* gaue a cracke. The sound wherof comming to the eares of Monachus, he supposing the same to haue bene discharged, agaynst him, in great anger drewe out his sworde, bidding Ferdinandus auant w^t his doubling dissimulation, saying that he would neuer any more trust the promises of Christians, and immediatlye vppe on the same sent to Solymannus the Turke, for ayde agaynst the Christians, promising that he would surrender to him free possession of Hungary,* if he would come and vanquish the army of Ferdinandus lying about the siege of Buda. The Turke maketh no long tarying, but taketh the occasion, and with a mighty power, flieth into Hungary, and eftsoones discharging the host of Ferdinandus, and putting them of from the siege of Buda, getteth the Citty into his own handes, commaunding the sonne of Uaiuoda with his mother, to follow after his camp.

In the history of Ioannes Ramus it followeth, that when Solyman the Turk had thus preuayled against the Cittie of Buda aforesayd, & agaynst other parties more of Hūgary, by the asset of the Empyre, one Ioachimus duke of Brandeberg, prince Electour was assigned with a puissant army of chosen souldiours of all nations collected, to recouer the City of Buda from the Turke, and to deliuer the other parties of Christendome from the feare of the Turke. an. 1542. Whiche Ioachimus at his first setting foorth, appeared so couragious and valiaunt, as though he would haue conquered the whole world: but this great heate was so slaked in short time by the Turke, that before any great ieoperdy was offered vnto him, he was glad to to be discharged of the viage, and with shame enough, returned home againe. And would God he had left behynde him in the field, no more but his owne shame. For the enemies hauing intelligēce before of his cowardly departure, thinking to worke some poynt of maistry or victory before his goyng, did set vpon the right wing of his army (which chiefly consisted of Dutchmen of low Germany) out of the which they tooke away with them aboue 500. strong and valiaunt souldiours,* not killing them, but carying them a^way aliue. For whome it had bene muche better to haue stand to their weapon and to haue dyed manfully vppon the turkes, then by yealding themselues to be disgarnished of weapon and armoure, and so to be lefte to the cursed curtesie of the foule Turkes. To whome what curtesie was shewe^d,* by the sequele did appeare. For after y^e Turkes had led them out of Hungary into their own dominiō, after a most horrible & beastly sort they disfigured & mangled them, & so sent them abroad through all Grecia to be witnessrs of the Turkes victory. Their kind of punishment was thus: First they had their right arme thrust through with an iron red hot, whereby they should be vnable and vnmeet to all labour & warefare. Secondly, theyr heades were shauen to the very sculles, after the maner of our Friers & monks, when they are newly shauen. Third^ly, they had all their priuy members cut of frō their bodies to the intent to make thē vnfruitful for propagation which wound was so grieuous vnto them, that the greatest part of them died therupon, the few that recouered the torment therof, led a life more bitter & more miserable then death it selfe. And this kinde of cruelty was executed in order vpon them all. In much like sort did cruell Pharao exercise hys tyranny agaynst the people of God in Egypt: who to destroy the generation of them, caused all the male children to be drowned in the riuer. Whereby it is the more to be hoped, that seing the tiranny of this turkish Pharao is come to such an extremetie,* the mercifull goodnesse of God will the more shortly send some Moses or other vnto vs for our speedy deliuerance. This was by the cruell Turkes done. an. 1542. witnessed by Ioannes Ramus, which not onely writeth the story, but by the testimony also of hys owne eyes recordeth the same to be true, beholding with his eies one of the same number in the city of Uienna, who hauing wife and children in Bruxelles, eyther for shame or sorrow had no minde to returne home to his own house.*Ex Ioan Ramo.

But to returne agayne to the city of Buda, from whēre we haue digressed, here is not to be pretermitted, what falshood and what cruelty the turkes vsed toward the Christians there, after theyr victory. For after that Solyman y^e Turke vpon the yelding and submission of the men of Buda, had geuen to them his promise of safety and life, within short time, the sayd turke picking a quarrell with them for selling Oxen vnto the Christians, and for barganing with them, slue all the Magistrates of the sayde Citty of Buda: like as in all other Citties, where so euer the Christians yelded vnto him, he neuer, or very rarely kept his promise with them, neyther did euer any christians speed better w^t the turke,* then they which most constantly did resist him.

And as hys promise with the Magistrates of Buda was false and wretched: so hys cruelty with the souldiors therof was more much notorious & abhominable. For in y^e expugnation of Buda among y^t rest whiche were slayne ij. cohortes or bands of Christian souldiors came alyue to his hands. To whom, when he seemed at the first to graūt pardon of life, he commaunded to put on their armour agayn, and to dispose themselues in order and battayle array Page 753 after y^e warlike maner of the christians, whiche when they had accomplished readily, according to his commaun'dement, & he riding about the ranckes of them, had dilligently vewed and be holden them a certain space, at length he commaunded thē to put of their armour againe, which done, certaine of the tallest and strongest of them he pyked out, the residue he commanded by his souldiors comming behinde them, with swordes to be cut in peeces and slayne. Of the other, whome he had elected and chosen, some he set for markes and buttes to be shot at: some he appointed to his two sonnes, for them to slash with their swordes, & try theyr strength, which of them could geue y^e deper woūd and (as they termed it) the fayrer blowe,* whereby moste bloud might follow out of their Christian bodies. Ex Mart. Stella. De successibus Turcarum.

After the winning of Buda, the Turke purposing not so to cease before he had subdued and brought vnder his obedience all Hungary, proceeding further with his armye first brought vnder a strong hold of christians named Pestum or Pesta, where a great number of Christian souldiours partly were slayne, partly were ledde awaye to more cruell affliction.

Then he came to an other Castle called Walpo situate in the confines of Bosna, Croatia, and Hungary. Whiche forte or castle he besieged three mōthes, while no rescue nor ayd was sent vnto them, neyther from Ferdinandus king of Hungary, nor from any other christian Prince or Princes. Whereupon at length the forte was geuen vp to the Turke, but more through the false treachery or cowardly hart of the souldiours, then of the Captaine. Wherein is to be noted an example not vnworthy of memory. For when the cowardly souldiours, eyther for feare or flattery, wold needs surrender themselves & the peece vnto the Turke, contrarye to the minde of the Captaine, whiche in no case would agree to theyr yelding: they thinking to find fauour with the turke, apprehended theyr captaine, and gaue him to Solyman. But see howe the iustice of God sometymes by y^e hands of the enemy, disposeth the end of things to the rewarding of vertue, & punishing of vice. For where they thought to saue themselves by the daunger of the faithfull Captain, the euent turned cleane contrary, so that y^e Turk was to the captayne bountifull and very liberalll: and the souldiours, notwithstanding that they had all yelded thēselues, yet were all put to death and commaunded pitiously to be slayne, Ex Ioan. Martino Stella De Turcarum in Hungaria successibus. &c.

There is in Hungary an other towne bearing y^e name of fiue Churches,* called Quiquecclesiensis, partly spoyled before, as is aboue mentioned, pag. 751. but nowe thorough the losse of Walpo, & by the hugenes of the Turkes armye (containing in it. 220. thousand fighting men) was so discouraged and put out of hope and hart,* that the b. •h. and chiefe nobles of y^e town fled before y^e ieoperdy: the rest of the cōmons, which were partly preuented by the sodein comming of the turkes, partly for pouerty could not auoid sent theyr messengers to the Turke, to yealde and surrender the towne, vppon promise of life, vnto his handes. Whose promise how firme it stood, the story leaueth it vncertaine. This is affirmed, that three dayes after the yelding of this Quinquecclesiensis, neuer a Turke durst enter the Cittie. an. 1543. Ex Ioan. Mart. Stella. & alijs.

The next fort or holde gotten by the Turkes in Hungary, was Soclosia. The towne at the first inuasion of the Turkes, was wonne, sackte, and fiered. The castle within the towne, did something hold out a tyme, and first requiring truce for 14. dayes, to see what ayd should be sent vnto them, and to deliberate vpon the conditions that should be proposed vnto thē, after the 14. daies expired, they (trusting to the situation and munitiō of the place, which was very strong) began for a certayne space stoutly to put back the enemy: But afterward seeing their walles to be battered, theyr foundations to shake (for the Turke had set xij. thousand vnderminers vnder the diches of y^e castle) & their strength to diminishe, and misdoubting themselves not to be able long to hold out, agreed in like maner to yeld them selues, vpon condition to escape with life & goods. Which condition of sauing theyr goodes, was the loosing of theyr lyues, especially of the richer sort. For the Turkes perceauing by that condition, that they were of wealth and substaunce, omitting the inferiour or baser sorte,* fell vpon the wealthy men for their riches, and slue them euery one, an. 1543. Ibid.

In the which his history this is also to be noted, that during the time while the castle of Soclosia was besieged, the villages & pages round about the same, came of theyr own accord, submitting and yelding themselves vnto the Turke, bringing in (as they were commanded) all kynd of victuall and forage,* into the Turkes campe. Which done, Solyman the Turke commaunded all the head men of the pages to appeare before hym, whiche humbly obeyed and came. Then the turke warned them to returne agayne the next day after, euery one bringing with him his inferiour retinue, and houshold seruantes. Whiche when they had with like dilligence also, according to his commaudemēt accomplished, the turke immediately commaunded them euery one, in the face of hys whole army, to be slayn and so was this theyr reward. Which reward the more that it declareth the bloody crueltie of the turke: the more encourage it may minister to our men, the more constantly to w^tstand him. Ex Martino Stella.

An other strong town there is in Hūgary named Stri'gonium, distant from Buda aboue sayde,* the space of fiue Dutch miles, agaynst the whiche the Turkes made great preparation of ordinaunce, and all other instruments of ar'tillary necessary for the siege therof. Which cittie in like ma'ner began also to be compassed and inclosed by y^e turks, before it could be sufficiently prepared & garnished of our mē but that the archbishop onely of Strigon priuely conueyed vnto them 200. Oxen.* Such was then the negligence of Ferdinandus king of Hungary, which so slenderly looked vnto the necessary defence of his townes and cities. More ouer such was the discorde then of christen kinges & Princes, which in their ciuile dissension and warres were so oc'cupied and hoate in needeles quarrels, that they had neyther leasure nor remēbraunce, to help in tyme there, where true neede required. Which slender care, and cold zeale of y^e Christian rulers, not in tendering y^e publicke cause, while they contend in priuate trifles, hath caused the Turke to come so farre as hee hath, and yet farther is like, vnlesse the mercy of the Lord doe helpe more, then our dilligence. One of the chiefe captaynes within the Cittye, was Martinus Lascanus, a Spanyard.

The Turkes in the beginning of the siege began first to attempt the Cittizens with fayre wordes, and accustomed promises, to yelde and gently to submit themselues. But they not ignoraunt of the Turks promises wisely refused, and manfully stood so long as they coulde to the defence of their citty, now and then skirmishing with them in out corners, and killing certayne numbers of them: sometime with their shot disturbing their munitions, & breaking the wheelles of their gunnes. &c.

Three speciall meanes the Turkes vse in winning great fortes and cities:* great multitude of souldiors: great ordinaunce and mortarie peeces: the third is by vndermyning. All which here in the siege of this Cittie, lacked not. This siege continued vehement a certaine space: in whiche the Strigonians had borne out foure strong assaultes, and slue many thousandes of y^e turkes, till at length the turkes eyther departing away, or els seeming to depart vnto Buda, the people at last being so perswaded and made to beleue of some chiefe rulers of the citty (peraduenture not the truest men) the citizens being erected with hope and comforte, and singing Te Deum,* as though the city had bene free from all daunger, sodenly (by whose counsaile it is vnknownen) conueyed themselues all out of the Cittie. 300. horsemen also passed ouer the riuier and departed. The Italiā which were vnder Frāciscus Salamanca a Spanish captayne hardly coulde be perswaded by him to abide, whiche were in all scarce. 600.

Within 3. daies after 300. Germaine souldiours, with 2. ships laden with shot, poudre, & artillery, were priuily let into y^e town: So that of our men al there were scarce 1300. souldiors.* Who seing the small quantitie of their number, burning and casting downe the towne & suburbes, tooke thē to y^e castle: from whence they beate of the turkes valiantly with theyr ordinaunce, a good space, and with wyld fire destroyed great companies of thē, till at last they seyng theyr walles to fayle them, and the whole castle to shake by vndermyning, but especially by the working of a certayne Italian surnamed Presbyter, they gaue ouer. Thys Italian whether for feare or falshood, secretly vnknowing to the rest of the souldiours, accompanied with two other conueyed himselfe down from the walles, & being brought into the tentes of the next captayne or Bassa of the turkes, there in the name of all hys fellowes, conuented with the turkes,* to geue vp to them the Castle: wherupon y^e turkes were bid to cease the shooting. This Italian shortly after with two other turkes was sent backe to Salamanca hys Captayne, with the Turkes message. The

goyng out of this Italian being priuy to the residue of hys fellowes, cō|trary to the lawes and discipline of warre, although it seemed to come of hys own head: yet for so much as the other souldiours were not sure, but rather suspected lest the other Italians his countrey men had beene in some parte of Page 754 consent therein, and would take his part: neither durst offer him any harne for that his doing, nor yet could wel ad|uise with themselues what was best to do, for feare of priuy confederacie within themselues.

Thus while Lascanus the chiefe captaine of the Christians aforesayd, w^t his fellowe souldiours, were in a mase what to doe or not to do: in the meane time came one running, who geuing a signe both to the Christians and the Turkes, to hold theyr hands and weapons, for that it was against all lawe of warre to fight after peace and truce taken: our men, as they were commaunded, went into y^e inward tower. The turkes in the meane time, had got into the Castle, and occupied all the vtter parties. Then was Salamanca by the consent of the rest, sent out to the Turk, who there being stayde that night, the next morrowe the Turkes bull or warrant was sent into the Castle, permitting free libertie to the Christians to depart with bag and baggage. Who now beyng ready to depart, first were cōmaunded by the turkes compassing them round about, to cast from them theyr dagges, launces, and battaile axes, in|to the trench. Then comming to the gate to go out, theyr swordes were taken from them, looking then for nothing but present death.

At last whē they were come a little further, other were sent to them to discharge them of theyr helmettes, their ter|gattes, currettes, and what soeuer peece of harnes, was about them. Whereupon great feare came vpon them, least some great cruelty should be shewed vpon them.* Solymā after he had long deliberated w^t himself, whether to kil thē or not, at last contrary to all expectatiō, granted theyr liues but before they should be dismissed, he first caused them, in derision of Christianitie, to be bayted with scornes and mockes throughout all the Turkish army, and so the next day commaunded them being stript out of theyr coats and apparell, to be reduced againe into the castle by companies setting ouer them certayne turkes with cudgels, & battes to lay vpon their backes and sides, causing them to bury y^e dead carcasses, and to gather vp the rubbish broken downe from y^e castlewalles, and to scoure the ditches. Which done the next day following he demaunded of them by an inter|preter, whether they would enter wages with hym, & take horse and armour to serue hym in his.* Warres, which condition diuers for feare were contented to take, seying no other remedy to auoyd present death. Some neyther by ma|nasing wordes, nor for any feare of death, coude be compelled thereunto, of whom certayn which stooode stoughtly in refusing thereof, were presently slayne, whome I may worthely recite in the number and catalogue of holy martyrs.

Of the foresayde christians, part were caryed ouer the riuer of Danubius, not without great vilany, & contumely most despitemfull, For some had theyr wiues taken from them and caryed away, some had theyr wyues rauished be|fore theyr face: and such as made or shewed any resistance therat, had their wiues before them cast into the riuer and drowned: also theyr infantes and yong children, beyng appoynted by the turkes to the abhominable order of the Ia|nizarites, mentioned before pag. 736. theyr parentes not consenting thereunto, were precipitate and throwne into the riuer and drowned. All whiche thinges are testified by Iohn Martinus Stella,* in hys Epistles in print extant, written to his two brethren, William, & Michaell, &c. Whiche Mart Stella moreouer this addeth & affirmeth, that he hymselfe being the same time at Uienna, did see one of the foresaid wiues, who being holden fast by the heare of the head yet notwithstanding hauing her heare pluckt off, cast her selfe into the riuer Danubius, for the singuler loue to her husband, and so swamme to the shippe where he was. And thus this miserable company of Germaines, Spanyards and Italiās mixt together, macerate with labours, with hunger pyned, with watchinges, dolours, and sorow consumed came at length to Schinda.

When the tidings therof was noysed at Uienna, partly with feare and dread, partly with indignation, all mens hartes were moued & vexed diuersly. Some thought them not worthy to be receiued into their citty,* shewing themselues so dastardly and cowardly. Other thought agayne that mercy was to be shewed vnto them, and commended their fact for that they being so few, & vnfurnished of ayde neither able to match by any meanes with suche an innumerable multitude of the turkes, kept themselues till better time might serue thē. But howsoever the matter was to be thought of, the captaines brought the poore remnant of that ruffull company, vnto possidonium, where the sayd Captayns were layd fast, and their kept in durance, to ren'der accompt of the whole matter, howe it was wrought and handled. And thus haue ye, the lamentable story of Strigonium.

The Turke proceeding in his victories, conducted his army next vnto Tath,* and to the parties lying nere about Comaron. This Tath was also a strong hold in Hungary wherein were placed certayne garrisons, partly of the Germaines, partly of the Italians. The chieftayne of the Italians was one Anniball Tosso, constitute by Philipus Torneilius. This Tasso was a man well experte in prowes of warre,* but of a filthy corrupt life, & also a foule swearer: and horrible blasphemour of God and his saintes. To make the story shorte, this forte of Tathe, before anye siege was layde vnto it, was yelded and geuen vp to the Turkes: vpon what conditions, or by whose meanes, the author sheweth not: Thus much he sheweth, that the sayd Anniball shortly vpō the same, returning into Italy, was commaunded by Tornellius aforesaid: to be apprehended and beheaded.

After the turkes had subuerted and destroyed the forte of Tathe,* they turned their power against Alba, surnamed Regalis, for that the kinges of Hūgary haue bene always wont there to be crowned, and buried. This Alba is a litle well compacted citie in Hungary, hauing on y^e one side a marishe somewhat foggishe or fenny, whiche made the town lesse assaultable.* But nere to the same was a woode from y^e which y^e turkes euery day with vi. C. cartes, brought such matter of wood and trees felled for the same purpose, into the marish, that within lesse then 12. dayes they made it apte, and harde to their feete, whiche the townes men thought neuer could be gone vppon, but onely in the hard frostes of wynter. At the first beginning of the siege, there stode a litle without the munitions in the front of the citie, a certayne church or Monastery, whiche the Cittizens pretending to mayntayne and keepe agaynst the turkes, had priuily cōueyed light matter easely to take flame,* with powder, in secret places therof, and had hid also fire withal. Whiche done, they (as agaynst theyr willes being driuen backe, withdrew themselues within the munitions, wayting the occasions, when this fire woulde take. Thus the turkes hauing the possession of the churche, sodenly the fire comming to the powder, raysed vp the Churche, and made a great scatter and slaughter among the barbarous turkes This was not so soone espyed of them within the towne, but they issued out vpon them in this disturbance, and slue of them a great number: Among whom diuers of theyr nobles also the same time were slayne, and one Bassa an Eunuch, which was of great estimation with y^e turkes.* Moreouer, in the same skirmish was taken one of those gunners which the french king is sayd to haue sent to the Turke a litle before. Whiche if it be true, let the Christian Reader iudge what is to be thought of those Christen princes, which not onely forsaking the common cause of Christes Church ioyned league with the turke,* but also sent hym gunners to set forward hys warres to the destruction of Christes people, and to the shedding of theyr blond, for whom they know the blond of Christ to be shed. If this be not true, I shew myne authour: If it be, then let the Pope see and marke well howe hys title of Christianissimus, can well agree with such doinges.

But to let this matter sleape, although the turkes (as ye heard) had wonne the fenne, with theyr pollicie and industry, against the Cittie of Alba, yet all this while the Albanes were nothing inferiour to theyr enemies, through y^e valiant help & couragious indeuour of Octavianus Scru'zatus, a captayne of Millane. By whose prudent counsaile and constant standing, the busy enterprises of the turkes did little preuayle a long time, till at length, sodainly arose a thick fog or miste vpon the cittie, where as rounde about besides, the sunne did shine bright. Some sayde it came by Arte Magicall, but rather it may appeare to ryse out of the fenne or marish, beyng so pressed downe with mens feete and other matter layd vpon it.

The turkes vsing the occasion of this misty darckenes in secret wise approching the walles,* had got vp to a certayne fortresse, where the Germaines were, before our men coulde well perceane them: where they pressed in so thicke, & in such number, that albeit the christian souldiors standing strongly to the defence of theyr lyues, dyd what valiaunt men in cases of such extremetie were able to doe: yet beyng ouermatched with the multitude of the Turks, & the sodennes of their comming, gaue backe, seeking to retyre into the inward walles. Which when theyr other felowes did see to recule, then was theyr flyeng of all hands euery man striuing to get into the Cittie. There was betweene the outward Wales or vamures,* and inward gate of the citty, a straite or narrow passage, cast vp in maner of a bancke or causey, ditched on both sides: which passage or ingresse happened y^e same timeto be barred & stopped. By Page 755 reason wherof the poore souldiors were forced to cast them selues into the ditch, thinking to swimme as well as they could, into the citty: where many of them sticking in the mudde, were drowned: one pressing vpon an other: many were slayne of their enemies comming behinde them, they hauing neither hart, nor power to resist. A fewe whiche could swimme out, were receiued into the Citty: but the chiefe Captaines and warders of the towne were there slayne.

The cittizens being destitute of theyr principall captaines and warriors, were in great perplexitie and doubt among thēselues, what to do, some thinking good to yeld, some counsayling the contrary. This while the mindes of the cittizens were distract in diuers & doubtfull sentences, the Magistrates minding to stand to y^e turkes gentlenes, sent out one of theyr heads vnto the turke, who in y^e name of them all, should surrender to him the citty, and become vnto him tributaries, vpō cōdition they might enioy liber|ty of life & goods, which being to thē granted, after the turkish faith & assurance, first y^e souldiors which were left w^tin y^e citty, putting of theyr armour, were discharged & sent away. Who being but onely 300. left of 4. ensignes of Italians, & of a thousand Germaines,* by the way were layd for by the Tartarians, for hope of theyr spoyle: so that they scattering a sunder one one way, an other an other to saue themselues as well as they could: fled euery one what way he thought best. Of whome some wandering in woodes & marishes faynted for famine: some were taken and slayne by the Hungarians, a few with bare and empty, and wythered bodies, more like ghostes then men, escaped & came to Uienna. And this befell vpon the souldiors.

Now vnderstand what happened to the yelding Citizens. So in story it followeth, that when the turke had entred the towne, and had visited the sepulchre of the kynges for three or 4. dayes he pretended much clemency toward the cittizens, as though he came not to oppresse them, but to be reuēged of Ferdinādus their king, & to deliuer them from the seruitude of the Germaines. On the fourth day, al y^e chiefe & head men of the citty were cōmaunded to appeare before y^e turke in a playne, not far frō the citty where the condemned persons before, were wont to be executed, as though they should come to sweare vnto the turke.* At this commaundement of the turke, when the cittizens in great number, & in their best attyre were assembled, y^e turk contrary to his fayth and promise, commaunded sodenly a generall slaughter to be made of them all. And this was y^e end of the citizens of Alba.

In the meane time, during the siege of Alba, the Hungarians meeting sometimes with the horsemen of y^e Tartarians, which were sent out to stop their vitayles from y^e citie,* slue of them at one bickering. 3000. Turks. In which story is also reported & mentioned of mine author, an horrible sight and example of misery, concerning a certayne captiue (a Christian belike) who comming into Uienna, was found to haue in his scrip or satchel the halfe of a yong childe of two yeares old, which remayned yet vneaten, the other halfe beyng eaten before. an. 1543. Ibid.

Next after this was expugned the castle of Pappa, by y^e Turkes. Let the castle now of Papa take heede, least one day it follow after.

The like fidelitie the turkes also kept, with the fort of Wizigradum and the souldiours therof. This Wizigradū is situate in the mid way betweene Buda and Strigoniū. Of the which fort or Castle, the highest tower so mounteth vpon the hil, that vnlesse it be for famine and lack of water they haue not to dread any enemy. Notwithstanding so it happened, that the lower peece being wonne, they in the higher tower abiding foure dayes without drink were cōpelled wyth liberty graunted of life and goodes, to yelde themselues. But the deuilish turkes keeping no fayth nor promise, slue them euerye one, onely Petrus Amandus the captaine of the peece, excepted: who priuely was conueyed by the Captayne of the Turkes, out of the slaughter. an. 1544.

To these moreouer may be added the winning of Nouum Castellum in Dalmatia, where he slue all that were wⁱn both soldiours & other,* for that they did not yeld themselues in time. Thus the turke, whether they yelded to hym or not, neuer spared the people and flocke of Christ.

As the false & cruell Turk was thus raging in Hungary, and intended further to rage without all mercy and pitie of the Christians, and easely might then haue preuayled and gone whether he would for that Charles the Emperour and Franciscus the french king were the same tyme in warre and hostilitie, and also other Christen Princes, as Henry Duke of Brunswike, against Iohn Fredericke Duke of Saxonie, also Princes and rulers were contending among themselues: beholde the gracious prouidence of our Lord and God toward vs, who seeing the misery & hauing pittie of hys poore Christians, sodeinly as with a snafle reined this raging beast, and brought him out of Eu^rope into his owne country againe, by occasion of the Per'sians, who were then in great preparation of war agaynst the turkes,* & had inuaded hys dominion. By reason wher^of the turkes was kept there occupied, fighting with the Persians a long continuance. Whiche warres at length being atchiued and finished, (wherein the sayd Turke lost great victoryes, with slaughter of many thousandes of his Turkes) he was not onely prouoked by the instigation of certaine euil disposed Hungarians, but also occasioned by the discord of Christian Princes, to returne agayn into Eu'rope, in hope to subdue all the partes thereof vnto his dominion. Whereunto,* when he had leuyed an armye incredible of such a multitude of turks, as y^e like hath not lightly bene heard of, see agayne the mercifull prouidence & pro'tection of our God toward his people. And as the Turke was thus intending to set forward with this innumerable multitude against y^e Christians, the hand of the Lorde sent such a pestilence through all the turkes army and dominions, reaching from Bithynia, and from Thracia, to Mace'donia and also to Hungary, that all the turkes possessions almost seemed nothing els, but as a heape of dead corses, whereby his viage for that time was stopped, and he almost compelled to seeke a new army.

Beside this plague of the Turkes aforesayde, whiche was worse to them then any warre, other lets also and domesticall calamities through Gods prouidence happened vnto Solymanus, the great rouer and robber of y^e world which stayd him at home from vexing the christians, especially touching hys eldest sonne Mustapha.

This Mustapha being hated and partly feared of Rustanus the chiefe counsailour about the Turke, and of Rosa y^e turkes concubine & after his wife, was diuers times complayned of to his father, accused, & at length so brought into suspicion and displeasure of the turke, by them aforesayd: that in conclusion hys father caused him to be sent for to hys paultion,* where 6. Turkes with visours were appoynted to put hym to death: Who comming vppon hym, put (after theyr manner) a small corde or bowstring full of knottes about hys necke, & so throwing him downe vpon y^e ground, not suffering hym to speake one word to hys father, w^t the switch therof throtled & strangled him to death his father standing in a secret corner by, and beholding the same. Whiche facte being perpetrate, afterward when the Turke would haue geuen to an other sonne of hys and of Rosa called Bianger, the treasures, horse, armour, ornamentes and the prouince of Mustapha his brother: Bianger crying out for sorow of his brothers death: phy of thee, sayth he to hys father, y^u impious and wretched dog, traytour, murderer, I cannot cal thee father, take the treasures the horse and armour of Mustapha to thy selfe: and wyth that taking out hys dagger, thrust it through hys own body. And thus was Solyman murderer & parricide of hys owne sonnes: which was in the yeare of our Lord. 1552.

Wherein notwithstanding is to be noted the singular prouidence and loue of the Lord toward his afflicted christians. For this Mustapha as he was couragious & great'ly expert and exercised in all practise of warre:* so had he a cruell hart, maliciously set to shed the bloud of christians: Wherefore great cause haue we to congratulate,* & to geue thanks to god, for y^e happy taking away of this Mustapha And no lesse hope also and good comfort we may conceaue of our louing Lord, hereby ministred vnto vs, to thinke y^e our mercifull God after these sore afflictions of his Christians vnder these 12. Turks afore recited: now after this Solyman intendeth some gracious good worke to Christendom, to reduce & release vs out of this so long & misera'ble turkish captiuitie: as may be hoped now by takyng away these yong impes of this impious generation, before they should come to worke theyr conceaued malice against vs: the Lord therefore be glorified and praysed. Amen.

Moreouer as I was in writing hereof, oportunely came to my handes a certayne writing out of Germanye,* certifiyng vs of suche newes & victory of late atchieued against the turke, as may not a little increase our hope and comfort vs, touching the decay and ruine of the Turks power & tyranny against vs. Which newes are these: y^t after y^r turkish tyrant had besieged with an army of 30000. men, the famous & strong town and castle of Iula in Hungary lyeng 40. dutch myles beyond the riuer Danubius, which cittye had, by the space of 6. weekes susteined many grieuous assaultes: God through hys great mercy & goodnes so comforted the sayd towne of Iula and the poore Christians therein, at theyr earnest prayers, that the Turke with Page 756 all hys hoste was driuen backe, by the handes of the generall, called Karetshim Laslaw and his valiaunt company, who not onely defended the said town, but also constrayned the Turks to retyre, to the great shame and confusion, with a great slaughter of the turkish rable: For the whiche the euerlasting God be prayed for euer.

The maner of the ouerthrow was this. As the foresaid generall did see his aduauntage w^t Captayne George, and other horsemen of the Sclesians and Hungarians, they set on y^e rereward of the Turkes and killed about 8000. of thē,* and tooke also some of their artillery and followed them so fast, y^r the Turkes were constrayned to flye into a marishe ground, and to breake the wheelles of the rest of theyr artil'lary, to saue themselues, and therwith they got a very rich booty, rescuing besides and taking from the Turks a great number of christian prisoners. Like thanks also are to be geuen to God,* for the prosperous successe geuen to Magot'schie the valiaunt Captaine of Erla, who making toward the Turkes, and recountring with the Tartarians, slue of them about 8. hundreth.

Not long after this, it happened through the like prouidence of our God, a turkish Captayne called Begen, accompanied w^t a thousand freshe horsemen came newly out of Turkey,* to go toward the citty named Quinque Ecclesiae, or Finffenkyrchen: with whome the Erle of Serin by the way did encounter, and in the right setting vpon hym, kil'led the captayne and tooke 8. Cammels, and 8. Moyles laden with treasure, and also got two red Guidons, wyth a whole great peece of rich cloth of gold, and with an other fayre and straunge Iewell. The horse of this foresayd turkish captayn, was betrayed and decked most richly. The saddle wherof had the pommell and the backe part couered ouer with plate of fine Arabicke golde, and the rest of the sadle, beside the sitting place, was plated with siluer very fayre gilded. The seate of the sadle was couered with purple veluet: the trappers and bridle beset with little Turkeys, and Rubies: Which horse was sent to Uienna vnto the Emperour Maximilian for a present.

Although the Earle would very fayne haue saued the Captayn, not knowing what he was, yet the Ianizarites labouring to carry away their captayne, so stiffly defended thēselues, that the Earle with his company, was constray'ned to kill both them and theyr Captayne. From whome the said Erle of Serin y^e same time got, xv. thousand Turkish and Hungarish Ducates: which mony was brought for the payment of the Turkishe souldiours in the towne aforesayd of Finffenkyrchen. &c. All which be good begynninges of greater goodnes to be hoped for hereafter, thorough the grace of Christ our Lord, especially if our Christian rulers and potentates, first the churchmen & prelates for theyr partes: then the ciuile powers & princes for their partes, with holding theyr affections a little, will turne their brawles & variance, into brotherly concord and agre'ment, which the Lord of peace put in theyr mindes to doe. Amen. Or otherwise if it will so please the Lorde, that the turke come further vpon vs, so as he hath begonne, for our punishment & castigation, his grace then geue to the flock of his poore Christians, constancie of fayth, pacience in suffering, and amendmēt of life: For so I vnderstand by publicke fame, although vncertainly rumored by the voyce of some,* that the Turkes power of late, this present yeare of our Lord 1566. hath perced the parties of Apulia within Italy, wasting and burning the space of an. 100. myles toward Naples. Which if it be certaine, it is to be feared, that the Turke hauing thus set in his foote, & feeling the sweetnes of Italy, will not so cease before he get in both head and shoulders also so farre into Italy, that he will display hys banners within the walles of Rome, & do with old Rome the like as Mahumete his great granfather did with newe Rome, the city of Constantinople, and as the Persians did with Babylon.

The causes why we haue so to iudge, he diuers: first y^e the sea of Rome hath bene defended hetherto and mayntayned with much blood,* and therefore it may seeme not vncredible, but that it will not long continue, but be lost wth blood agayne, according to the verdict of the Gospell: He that striketh with the sword, shall perish with y^e sword. &c. An other cause is, the fulfilling of the 18. chapter of the Apocalips: where is written that great Babilon shall fall & be made an habitation of deuils, and a denne of vnclane spirite, and a cage of filthye and vnclane byrdes: the fall wherof shal be like a milstone in the sea, that is, which shal not rise agayne. And this to come before the day of iudgement, the text of y^e sayd chapter doth apertly declare: where the wordes do follow, shewing that the kynges of y^e earth, and the marchantes which had to doe with the whoorishe City, standing a farre off for feare of the heate, and beholding the smoke of the sayd Cittie flaming and burning wth fire, shall be wayle and rue her destruction and desolacion &c. What citty is this, called great Babilon, whiche like a mylstone shall fall and burne, and be made an habitation of vnclane spirites, and beastes, let the reader construe. This is certayn and playne by these her kinges and marchantes standing a far off for feare, and beholding her burⁿing, that the destruction of this city (what cittye soeuer it be) shall be seene here in earth before the comming of the Lordes iudgement,* as may easely be gathered by these iij. circumstances, that is, by the stāding, the beholding, and be wayling of her marchauntes. By the which marchauntes and kynges of the earth, peraduenture may be signified, y^e Pope, the rich Cardinales, the great prelates and fat doctours, and other obedienciaries of the Romish sea: who at the comming of the Turkes, will not auenture theyr liues for theyr Church, but will flee the citty (no doubt) and stād a farre off from daunger: and when they shal see with their eyes, and heare with theyr cares the city of Rome to be set on fire and consumed by the cruell Turks, the sight thereof shall seeme to them piteous and lamentable, to behold the great and fayre city of Rome, the tall castle of S. Angell, y^e Popes mighty sea (where they were wont to fishe out such riches dignities, treasures, and pleasures) so to burne before theyr eyes, and to come to such vtter desolacion, which shal neuer be reedefied agayne, but shall be made an habitation of deuils and vnclane spirites, that is, Turkes and heathen Sultans, and barbarous Saracens. &c. This (I say) peraduenture may be the meaning of that propheticall place of the Apoc. not that I haue here anye thing to pronounce, but onely geue my gesse, what may probably be coniectured. But the end at length will make this and all other thinges more playne and manifest. For mistical prophesies lightly are neuer so well vnderstand, as when the euent of them is past and accomplished.

An other cause concurring with the causes aforesayde may be collected,* out of Paulus Iouius, who writing of y^e subuersion of Rhodes, which was as ye heard. an. 1522. vpon Christmas day, sayth that it chaunced sodenly the same day in Rome, that as Pope Hadrian the vi. was entring into the church to his seruice, sodeinly ouer hys head the vpper frontier or toppe of the chappel dore, which was of marble immediately as the pope was entring, fel downe and slue certayne of hys garde wayting vpon hym. Whereby peraduenture may be ment, that the ruine of Rome was not long after to folow the losse of Rhodes.

The fourth cause I borowe out of Ioannes Auentinus,* who in his thyrd booke alledging the names, but not the wordes of Hildegardis, Brigitte, and other propheticall men hath these wordes: Si vera sint carmina & vaticinia D. Hildegardae, & Brigittae. Sybillanum Germaniae, & Bardorum fatidicorū, qui ea quae nostro aeuo completa vidimus, longo ante tempore nobis cecinerunt: A grippinensis Colonia, nolimus, velimus, Turcarū caput erit,*&c. That is, if the sayings and prophesies of Hildegarde, of Brigitte, & of other propheticall persōs be true, which beyng foretold long before, we haue seene now in these our dayes accōplished: y^e town of Colen wil we, nil we, must needes be the head city of y^e turks. &c.

And this I write not as one pronouncing agaynst the City of Rome, what wil happen, but as one fearing what may fall. Which if it come to passe (as I pray God it do not) then shall the Pope well vnderstand, whether hys wrong vnderstanding of the Scriptures, & his false flattering glo'sers vpon the same, haue brought hym.

Wherefore my counsaile is to the Pope,* & all hys Popish mayntayners and vpholders to humble themselues, & to agree with theyr brethren by tyme, letting all contention fall: lest that while the Byshop of Rome shal striue to be the highest of all other Byshops, it so fall out shortly, y^t the byshop of Rome shalbe found the lowest of all other Byshops, or peraduenture no byshop at all.

Wherevpon also an other cause may be added, taken out of Hieronunns Sauonarola, who prophecieth that one shall come ouer the Alpes lyke vnto Cyrus, & destroy Italy. Wherof see more, pag. 737.

Thys Solimanus, if he be yet aliue, hath now reigned 46. yeares,* who began the same yeare, in the which y^e Emperour Charles the v, was crowned, which was an. 1520. and so hath continued by Gods permission, for a scourge to the Christians, vnto this yere now present. 1566. This Solyman by one of hys Concubines, had hys eldest sonne called Mustapha. By an other Concubine called Rosa, he had foure sonnes, Mahumete, Baiazates, Zelymus, and Gianger. Of the whiche sonnes, Mustapha and Gianger were slayn (as ye heard before) by the meanes of their own father. And thus much concerning the wretched tyranny of the Turkes out of the authors here vnder written.

A Notice touching the miserable persecution, slaughter and captiuity of the Christians vnder the Turkes.

HEtherto thou hast heard (Christian Reader) the lamētable persecutions of these latter dayes, wrought by y^e Turkes agaynst the people and seruauntes of Christ. In the reading wherof, such as sitte quietly at home, & be farre frō ieopardy, may see what misery there is abroad, y^e know^rledge and reading wherof, shall not be vnprofitable for all christians earnestly to wey & consider, for that many there be, which falsely deceauing themselues, imagin that Christianity is a quiet and restrull state of life, full of pleasure & solace in this present worlde, when in deede it is nothing lesse, testified by the mouth of our Sauour himselfe, who rightly defining his kingdome, teacheth vs that his kingdome is not of this world, premonishing vs also before, y^t in this worlde we must looke for affliction, but in hym wee shall haue peace. Examples hereof in all partes of thys hystory through all ages are plenteous and euidēt to be sene, whether we turne our eyes to the first x. persecutiōs in the primitiue Church during the first 3. hundreth yeares after Christ: or whether we consider the latter 3. hūdreth yeares in this last age of the Churche, wherein the poore flocke of Christ hath bene so afflicted, oppressed & deuoured, y^e it is hard to say whether haue bene more cruell agaynst y^e Christians, the infidel Emperors of Rome in the primitiue age of the Church, or els those barbarous Turkes in these our latter times of the Church now present.

Thus from time to time the Churche of Christ almost hath had litle or no rest in this earth, what for the Heathen Emperours on the one side, what for the proude Pope on the other side, and on the third side what for the barbarous Turke: for these are and haue bene from the beginning the three principall & capital enemies of the Church of Christ, signified in the Apocalips by the beast, the false Lamb, and the false Prophet, from whom wēt out three foule spirites like frogges, to gather together all the kinges of the earth to the battell of the day of the Lord God almighty.* Apocal. 16. The cruelty and malice of these 3. enemyes agaynst Christes people hath bene such, that to iudge which of thē did most excede in cruelty of persecution, it is hard to say: but y^e it may be thought that the bloody & beastly tyrannye of the Turkes especially aboute the rest, incomparably surmounteth all the afflictions and cruell slaughters that euer were seene in any age, or read of in any story: In so much y^e there is neither history so perfect, nor writer so diligēt, who writing of the miserable tyranny of the Turkes, is able to expresse or comprehend the horrible examples of theyr vnspeakable cruelty and slaughter exercised by these 12. Turkish tyrants,* vpon poore Christē mens bodies, within the compasse of these latter 3. hūdreth yeares, wherof although no sufficient relation can be made, nor nūber expressed: yet to geue to the Reader some generall gesse or view thereof: let vs first perpend and consider what dominions & Empyres, how many countries, kingdomes, prouinces, cities townes, strong holdes and fortes, these Turkes haue surprised and wonne from the Christians. In all which victories, being so many, this is secondly to be noted, that there is almost no place, which the turkes euer came to and subdued, where they did not either slay all y^e inhabitants therof, or led away the most part therof into such captiuitie and slauery, that they continued not long after aliue: or els so li'ued, that death almost had bene to them more tollerable.

Like as in the time of the first persecutions of the Romaine Emperors, the saying was, that no man could step with his foote in all Rome, but should tread vpon a Martyr: so here may be sayd, that almost there is not a towne, city, or village in all Asia, Grecia, also in a great part of Europa, and Aphrica, whose streetes haue not flowed with bloud of the Christians, whom the cruell turks haue murthered. Of whom are to be sene in histories, heapes of soul'diours slaine, of mē & womē cut in pieces, of childrē sticked vpō poles & stakes, whō these detestable turks most spitefull (& y^e in the sight of theyr parentes) vse to gore to death: some they drag at theyr horse taites & famish to death: some they teare in pieces, tying theyr armes and legges to foure horses: other some they make marks to shoot at: vpō some they trye theyr swords, how deep they can cut and slash, as ye before haue read, pag. 777, The aged & feeble they tread vnder theyr horses: womē w^t child they spare not, but ripp theyr bodyes, and cast the infants into the fire, or otherwise destroy them▪* Whether the Christians yeld to them, or yeld not, all is a matter As in theyr promises there is no truth: so in theyr victoryes there is no sense of manhood or mercy in them, but they make hauocke of all.

So the Citizens of Croia, after they had yelded & were all promised theyr liues, were all destroyd and that horribly. In Mysia, after the king had geuen himselfe to the turkes hand, hauing promise of life, Mahumet the Turke slew him with his owne hands. The Princes of Rasia had both theyr eies put out with •asens redde hoate set before them. Theodosia, otherwise called Capha, was also surrēdered to the Turke, hauing the like assuraunce of life and safety: & yet contrary to the league, the Citizens were put to the sword and slaine. At the winning and yelding of Le•bos, what a number of young men and children were put vpon sharpe stakes and poles, and so thrust thorough? At the winning of the Citty of Buda,* what tyrannye was shewed and exercised agaynst the poore Christians, whiche had yelded themselues, and agaynst the two Dukes Christopher Bisserer and Ioannes Tranbinger, cōtrary to the promise and handwriting of the Turke, is to be sene in the story of Melchior Soiterus, de Bello Pannonico.

The like also is to be read in the story of Bernardus de Breydenbach,* who writing of the taking of Hydrimum, a City in Apulia, testifieth of the miserable slaughter, of the young men there slayne, of old men troden vnder the horse feet, of matrons & virgines rauished, of women with child cut & rent a pieces, of the Priestes in the Churches slayne, & of the Archbishop of that Citty,* who being an aged man and holding the crosse in his hands, was cut a sonder with a wooden saw. &c. The same Bernerdus also wryting of the ouerthrow of Nigropontus, otherwise called Chalcides, an. 1471. describeth the like terrible slaughter: whiche there was exercised: where the Turke, after hys promise geuē before to the cōtrary,* most cruelly caused all the youth of Italy to be pricked vpon sharp stakes: some to be dashed against the hard stones,* other some to be cut in sonder in y^e midst, and other mo with other kinds of forments to be put to death: in so much that all the streetes and wayes of Chalcides did flowe with the bloud of them, whiche were there slayn. In which history the foresayd writer recordeth one memorable example of maydely chastity, worthy of all Christians to be noted and commended.* The story is tolde of the Pretors daughter of that City, who being the onely daughter of her father, & noted to be of an exceeding singuler beuty, was saued out of the slaughter, & brought to Maḥumet the turke, to be his concubine: But she denying to consent to his turkishe appetite and filthynes, was commaunded therewith to be slayne and murthered, and so died she a Martyr, keping both her fayth and her body vndefiled vnto Christ Iesus her spouse. Ibid.

The like cruelty also was shewed vpon them whiche kept the Castle, & afterward yielding themselues vpō hope of the turkes promise, were slayne euery one. What should I speake of the miserable slaughter of Methone, & the Citizēs therof dwelling in Peloponesus: who seing no other remedy but needes to come into the Turkes hands, set the barne on fire where they were gathered together, mē, women, and children: * some women also with child volūtarily cast themselues into the Sea, rather then they would sustayne the Turkes captiuiti. Vide pag. 734.

Miserable it is to beholde,  long to recite, incredible to beleue all the cruel parts and horrible slaughters wrought by these miscreantes, agaynste the Christians, through all places almost of the world, both in Asia, in Africa, but especially in Europa. Who is able to recite the innumerable societys and companyes of the Grecians Martyred by the Turkes sword in Achaia, Attica, Thessalia, Macedonia, Epirus, and all Peloponesus? besides y^e Iland of Rhodes and other Ilandes, and Cyclades adiacēt in the sea about, numbred to 52. of the which also Pathmos was one, wher S. Iohn being banished, wrote his reuelations. Where did euer the Turkes sette any foote, but the bloud of Christians there, without pittie or measure, went to wracke? & what place or prouince is there almost thorow y^e world, wher y^e turks either haue not perced, or are not like shortly Page 755 to enter?  In Thracia, & through all the coastes of Danubius, in Bulgaria, Dalmatia, in Seruia, Transilvania, Bosna, in Himgaria, also in Austria, what hauocke hath bene made by them, of Christen mens bodies, it will rue any Christen hart to remember. At the siege of Moldaui, at the winning of Buda, of Pesta, of Alba, of Walpo, Strigonium, Sociosia, Tathe, Wizigradum, Nouum, Castellum in Dalmatia, Belgradum, Uaradinum, Quinque ecclesie: also at the battel of Uerna, where Ladislaus king of Polonie with all his army almost, through the rashnes of the Popes Cardinall were slayne: at the winning moreouer of Xabiacchus, Lyssus, Dinastrum: at the siege of Guntza, and of the faythfull towne Scorad, where the nūber of the shotte agaynst theyr walles,  at the siege thereof, were reckoned to 2539. likewise at the siege of Uienna where all the Christian captiues were brought before the whole army and slayne, and diuers drawne in pieces with horses: but especially at the winning of Constantinople aboue mentioned, pag. 706. also at Croia & Methone, what beastly cruelty was shewed, it is vnspeakeable. For as in Constantinople, Mahumer the dronken Turk neuer rose from diner, but he caused euery daye, for his disport. 300. Christiā captiues of the nobles of that City to be slayn before his face:  So in Methone, after that his captayn Omares had sent vnto him at Constantinople 500. prisoners of the Christians, the cruell tyrant commaunded them all to be cut and deuided in sonder by the middle, & so being slain to be throwne out into the fieldes.

Leonicus Chalcondyla, writing of the same story, addeth moreouer a prodigious narratiō (if it be true) of a brute Oxe, whiche being in the fieldes, and seing the carcasses of the dead bodies so cut in two, made there a loud noise after the lowing of his kind and nature: & afterward comming to the quarters of one of the dead bodyes lying in the field, first tooke vp the one halfe,  & then comming agayne, tooke vp likewise the other halfe, and so (as he could) ioyned thē both together. Which being espyed of them which saw the doing of the brute Oxe, and maruelling thereat, and word being brought thereof to Mahumet, he commaunded the quarters agayne to be brought, where they were before, to proue whether the beast would come agayne: who fayled not (as the author recordeth) but in like sort as before, taking the fragmentes of the dead corps, layde them agayne together. It foloweth more in the author, howe that Mahumet being astonied at the straunge wonder of the Oxe, commaunded the quarters of the christiā mans body to be interred, and the Oxe to be brought to his house, and was much made of. Some sayd it to be the body of a Uenetian: some affirmed, that he was an Illyrian: but whatsoeuer he was certayne it is, that the Turk himselfe was much more beastiall then was the very brute Oxe: which being a beast shewed more sence of humanity to a dead man, thē one mā did to an other Ex Leonie. Chalcondyla.

*To this crueltye adde moreouer, that beside these 500. Methonians thus destroyed at Constantinople, in the said City of Methone, all the townes men also were slayne by the forsaid Captayn Omares, and among them theyr Bishop likewise was put to death. Ex Andrea de Lacuna, & ex Wolfgango & alijs.

Iohn Faber in his Oration made before king Henrye the 8. at the appointment of king Ferdinandus, and declaring therein the miserable cruelty of the Turkes toward al christians, as also toward the bishops and ministers of the church, testifieth how that in Mitilene, in Constantinople, and Trapezunda, what Byshops & Archbishops, or other ecclesiasticall and religious persons the Turks could find they brought them out of the cityes into the fieldes, there to be slaine like Oxen and Calues. The same Faber also writing of the battell of Solyman in Hungary, where Ludouicus the king of Hūgary was ouerthrown, declareth that 8. Byshops in the same field were slayne. And moreouer, when the Archbishop of Strigon,* and Paulus the Archbishop Colossensis were found dead, Solyman caused thē to be taken vp, & to be beheaded and chopt in small pieces. an. 1526.

What christian hart will not pity the incredible slaughter done by the Turkes in Euboia, where as the sayd Faber testifieth that innumerable people were sticked & gored vpon stakes, diuers were thrust through with a hoat iron, childrē and infants not yet wayned from the mother were dashed agaynst the stones, & many cut a sūder in the midst. Ex Iohan Fabro & alijs.

But neuer did country taste and feele more the bitter & deadly tyranny of the Turkes, then did Rasia, called Mysia inferior, & now Seruia. Where (as writeth Wolfgangus Dreschlerus) the prince of the sayde countrey being sent for, vnder fayre pretence of words & promises, to come & speak with the Turke, after he was come of his own gentlenes, thinking no harme, was apprehended & wretchedly & fasly put to death, & his skin flain of, his brother & sister brought to Constantinople for a triumph, and all the nobles of his country (as Faber addeth) had theyr eyes put out. &c.

Briefly to conclude, by the vehement and furious rage of these cursed cayrifes, it may seme that Satan the old dragon, for the great hatred he beareth to Christ, hath styred them vp to be the butchers of all christen people, inflaming theyr beastly hartes with suche malice & cruelty against the name and religion of Christ, that they degenerating frō the nature of men to deuils,* neither by reason wil be ruled, nor by any bloud or slaughter satisfied. Like as in the primitine age of the Church, and in the time of Dioclesian and Maximiliā, whē the deuil saw that he could not preuaile against the person of Christ which was risen agayne, he turned all his fury vpon his sely seruants, thinking by the Romayn Emperours, vtterly to extinct the name and profession of Christ, out from the earth: So in this latter age of y^e world Satan being let lose agayne rageth by the Turkes, thinking to make no end of murdering and killing, till he haue brought (as he entendeth) the whole church of Christ, with all the professors therof, vnder foot. But the Lord (I trust) will once send a Constantinus to vanquish proud Maxētius: Moyses to drowne indurate Pharaο: Cyrus to subdue the stout Babilonian.

And thus much hitherto touching our christian brethrē,* which were slain & destroyed by these blasphemous turks. Now forsomuche as besides these aforesayde, many other were pluckt away violently from theyr country, from their wiues & children from liberty, & from all their possessions, into wretched captiuitie and extreme pouerty, it remaineth likewise to entreat somewhat also cōcerning the cruel maner of the Turkes handling of the sayd christian captiues. And first here is to be noted that y^t turke neuer cōmeth into Europe to war against the christiās,* but there foloweth after his army, a great number of brokers & marchaunts, such as buy men & children to sell again, bringing with thē long cheines in hope of great cheates: In y^e which cheynes they linke thē by 50. & 60. together, such as remayne vndestroyd with the sword, whō they buy of the spoiles of thē y^t rob & spoyle the Christian countryes: Which is lawfull for any of the Turkes armye to doe, so that the tenth of their spoyle or pray (whatsoeuer it be) be reserued to the head Turke, that is, to the great mayster theefe.

Of such as remayne for tithe,* if they be aged (of whom very fewe be reserued aliue, because little protite commeth of that age) they be solde to the vse of husbandry or keeping of beastes. If they be young men or women, they be sent to certein places, there to be instructed in theyr language and Artes, as shall be most profitable for theyr aduauntage, & such are called in theyr tongue Sarai: and the first care of the Turkes is this, to make them deny the Christian religion, and to be circumcised: and after that they are appointed euery one as he semeth most apte, either to the learning of their lawes, or els to learn the feates of war. Their first rudimēt of war is to handle the bow, first beginning with a weake bow, and so as they growe in strength, comming to a stronger bow, & if they misse the marke, they are sharply beaten:& theyr allowance is two pence or three pence a day till they come & take wages to serue in war. Some are brought vp for the purpose to be placed in the number of y^e wicked Ianizarites, that is, the order of the Turks champions, which is the most abhominable cōdition of al other. Of these Ianizaraites, see before pag. 736. And if any of the foresayd yong men or children shal appeare to excell in any beuty, him they so cutte, that no part of that whiche nature geueth to man, remayneth to be seene in all his body, wherby while the freshnes of age continueth, he is compelled to serue theyr abhominable abomination: and when age cōmeth, then they serue in stead of Eunuches to wayte vpon Matrones, or to keepe horses and Mules, or els to be scullians and drudges in theyr kitchins.

Such as be young maydens & beautifull, are deputed for concubines.* The whiche be of meane beautye serue for matrones to theyr drudgery worke in theyr houses & chābers, or els are put to spinning and such other labors, but so that it is not lawful for them either to professe their christian religiō, or euer to hope for any liberty. And thus much of them which fall to the Turke by tithe.

The other which are bought and sold amongst priuate subiects, first are allured with faire words and promises to take circumcision. Which if they will doe, they are more fauourably entreated, but all hope is taken from them of returning agayne into theyr country, which if they attempt the payne therof is burning. And if such comming at lēgth to liberty, will mary, they may: but then theyr children remayne Page 759 boud to the Lord, for him to sell at his pleasure: and therefore such as are wise amongst thē wil not mary. They which refuse to be circumcised, are miserably handled: for example wherof, the author (which geueth testimony hereof) doth inferre his owne experience.

Such captiues as be expert in any manuall art or occupation can better shift for thēselues: but contrariwise, they whiche haue no handycraft to liue vpon, are in worse case. And therefore such as haue bene brought vp in learning, or be priests or noble men,* & such other, whose tēder educatiō can abide no hardnes, are the least reputed, & most of all other neglected of him that hath y^e sale or keping of thē, for y^t he seeth lesse profit to rise of them, then of the other: & therefore no cost of raymēt is bestowed vpon them, but they are caried about bare head, & barefoote, both sommer & winter in frost and snow. And if any faynt and be sicke in the way, there is no resting in any Inn, but first he is driuē forward with whips, and it that will not serue, he is let peradventure vpon some horse: or if his weakenesse be such, that hee cannot sit, then is he layde ouerthwart the horse vpon hys belly, like a Calfe, and if he chaunce to dye, they take of hys garment such as he hath, and throw him in a ditch.

In the way moreouer, beside the cōmon chayne, which doth inclose thē all the hads also of euery one are maniced which is because they shoulde not harme theyr leaders, for many times it happened y^t x. persons had the leading of 50. captiues: & whē night came, theyr feet also were fettered, so y^t they lodged in no house, but lay vpon the groūd al night.

*The yong women had a litle more gentlenes shewed, being caried in paniers on the day time. But when nyght came, pity it was to heare the miserable crying out of such as were inclosed wthin by reason of the filthy iniuries which they suffred by their cariers, in so much that the yong tēder age of 7. or 8. yeres, as wel of y^e one sexe as of y^e other could not saue thē frō y^e most filthy villany of the bestiall turkes.

When the morning cometh, they are brought foorth to the market, to sale, where the buyer if he be disposed plucking of theyr garments, vieweth all the bones & ioyns of theyr body: and if he like them, he geueth his price, and carieth thē away into miserable seruitude, either to tilling of their groūd, or to pasture their cattel, or some other straūge kind of misery incredible to speake of: In so much that the author reporteth, that he hath sene himselfe, certeine of such Christen captiues yoked together like horse and oxen,* and to draw the plough. The maid seruaunts likewise are kept in perpetuall toile and work in close places, where neither they come in sight of any man, neither be they permitted to haue any talke with theyr fellowe seruauntes. &c. Such as are committed to keep beastes, lye abroad day and night in the wilde fieldes, without house and harbor, and so chaunging their pastour, goe from mountayne to mountayne: of whom also, beside the office of keeping the beastes, other handy labour is exacted at spare houres, such as pleaseth theyr maysters to put vnto them.

Out of this misery there is no way for them to flye, especially for them that are caryed into Asia beyond the seas: Or if any do attempt so to do, he taketh his time chiefly about haruest, when he may hide himselfe all the day time in the corne, or in woodes, or marishes, and finde foode: and in the night onely, hee flyeth and had rather bee de••outed of wolues and other wild beastes, then to returne agayne to his maister. In theyr flying they vse to take with them an hatchet and coardes, that when they come to the sea side, they may cut downe trees, and binde together the endes of them, and so, where the sea of Helle•pontus is narrowest, about the Sestos and Abidos, they take the sea, sitting vpon trees, where, if they wurde & tide do serue luckely, they may cut ouer in foure or fiue houres: But the most part either perish in the floudes,* or are driuen backe agayne vpon the coastes of Asia, or els be deuoured of wilde bestes in woodes, or perish with hunger and famine. If any escape ouer the seas aliue into Europe, by the way they enter into no towne, but wairder vpon the moūtaynes, following onely the Northfarre for theyr guide.

As touching such townes & prouinces, which are won by the Turke, and wherein the Christians are suffered to liue vnder tribute: first all the nobility there they kill and make away, the churchmen and Clergy hardly they spare The Churches with the belles & all the furniture thereof, either they cast down, or els they com•ert to the vse of their owne blasphemous Religion, leauing to the Christians, certayn olde and blinde chappels, which when they decay, it is permitted to our me to repayre the agayne, for a great somme of mony geuen to the Turke: Neither be they permitted to vse any open preaching or ministration. But only in silence and by stealth, to frequent together. Neither is it lawfull for any Christian to beare office within the city or prouince, nor to beare weapon, nor to weare any garment like to the Turkes. And if any contumely or blasphemy, be it neuer so great, be spoken agaynst the, or agaynst Christ, yet muste thou beare it, and holde thy peace. Or if thou speake one word agaynst theyr religion, thou shalt be compelled (whether thou wilt or no) to be circumcised: And then if thou speake one word agaynst Mahumet, thy punishment is fire and burning. And if it chaunce a Christian being on horsebacke, to meet or passe by a Musulman, that is a Turkish priest, he must light from his horse, & with a lowly looke, deuoutly reuerēce & adore y^e Musulman: Or if he do not, he is beatē down frō his horie w^t clubs & slaues.

Furthermore, for theyr tribute they pay the fourth part of theyr substance and gayne to the Turke: beside the ordinary tribute of the Christians, whiche is to paye for euery polle within his family, a ducket vnto the Turke: which if the parentes cannot doe, they are compelled to sell theyr children into bondage. Other being not able to pay go chei'ned in fetters from dore to dore begging, to make vp theyr payment, or els must lye in perpetuall prison.

And yet notwithstanding, whē the christians haue discharged all duties:* it remaineth free for the turkes to take vp among the christians children, whom the best like, and thē to circumcise and to take them away being yong, from the sight of theyr parēts, to far places, to be brought vp for the Turkes wars, so that they may not returne to them agayne: but first are taught to forget Christ, & then theyr parents: so that if they come agayne amongst thē, yet are they not able to know theyr kinsfolkes and parents.

This misery passing all other miseries, no man is able w^e tounge to vtter,* or with words to expresse. What weping & teares, what sorow and lamentatiō, what groning, sighes, and deep dolor doth teare & rent a sonder the woefull harts of the sely parents, at the plucking away of their babes and children? to see theyr sonnes & theyr own childrē, whō they haue borne and bred vp to the seruice of Christ Iesus the sonne of God, now to be drawn away violētly frō thē to y^e warfare of Satan, and to fight agaynst Christ? to see theyr babes borne of christiā blood, of christiās to be made turks and so to be pluckt out of their armes and out of their sight without hope euer to returne to them agayne: * to liue perpetually with aliens, barbarous & blasphemous Turkes, and so to become of the number of them which are called fatherles and motherles.

Albeit the same childrē afterward do greatly degenerate from the fayth of Christ, yet very many of them haue priuily about them the gospell written of S. Iohn, *In principiō erat verbum. &c. Which for a token of remembraunce of theyr christian fayth, they cary vnder theyr arme hole, written in greek and araby. Who greatly desire, and long looke for the reuenging sword of y^e Christians to come & deliuer them out of theyr dolorous thraldome and captiuitie according as the Turkes themselues haue a prophecy, * & greatly stand in feare of the same. Wherof more shalbe said (Christ willing) in the chapter following.

And thus haue ye heard y^e lamētable afflictions of our christian brethren vnder the cruell tyranny & captiuitie of y^e turks, passing all other captiuities that euer haue bene to Gods people, either vnder Pharaō in Egypt, or vnder Nabuchodonosor in Babilō, or vnder Antiochus in y^e tyme of the Machabees. Vnder the which captiuitie, if it so please the Lord to haue his spouse the church to be nurtered, hys good will be done and obeyed. But if this misery come by the negligence & discorde of one christian guides & leaders, then haue we to pray and cry to our Lord God, •yther to geue better harts to out guiders and rulers, or els better guides and rulers to his flocke.

And these reoubles and afflictions of our Christen brethren suffered by the Turkes, I thought good and profitable for our countrey people here of Englande to knowe, for so much as by the ignoraunce of these, and such like hystories worthy of consideration, I see much inconnenēce doth folow. Whereby it commeth to passe, that because we English men being far of from these countreies, * and little knowing what misery is a broad, are the lesse moued with zeale & compassion to tender theyr greuaunces, and to pray for them, whose troubles we know not. Whereupō also foloweth, that we not cōsidering the miserable state of other are the les gratefull to God, when any tranquility by hym to vs is graunted. And if any-title cloud of perturbation arise vpon vs, be it neuer so •ile, as pouerty, lesse of liuing, or a litle banishment out of our countrey for the Lodes cause, we make a great matter the reat, and all because wee going no further then on• own country, and onely feeling our own crosse, do not compare that which we f•ele, with the great crosses, where unto the Churches of Christ commonly in other places abroad are subiect. Which if we dyd Page 760 rightly vnderstand, & earnestly consider, and pōder in our mindes, neither would we so excessiuey forgette our selues in time of our prosperity geuen vs of God: nor yet so impatiētly be troubled, as we are in time of our aduersity, and all because either we heare not, or els we pōder not the terrible crosses which the Lord layeth vpon our other brethren abroad in other nations, as by this present story here prefixed may appeare.

*NOw consequently remayneth, as I haue shewed hitherto what tyranny hath bene vsed of the Turkes agaynst Christes people, so to declare likewise, how far this tyranny of the Turkes hath extended and spread it selfe, de'scribing as in a table, to the Christē Reader, what landes, countreies and kingdomes the Turkes haue wonne, and got from Christendome, to the intent that when Christen princes shal behold the greatnes of the Turks dominions spread almost through al the world, and how litle a part of Christianity remayneth behinde, they may thereby vnderstand the better, howe it is time now for them to bestyre them, if euer they thinke to do any good in Gods Church. And therefore to make a cōpendious draught as in a briefe table, of such countreies, kingdomes, and dominions, gott from vs by the Turkes, we will first beginne with Asia, describing what tractes, countryes, cityes and Churches, the Turke hath surprised, and violently pluckt away from the society of Christian dominions, taking onely suche, as be most principall, and chiefly them that be in Scripture conteyned, for that it were to long to discourse all and singular such places by name, as the Turke hath vnder hys subiection.

The world being deuided commonly into three parts, Asia, Africa, and Europa, Asia is counted to be the greatest in compas, conteining as much as both the other, and is deuided into 2. portions, the one called Asia Maior: the other called Asia minor. And although the Empery of the Turke extendeth vnto them both: yet especially his dominion standeth in the other Asia, which is called Asia Minor, which reacheth from the coastes of Europa, vnto Armenia Maior, beyond the riuer Euphrates, and comprehendeth these regions and Cityes vnder written.

facte of a worthy Uirgine: who at what time the Turkes were besieging a certayne towne in Lesbos, and had cast downe a greate part of the walles, so that all y^e Townesmen had geuen ouer, putting on mans harnesse, stepped forth into the breach, where not onely she kept the Turkes from entring in, h^t also slewe of them a great sor[•]. The Citizens seeing the rare courage,*and good successe of the Mayden, tooke to them agayne theyr hartes and harnes, and so lustely layd about them, that an incredible number of the Turkes were slayne. The rest being repulsed from the land, reculed into theyr ships: who being then pursued by a Nauy of Calisa, were worthelye dis•omfited likewise vpon the sea. And thus was the Ile of Lesbos at that time, by a poore Uirgine, that is, by the stronge hand of the Lord working in a weake Creature preserued from the Turkes. Ex Aene.sil. Et SebMunst. Lib. 5.

Beside these Regions and Countryes of Asia minor,*aboue described, Seb. Munster in the fift booke of his Cosinography, declareth moreouer, that the Turkes and Sultannes haue vnder theyr subiection, both Arabia, Persia, and also India exterior wherein is Calecute. The which Persia, although it be vnder the Sophi, which is an enemy to the Turke, yet it is to be thought that he is a Sultane, one of the Turkyshe and Mahometish Religion. This Persia and India were once seasoned with Christes Gospell, as may appeare by the primitiue Church, pag. 98. And thus haue you the partes of Asia described,*which in times past being almost Christened, do now serue vnder the Turke.

After the description of Asia, let vs nexte consider the partes and countryes of Aphrike: Where although the greatest parte either consisteth in deserts desolate, or is possessed with Prester Iohn, which professeth Christ and his gospell: yet the Turke hath there also no litle portion vnder his dominion, as

As I was writing hereof, a certayne sōūd of lamentable newes was brought vnto vs howe the Turke, whome wee had hoped before to haue bene repulsed by the Emperour Maximilian out of Christendome, hath now of late this present yeare. 1566. got the towne of Gyula about Transyluania, after they had susteined 16 of his most forceable assaultes, destroying in the same most cruelly, many thousand of our chisten brethren, men, women, and children: but because we haue no full certaynty, we will referre y^e story therof, to further information,

The Prophecyes of the holy Scriptures considered touching the comming vp and finall ruine and destruction of this wicked kingdome of the Turkes, with the Reuelations and foreshewinges also of other authours concerning the same

FOR so muche as you haue hitherto sufficiently heard, to what quantity & largenes the dominon of the Turkes hath encreased,* & doe vnderstand what cruell tyranny these wretched miscreants haue and do dayly practise most haynously wheresoeuer they come, agaynst the seruants and professors of Christ: it shall not be vnprofitable, but rather necessary, and to our great comfort, to cōsider and examine in the Scriptures, with what prophesyes the holy spirit of the Lord hath premonished and forewarned vs before, of these heauy persecutions to come vpon his people by thys horrible Antichrist. For as the gouernment and constitution of times and states of monarchies & pollicies fall not to Page 763 vs by blind chaūce, but be administred and allotted vnto vs from aboue: so it is not to be supposed, that such a great alteration and mutation of kingdomes, such a terrible & generall persecutiō of Gods people, almost through all Chri|stēdome, and such a terrou of the whole earth, as is now moued and gendred by these Turkes, cōmeth without the knowledge, sufferauce and determination of the Lord before, for such endes and purposes, as his deuine wisdom doth best know. For the better euidēce & testimony wherof, he hath left in his Scriptures sufficiēt instructiō, & declaration, whereby we may plainly see to our great cōfort, how these greeuous afflictions & troubles of the Church, though they be sharpe & heauy vnto vs, yet they come not by chaūce or by mā's working onely, but euen as the Lord himselfe hath appointed it, and doth permit the same.

And first to begin with the tyme of the old Testament let vs seriously aduise & ponder, not onely the Scriptures & Prophecies therein conteined, but also let vs cōsider the whole state, order, and regimēt of that people: the Church I meane of the Israelites. For although the Scriptures and Prophetes of the old Testament, were properly sent to that people, & haue their relatiō properly to things done or thāt should be done, in that cōmōwealth, of which prophetes, Iohn Baptist was the last & made an end, as our Sauour himselfe witnesseth, saying: The law and Prophetes be vnto y^e tyme of Iohn. &c. Yet notwithstāding the sayd people of that old Testamēt, beareth a liuely Image & resemblaunce of the vniuersall Church which should folow, plāted by the sonne of God through the whole earth: So that as the Prophetes of God speaking to them from the mouth & word of God, prophesied what should come to passe in that people: so likewise the whole course & Hystory of those Israelites, exemplifieth & beareth a Prophetical image to vs, declaring what is to be looked for in y^e vniuersall Church of God dispersed through the world, plā^ted in Christ Iesus his sonne, according as Phil. Melan[•]thon grauely gathering vpon the same, testifieth in diuers places, in his Commentary vpon the Prophete Daniell.

*As first the History of godly Abell slayne by wicked Cain, what doth it importe, or Prophecie, but the conditiō of the people and seruantes of God, which commonly go to wracke in this world, and are oppressed by the contrary part, which belongeth not to God?

The like may be said also of Isaac, and Ismaell: of Iacob and Esau. Of whō, those two which were the children of promise, and belonged to the election of God, were persecuted in this world, of the other, whiche were reiected. Where moreouer is to be noted cōcerning Ismaell, that of his stocke after the fleshe,* came the Saracens: whose sect the Turkes do now professe & mainteine. And as Ismaell had but xii. sonnes: so it were to be wished of God, that this Solyman which is the twelue of the Turkish generation, may be the last. But of this, better occasion shall folow (the Lord willyng) hereafter.

Furthermore, of the xii. tribes of Israel, the sacrate history so reporteth, that after they had a long season cōtinued together, by the space of. 8. or. 9. C. yeares, at length, for their idolatrie, & transgression of their forefathers. x. tribes of them were cut of, and dispersed amōg the Gentiles. 130. yeares before the captiuitie of Babilon: so that but ij. tribes onely remayned free, and they also at last, after a. 130. yeares, were captiued vnder the Babylonians, for a certaine time.* No otherwise hath it happened with y^e Church of Christ almost in the vniuersall world, of which Church the greatest part both in Asia, in Africa, & almost in Europe (where the holy Apostles so laboured and trauailed) we see now to be disparced among the Turkes, and their cādlestickes remoued (the Lord of his great grace, reduce them agayne. Amen:) So that of xij. partes of Christendome, which was once planted in Christ, scarce ij, partes remayne cleare, and they how long they shall so continue, the Lord knoweth: And albeit thorough the mercy of the Lord, they escape the daūger of the Turkes, yet haue they bene so beaten with the Pope, that they had bene better almost to haue bene in the Turkes handes.

Agayne, after the sayd Israelites returned, being resto^red of Cyrus, let vs consider well their story, the continuance of tyme, the maner of their regimentes, and what afflictions they sustained in the tyme of the Machabees: and we shall see a liuely representation of these our dayes expressed in that Propheticall people,* accordyng as S. Paul writyng of them, sheweth how all thynges happened to them in figures: that is the actiōs and doynge of that one nation, be as figures and types of greater matters, what shall happen in the latter times of the whole Church vniuersally in Christ collected.

So the transmigration & deliuerance agayne of those two tribes,* declareth to vs y^e affliction of Christes Church for sinne: and yet y^t God will not vtterly reiect his people for his sonnes sake, as by manifold examples of y^e Church hetherto may well appeare.

Againe, the continuance of the law first geuen by Moses, vnto the destruction of the sayde people by Titus, amounteth to 1564. yeares:.* So we counting the age of the new Testament, and reckening from the day of our redemption vnto this present, be come now to the yeare 1534. lacking but only 33. yeares of the full number.

Likewise in counting the yeares from their deliuerāce out of captiuitie,* to the ende of their dissolution, we finde 564. yeares, during which yeares, as the Churche of the Iewes was not gouerned vnder the authoritie of kings, but the high Priests tooke all the power and authoritie to themselues: so we Christians for the space especially of these later 564. yeares,* what haue we seene and felt, but only the iurisdiction and domination of the Pope and his high Priests, plaieng the Rex in all countreys, and ruling the whole: whereby, by the count of these yeares, it is to be thought the daye of the Lordes comming not to bee farre off.

Furthermore, in those latter yeares of the Iewes kingdome, what troubles and afflictions that people susteined three hundreth yeares together, but chiefly, the last 166. yeares before the comming of Christ, by Antiochus and his felowes,* the history of y^e Machabees cā report. Wherin we haue also notoriously to vnderstād y^e miserable vexations and persecutions of Christian Churches in these latter ends of the world by Antichrist: For by Antiochus Antichrist (no doubt) is figured and represented.* Thys Antiochus surnamed Magnus, and Antiochus Epiphanes his sonne, came of the stocke of Seleucus Nicanor, much like as the Mahumetes the Turke, and Solymanus, came of the stocke of Ottomannus. Wherein this is to be noted and pondered, that like as of the sayd Seleucus issued xij. Syrian Kings one after another of that generation, which reigned ouer y^e Israelites with much seueritie and tyranny:* so of this diuelish generatiō of Ottomannus, haue come xij. Turkish tyraunts, whereof thys Solyman is now the twelfe, God grant he may be y^e last. And as the ij. last Antiochi, being sonnes of the ij. brethrē, did fight together for the kingdome, and in fighting were both slaine, and shortly after the kingdome fell to the Romaines: so the Lorde graunt for Christes sake, that the bloody broode of this old Solyman, (which had reigned now 46. yeares, may so fight together, and perish in their owne bloud, that the bloody tyranny of theirs may come to a finall end for euer, Amen.

And that the truth heereof may the better appeare to such as be disposed to meditate more vpon the matter, I thought good and profitable for the reader, to set before his eies, in tablewise, the catalogue of both these Antichristian families, with the names and succession of the persons, first of the twelue Syrian Kings, then of the twelue Ottomans, in like number and order.

A comparison betweene the Syrians and the Turkes.

*These two pestilent families and generations, rising out (doubtles) from the bottomles pit, to plague y^e people of God, as in number of succession they do not much differ: so in maner of their doings and wicked abhominations, they be as neere agreeing, being both enemies alyke to the people and Church of Christ, both murtherers and paricides of their owne breethren and kindred, both blasphemers of God, and troublers of the whole worlde. Wherein we haue all to learne and note by the way, the terrible anger of almighty God against sinne, and wickednes of men.

Furthermore, who so is desposed to consider and cast the course of times, and to marke how things be disposed by the maruelous operation of Gods prouidēce, shal finde the times also of these two aduersaries, in much like sorte to concurre and agree. For in considering with our selues both the Testaments and Churches of God, the first of the Iewes, the second of the Christians, looke what time had the Syrian Kings to rage then in Hierusalem,* the same proportion of time hath now the tyranny of y^e Turks to murther the Christians: so that the one Antichrist may well represent and prefigure the other. For as by the booke of Machabees may appeare, Antiochus Epiphanes was about the 191. yeares before the passion of our Sauour, and day of our redemption: so now casting the same number from this present yeare backward, we shall finde it to be about the same yeare and time, when Baiazetes the fourth Turke after Ottoman, began to remoue his Imperiall seate from Bursa in Bithynia, to Adrianople in Europe, which is a City of Thracia. In which yeare & time began all the mischiefe in Europe, as is to be seene before, pag. 738. and this was the yeare of our Lord 1375. Unto y^e which yeare, if we adde 691. it maketh 1566. according to the prophesie of the Apocal. chap. 20. where it is prophesied of Gog and Magog,* that they shall compasse about the tents of the Saints, and the well beloued Citie, by the which welbeloued Citie, is meant (no doubt) Europa: and this was in the yeare abouesaid 1375. Although touching the precise points of yeares and times, it is not for vs greatly to be exquisite therein, but yet where diligence and studious meditation may helpe to knowledge, I would not wish negligence to be a pretence to ignorāce.

And thus much for the times of Antiochus and his felowes. Now what cruelty this Antiochus exercised against the people of God, it is manifest in the history of the Machabees: where we reade, that this Antiochus in the eight yeare of his reigne, in his second comming to Hierusalem, first gaue forth in commaundement, that all the Iewes should relinquish the law of Moses, and worship the Idole of Iupiter Olimpius, which he set vp in y^e temple of Hierusalem. The bookes of Moses and of the Prophetes he burned. He set garrisons of souldiours to warde the Idole. In the Citie of Hierusalem he caused the feastes and reuels of Bacchus to be kept, full of all filthe and wickednes. Olde men, women, and virgines, such as woulde not leaue the lawe of Moses, with cruell tormentes he murdered. The mothers that would not circumcise theyr children, he slue. The children that were circumcised, hee hanged vp by the neckes. The temple he spoiled & wasted. The aultar of God, and candlesticke of gold, with the other ornaments and furniture of the temple, partly he cast out, partly be caried away. Contrary to the lawe of God, he caused them to offer, and to eate Swines fleshe. Great murder and slaughter he made of the people, causing thē either to leaue their lawe, or to lose their liues. Among whome, besides many other, with cruell tormentes he put to death a godly mother with her vij. sonnes, sending hys cruell proclamations through all the land, that whosoever kept the obseruauuncies of the Sabboth, and other rites of the lawe, and refused to cōdescend to his abominations, should be executed. By reason whereof the Citie of Hierusalem was left voide and desolate of all good mē, but there was a great nūber, that were contented to follow & obey his Idolatrous proceedings, and to flatter with the king, became enemies vnto ther brethren. Briefly, no kind of calamity, nor face of miserie could be shewed in any place, which was not there sene. Of y^e tyranny of this Antiochus, it is historied at large in y^e book of Machabees: And Daniell prophesieng before of y^e same, declareth y^t the people of y^e Iewes deserued no lesse for their sins and transgressions.

By consent of all writers, this Antiochus beareth a figure of the great Antichrist,* which was to folow in the lat^ter end of the world, and is already come, & worketh what he can agaynst vs: Although as S. Iohn sayth, there haue bene, and be many Antichristes, as parts and members of the body of Antichrist,* which are forerūners: yet to speake of y^e head & principall Antichrist, & great enemy of Christs Church, he is to come in y^e latter end of the world, at what tyme shall be such tribulation, as neuer was sene before: Whereby is ment (no doubt) the Turke,* prefigured by this Antiochus. By this Antichrist, I do also meane all such, which followyng the same doctrine of the Turkes, thinke to be saued by their workes and demerites, & not by their fayth onely in the sonne of God, of what title and professiō els soeuer they be: especially if they vse the like force & violence for the same, as he doth. &c.

Of the tyranny of this Antiochus aforesayd, and of the tribulations of the Church in the latter tymes both of the Iewes Church, and also of the Christian Church to come, let vs beare & consider the words of Daniell in xj. chap. & also in his vij. chap. Prophecyng of y^e same as foloweth.

He shall returne and freat agaynst the holy couenaunt: *so shall he do, he shall euen returne and haue intelligence with them that forsake the holy couenaunt. And armes shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the Sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the dayly sacrifice, and they shall set vp the abhominable desolation. And such as wickedly breake the couenaunt, shall flatter with him deceitfully: but the people that doe know their God, shall preuayle and prosper. And they that vnderstand among the people, shall instruct many: yet they shall fall by sword and by flame, by captiuitie, and by spoyle many dayes.

Now when they shall fall, they shal be holpen with a little helpe: but many shall cleane vnto them faynedly. And some of them of vnderstandyng shall fall to be tryed, and to be purged, and to make them white, till the tyme be out: for there is a tyme appointed. And the kyng shall doe what him lyst: he shall exalte himselfe, and magnifie himselfe agaynst all that is God, and shall speake marueilous thynges agaynst the God of Gods, and shall prospere, till the wrath be accomplished: for the determination is made. Neither shall he regard the God of his Fathers, nor the desires of womē, nor care for any God: for he shall magnifie himselfe aboue all. But in his place shall he honour the God Mauzzim, and the God whom his fathers knew not, shall he honour with gold and with siluer, and with precious stones, and pleasaunt thynges.

Thus shall he doe in the holdes of Mauzzim with a straunge God, whom he shall acknowledge: he shall increase his glory, and shall cause them to rule ouer many, and shall diuide the land for gayne. And at the end of tyme, shall the kyng of the South push at him, and the kyng of the North shall come agaynst hym lyke a whirle wynde, with charets, and with horsemen, and with many shyppes, and he shall enter into the countreys, and shall ouerflow and passe thorough. He shall enter also into the pleasaunt land, and many countreys shal be ouerthrowen: but these shall escape out of his hand, euen Edom and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon. He shall stretch for his handes also vppon the countreys, and the land of Egypt shall not escape. But he shal haue power ouer the treasures of gold and of siluer, & ouer al the precious thynges of Egypt, and of the Libians, and of the blacke Mores where he shall passe. But the tydynges out of the East and the North, shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great wrath to destroy and roote out many: And he shall plant the tabernacles Page 765 of his palace betweene the Seas, in the glorious & holy mountaine, yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him.

To this place of Daniell aboue prefixed, might also be added the Prophetie of the said Daniell written in the vij. chapter, and much tending to the like effect: where he intreating of his vision of foure beastes (whiche signifie the foure Monarchies) and speaking now of the fourth Monarchie, hath these words.

*After this, I saw in the visions by night, and behold, the fourth beast was grimme and horrible, and maruelous strong. It had great yron teeth: it deuoured, and brake in peeces, and stamped the residue vnder his feete: and it was vnlike the other beastes that were before it, for it had ten hornes. As I considered the hornes, behold, there came vp among them another little horne, before whome, there were three of the first hornes pluckt away. And behold, in this horne, were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking presumptuous things, and seemed more stoute then the other. Which horne also (whē I looked on) made battaile with the saints, & preuailed against thē: vntill the old aged came, & iudgement was giuen to the Saintes of the highest, and till the appointed time was come, that the Saints shuld haue the kingdōe.

Thus haue ye heard the plaine words of Daniell. In the which, as he doth manifestly describe the comming of Antiochus the great aduersary, toward the latter end of the Iewes: so by the same Antiochus is figured also to vs the great aduersary of Christ, which is the Turke.

*Although some there be notwithstanding, which wyth great learning & iudgement, do apply this place of Daniel aboue recited, not to the Turke, but rather to the Pope, & that for vj. or vij. speciall causes herein touched and noted.

*The first is this, that the wicked transgressours of the couenaut shall ioine with him deceitfully and hypocritically, which shall pollute the tabernacle of strength, & take away the perpetuall sacrifice, and bring in the abomination of desolation.

*The second note is, that the Prophet declareth, how the learned among y^e people shall reach many, & that they shall fall into the sword, into fire, and captiuitie, and shall be banished, whereby they shall be tried, chosen, & made bright and pure, &c. All which (say they) is not amōg the Turkes to be seene, but only in the Popes Church: where y^e faithfull preachers & teachers of the people are slaine and burned, and go to wracke, &c. Where likewise it foloweth, that they shall be holpen against Antichrist, and that many false brethren shall ioine vnto them dissemblingly, &c. To thys they alledge that the Christians haue no such help against the Turke, whereunto such false brethrē should ioine thēse•ues, as is and hath bene commonly seene amōg y^e Christians against the Pope, * from time to time, almost in all Countreys: as in Germany by the Protestants & free Cities: In Englād in King Henries time by y^e Lord Cromwell, and afterward by King Edward, & now by Queene Elizabeth: In Scotland by y^e godly nobilitie: In France, by the Queene of Nauarre and her sonne: and also by the Prince of Condy and the worthy Admirall, and his two breethren, and many others: In Flaunders, by thē whom the Regent calleth Beggars: So as was in the time of the Machabees, against Antiochus.

*Thirdly, that the King shall exalt himselfe aboue all that hath the name of God, and shal lift vp his mouth to speake presumptuously against God.

*Fourthly, that he careth not for the desires of women: which may seeme to note how the Popes doctrine shall forbid the honest and lawfull mariage in Churchmen.

*The fift specialtie which they apply to the Pope, is that foloweth in the Prophet, saieng: Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor any God: but in steade of him, shall set vp his God Mauzzim, & shall worship him with siluer, * & gold, & pretious stone, &c. which they do apply to y^e Pope, setting vp his God of bread, & worshipping him with glistering golden ornamēts & most solemne seruice.

Sixtly, it foloweth: & he shall encrease them with much glory and riches, and shall diuide vnto them, lands & possessions, &c. meaning that the Pope hauing dominiō ouer treasures of gold and siluer, and all precious things of the land, shall indue his Cardinals, Prelats, his flating doctours, with Friers and Monkes & Priestes, and all such as shal take his part, w^t great priuilegies, liberties, reuenues & possessions. And thus, I say, some there be, which apply this prophesie of the xij. and xi. chapter of Daniell, vnto y^e Bishop of Rome. whom although I take to be an extreme persecutour of Christs Church: yet I iudge rather those two chapters of Daniel concerning y^e litle horne in the middle of the x. hornes, and the great destroier of the pleasant land and glorious holy mountaine, to meane first Antiochus, and by him secondly to meane the great Antichrist, the Turke: who hath now set already y^e tabernacles of his palace betwene the Seas, accordyng to the Prophecies of Daniell, as is abouesayd.

Ouer & besides these Prophecies aboue alledged,* may be added also the Prophecie of Ezechiel chap. 39. speakyng of Gog & Magog:* which as it may be applied to the oppressiō of the Iewes vnder the Heathen multitude, which stopped the buildyng of the Citie, and vnder the Syrian kynges: &c. yet in the same also is expressed the calamities and afflictions of Christes Church in these latter tymes, vnder the Saracens and the Turkes. &c.

Proceeding further in this matter,* let vs come now to the Prophecies of y^e new Testament & marke the wordes of S. Paule wrytyng to the * Thessalonians, which then were Christened, & now either are Turkish, or vnder the Turke, which wordes be these:

Be ye not sodenly moued in your mynde, nor troubled, neither by spirite, not by word nor by letter as sent frō vs, as though the day of Christ were at hand let no mā deceaue you by any meanes, for the Lord will not come, before there come a defection, or a departing first, and that wicked mā be reueled, the sonne of perdition, which is an aduersary and is extolled aboue all power, and that which is called God: so that he shall sit in the tēple of God, boasting himselfe to be God. &c.

Although this defection & departing may haue a double vnderstandyng,* as well of the popes sect (which is gone & departed frō the free iustificatiō by fayth onely in Christ, through y^e promise of grace) as of the Turkes: yet learning a while to speake of the Pope because it appeareth more notoriously in y^e Turke, we will chiefly apply it to him: in whō so aptly it doth agree, that vnles this great defection frō faith in so many Churches, had hapned by the Turke, it had bene hard to vnderstād the Apostles mynde, which now by the history of these Turkes is easie and euident to be knowen, cōsidering what a ruine hath happened to the Church of Christ by these miserable Turks, what Emperies, nations, kyngdomes, countreys, townes and Cities be remoued from the name & professiō of Christ, how many thousands & infinite multitudes of Christen men and children, in Asia, in Afrike, & in Europe, are caried away from Christes Church to Mahumetes Religion, some to serue for the Turkes gard among y^e Ianizarites, some for souldiours, some for miners, some for gunners, to fight & warre agaynst the Christians: so that the most part of all the Churches plāted once by y^e Apostles, are now degenerated into Turks, onely a small hādful of Christiās reserued yet in these West partes of Europe, of the which small residue, what shall also become shortly, except Christ himselfe do helpe. Christ onely himself doth know. How great this defection hath bene spokē of by S. Paule, thou mayest soe (gentle Reader) in the table aboue described.

Notwithstanding this text of the holy Apostle (as I a'fore said) may be verified also with no lesse reason,* vpō the Byshop of Rome, thē vpon the Turke, both for that he is a man of sinne, that is, his seate & Citie is a great maintainer of wickednesse,* & also for that he is an aduersary, that is, contrary in all his doynge and proceedyngs to Christ.

Thirdly, for that he sitteth in the temple of God, and so did not Mahumet.

Fourthly, because he is an exalter of himselfe, & sitteth more like a God then a man in Rome, wherof see more in the booke set forth in English, called the CONTESTATIONS of the Popes.

Fiftly, for that he seduceth and hath seduced by his apostasie, the most part of all Christendome from the doctrine and free promises of God, into a wrong and straūge way of saluation, which is, not to be iustified freely before God onely by our fayth in Christ his welbeloued sonne (vnto the whiche fayth the promise of God freely and graciously hath annexed all our saluation onely, & to no other thyng) but hath taught vs to worke our saluation by an infinite number of other thynges: In so much that he bindeth the necessitie of our saluation also to this,* that we must beleue (if we will be saued) and receaue him to be the Uicare of Christ in earth. &c.

But to returne agayne vnto the Turkes, among all the prophecies both of the old Testamēt & of the new, there is none that paynteth out the Antichristian kyngdome of the Turkes, better then doth the reuelation of S. Iohn, whose wordes let vs weigh and cōsider. Who in the Apocalipse 9. where he speaketh of openyng the seuenth & last seale, (which signifieth the last age of the world) and there writyng of the vij. trumpets of the vij. Angels at the soundyng of the vi. Aungell saith, Loose the iiij. Aungels, which are bound in the great riuer Euphrates.* And the foure Aungels were losed, which were ready both day and houre, and moneth, and yeare, to slay the third part of men. And the number of horsemen were 20. thousand tymes ten thousand: and I heard the number of them. And thus I sawe in a vision, horses, and them that Page 766 sate on them, hauing fiery habbergions, and of lacinth stone, and of brimstone, and the heads of the horses were as the heads of Lyons, and out of their mouthes went forth fire, and smoake, and brimstone, of these three plagues was the third part of men killed, that is, of the fire, smoake, and brimstone, which proceeded out of their mouthes, &c.

By the seauenth seale is meant the seauenth and last age of the world,* which last age of the world, is from Christ, to the iudgement and resurrection of the dead.

By the seauen Angels with their seauen Trumpets, is signified the seauen plagues that come in this seauenth and last age of the world.

*By the sixt trumpet of the sixt Angell, is meant the sixte plague comming last and next before the plague of the great iudgement day, which sixt plague is heere described to come by the East Kings, that is, by the Turkes, as foloweth to be seene.

*By losing the Angels which had rule of the great riuer Euphrates, is signified the letting out of the East Kings, that is, the Turkes, out of Scithia, Tartaria, Persia, and Arabia, by whome the third part of Christendome shall be destroyed, as we see it this day hath come to passe.

It followeth in the prophesie, Their power shall be in their mouthes, and in their tayles. For their tayles be like Serpents hauing heads, and with them they hurt, &c. Meaning that these Turkes with the words of their mouthes, shall threaten great destruction of fire and sword, to them that will not yeald vnto them, and in the end, when the Christians shall yeald vnto them, trusting to their promises, they like Serpents shall deceaue thē in y^e end, & kill them, as appeareth by the story of the Turkes aboute past, * pag. 752. 753. 757.

The like prophesy also after the like words and sence, is to be seene and read in the 16. chap. of the Apoc. where S. Iohn entreating of seauen cuppes, * filled with the wrath of the liuing God, geuē to the hands of 7. Angels, by one of the foure beasts (that is in the time of one of the four Monarchies, which was the Monarchy of Rome) speaketh likewise of the sixt Angell, which poured his viole of Gods wrath vpon the great riuer Euphrates, & the waters thereof dried vp, that the way of the kings of the East should be prepared, &c.

By the sixt Angell with the sixte viole, is meant as before, the last plague saue one that shall come vpon y^e Christians. By y^e Kings of the East are meant the Saracens, and 12. Ottoman Turks. By drieng vp the riuer of Euphrates, is signified the way of these Turkes to be prepared by the Lords appointment, to come out of the East to the West parts of the world, to molest and afflict the Christians. It foloweth more in the text. And I saw three vnclene spirits like frogs, * come out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false Prophet, for they are the spirits of deuils, * doing wonders, to go vnto the Kings of the whole earth, to assemble and gather them together, to the battayle, against the daye of the great God omnipotent, &c. And it foloweth shortly after, And he assembled them together into a place which is called in Hebrue Armagedon, that is, a trap or trayne of destruction. And immediatly it followeth in the same place, And the seauenth Angell poured out his viole in the ayre, and a mighty voice came from heauen, out of the Throane, saieng, factum est, It is done, or finished, &c. Whereby it is to be vnderstoode, that toward the last consummation of the world, great force shall be seene, and a mighty army of the enemies shall be collected and gathered against the people, and Saints of the highest, and then commeth the consummation, with factum est, &c.

Wherefore it is not for naught that the holy Spirite of God in the same place, a little before the sixt Angell doe poure out his viole, doth exhort all the faithfull, sayeng: Behold, * I come like a theefe in the night, Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, least he walke naked, and men see his fylthynes, &c.

Nicol. de Lyra, and Paulus Bishop of Burdens, and Mathias Dorinke writing vpon the 13. chap. of the Apoc. & expounding the mistery of the second beast, * rising out of the earth, hauing the hornes of a lambe, &c. doo apply the same to Mahumet and the Turkes, with a solemne declaration made vpon y^e same. * Which interpretatiō of theirs, although in some pointes it may seeme to haue some appearance of probabilitie, neither can it be denied but that Mahumet & the Turke be pestilent and wicked enemies of Christ our Lord, & most bitter persecutors of his Church, yet as touching the proper & naturall meaning of y^e Apostle in that place, speaking of the false lambe, &c. if we consider well all the circumstances of that beast, and marke the consequence of the text,* both of that which goeth before, and followeth after, we must needs graunt that Nicol. de Lyra, with hys fellowes, & with al such like of y^e Popes schoole, that folow that schoole be deceaued, and that the description and interpretation of that falshorned lambe, must necessarily be applyed only to the Bishop of Rome, and none other, which is to be proued by sixe principall causes or arguments.

The first is, for that this beast is described to beare the hornes of a lambe.* By the which lambe, no doubt, is ment Christ. By y^e hornes of the lambe is signified the outward shew or resemblance of Christ our sauour: which shew or resemblance can haue no relation to Mahumet, for that he taketh himselfe to be aboue Christ, & Christ as an excellent Prophet of God, sitting at his feete. Wherefore seeing Mahumet commeth neither as equall to Christ, nor as vicar vnder Christ, this prophesy can not agree in him, but only in him which openly in plaine words protesteth,* that all Christes lambes and sheepe not singularly, but vniuersally through the whole world, are committed to him, as Uicar of Christ, and successor of Peter, and that all men must confesse the same of necessitie, or else they are noue of Christes sheepe, &c. wherein it is easy to see where the pretended hornes of the lambe do growe.

The second argument, And he spake like the Dragon, &c. A Lambes hornes and the mouth of a Dragon,* do not agree together. And as they do not agree together in nature, so neither can they be found in any one person, either Turke, or other (if we will iudge truely) so liuely, as in the Bishop of Rome. When thou hearest him call himselfe the Apostolicall Bishop, the Uicar of Christ, the successor of Peter, the seruant of Gods seruants, &c. thou seest in him the two hornes of a lambe, and would thinke him to be a lambe in deede, and such a one as would wash your feete for humilitie: but heare him speake, and you shall find him a dragon.* See and reade the Epistle of Pope Martine the fift aboue mentioned, pag. 649. charging, commaunding, and threatning Emperoures, Kinges, Dukes, Princes, Marquesses, Earles, Barons, Knightes, Rectors, Consuls, Proconsuls, with their Shires, Counties, and Uniuersities of their kingdoms, Prouinces, Cities, Townes, Castles, Uillages, and other places. See the answeere of Pope Urban. 2. and his message to King William Rufus, pag. 192. Behold the workes and doings of Pope Innocent against King Iohn.

Note also the answeere of another Pope to the King of England,* which for the price of the kings head, would not graunt vnto him y^e inuesting of his Bishops. Marke well the wordes and doings of Pope Hildebrande against the Emperor Henry the fourth, pag. 175. Also of Pope Alexāder the 2. treading vpon y^e neck of Fredericus Barbarossa, not like a lambe treading vpō a dragon, but like a drago• treading vpon a lambe: so that his owne verse might •ac turned vpon himselfe: tanquam aspis & basiliscus super ouiculam ambulans, & tanquam Leo & draco conculcans agnum. Cōsider moreouer the behauior, maner, cōdition, and property, almost, of all the Popes which haue bene these 600. yeares, and what Dragon or Serpent could be more viperous then their owne doings and words can speake, and giue testimony against themselues.

It followeth moreouer in the same prophecy of the Apocalipse for the third argument,* And he doth all the power of the first beast, presently before his face, and causeth the earth, and all the inhabitants therein to honour the first beast, the stripe of whose deadly wound was cured, &c.

In this prophesy ij. things are to be noted: first, what the first beast is,* whose power y^e second beast doth execute. Secondly, what this second beast is, which so doth exercise his power in his sight. The first of these beastes here in the Apoc. described, hauing 7. heads & 10. hornes, must needes signifie the city of Rome, which may easely be proued by two demonstrations. First by the exposition of y^e 17. chap. of the same Apocalips, where is declared and described the sayd beast to stād of 7. hils, & to containe 10. kings, hauing the whole power of the dragon geuen:*, and also the same citie to be named the whore of Babylon, drunkē wyth the bloud of saints. All which properties ioined together, can agree in no wise but only to the heathē Empire of Rome, which Citie at the time of writing these prophesies, had the gouernment of the whole world. The second demonstration or euidence, may be deduced out of the number of the monethes assigned to this beast, Apoc. 13. For so it is written, that this beast had power to make, that is, to worke his malice against Christes people 42. monethes, which monethes counted by sabbates of yeares (that is, euery moneth for seuen yeares) maketh vp the iust number of those yeares, in which the primitiue Church was vnder the terrible persecutions of the heathen Emperors of Rome, as is afore specified, pag. 397.

Which thing thus standing, proued and confessed, that the first beast must needes signifie the Empire and City of Rome, then must it necessarily follow that the second beast Page 767 with the lambs hornes,* must signifie the Bishop & Pope of the same City of Rome. The reason whereof is euidēt, and apparant by that which followeth in the prophecye, where it is declared, that the seconde beast hauing two hornes of a lambe, receaued and exercised all the power of the first beast, before or in the sight of the said beast, which can not be veriefied neither in the Turke nor in any other, but only in the Pope of Rome, who (as you see) receiueth, vsurpeth, and deriueth to himselfe all the power of that Citie and Monarchy of Rome:*. In so much that he saith, that when Constantine or Ludouicus yeelded vnto him the rule & kingdome of that Citie, he gaue him but his owne, and that which of right and duty belonged to him before.

And this authority or power ouer all the Empire of Rome, he worketh not in Asia, or in Constantinople as the Turke doth, but in the sight of the beast which gaue him the power, that is, in the City of Rome it selfe, which is the first beast heere in this prophesy of the Apocalypse described.

*Fourthly, it foloweth more, And he causeth the earth, and all the inhabitants therein, to worship and honour the first beast, which had a deadly wound, and was cured, &c. The interpretation of this part, as also of all the other parts of the same chapter, standeth vpon the definition of the first beast, for being graunted, as it can not be denied, that the first beast signifieth the Citie and Empire of Rome, it must consequently follow, that the Bishop (whome we call the Pope) of the same Citie of Rome, must be vnderstoode by the second beast, for somuch as neither Turke nor any other, but only the Bishop of Rome, hath holden vp the estimation and dignity of that Citie, which began to be in ruine and decay by the Uandalians, Gothes, Herulians, and Lombards, about the yeare of our Lord 456. but afterward by the Bishop of Rome, the pristine state and honor of that Citie reuiued againe, and flourished in as great veneration, as euer it did before. And that is it which y^e holy Ghost seemeth heere to meane of the first beast, saieng: That he had a wound of the sword, and was cured. For so it followeth.

*Fiftly, And he caused all the inhabitants of the earth to make the image of the beast, which had the stripe of the sword and liued. And it was geuen to him to giue life to the image of the beast, and to make the image thereof to speake, and to cause all them that worshipped not the image of the beast, to be killed: forcing all persons both little and great, rich and poore, bond and free, to take the marke of the beast in their right hand, or in their foreheades, and that none might buy or sell but they which had the marke, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name, &c.

*By geuing life to the image of the beast, and making it to speake, is to be presupposed, that y^e beast was at a neare point of death, and lay speechles before, insomuch that the Citie of Rome began to lose and change his name, & was called a while Odacrie, of Odacer King of the Herulians: which by dent of sword surprised the Romans: and yet notwithstanding, *by the meanes of this Romane Prelate, the said Citie of Rome, which was then ready to geue the Ghost, so recouered his maiestie and strength againe, that it is hard to say, whether Rome did euer ruffle and rage in his tirannie before, in the time of Nero, Domitian, Diocletian and other Emperors, more tragically then it hath done vnder y^e Pope: or whether that Rome had al Kings, Queenes, Princes, Dukes, Lords, and all subiects more vnder obedience and subiection, whē the Emperors raigned, or now in the raigne of the Pope. And therefore it is said not without cause of the holy Ghost: That it is geuen to him, *to geue life and speach to the image of the beast, causing all them to be slaine which will not worship the image of the beast, &c. As for example heereof, who seeth not what numbers and multitudes of Christian men, women, and children, in all Countreys, haue bene put to the fire and sword? Stories of all times will declare, what hauocke hath bene made of Christen bloud, about the preheminance and maioritie of the Sea of Rome: what Churches and Countreys both Greekes and Latin, haue bene excommunicated: what Kings haue bene deposed, *and Emperors stripped from their Imperiall seate, and all because they would not stoupe and bend to the Image of the beast, that is, to the maiesty and title of Rome, aduanced vp so highly now by the Bishop thereof, as it was neuer higher before in the raigne of Nero or Dyoclesian. Wherefore taking the first beast to signifie the Empyre of Rome, which can not be denied, it is playne, that the second beast must necessarily be applied to the Pope, and not to the Turke, for as much as the Turke seeketh nothing lesse then the aduancement of that Empire, but rather striueth against it, to plucke it downe.

The sixt and last argument is grounded vpon the number of the name of the beast, *expressed by the holy Ghost in the same Prophecie, by the letters 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . In which letters a though there lyeth great darcknesse and difficultie to be vnderstoode, yet certaine auncient Fathers whiche were Disciples and hearers of them which heard S. Iohn him|selfe, as Irenaeus and other do expound the sayd letters coniecturally to containe the name of the beast, and to be the name of a man, vnder this word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : Where as els no other name lightly of any person either in Greeke or Latine, *will agree to the same, *saue onely the foresayd name 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Although some latter writers geuing their coniectures vpon the same, doe finde the name of Lateranus in Hebrew Letters, to aunswere to the same number. Some fayne other names, as 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , or 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , made wordes, which signifie nothyng, as Diclux, or Luduic, by Romane letters &c. But of all names properly signifying any mā, none commeth so neare to the number of this mistery (if it go by order of letters) as doth the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , aforesayd. And this much by the way, and occasion of Nicolaus de Lyra, *Paulus Burgen, Matthias Dorinkus, the author of Fortalilium fidei, and other Cōmentaries moe o• the same faction: who writyng vpon this xiiij. Chapter of the Apocalipse, and not considering the circumstaunces thereof, both are deceaued themselues, and deceaue many other, applying that to the Turke, which can not otherwise be verified but onely vpon the Pope, as may appeare sufficiently by the premisses: Not that I write this of any incode or malice either to the Citie of Rome, or to the person of the Byshop, as beyng Gods creature: but beyng occasioned here to entreate of the Prophecies agaynst the Turkes, would wishe the Readers not to be deceaued, but rightly to vnderstand the simple Scriptures according as they lye, to the entent that the true meanyng therof beyng bootled out, it may be the better knowen what Prophecies directly make agaynst these Turkes, what otherwise.

In the which Prophecies agaynst the Turkes, now to proceede, let vs come to the 20. Chapter of the Apocalipse, wherein the holy Scripture seemeth playnly and directly to notifie the said Turkes. The wordes of the Prophecie be these.

And I saw an Angell descendyng from heauen,*hauyng the key of the bottomlesse pit, and a great chayne in his hand: and he tooke the Dragon, the old Serpent, which is the deuill and Satanas, and bound him vp for a thousand yeares, and cast him in the pit, and sealed him vp, that he should not seduce the people any more, til the thousand yeares were expired: and after that he must be let loose for a litle while. &c.

And it followeth after: And when the thousand yeares shal be complete, Satanas shal be let out of his doungeon, and shall go abroad to seduce the people, which are on the foure corners of the lād of Gog and Magog, to assemble them to battaile: whose number is like to the sandes of the Sea. And they went vp vpon the latitude or breadth of the earth, and compassed about the tentes of the Saintes, and the welbeloued Cities. &c.

To the perfect vnderstandyng of this Prophecie,*hree thynges are necessary to be knowen. First what is ment by byndyng vp, and loosing out of Satanas the old Dragon. Secondly, at what tyme and yeare first he was chayned vp and sealed for a thousand yeares. Thirdly, at what yeare and tyme these thousand yeares did end, when as he should be loosed out agayne for a litle season. Which three poyntes beyng well examined and marked, the Prophecie may easely bee vnderstand directly to be ment of the Turke. Albeit Anagogically some part thereof may also be referred not vnproperly vnto the Pope, as is aboue notified.

First,*hy byndyng and loosing of Satanas, seemeth to be ment the ceasing and staying of the cruell and horrible persecution of the Heathen Emperours of Rome, against the true Christians, as is to be sene in the x. first persecutions in the primitiue Church aboue described in the former part of these Actes and Monumentes: in the whiche most bloody persecutions, Satanas the deuill then raged without all measure, till tyme it pleased almightie God to stoppe this old Serpent, and to tye him shorter. And thus haue you to vnderstād what is ment by the bindyng vp of Sathan for a thousand yeares: whereby is signified that the persecution agaynst the Christians styrrd vp by y^e beast (that is, in the Empire of Rome, through the instigation of Sathan) shall not alwayes continue, but shall breake vp, after certaine tyme, and shall cease for a thousand yeares. &c.

Now,h at what tyme and yeare this persecution, that is, the fury and rage of Sathan should cease, is also declared in the Apocalipse before: where in the chapter. 11. &. 13. wee reade that the beast afore mētioned, shall haue power Page 768 to worke his malice and mischief, the space of 42. moneths and no more, and then that Sathan should be locked vp for a thousand yeares. The computation of which moneths being counted by Sabbates of yeares (after the example of the 69. weekes of Daniell. cap. 11,) it doth bring vs to the iust yeare and time, when that terrible persecution in the primitiue Church should end, and so it did. For giue to euery moneth a Sabbat of yeares,* that is, reckon euery moneth for seauen yeares, and that maketh 294. yeares, which was the full time betweene the 18. yeare of Tiberius, (vnder whome Christ suffered) and the death of Maxentius the last persecutour of the primitiue Church in Europe, subdued by Constantinus, as may appeare by calculating the yeares, moneths and dayes, betweene the said yeare of the reigne of Tiberius, and the latter end of Maxentius: and so haue ye the supputation of the yeare and time, when Satan was first bound vp, after he had raged in the primitiue Church 42. monethes. Which moneths, as is said, being counted by Sabbates of yeares, after the vsuall manner of the Scripture, mounteth to 294, yeares: and so much was the full time betweene the passion of our Lorde,* which was in the 18. yeare of Tiberius, vnto the last yeare of Maxentius.

And heere by the way commeth a note to be obserued, that forasmuch as by the number of these 42. monethes,* specified in the Apocalips, the Empire of Rome must necessarily be confessed to be the first beast: therefore it must by like necessitie follow, the Bishop of Rome to be the second beast, with the two hornes of the Lambe, for that he only hath and doth cause the sayd Empyre of Rome to reuiue and to be magnified, and so doth not the Turke, but rather laboureth to the contrary. Wherefore let euery Christian man be wise and beware betime, how he taketh the marke of the beast,* least peraduenture it follow vpon him, that he drinke of that terrible cup of wrath mentioned Apocal. chap. 14.

Thirdly, it remayneth to be discussed touching the third point in this foresaid prophesie,* that as we haue found out (through the helpe of Christ) the yeare and time of Satās binding, so we search out likewise the time and season of his loosing out, which by the testimonie of Scripture, was appointed to be a thousand yeares after his binding vp, and so rightly according to the time appointed it came to passe. For if we number well by the Scripture the yeare of his binding vp, which was from the passion of our Lorde 294. yeares, and adde thereto a thousand yeares, it mounteth to 1294. Which was the very yeare when Ottomannus the first Turke began his reigne:* which was the first spring and welhead of all these wofull calamities that the Church of Christ hath felt both in Asia, Affrica, and Europe, almost these three hundreth yeares past. For so wee finde in Chronicles, that the kingdome of the Turkes being first deuided into four families, an. 1280. at length the familie of Ottomanus preuailed, and thereupon came these, whome now we call Turkes: which was about the same time, when Pope Boniface the eight was Byshop of Rome.

Where by the way this is againe to be noted, that after the decree of Transubstantiation was enacted in y^e Councell of Laterane by Pope Innocent the iij. the yeare of our Lord 1215. not long after, about the yeare of our Lord 1260. was stirred vp the power and armes of the Oguzians, and of the Orthogules father of Ottomannus: who about the yeare of our Lord 1294. began first to vex the Christians about Pontus & Bithinia, & so beginning his kingdome anno. 1300. reigned 28. yeares, as is afore mētioned.

Mention was made before of Ezechiell prophesieng against Gog, whose words diuers expositours do apply against the Turke, and are these: Thou shalt come from thy place, out of the North partes, thou and much people with thee, all riding vpon horse, a great and a mighty army, and thou shalt come vp against my people of Israell as a cloude, to couer the land: Thou shalt be in the latter dayes, and I will bring thee vpon my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes. Thus sayth the Lord God: Art not thou he, of whome I haue spoken in the old time, by the hand of my seruants, the Prophets of Israell, that prophesied in those dayes and yeares, that I woulde bring thee vpon them? At the same time also, when Gog shall come against the lande of Israell, sayth the Lord God, my wrath shall arise in mine anger. For in my indignation, and in the fire of my wrath haue I spoken it: Surely at that time there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israell, so that the fishes of the Sea, the foules of the heauen, the beastes of the field, and all that mooue and creepe vpon the earth, and all the men that are vpon the earth, shall tremble at my presence: the mountaines shall be ouerthrowne: the starres shall fall, and euery wall shall fall to the ground, &c.

The Prophesies of Methodius, Hildegardis and other, concerning the reygne and ruyne of the Turkes.

VNto these testimonies aboue excerp'd out of the holy Scriptures,* let vs adde also the propheticall reuelations of Methodius, Hildegardis, Sybilla, and others. This Methodius is thought of some to be the same Methodius, of whome Hierome, and Suidas make mention: which was Bishop first of Olympus in Lycia, then of Tyrus, and suffred martyrdom in the last persecution of the primitiue Church, vnder Diocletian. Unto whome also Trithemius attributeth the booke intituled:*De Quatuor nouissimis temporibus. But that can not be, forasmuch as the said Methodius doth cite and alleadge the Maister of Sentence, namely, in his second booke, and sixe distinct. Which Maister of Sentence, followed more then a thousand yeare after Christ: besides certaine other fabulous matter contained in the same booke. Albeit, because he speaketh there of many things cōcerning the state of y^e Church vnder Antichrist, and the reformation of Religion, as secmeth rightly to come to passe, and more is like to follow, I thought not to defraude the Reader thereof, leauing the credite of the Authour to his arbitrement, to esteeme and iudge of him as he seeth cause. Among diuers other places of Methodius, prophesieng of the latter time, these words do follow: After that the children of Ismaell haue had multiplied in their generations to an infinite and innumerable multitude, in the desert aforesayd,*they came out of the wilderness of Arabie, and entred into the habitable land, and fought with the Kings of the Gentiles, which were in the land of promise, and the •••d was filled with them. And after 70. weekes, and halfe of their power, wherewith they haue subdued all the kingdome of the Gentiles, their hart was exalted, seeing themselues so to haue preuailed, and to haue conquered all things, &c. And afterward it followeth of the same matter in this sort.

It shall come to passe that the sayde seede of Ismaell, shall issue out and obtaine the whole world, with the regions thereof, in the entring of peace, from the land of Aegypt, vnto Ethiopia: & from the floud Euphrates, vnto India: and from the riuer Tigris, to the entring of Nabaot, the kingdome of Ionithus, the sonne of Noe: and from the North, vnto Rome and Illyricum, Aegypt, and Thessalonica, and Albania,*and so foorth to the sea Ponticum, whych deuideth the sayd kingdomes from Germanie and Fraunce: and their yoke shall be double vpon the neckes of all nations, and Gentiles: neither shall there be nation or kingdome vnder heauen, which shall be able to stand against them in battaile, vntill the number of eyght weekes of yeares, &c.

Briefly, as in a grosse somme, this shall suffice, to admonish the reader, touching y^e meaning and methode of Methodius Prophetesies, which Methodius first describing the long and tedious afflictions of Christes Church, maketh mention of the seede of Ismaell, which comming out of the partes and deserts of Arabie,* shall destroy (saith he) and vanquish the whole earth, So that the Christians shall be giuē of God, to the hands of the filthy Barbarians, to be slain, polluted, and captiued: Persia, Armenia, Capadocia, Cilicia, Syria, Aegypt, the East partes, Asia, Spaine, all Grecia, Fraunce, Germania, Agathonia, Sicilia, The Romanes also shall be slaine and put to flight: also the Ilands of the Seas shall be brought to desolation, and to captiuitie,* and put to the sword. The which tribulation of the Christians shall be without mercy or measure: the raunsome of gold and siluer and other exactions, intolerable, but especially the dwellers of Aegypt and Syria shall be most in the affliction of those times: And Hierusalem shall be filled with multitudes of people brought thether in captiuitie, from the foure windes which are vnder heauen. So that beastes also, and foules, and fish in the water, and the waters of the Sea shall be to them obedient. Cities and Townes, which were before full of people, shall be layde waste. Women with child shall be ript: their children sticked: infantes taken from the mothers, and cast in the streates, and none shall burie them. The rulers and sage of the people shall be slaine, and throwne out to the beastes. Churches shall be spoiled: the Priests destroyed: virgines defloured, and men cōpelled to sell their children, and the comming of them shall bee chastisement without mercy, and with them shall go these foure plagues: captiuitie, destruction, perdition, and desolation, wyth much more, which for breuitie I ouerpasse. And this affliction, sayeth hee, shall last eight weekes, or Sabbates of yeares, which I take to signifie eight hundreth yeares, &c.

Secondly,* after these terrible plagues thus described by Methodius vpon the Christians, which he sayth shall fall vpon them for their wicked abominations recited in the first and second chapter of S. Paule to the Romaines: the saide Methodius afterwarde, in this great distresse of the Christians, being out of all hope and comfort of reliefe, declareth and speaketh of a certaine King of the Greekes or Page 769 Romains which shall restore peace againe to y^e Christiās.* In which peace they shal reedify their cities & mansions againe: the Priests shalbe deliuered from their greuances, & men at that time shall rest from their tribulations, and then shall the King of the Romaines dwell in the Citie of Hierusalem a weeke or sabbate, and a halfe of times. &c.

Thirdly, during y^e time of this peace, the said Methodius saith, y^e men shal fal into licentious securitie, & carelesse life:* and then according to the word of the Apostle, saying: Whē they shal say, peace, peace, sodeine destruction shal fall vpon them: then (sayth he) shalbe opened the gates of the North, & the beastly people shal breake in, which King Alexander the great, did close vp within 2. mountaines, making his prayer vnto the Lorde God, that he would bind vp that bestial & execrable people, least with their filthy & detestable pollutions, they shuld come out and pollute the holy land. Whose intercession being heard the Lord cōmanded them to be inclosed within 2. mountains in the North parts, to the depenes of 12. cubits (which signifieth peradventure 12. C. yeres) so that neither by witchcraft,* nor by any means they could get out, or any might come vnto them, vntill the time of the Lord apointed, which are (saith he) the latter times: & then, according to the prophecie of Ezechiel in the latter time of the cōsummation of the world, Gog & Magog out frō the north, shal come forth into the land of Israel, & shal work al this mischiefe against the christiās, aboue recited. And then (saith Method. proceeding in his Propheties), shall the K. of Romanes, after he hath reigned in Ierusalē a sabbate of times, & a half, that is, saith Mer. x. yeres & a halfe, take the crown frō his hed and yeld it vp to the Crosse in Golgotha where Christ was crucified,*and shall die. And the Crosse with the crowne shalbe taken into heauen, which shal not appeare againe before the comming of the Lord.

Fourthly, it foloweth then moreouer in the Propheties of Method. Whych declareth, that when the weeke or sabbate & half weke of times shal end, and whē the K. of Romanes shall geue vp his crowne in Ierusalem, & die. Then immediatly shal Antichrist the son of perdition begin to appeare, & be borne in Iewry, of the tribe of Dan, wherof also came Iudas Iscarioth, & he shalbe borne (saith Methodius) in Chorosaim, & shalbe bred in Bethsaida, & shal raigin in Capernaū: to y^e which 3. cities, Christ the Lord gaue his 3. Vae. And whē great tribulatiō shal increase & multiply in the daies of this Antichrist, & al lordship & dominion shalbe destroyed, the Lord shall sende his 2. faithful & deare seruants, Enoch and Hely, to reprove and detect the false seducing, & lying forgeries of this Antichrist, openly before all mē: so that the people seing thēselues falsly beguiled, & seduced by this son of perditio, cōming out of the tēple disēblingly, to the destructiō of many, shal leaue & flie frō him, & ioyn thē selues to the said 2. holy prophets. Which son of perdition & Antichrist seing his proceedings so to be reprovued, & brought into cō|tēpt, in his fury & anger shal kil the 2. Prophets of God And then shal appeare (saith Methodius) the signe of the comming of the sonne of man, and he shall come in the clouds of heauenly glory, and shall destroy the enemie with the spirite of his mouth. &c.

Interpretation.

TO these propheties & testimonies of Methodius, what credite it is to be geuen, I leaue it to the Reader. But if the meaning of his Propheties goe by such order of times, as is set & disposed in his booke: he semeth to describe vnto vs 4. principall states and alterations of times to come.

The first state and alteration is by Mahumete and the Saracens, which be the ofsprings and sonnes of Ismael comming out of Arabie in the time of Heraclius Emperour of Constantinople.* An. 630. which rebelling against Heraclius, increased & preuailed still more & more against the Christians, both in Asia, and Africa, and also in many places in Europe, especially in Spayne, and Italy.

The seconde state & alteration he Prophecieth to come by the Turke, which first comming out of the farre partes of Seythia,* y^e is, out of the North, first ouercame the Saracenes, subdued the Persians, and afterward ioynning together w^e the Saracens, conquered the kingdome of Hierusalem about the yeare of our Lorde 1187: then subdued Syria and moste part of Asia. &c. And these be they, whych Methodius seemeth to meane of, speaking of the vile and miserable people closed vp of y^e Lord God, at the intercession of Alexander the great captaine in the North, betwene 2. mountaines the deep•nosse of 12. cubites, wast that filthy corrupt nation shuld pollute the early with their wickednes. Wherby are ment those Turkes, which comming out frō the vttermost partes of the North, that is, out of Scythia and the mountaines of Caucasus or els Ismaels,* were withholden & kept backe of Almighty God, for Christes cause, that they myght not harme his Church alongspace, during the time of xii. C. yeares: yea, and then, the sinnes of the Christians so deseruing, they were permitted of almighty God to breake out, and to inuade the church: who nowe ioyning together w^t the Saracens, haue wrought, and daily do woorke, all these greuances against our Christian brethren: as we se this day is come to passe, and more is like to folow, except the hād of the Lord, which let them out, do plucke them in againe.

Moreouer,* in y^e meane space, betwene the reigne of the Saracens and the Turks, where Methodius speaketh of the R. of Romaines, which should restore quietnes to the church, & should raigne in Hierusalem, a sabbate of tunes and halfe a sabbate: thereby seemeth to be vnderstand the viage of Christian Princes out of the west partes of Europe, vnder Gotfridus Duke of Lotharing & his 2. brethren and many other christen Princes, with 300. M. footmen, and 100. M. horsemen: who fighting against the Saracens, recouered againe from them, the Citie of Hierusalem, in the yeare of our Lorde. 1099. Which citie before had bene in their possession, y^e terme of 490. yerres. After which victory got, first Gotfridus, then Baldwinus his brother, and other after them, to the number of 9. Christen kings, reigned in Hierusalem the space of 88. yerres: and after that through the discord of the Christians not agreeing amōgst themselues, both Hierusalem and Syria, with other parts of Asia besides, were subdued and wonne of the Turkes, whych to this day they keepe yet still. And this was in the yeare of our Lord. 1187.

About which yeare and time (as foloweth in Methodius) when the Citie of Hierusalem shall be wonne of the Turkes,* then shall Antichrist begin to be borne of the tribe of Dan, of whom came Iudas Iscarioth, and shalbe borne in Chorosaim and bredde in Bethsaida, and reigne in Capernaum: Meaning that this Antichrist or sonne of perdition, shalbe full of Gods malediction, noted by Iudas Iscariothe, and these 3. Cities, against whome were spoken thrise Vae of the Lord.

And heere is moreouer to be noted, that Methodius sayth, not that Antichrist shall be borne among the Saracens or Turkes, but among the people of God, and of the tribe of Israel. Whereby is to be collected, that Antichriste shal not come of the Saracēs, nor Turks, but shall spring vs among the Christians, and (sayeth Methodius) shall seeme to come out of the Temple, to deceiue many. &c. whereby the Pope may seeme rather then the Saracene or the Turk, to be described, for so much as the Pope, being elected norished, and raigning in the midst of Gods people, at Rome, sitteth in the temple, and very place of Christ: and (no doubt) deceiue many. &c.

And nowe to come to the time assigned of Methodius, here is to be added also,* that which we read in Antoninus, Par. 3. that about this said present time, a certaine Bishop of Florence preached that Antichriste was then comming. But the pope commanded him to keepe silence & to speake no more therof. Now why the pope so did, & why he could not abide the preaching of Antichriste, I referre it to them which list to muse more vpon the matter. This is certain, that about this time, heere assigned by Methodius, came Petrus Lombardus Gratianus, and Pope Innocent y^e thirde, the first authors & patrons of trāsubstantiation.* At which time also began the first persecution by y^e church of Rome, againste y^e Albingenses or waldenses, about Tolous, Bitures, and Auinion. Of whome 17. M. the same time were slaine, by the Popes crossed souldiors. Among whom frier Dominicke was then the chieftest doer. About whyche time also was Frier Frances, of which two came the two orders of begging Friers: al which began much about one time together. An. 1215. which were nere, within 20. yerres. after the kingdome of the Christians was taken of the Turkes, according to the Prophetie aboue sayd.*

It followeth moreouer in Methodius, That in hys time al Lordship & domination shal cease and geue ouer. &c. The verity whereof we see no•e accomplished in the Pope. For where the Pope with his double sword, and triple crown doeth come, there all seculare power must geue place, both Emperors, Kings, and Princes must stoupe.

So king Iohn yeelded vp his crowne to Pandulus the popes Legate, and was in his hand 5. daies. An. 12•7.

Childerike the French K. had hys crowne taken from him,* and geuen to Pipine. An. 747.

Henricus 4. Emperor was forced to submit hymselfe and his scepter to Pope Hildebrand. An. 1077.

Fridoricus Barbarossa Emperour, in Saint Markes Church in Uenice, was faine to lay downe hys necke vnder the Pope Alexanders feete. Anno 1277. Which Fridericke also before, was faine to holde the stirroppe to Pope Adrian, &c.

What should I speake of the Ambassadour of Uenice, named Franciscus Dandulus? who being sent to Pope Page 770 Clement the 5. was made to lie vnder the Popes cable like a dog, & gather vp the crows, mēcioned in Sabel. Enn. 9. li. 7.

Henry the 3. being Emperor, had hys diademe first set on with the feete of the Pope, and afterwarde strocken off from his head with the Popes foote againe.

And what shall I speake more hereof? when as Carolus Magnus submitted himselfe so lowe to kisse the feete of Pope Leo. An. 800.*

It foloweth then in the prophesie of Methodius: That in the tribulation of those dayes, shall be sent from God two speciall Prophettes, Enoch and Hely, to reprooue and disclose the fraudulent falsehode of Antichrist, and that many seeing his delusion, shall forsake him and followe them: Wherat Antichrist being greeued shall kill them. &c.

We neuer read yet in any story,* of any suche two Prophets to be sent either to the Saracens, or to the Turkes: Wheras against the Pope, we read Iohn Husse and Hierome of Prage, two learned Martyrs & Prophets of God to haue bene sent, & to haue reproued and described the Anatomie of Antichrist, and at last to haue bene burned for their labor. And what Prophet can speake more plainly, either Enoch or Hely,* then did Hierom of Prage, prophesying of the comming of Martin Luther, an C. yeres after him? when the Pope and his fellowes should answeere to God and to him. The time we see came iust. Nowe let the Pope see with his fellowes, what answer they can make.

The true plate of Hus and Hierome, among the Bohemians.

*It followeth further in Methodius concludynge hys prophecie. And then (sayth he) shall appeare the comming of the sonne of man in the clouds of heauen, with celestial glory. &c.

Wherefore after the burning of these two notable Prophets, with many other thousands burned also since their time, by the B. of Rome it is to be thought, that the comming of Christes iudgement in the clouds, is not farre of. Veni cito Domine. Amen.

And thus muche touching Methodius, of whose prophecies how much or how little is to be esteemed, I leaue it indifferent vnto the reader. For me it shal suffice simply to haue recited his wordes, as I finde them in his booke contained: noting this by y^t way, that of this booke of Methodius, De nouissimis temporibus, neither Hierome in his Cataloge, nor Suidas, nor yet Auentinus in the place where hee entreateth purposely of such prophecies, *maketh any mention. As touching Hildegardus & Brigit, & other whome the French cal Bardi for their songs & propheticall verses, sufficient hath ben alleaged before out of Anentinus: who in his 3. booke of Chronicles wryting of the testimonies of Hildegard, Brigit and Bardi, seemeth to grounde vppon them, *that the Turkes, whether we wil or not, shal haue their Imperiall seate at Colen: And I pray God, that it come not to passe, that the Turke do geue some attempt against England by the seas, before that he come to Colen by land. &c.

Greuity causeth me to cut of many testimonies and reuelations of these abouesaide, *or els I could here rehearse the propheticall wordes of Brigit, lib. 4. cap. 57. concerning the City and Church of Rome, which as she sayth, must be purged and scoured with 3. things: *to wit, with sharpe sword, with fire, and with the plough, and that God wil doe with that Citie, as one that remoueth plants out of one place vnto an other: and finally, that the Citie of Rome shall susteine the sentence, as if a Iudge should commaund the skin to be flaine off, the bloude to be drawne from the flesh, and the flesh to be cut in small peces, & the bones therof to be broken, so that all the mary may be quised out from the same &c. *But for breuitie I let Brigit passe, & some thing wil declare out of Erythrea Sybilla, in her booke of prophecies found in S. Georges church in Uenice: where she prophesying many things of the birth of Christ vnder Augustus, and of the birth of Iohn Baptist, & of baptisme, of the Apostles, of the conuersion of the Gentiles, and of Constantinus, &c. hath these words: *After that the peaceable Bull shall conclude all the climes of the world vnder tribute, in those daies a heauenly lambe shal come: and the dayes shal come, whē the power of the flowing streame shalbe magnified in water, & the Lyon the Monarche shalbe conuerted to the Lambe, which shall shine to all men, and subuert kingdomes.

Moreouer sayeth Sybilla, In the latter age God shall bee hūbled, *and the diuine ofspring shalbe abased, & Deitie shalbe ioyned with humanity, the Lambe shal lie in hay, and God & mā shall be bred vp vnder a maidens attendance, signes and wōdershal go before amōgest the circumcised. &c. Also, an aged womā shal cōceiue a childe hauing knowledge of things to come. *The Worlde shall maruell at Bowtes (the starre) which shall be a leader to his birth. He hauing 32. feete and 6. thumbes shal chuse to himself out of ••sners and abiectes, the number of 12. and one deuill, not wyth ••orde nor with battel. &c. And afterwarde thus followeth moreouer, in Sybilla, saying: *The health of the lambe lying shalbe clothed with a fewe spoiles of the Lyon. Blacke shalbe turned into red. He shall subdue the citie of Aeneas, and kings, but in the booke of the fisher, In deiectiō and pouertie he shall cōquere riches, and shall treade downe pride with his owne death, In the night he shall rise vp, and be changed, he shall liue and raigne, and all these things shall be consummated, and regeneration (or newe things) be made: at last hee shall iudge both good and euill. &c. And thus much briefly collected out of Sybilia Erythrea concerning Christ our Lord.

Furthermore, touching the state and course of the Church and of Antichrist. it foloweth in the sayde Sybille, saying: *Then shall 4 Winged beastes rise vp in testimonie, they shal soūd out with trumpets the name of the lambe, sowing righteousnes, & the law irreprehensible. Against which law, the beast shal gainstand, & the abomination & froth of the dragon. But a maruelous star shal rise, hauing the image of the 4. beastes, & shalbe in a maruelous multitude, he shal bring light to the Greekes, and shal illustrate the world. The lake of the fisher shall bring the name of the lambe with power, into the Citie of Eneas, vnto the end of the worlde, (or time). Then in the city of Eneas, the starre ioyned, shall loose such as were bound of the deuill, and thereof hee shall reioyce and glory, and glorious shalbe his end &c.

After this, Sybilia wryting (as it semeth) of Antichrist, importeth these words. And it shall come to passe, that an horrible beast shal come out of the East, whose roaring shall be heard to Aphrike, to the people of Carthage, Which hath 7. heades and scepters innumerable, feete 663. He shall gainstande the lambe, to blaspheme his Testamēt, encreasing the waters of the dragon. The kings & princes of the world he shall burne in intolerable sweat, & they shal not diminish his feete. And then two starres like to the first starre, shall rise against the beast, and shal not preuaile, till the abomination shall be come, and the wil of the Lord shall be consummate. And again, speaking of the same matter, he inferreth these words of the foresaid 2. starres aboue mētioned. *And toward the latter dayes, two bright starres shall arise, raising vp men lying dead in their sinnes, being like to the first starre, hauing the face of the 4. beastes which shall resist the beast, & the waters of the dragon, testifying (or preaching) the name and lawe of the lambe, the destruction of abomination and iudgement, and shal diminish his waters, but they shalbe weakened in the bread of affliction, and they shall rise againe in stronger force. &c.

And it foloweth moreouer. After the abomination, then shal truth be reuealed, & the lambe shalbe known, to whom regions and countreis shal submit their necks, & all earthly men shal agree together in one, to come into one fold, and to be ruled vnder one discipline, and after this shalbe but a small time. &c.

And shortly after, the saide Sybilia speaking of the latter iudgement to come, declareth how all the abominations of sinnes shall come before the lambe: and that terrible fire shall fall frō heauen, which shall consume al carthly things created vnto the top of heauen. &c.

And thus mucche out of Sybilla, touching her propheties of Christ & Antichrist, according a• I founde them alleaged of a certaine catholike Romish wryter, * in his booke entituled Onus ecclesiae, excerpded, as he sayeth, out of the library of S. George in the citie of Uenice.

Philip Melancthon in his preface vpon Bartholomaeus Georgienitz Peregrinus, wryting of the Origene and manners of the Turks, alledgeth a certaine prophesy of Hikenus, mentioned hereafter, which foresaid that the Turkes should beare rule in Italy and in Germany. An. 1600.

Now it remaineth in conclusion of these prophesies of the Turks, something to say of the Turks owne prophesies, concerning the enduring & ending of their own kingdom, whose prophetically prognostication, being taken out of their owne language, and their own bookes, I thought here to insert, as I finde it alleaged in the booke of the forsayd Bartholomaeus Georgienitz, as followeth.

A Turkish prophecie in the Persian tounge of the raigne and ruine of the Turkes.

PAtissahomoz ghelu, Ciaferum memleketi alur, keuzul almai alur, Kapzeiler, iedi y ladegh Gyaure kelecı csikmasse, on ikiyladegh onlaron begblig eder: eusi iapar, baghi dıker bahesai baghlar, oglikezi olur, onichi yldensora Hristianon Kelecı csıchar, ol Turchi gerestine tus chure.

The Latine of the same.

*IMperator noster veniet, ethnici Principis regnum capiet, rubrū quoque pomum capiet, in suam potestatem rediget: quod si septimum vsque annum Christianorum gladius non insurrexit, vsque ad duodecimum annum eis dominabitur. Domos aedificabit, vineas plantabit, hortos sepibus munit, liberos procreabit, & post duodecimum annum, apparebit Christianorum gladius, qui Turcam quaque versum in fugam aget.

The same in English.

Our Emperour shall come: he shall get the kingdome of the Gentiles prince: also he shall take the red apple and shall bring it vnder his subiection: and if the sworde of the Christians shall not rise vnto the vij. yeare, hee shall haue dominion ouer them vnto the xii. yere. He shall build houses, plant vineyardes, shall hedge about his orchards, shall procreate children: and after the xij. yeare shall appeare the sworde of the Christians, which shall putte the Turke to flight euery where.

They which make declaration of this Turkische prophesie do expound this xij. yeare to signify the xij. yeare after the winning of Constantinople: * which Constantinople, they say, is ment by the redde apple: And after that xij. yeare, say they, shall rise the sworde of the Christians. &c. and this prophesie being wrytten and translated out of the Persian tounge, with this exposition vpon the same, is to be found in the booke of Bartholomeus Georgienitz. Albeit, concerning the exposition therof, * it semeth not to be true which is there spoken of the xij. yeare, after the wyning of Constantinople, being nowe 100. yeares since the wyning thereof.

Wherefore it may rather seme probable that by the vij. yeare and xii. yeare of the Turkes, * this to be the meaning, that if the vij. of the Ottoman Turks do scape the sworde of the Christians, they shall continue, builde and plant. &c. vntill the xij. Turke, which is this Solymannus, & then after that shall rise the Christians sworde, which shall put them to flight, and vanquish them in all quarters. And this exposition may seeme to accord with the place of Genesis, * wherein is wrytten of Ismael, that he had xij. sonnes, & no mo: So that this Solymannus being the xij. Turke after Ottomannus, may (by the grace of Christ) be the last, whō we heard credibly to be reported at the printing heereof, to be dead. But howsoever this prophecy is to be takē, it appeareth by their owne Oracles, that at length they shall be ouercome by the Christians.

An. 1098. and the next yere recouered Hierusalem, being then in the hands of the Saracens, whych they a little before had wonne from the Turkes, as is aforesayde. After this Gorfridus succeded viij. christian kings, which kept the kingdome of Hierusalem and Asia, both from the Turkes and Saracens, the space of

An. 1100. An. 1187. Saladinus the nephew of Saracon the Sultane of Egypt, perceauing the dissention among the Christian states of Palestina, got Antioche, where he slewe Raymundus the Prince with hys owne hands: Then got Tiberias: From thence went to Accō, where he tooke Guido king Page 772 of Hierusalem and Master of the Templares, prisonners: for whose raunsome, the Turke had Ascalon yelded vp to him of the Christians. That done, he subdued Hierusalem. whych had bene in the handes of the Christians before, the space of.

An. 1189. Friderike Emp. Philip French king, Rich, king of Englande made their viage into Asia, where Friderike washing in a riuer at Lilicia, died. In this voiage at the siege of Accon, Saladinus wanne the fielde of our men, of whome 2000. were slaine in the chase. Accon at length was got of the Christians. King Richarde got Cyprus. The two kings tell at strife. Phillip retired home without any good doing, king Richarde laide siege to Hierusalem, but in vaine, and so returning homewarde, was taken neare to Uienna in Austria, after hee had taken truce before wyth the Soldane, vppon such condition as pleased hym. And thys good speede had the Popes, sending out against the Turkes.

An. 1215. There was an other Councell holden at Rome by pope Innocēt 3. where was enacted a newe article of our faith for transubstantiation of bread and wine, to be turned into the body and bloud of our sauour. In this Councell also great excitation was made by the Pope, & great preparation was through al

Christendom, to set forward for recouery of the holy lād. A mighty army was collected of Dukes, Lordes, knights, bishops & Prelates, that if Gods blessing had gone wyth them, they myght haue gone throughout all Asia and India.

Anno 1219. The Christians after 18. monethes siege, gotte a certaine towne in Egypte, called Damiata or Elipolis, wyth much a do, but not much to y^e purpose. For afterward as the christian army of y^e popes sending, went aboute to besiege the Citie Cairus or Babylon, the Sultane throughe his subtile traine so intrapped and inclosed them wythin the daunger of Nylus, that they were constrained to render agayne the Citie Damiata, with their prysonners, and all the furniture thereof as they found it, into the Souldanes hande, and glad so wyth their liues to passe forward to Tyrus, An. 1221.

In the meane time the Egyptian Turke caused the Citie of Hierusalem to be rased, that it should serue to no vse to the Christians. What great thing els was done in that viage, it doth not greatly appere in stories. All be it Fridericus the 2. Emperour was not vnfrutefully there occupied, and mucche more myght haue done, had it not bene for the violence and persecution of the Bishop of Rome against him: whereby he was enforced to take truce wyth the Sultan for 10. yeres, and so returned. After which things done, not many yeares after, at lengthe the last citie of all belonging to the Christians, which was Ptolomais or A●●●s, was also taken from them by the Sultane, so that now the christians had not one foote left in all Asia.

An. 1203. Thus the Christians being driuen out of Asia by the Sultans & Turkes, yet the sayd Turkes and Sultanes did not long enioy their victorie: For estsoones the Lord stirred vp against them the Tartarians, who breaking into Asia by the portes of Caspius subdued diuers partes of Asia, namely, about Comana, Colchis, Iberia, Albania. &c. These Tartarians as they had got many captiues in their warres: so for gaine vsed to shippe them ouer customably to Alexandria in Egypt to be solde: whych seruantes and captiues Melechsala the great Sultane was gladde to buy, to serue him in his warres. Which captiues & seruaunts after they had continued a certaine space in Egypte, and through their valiant seruice grew in fauour and estimation with the sayd Melechsala, and began more to increase in number and strength: at lengthe they slue him, and tooke to themselues the name and kingdome of the Sultane. And thus ceased the stocke of Saracon & Saladinus afore mentioned, which continued in Egypt, about the space as is sayd of

An. 1240. After the death of Melechsala, the army of these foresaide rascals and captiues, set vp to themselues a king of theyr owne cōpany, whome they called Turquemenius. Who to fill vp the number of theyr company that it should not diminish, deuised this order, to get or to buy christē mens children, taken yong frō their parents, and y^e mothers lap: whom they vsed so to bryng vp to make them to denye Christ, and to be circumcised, and instructed in Mahumetes law, & afterward to be trained in the feates of warre, and these were called Malaluchi. Among whome this was their order, that none might be aduaunced to be king, but out of their own number, or els chosen by them: neither that any shoulde be made knights or horsemen, but only the children of christians which should deny Christ before, called Mamaluchi. Also it was among them prouided, that to thys dignity neither Saracens nor lewes, should be admitted. Item, that the succession therof shoulde not descend to the children and offpring of these Mamaluchi. Also, that the succession of the crowne should not descend to the childrē of the foresayd Sultanes, but shoulde goe by voyce and election. The Tartarians wyth Turquemenius their king, aboute thys time obtained Turquia, that is, Asia minor, from the Turkes, and wythin 2. yeres after, preuailing againste the Turkes, expelled them from theyr, kingdome, and so continued these Mamaluchi reigning ouer Egypt, & a great part of Asia, till the time of Tomumbeius theyr last Kyng, whych was destroyed and hanged at the gates of Memphis, by Zelymus the Turke, father to this Solymannus, as in hys historye is declared, Those Mamaluchi continued the space of

An. 1245. These Tartarians rāging thorough the countreis of the Georgians, and all Armenia, came as far as Iconiū, which was then the imperiall city of the Turkes.

An. 1289. The Soldane of Egypt & Babilon got from the christiās Tripolis, Tyrus, Sydon, and Gerithus in Syria.

An. 1291. Lastly, Ptolomaïs, which also is called Akers, was surprised by y^e sayd Soldan, rased and cast downe to the ground, & all the Christians therein (whych were not many left) were slaine. And this was the last citye which the Christians had in Asia. So that nowe the Christians haue not one foot (as is sayd before) left in al Asia. Thus the Egyptian Soldanes, and the Tartarians reigned and ranged ouer the most part of Asia aboute the Turkes, till the raigne of Ottomannus the great Turke, aboute the space of

And thus haue ye the whole discourse of the Turkish story, with theyr names, countryes, townes, dominions al'so with theyr times, continuance, interruptions and alterations, in order described and in yeares distincted: which otherwise in most authors and writers be so confused, that it is heard to know distinctly, what difference is betwene the Saracens, Turkes, Tartarians, y^e Sultans or Soldans, Mamuluches, or Ianizarites: What is theyr Calipha, Page 773 their Seriphes, their Sultan, or Bassa, in what times they began, and how long, and in what order of yeres they reigned. Al which in thys present table manifestly to thine eye may appeare.

* Wherein this thou hast moreouer (gentle Reader) to cōsider, which is worthy the noting, how the B. of Rome all this season, frō the first beginning of the Turks reigne, hath not ceased from time to time continually, calling vpon Christen princes and subiectes, to take the crosse and to warre against the Turkes: wherupon so many great viages haue bene made to the holy lande, & so many battailes sought against the Turke and Soldan for winning y^e holy crosse: and yet no luckie successe hath followed thereof hetherto, nor euer came it prosperously forward, whatsoever through the exciting of that Bishop, hath beene attempted against that great enemy of the Lorde: In somuch that the Christians haue lost not onely all that they had in Asia, but also vnneth are able to defende that little they haue in Europe, against his violence. What the cause is of thys harde lucke of the Byshops doings, it is hard for man to define. Let men muse as their minde leadeth, and as the Gospell sayth, he that hath eyes to see let him see. This is certaine, that as there hath lacked no care nor diligence in the B. of Rome, to stirre men vp to that business: so on the Princes behalfe there hath lacked no courage nor strength of men, no contribution of expenses, no supportation of charges, no furniture or abilement of warre: onely the blessing of God semeth to haue lacked. The reason and cause whereof I would were to easy to be reformed, as it may be quickly construed. For what man beholding the life of vs Christians, wil greatly maruell, why y^e Lord goeth not with our army to fight against the Turks? And if my verdit might here haue place, for me to adde my censure, there appeareth to me an other cause in this matter, yet greater then thys aforesaid: which to make plaine and cuidet in ful discourse of wordes, laisure no we doth not permit. Briefly to touch what I conceiue, my opiniō is thys: that if the sincere doctrine of Christen faith deliuered & left vnto vs in the word of God, had not hen so corrupted in the church of Rome, or if the B. of Rome would yet reclame his impure idolatry, and prophanations, and admit Christe the Lambe of God to stande alone, without our unpure additions, to be our onely Iustification, according to the free promise of Gods grace: I nothing doubt but the power of this faith grounding onely vpon Christ the sonne of God, had both framed our liues into a better disposition: and also soone would, or yet wil bring downe the pride of that proude Dolofernes. But otherwise,* if the Bish. of Rome will not gently geue place to the milde voyce of Gods word, I thinke not contrary, but he shalbe compelled at last to giue place & rume to the Turke, whether he will or not. And yet notwithstanding, when both the Turk & the Pope shal do against it what they can, the trueth and grace of Gods Testament shall fructify & increase, by such meanes as the Lorde shall worke, which beginneth already (praise to the Lord) to come graciously and luckely forward in most places.

A Prayer against the Turkes.

O Eternall Lorde God, father of our Lord Iesus Christ, creator and disposer of all things, iust, gracious, & wise only, in the name and reuerence of thy sonne Iesus, wee prostrate our selues, desiring thine omnipotent maiestie, to looke downe vppon these afflicted times of thy poore creatures and seruaunts: relieue thy Church, increase our faith, and confound our enemies: and as thou hast geuen thine onely begotten sonne vnto vs, promising with hym life to all that shall beleue vpon his name: so encline the obedience of our faith to thy promises in him, that our hearts may be farre of from all other sinnefull additions and prophane inuentions, which are besides him, and not in him, grounded vpon thy will and promise. And graunt (we beseeche thee) to thy Church, more and more to see how terrible a thing it is, to set vp any other meanes or helpe of saluation, but onely in him, whome thou only hast sent and sealed. Reforme thy Church with perfecte doctrine and faithfull teachers, that we seeing our owne weakenesse, may put off our selues, and put on him without whom we can do nothing. So shall we stand strong, when nothing standeth in vs, but thy sonne alone, in whome thou art onely pleased. Renew in this thy Church againe, the decaied faith of thy sonne Iesus, which may plentifully bring foorth in vs, not leaues onely, but frutes of Christian life: And forgeue our wretched Idolatry and blinde phantasies past, wherwith we haue prouoked manifold waies thy deserued indignation against vs: For our hearts haue bene full of Idoles, our temples full of Images, our wayes full of hypocrisie: thy Sacraments prophaned, and thy religion turned to superstition, because the lanterne of thy worde went not before vs, therfore we haue stumbled. Miserably we haue walked hetherto, like sonnes not of Sara, but of Agar, and therefore these Turkish Agarens haue risen vp against vs.

Many hard and straight wayes we haue passed, but the wayes of the Lorde we haue not founde. Much cost we haue bestowed on bread that swageth no hunger,* but that bread which onely feedeth and commeth freely, we haue not tasted. We haue sailed farre and nere in barkes of our owne building, but haue not kept within the Arke onely of thy promise, and therefore these floudes haue taken vs. We haue prayed much, but not in thine appoynted temple, and therefore haue not bene heard. Wee haue plowed and tilled, but without thy haiffer, and therefore this vntidie ground of ours, bringeth foorth so many weedes We do fish apace and that all night, but because we fish not on the right side of the boate, in our fishing we catche neuer a sinne. Our buildings be full of good intentions & great devotiōs, but because the ground worke is not surely laid vpon the rocke of thy promise, the East winde riseth and shaketh them all to shiuers. We walke and haue walked long after the precepts and doctrines of men, hauing a shew of wisdom, but not as holding the heade, where lieth all our strength, and therefore these Philistian Turkes haue hetherto so preuailed against vs. Briefly, all the partes and bones of the body be shaken out of place, Wherefore we beseeche thee (O Lorde) put to thy holy hand, and set them in the right ioynt againe. And finally, reduce this same thy mysticall body againe, to his perfect and naturall head, whych is thine onely sonne Iesus Christ, and none other. For him onely hast thou annoynted and appoynted. Neither is there any other head, that can minister strength and nutriment to this body, but he alone: for asmuch as all other heades be sinnefull, and are not able to stande in thy sight, but make thys body rather worse then better. Onely this thy welbeloued and perfecte sonne is he, in whome onely dwelleth all our strength and fulnesse: him onely we confesse and knowledge. For whome, and with whome, wee beseeche thee (O Lorde God of hostes) graunt to thy Church strength and victory against the malicious fury of these Turkes, Saracens, Tartarians, againste Gog and Magog, and all the malignaunt rabble of Antichrist, enemies to thy sonne Iesus our Lord and Sauior. Preuent their deuises, ouerthrow their power, and dissolue their kingdome, that the kingdome of thy sonne so long oppressed, may recouer and flourish ouer all: and that they which wretchedly be fallen from thee, may happely be reduced againe into the folde of thy saluation, throughe Iesus Christe our only mediatour and most mercifull aduocate. Amen.

IN this long digression; wherein sufficiently hath bene described the grieuous and tedious persecution of the Saracens, & Turkes against the Christians, thou hast to vnderstand (good reader) and beholde the image of a terrible Antichrist euidently appearing both by his own doings, & also by the scriptures, prophesied & declared to vs before. Now in comparing the Turke with the pope, if a question be asked whether of them is the truer or greater Antichrist, it were easy to see and iudge, that the Turke is the more open and manifest enemye agaynst Christe and hys Church. But if it be asked, whether of them two hath bene the more bloudy and pernicious aduersary to Christe and his members: or whether of them hath consumed and spilt more Christian bloud, he with sword, or this with fire and sword together, neither is it a light matter to discerne, neither is it my part here to discusse, which do onely write the history, and the Actes of them both, wherefore after the story of the Turkes thus finished, nowe to teenter agayne there, whereas we left, in describing the domesticall troubles and persecutions here at home vnder the Byshop of Rome:* after the burning of Babram in Northfolke aboue declared, pag 737. I signified also of an other certaine aged man mētioned in an old written Chronicle borrowed of one in y^t tower, instituted Polychron. (although I finde not his name in the saide Chronicle expressed) which suffered the paines of burning in Smithfield, about the same time which was the yere of our Lord. 1500. Ex Polychron.

This aged father, I suppose, be hee of whome I finde mention made in certaine olde papers and recordes of W. Larye Citizen (all be it the day of the moneth doth a little differ) wherin is thus testified, that on the 20. day of Iuly. An. 100. vpon the day of S. Margaret, there was an olde man burned in smithfield for an hereticke, & the same person vpon the 10. day before he was burned, wold haue stolen out of the Lolardes tower, and so falling out of the tower did fowly hurt him selfe: wherupon he was caried in a car• to his death, as he went to his burning.

In the foresaid papers of auncient recorde, is furthermore declared, how in the yere about prefixed, which was An. 1499. In the time of one Perseuell, many were taken Page 774 for hereticke in Kent,* and at Paules crosse they bare faggottes and were abiured, and shortly after the same yere, there went 13. lolardes afore the procession in Paules, and there were of them 8. weemen and a yong lad, and the lads mother was one of the 8. and all the 13. bare faggottes on their neckes afore the procession.

William Tilsworth Martyr.

FOR somuch as the world is come now to such a morosity and peuish insensibilitie in these contentious and canilling daies of ours, that nothyng can be so circumspectly wrytten and storyed, but shall lie in daunger of one Sycophant or an other, whyche neuer will credite there, where they lift not to like: neither will they euer lyke that, which seemeth preiudiciall to their faction, or not to serue the humor wherewith their phantasies bee infected: therefore to stop the mouthes of such carping cauillers with as muche possibilitie as I may, be it knowne to al and singular such persons,* who by euidence of truth and witnes wil be satisfied, that in the towne of Amerisham, be yet aliue both men and women, which can and do beare witnes of this that I shal declare. Also there is of the sayd company, one named William Page, an aged father and yet aliue, witnes to the same. Also an other named Agnes Wetherley widdowe, being about the age of an hundreth yeares, yet lyuing and witnes heereof: That in the dayes of king Henry 7. Anno 1506. in the dioces of Lyncolne in Bukingham shire (William Lylsworth was burned in Amersham, in a close called Standley about 60. yeares agoe. At which time one Ioane Clearke, being a marryed woman, whych was the onely daughter of the sayde W. Tylseworth and a faythfull woman,* was compelled with her owne handes to set fyre to her deare father: and at the same time her husbād Iohn Clearke did penaunce at her fathers burning, and bare a fagot, as did also.

*Al these bare fagots, and afterward were compelled to weare certaine badges, & went abroad to certaine townes to doe penaunce, as to Buckingham, Aylesbury, and other townes mo: And also diuers of these men were afterward burned in the cheeke, as William Page, which at this present is alieue, and likewise did beare a fagot with the aforesaid. Furthermore the foresaid Agnes wetherley testifie•h that at the burning of thys William Lylfworth, were lx. and aboue that were put to beare fagots for their penance, of whom diuers were enioyned to beare and weare fagots at Lyncolne, the space of 7. yeres, some at one time, some at another. &c. In which nūber was also one Robert Bartlet a riche man, who for his profession sake was put out of his ferme and goods, and was condemned to be kept in the monastery of Ashryge, where he ware on his right sleeue a square peece of cloth, the space of 7. yeres together.

It foloweth moreouer in y^t testimonie of the forenamed, that about the same time of the burning of William Lilsworth (as the Amersham men do say) or the next day after,* as recordeth the foresayd Agnes) was one father Roberts burned at Buckingham. He was a miller, and dwelled at Missenden: and at hys burning were there aboue 20. persons that were compelled to beare fagots, and to do suche penaunce as the wicked Pharises did compell them. After that by the space of 2. or 3. yeeres, was burned at Amershā, Thomas Barnard a husbandman, and Iames Mordon a labourer, they two were burned both at one fire, and there was William Litlepage (who is yet alieue) compelled to be burned in the right cheeke,* and father Rogers, and father Reuer alias Reiue, whych after was burned. Thys Father Rogers was in the byshops prisone 14. weekes together, night and day, where he was so cruelly handled with cold, hunger, and yrones, that after his comming out of the said pryson, he was so lame in his backe that he could neuer go vpriight as long as hee liued,* as can testifie diuers honest men that be now liuing. Also there was 30. mo burned in the right cheke, and bare fagottes the same time. The cause was that they would talke against superstition and idolatry, and were desirous to hear & read the holy Scriptures. The maner of their burning in the cheeke was this: theyr neckes were tied fast to a poaste or stay, wyth towels, and theyr handes holden that they might not stirre, and so the iron being hotte, was put to their cheekes, and thus bare they the prints and marks of the Lord Iesus about them.

The cruell handling of Thomas Chase of Amersham, wickedly strangled and martyred in the bishops prison at Wooburne, vnder W. Smith Bishop of Lincolne.

AMong these aforesayd,* which were so cruelly persecuted for the Gospell and worde of Christe, one Thomas Chase of Amersham, was one of them that was thus cruelly handled, which

Thomas Chase by the report of suche as did knowe him, was a man of a godly, sober and honest behavior (whose vertuous doings doe yet remaine in memorie) and could not abide Idolatrie and superstition, but many times woulde speake against it: Wherefore the vngodly and wicked did the more hate & despise him,* and toke hym, and brought him before the blinde Byshop, beyng at that time at Wooburne, in the Countie of Buckingham, and as it is wrytten. Act. 12. that wicked Herode dyd vexe certaine of the congregation, and killed Iames the brother of Iohn with the sword, and because he saw that it pleased y^e Iewes. &c. he proceded farther, and had thys same Thomas Chase before him, asking him many questions touching the Romish religion, to many tauntes, checkes, and rebukes, but what answere this godly man Thom. Chase made them, it is vnknown. Howbeit it is to be supposed, that hys aunswere was most zealous and godly in professing Christes true religion and Gospel,* and to the extirpation of idolatry and superstition and hypocrisie, for that the sayde Thomas Chase was commaunded to be put in the bishops prison called litleease, in the bishops house at woo burne, which prison had not bene ministred vnto him, had not his answeres bene sound and vpriight. There Thomas Chase lay bound most painfully with chaines, gyues, manicles and yrons oft times fore pined with hunger, where the Bishopes almes was daily brought vnto hym by hys chapleines:.* Whych almes was nothing els put checkes, tauntes, rebukes and threatninges, floutinges, and mockings. Al which cruelty the godly Martyr tooke most quietly & paciently,* remembering and hauing respect to Christes promises. Math. 5. Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake: for theirs is the kingdome of heauen, and as foloweth: Blessed are yee <◇> reuile you and persecure you, &c. when the Bishop wyth his bonde of shauelings, perceiued that by their daily practises of crueltie they coulde not preuaile against him, but rather y^t he was the more feruent & earnest in professing Christes true Religion: and that he did tolerate and beare most paciēty at their wickednes and truely ministred vnto hym: Page 775 they imagined how and which way they might put hym to death, least there should be a tumulte or an vprose amōg the people. And as Richard Hun shortly after was hanged or strangled in Lolardes tower, about the yeare of our Lord 1514. euen so these bloudsuppers most cruelly strangled and prest to death this said Thomas Chase in prison,* which most hartely called vpon God to receiue his spirit: as witnesseth a certaine woman, that kept him in prison.

After that these stinging vipers being of the wicked broode of Antichrist, had thus most cruelly and impioulsye murdered this faithfull Christian, they were at their wits ende, and could not tell what shift to make, to cloke theyr shamefull murther withall, at last to blinde the ignoraunt sely people, these bloody butchers most slaunderously caused by their ministers to be bruted abroade, that the foresaid Thomas Chase had hanged himselfe in prison:.* which was a most shamefull and abhominable lit, for the prison was such, that a man coulde not stand vpriight, nor lye at ease but stooping, as they do report that did knowe it. And besides that, this man had so many manacles & yrons vpon him, that he could not wel moue neither hand nor foote, as the women did declare that sawe him dead, in so much that they cōfessed that his bloudbolke was broken by reason they had so vily beaten him and brused him: And yet these holy catholikes had not made an end of their wicked acte in this both killing and slandering of this godly martyr, but to put out the remembrance of him, they caused him to be buried in the wood called Norlandwood, in the hie way betwixt Wooburne and little Marlow, to the entent he should not be takē vp againe to be seene: And thus commonly are innocent men layd vp by these clerkly clergye men.* But he that is effectually true of himselfe, hath promised at one time or at another, to cleare his true seruauntes, not with lyes and fables, but by his owne true word. No secret faith he, is so close, but once shall be opened, neither is any thing so hid, that shall not at the last be knowne clearly. Such a sweete Lord is God alwaies to those that are his true seruants. Blessed be his holy name therefore, for euer and euer, Amen.

Thomas Harding being one of this company, thus molested and troubled as is aforesaide, in the towne of Amersham, for the truth of the Gospell, after hys abiuration and penance done, was againe sought for, and brought to the fire, in the dayes of King Henry viii. and vnder D. Langlond then Bishop of Lincolne, succeeding after Cardinall wolfe. Of whose death and martirdome, we shall likewise record (Christ willing and graunting) in order when we shall come to the time and yeare of this suffering.

*After the martirdome of these two, I read also of one Thomas Norice, who likewise for the same cause, that is, for the profession of Christes Gospell, was condemned by the Bishop and burnt at Norwich, the last day of March, an. 1507.

*In the next yeare folowing, which was an. 1508. In the consistory of London, was connected Elizabeth Sampson, of the parish of Aldermanberic vpon certain Articles, and specially for speaking against pilgrimage & adoration of Images, as y^t Image of our Lady at Wisdome, at Stanings, at Crome, at Walsingham, and the Image of saint Sauour, of Barmondsey, and against the Sacrament of the aultar, and for that she had spoken these or like words: that our Lady of wisdom was but a burnt arse esie, and a burnt arse stocke, and if she might haue holpen men & women which go to her on pilgrimage, she woulde not haue suffred her taile to haue bene burnt: and what should folke worship our Lady of wisdom, or our Lady of Crome, for the one is but a burnt arse stocke, and the other is but a puppet: and better it were for the people to geue theyr almes at home to poore people, then to go on pilgrimage. Also that she called the Image of Saint Sauour, Sun Sauour with kit lips, and that she said she could make as good bread as that which the priest occupied, and that it was not the body of Christ, but bread, for that Christ could not be both in heauen and earth at one time. For these and certaine other articles, she was compelled to abiure, before Maister William Horsey, Chancellour the day and yeare aboue written. Ex Regist. Lond.

Laurence Ghest.

*LAmentable it is to remember, & a thing almost infinite to comprehend the names, times, and persons of al thē which haue bene slaine by the rigour of the Popes Cleargie, for the true mainteining of Christes cause and of hys Sacraments. Whose memory being registred in the booke of life, albeit it neede not the cōmemoration of our stories, yet for the more confirmation of the Church, I thought it not unprofitable, the suffering and Martyrdome of them to be notified, which innocently haue geuen their blood to be shed in Christes quarell.

In the Cathalogue of whom next in order cōmeth the memoriall of Laurence Ghest, who was burned in Salisbury for matter of the Sacrament, in the dayes of K. Den'ry the 7. he was of a comely & tall personage, & otherwise (as appeareth) not vnfronded, for the which the Byshop & the close were the more lothe to burne him: * but kept him in prison the space of ij. yeares. This Laurence had a wife and vij. children. Wherefore they thinkyng to expugne and perswade his mynde by y^e stirring his fatherly affectiō toward his childrē, when the time came which they appointed for his burning,* as he was at y^e stake, they brought before him his wife and his foresayd vij. children. At the sight wherof, although nature is cōmonly wont to worke in other, yet in him religiō ouercōming nature, made his constancie to remaine vnmoueable: in such forte as when his wife began to exhort & desire him to fauour himselfe, he agayn desired her to be cōtēt, & not to be a block to his way, for he was in a good course, runnyng toward the marke of his saluatiō:* & so fire beyng put to him, he finished his life, renouncing not onely wife & children, but also him selfe to follow Christ. As he was in burning, one of the Byshops men threw a firebrand at his face: Whereat the brother of Laurence standing by, ranne at him with his dagger, and would haue slayne him, had he not bene otherwise stayd.

Testified & witnessed by the credible report of one Williā Russell an aged mā dwelling of late in Colmanstreet,* who was there present the same tyme at the burnyng of Laurence, & was also himselfe burned in the cheke, & one of the persecuted flocke in those dayes, whose daughter is yet liuing: The same is confirmed also with the testimony of one Richard Web seruaunt sometime to M. Latymer, who soiourning in the house of the sayd William Russell, heard him many tymes declare the same.

BUT amongst all the examples of them,* wherof so many haue suffered from tyme to tyme for Christ & his truth, I can not tell if euer were any Martyrdome more notable & admirable, wherein the playne demonstration of Gods mighty power and iudgement hath at any time bene more euident agaynst the persecutours of his flocke, then at the burnyng of a certaine godly woman, put to death in Chepingsadbery, about the same tyme, vnder the raigne of K. Henry the seuenth.

The cōstācie of which blessed womā, as it is glorious for all true godly Christians to behold: so agayne the exāple of the Byshops Chaūcellour, which cruelly cōdemned the innocent, may offer a terrible spectable to the eyes of all Papisticall persecutours to consider, and to take example: which the liuing God graunt they may. Amen. The name of the Towne where she was martyred, was as is sayd, Chepyngsadbery. The name of the woman is not as yet come to my knowledge. The name of the Chauncellour, who condēned her,* was called D. Whittington. The time of her burnyng was in the raigne & tyme of K. Henry 7. orderly therfore in this place & time to be inserted. Wherein is to be noted moreouer the oportunitie of this present history brought to my hands, & that in such cōuenient season, as I was drawyng toward the ende of the foresayd kynges raigne: so that it may appeare to them, which behold the oportunitie of things, not to be without Gods ho^lly wil & prouidence, that this foresayd example should not lye hid & vnremembred, but should come to light & knowledge, and that in such order of placing, according as the due course of our story hetherto kept, requireth.

After this godly woman and manly Martyr of Christ was condemned by the wretched Chaūcellour aboue named D. Whittington, for the faithfull profession of y^r truth, which the Papistes then called heresie, and the tyme now come whē she should be brought to the place and paynes of her martyrdome,* a great concourse of all the multitude both in the towne and cuntry about (as the maner is in such tymes) was gathered to behold her end. Among whō was also the foresayd Doct. Whittington the Chauncellour, there present to see the execution done.

Thus this faythfull woman, and true seruaunt of God cōstantly persisting in the testimony of the truth, committing her cause to the Lord, gaue ouer her life to y^e fire, refusing no paynes nor tormentes to keepe her conscience cleare & vnreproueable in the day of the Lord. The sacrifice beyng ended, the people began to returne homeward, commyng from the burning of this blessed Martyr. It happened in the meane tyme that as the Catholicke executioners were busie in Page 776 slaieng this sely lambe at the townes side, a certayne Butcher within the towne was as busie in slaieng of a Bull, which Bull he had fast bounde in ropes, ready to knocke him on the head.* But the butcher (belike not so skilfull in his arte of killing beastes, as the Papistes be in murthering Christians) as he was lifting his axe to strike the Bull, failed in hys stroke, and smit a little too low, or else how he smit, I knowe not. This was certayne, that the Bull although somewhat greued at the stroke, but yet not strooken downe, put his strength to the ropes, and brake lose from the butcher into the streete, the very same tyme as the people were comming in great prease from the burning. Who seeing the Bull comming towardes them, and supposing him to be wilde (as was no other lyke) gaue way for the beast, euery man shifting for himselfe, as well as he might. Thus the people geuing backe, and making a lane for the Bull, he passed through the throng of them, touching neither man nor childe,* till he came where as the Chauncelour was. Against whome the Bull, as pricked with a sodeine vehemēcie, ranne full but with his hornes, and taking him vpon the paunch, gored him through and through, and so killed him immediately, carieng his guts, and trailing them with his hornes all the streete ouer,* to the great admiration and wonder of all them that sawe it.

Although the carnall sence of man be blinde in considering the workes of the Lorde, imputing many tymes to blinde chaunce the thyngs which properly pertayne to Gods only praise and prouidence: yet in this so straunge and so euident example, what man can be so dull or ignorant, which seeth not heerein a plaine miracle of Gods mighty power and iudgement both in the punishing of this wretched Chauncelour, and also in admonishing all other like persecutours, by his example, to feare the Lord, and to abstaine from the like crueltie▪

*Now for the credite of this story, least I be sayde vpon mine owne head to commit to story, things rashly which I can not iustifie, therefore to stop such cauelling mouths, I will discharge my selfe with authority I trust sufficient: that is, with the witnesse of him which both was a Papist, and also present the same time at the burning of the woman, whose name was Rowland Webbe: which Rowland dwelling then in Chippingsadbery, had a sonne named Richard Webbe, seruant sometime to Maister Latymer, who also enduring with him in time of his trouble sixe yeares together, was himselfe emprisoned and persecuted for the same cause. Vnto the which Richard Webbe being now aged, then yong, the foresaid Rowland his father, to the entent to exhort him from this sect of heresie (as he then called it) recited to him many times the burning of this woman, and withall added the story of the Bull aforesayd, which he himselfe did see & testifie. This Richard Webbe is yet liuing, a witnes of his owne fathers wordes and testimonie, which I trust may satisfie all indifferent Readers, except onely such as thinke no truth to be beleueed, but that only which is in their Portues.

And thus much concerning the state of the Church. Wherein is to be vnderstand, what stormes and persecutions haue bene raised vp in all quarters against the flocke and congregation of Christ, not only by the Turkes, but also at home within our selues, by the Byshop of Rome, and his retinue. Where also is to be noted in the daies and reigne of this king Henry the vij. how mightely the working of Gods Gospell hath multiplied and increased, and what great numbers of men and women haue suffered for the same, with vs in England, as by these stories abone past, may be apparent.

Now these things declared,* which to the Church matters be appertaining, cōsequently it remaineth something to entreate of the state likewise of the cōmon wealth, which commonly doth follow the state of the Church. Where the Church is quietly and moderately gouerned, and the flock of Christ defended by godly Princes in peace & safety, frō deuouring and violence of bloody wolues: the successe of ciuile estate, for the most part, there doth florish, and the Princes long cōtinue through Gods preseruatiō, in prosperous rest & trāquillitie. Contrariwise where the church of Christ either through the negligence of Princes, or thorough their setting on, the poore members of Christ be persecuted and deuoured: shortly after ensueth some iust recompence of the Lord vpon those Princes, that eyther their liues do not long continue, or else they finde not that quiet in the common wealth,* which they looke for. Examples heereof, as in all other ages be abundant, so in this present time be not lacking, whether we consider the state and condition of other countreys farre off, or else of our owne countrey neare at home.

And heere not to wander in our story, farther then to Fraunce onely, let vs a little behold the example of Kyng Charles the viij. who liuing in this Kings time, died also not long before him. This Charles is commended of Philippus Cominaeus, to be a moderate, valiant, and victorious Prince, adorned with many speciall vertues to a Prince appertaining. And yet the same king, because he was flack and remisse in defence of Christes Church, neither did vse his authority, nor tooke his occasion offered to him of God, to amend and refourme the state of the Bishop and Cleargy of Rome when he might, he was therefore himselfe punished and cut off of the Lord, as by his story ensuing may right well appeare. For so it is of him recorded, that being maruelously excited and prouoked, of his owne minde (cōtrary to the counsaile of most of his Nobles) he tooke hys viage into Italy, neither being furnished with money, nor the season of the yeare being cōuenient therunto. And that this may appeare the better to proceede of y^e Lords doing, to the entent he woulde haue the Church and Cleargy of Rome reformed by the Princes sword,* which so vexed all Christendome at that time, we shall heare what is testified in the Commentaries of the foresaid Philip. Cominaeus Lib. 3. De bello Neapolit. writing in this wise.

There was (saith he) in the City of Florence the same time a Dominicke Frier,Dominicke Frier, named Hieronimus Sauonarola (of whom mētion was made before, pag. 731.) a man of a right godly and approoued life: who in the said City of Florence preached and prophecied long before, that the French King should come with an army into Italy, being stirred vp of God to suppress the tiraunts of Italy, and none should withstand him. He should also come to the Citie of Pisae, and the state of Florence should be altered: all which hapned true. He affirmed moreouer to be signified to him of the Lord, that the Ecclesiasticall state of the Church must bee redressed Per vim a•morum••. by the sword, or force of armes. Many things also he prophesied of the Venetians, & of the French King, saing that the King with some danger & difficultie, should passe that iourney, yet notwithstanding shoulde ouercome it and escape, albeit his strength were neuer so slender: for God woulde safely conduct him in that iourney, and safely bring him home againe. But because he had not done his office, in amending the state of the Church, and in defending his people from iniurie, and from deuouring, therefore it shoulde come to passe (said hee) and that shortly, that some incommoditie or detriment shoulde happen to the King: or if hee shoulde escape that danger of hys sicknesse, and recouer health, then if he did resist the cruelty of the wicked, and procure the safety of the poore and miserable, God would shew merc●•nto him, &c.

And this the saide Hieronymus declared before to Cominaeus one of the Kings counsaylours, whych was the writer of the story, and required him to signifie the same vnto the King, which so did, and he moreouer himselfe comming to the presence of the king, declared no lesse.

All which things, as he had foretold, came directly to effect. For the King being but easely accompanied wyth a small power, entred into Italy, where first he came to As•a, then to Gemia• and to Pisae, from thence proceeded to Florence, which also he obtained, displacing there Petrus Medices the Duke, who had vsed great tyrannie vpon the Page 776 subiects.* From thence he remoued toward Rome, where a great part of the Citie wall at the comming of the french King, fell downe.

Afterward when the King was entred into the Citie, and the Pope (who then tooke part with Alphonsus King of Neaples against the French King) had immured himselfe within the mount of Adrian, the wall of the Castell fell downe of it selfe: whereby, when the King was both occasioned, and exhorted also by his Captaines to inuade y^e Pope, and to depose him, & to reforme y^e Church of Rome, (which he might then easely haue done, as it had pleased him) yet all these occasions offered so opportunely of God, moued not y^e king to do his duty, & to help the poore church of Christ: wherefore shortly after, returning home into France from Neapolis, either y^e same yeare or y^e next yeare folowing he was strooken with a sodeine sicknes at Amboise, as he was looking on thē that played at tennes, and that in the stinkingest place in all the Castle, where he fell downe & died within twelue houres, according to y^e forewarning of Hieronimus, who wrote vnto him a little before, both of his sonnes death and of his owne, which was about the yeare of our Lord 1498.*Ex Philip. Cominaeo. Lib. 5.

Like examples we haue many heere also in this our realme of England. So long as king Iohn kept out of the realme, the Popes authority and power, he continued safe and quiet with his nobles: but so soone as he brought the realme vnder tribute and subiectiō to that foreine Bishop, God stirred vp his Nobles against him, whereby he had much disquiet and trouble and soone thereupon decayed.

Of all the Kings of England, from William Conquerour, to this king Henry vij. were none which either longer continued,* or more prosperously flourished, then King Henry the second, King Henry the third, King Edward the first, King Edward the third, of whome the first, how stout he was in withstāding Tho. Becket and Pope Alexander the iij. is sufficiently before comprehended, pag. 206.

The second, which was sonne of King Iohn, albeit through the wretchednes of that time his power was not sufficient to repulse the Popes usurped iurisdiction out of the Realme: yet his will was good: at least he so defended & prouided for his subiects, that they tooke no great wrong at the Popes handes: who reigned one yeare longer then Augustus Caesar, which hath not commonly bene seene in any Prince.

The third, which was King Edward the first, so vigilantly behaued himselfe for the publique cōmoditie & safetie of his people, that he defended thē frō all foraine power and hostilitie both of the Scottes (then our enemies, now our frendes) and also from the Bishop of Rome, takyng part with them against vs, as may appeare aboue, page 340.* Furthermore of the same King, and of his woorthy Nobles and house of Parliament, how valiantly they stooode in deniall of the Popes subsidies, and also how the sayd King secluded out of his protection the Bishops, and especially the Archbishop Peecham for standing wyth the Pope,* reade pag. 352.

Now as touching King Edward the third, how little he regarded, how princely he with his Nobles likewise resisted the Popes reseruations and prouisions, how hee brided the Archbishop Iohn S•ratford,* and reiected the •a••e authority of the Bishop of Rome, both in •efe•ise of his subiects, and also in defence of claiming his right title in the Realme of France, reade pag. 383.

Not that I do heere affirme or define, as in a generall rule, that worldly succeſse and prosperitie of life alwayes followeth the godly, which we see rather to be geuen more often to the wicked sort: but speaking of the duty of Princes, I note and obserue by examples of histories,* that such Princes as haue most defended the Church of Christ committed to their gouernance, from iniurie and violence of the Bishop of Rome, haue not lacked at Gods hand great blessing and felicitie: whereas contrarywise, they whiche either themselues haue bene persecutours of Christes mēbers, or haue not shielded thē by their protection from foreine tyranny and iniuries, haue lacked at Gods hand that protection, which the other had, as may appeare by King Edward the second, Richard the third, King Henry the fourth, King Henry the v. king Henry the vj. &c. who because either negligētly they haue suffered, or cruelly caused such persecuting lawes to be made, & so much Christē blood iniuriously to be deuoured: therefore haue they bene y^e lesse prospered of the Lord, so that either they were deposed, or if they florished for a while, yet they did not long continue, almost not halfe the time of the other kings before named.

And therefore, as the state of the common wealth doth commonly folow the state of y^e Church, as ye hard before: so it had bene to be wished, that this King Henry the vij. beyng otherwise a prudent & temperaunt Prince, had not permitted the vntemperaūt rage of the Popes Clergy so much to haue their willes ouer the poore flocke of Christ, as then they had: accordyng as by these persecutiōs aboue mētioned may appeare. The which king Henry vij. albeit he had a sufficiēt continuance, who had now raigned 24. yeares, yet notwithstanding here commeth the same thyng to be noted, wherof I speake before: that whē the Church of Christ begynneth to be iniuried with violēce, & to go to wracke through misorder & negligēce, the state of the common wealth can not there long endure without some alteration, & stroke of Gods correction. But howsoever this marke is to be takē, thus lyeth the story: that after the burnyng & vexyng of these poore seruauntes of Christ aboue recited,* when the persecution begā now in the Church to be hoate, God called away the kyng, the same yeare aboue mentioned, which was. 1509. after he had raigned y^e terme of yeares. 24. Who if he had adioyned a litle more pitifull respect, in protectyng Christes poore mēbers, from the fire of the Popes tyrāny, to his other great vertues of singular wisdom, excellent tēperaunce, & moderate frugalitic: somuch had he bene cōparable with the best of those Princes aboue comprehended, as hee had bene interiour but to a few: but this defect which lacked in him, was supplyed most luckely (blessed be y^e Lord) by his posteritie succeeding after him.* Of whom in the next volume folowing (Christ thereunto assisting vs) we haue to specifie more at large.

Among many other thynges incident in the raigne of this kyng Henry vij. I haue ouerpassed the history of certayne godly persons persecuted in the Diocesse of Couentry and Lichfield, as we finde them in the Registers of the Diocesse recorded, here folowyng.

The yeare of our Lord. 1485. March 9. amongst diuers and sundry other good men in Couētry, these ix. here vnder named were examined before Iohn Bishop of Couentry and Lichfield, in S. Michaels Church, vpon these Articles, folowyng in order.

First,* Iohn Blomston was openly and publikely, infamed, accused reported & appeached that he was a very hereticke, because he had preached, taught, holden & affirmed, that the power attributed to S. Peter in the Church of God,* by our Sauour Iesus Christ: immediatly did not flit, or passe frō him, to remaine with his successours.

Item, that there was as much vertue in an herbe as in the Image of the Uirgine Mary.

Item;* that prayer and almes auayle not the dead, for incontinent after death, he goeth either to heauen 〈◇〉 held, whereupon he concludeth there is no Purgatory.

Item, that it was foolishnesse to go on Pilgrimage to the Image of our Lady of Dancaster, Walsingham or of the Tower of the Citie of Couentry: for a man might as well worship the blessed Uirgin by the fire 〈◇〉 in the •itchin, as in the foresayd places,* and as well might a man worship the blessed Uirgin, when he seeth his mother or sister, as in visityng the Images, because they be no more but dead stockes and stones.

Item, that he sayd in English with a frowning countenaunce, as it appeared: a vengeaūce on all such horson Priestes, for they haue great enuy that a poore man should get his liuyng among them.

RIchard Hegham of the same Citie was accused. &c. to be a very hereticke,* because he did hold that a Christen man beyng at the point of death, should 〈◇〉 all his owne workes good and ••l, and submitte him to the mercy of God.*

Item, that it was fondnesse to worship the Images of our Lady of Tower in the foresayd Citie, or of other Saintes,* for they are but stockes and stones.

Item, that if the Image of our Lady of Tower were put into the fire it would make a good fire.

Item, that it were better to deale money vnto poore folkes then to offer to the Images of Christ and other Saintes, which are but dead stockes and stones.

RObert Crowther of the same Citie was accused,* that he was an hereticke, because he did hold, that who so receiueth the Sacramēt of the altar in deadly sinne, or out of charitie, receiueth nothyng but bread and wine.

Item, that neither Byshop, nor Priestes or Curates of Churches, haue power in the market of penaunce to bynde and loose.

Item,* that Pilgrimage to the Image of our Lady of Tower is foolishnesse, for it is but a stocke or a stone.

IOhn Smith was accused to be a very hereticke,* because he did hold that euery man is bonnde to know y^e Lordes Page 778 Prayer,* and the Creede in English, if he might for these false Priestes.

Item, that who so beleueed as the Church then did beleuee, beleueed ill: and that a man had neede to frequent the schooles a good while, ece that he can attaine to the knowledge of the true and right faith.

Item, that no Priest hath power to assoile a man in the market of penance, from his sinnes.

ROger Browne of the same Citie, was also accused to be an hereticke, bicause he did hold that no man ought to worship the Image of our Lady of Walsingham, nor the bloud of Christ at Hailes, but rather God almighty, who would geue him whatsoeuer he would aske.

Item, that he held not vp his hands, nor looked vp, at the eleuation of the Eucharist.

Item, that he promised one to shew him certaine bookes of heresie, if he woulde sweare that he woulde not vtter them, and if he would credite them.

*Item, that he did eate flesh in Lent, and was taken with the maner.

Item, if any man were not shriuen his whole life long, and in the point of death would be confessed, and could not, if he had no more but cōtrition only, he should passe to ioy without Purgatory:* And if he were confessed of any sinne, & were enioined only to say for penance one Pater noster, if he thought he should haue any punishmēt in Purgatory for that sinne, he would neuer be confessed for any sinne.

*Item, because he said all is lost that is geuen to Priests.

Item, that there was no Purgatory, that God woulde pardon all sinnes without confession and satisfaction.

*THomas Butler of y^e same Citie, was likewise opēly accused to be a very hereticke, because he did hold y^t there were but two wayes, that is to say, to heauen, and to hell.

*Item, that no faithfull man should abide any paine after the death of Christ, for any sinne, because Christ died for our sinnes.

Item, that there was no Purgatory, for euery man immediatly after death passeth either to heauen, or hell.

*Item, that whosoever departeth in the faith of Christ and the Church, howsoever he hath liued, shall be saued.

Item, that praiers & pilgrimages are nothing worth, and aua not to purchase heauen.

IOhn Falkes was accused to be a very hereticke, because he did <◇> that it was a foolish thing to offer to the Image of our Lady; sayeng, her dead shall be hoare or I offer to her, what is it but a blocke? If it could speake to me, I would noue it an halsepeny worth of ale.

Item, that when the Priest carieth to the sicke the body of Christ, who carieth he not also the bloud of Christ?

Item, that he did eate cowe milke vpon the first Sunday of Lent.

Item, that as concerning the Sacrament of penance & absolution, no Priest hath power to assoile any man frō his sinnes,* whē as he can not make one heare of his head.

Item, that the Image of our Lady was but a stone or a blocke.

*Richard Hilmin was accused that he was a very hereticke, because he did say and mainteine that it was better to depart with money to the poore, then to giue tithes to Priests, or to offer to the Images of our Lady, and that it were better to offer to Images made by God, then to the Images of God painted.

Item, that he had the Lords Prayer and the Salutation of the Angell and the Creede in English,* and another booke did he see and had, which contained the Epistles and Gospels in English, and according to them woulde hee liue, and thereby beleued to be saued.

Item, that no Priest speaketh better in the Pulpit then that booke.

Item, that the Sacrament of the aultare is but bread, and that the Priests make it to blinde the people.

Item, that a Priest whiles he is at Masse, is a Priest, and after one Masse done, till the beginning of another Masse, he is no more then a lay man, and hath no more power then a meere lay man.

After they were enforced to recant, they were assoyled and put to penance.

IN the yeare of our Lord 1488.* the iij. of Aprill, Margery Goyt, wife of Iames Goyt of Asburne, was brought before the foresayde Iohn Bishop of Couentry and Lichfield, who was there accused that she said, that that which y^e Priests lift ouer their heads at Masse, was not the true and very body of Christ.* For if it were so, the Priestes could not breake it so lightly into four parts, and swallow it as they do: for the Lordes body hath flesh and bones, so hath not that which the Priests receiue.

Item, that Priests buieng xl. cakes for a halfepeny, and shewing them to the people and saieng, that of euery of them they make the body of Christ, do nothing but deceiue the people and enrich themselues.

Item, seeing God in the beginning did create and make man, how can it be that man should be able to make God?

This woman also, was constrained to recant, and so was she assoyled and did penance.

Thus much I thought heere good to inserte, touchyng these foresaid men of Couentry, especially for this purpose, because our cauilling aduersaries be wont to object against vs the newnes of Christes old and auntient Religion. To the intent therefore they may see this doctrine not to be so new as they report, I wish they woulde consider both the time and Articles heere objected agaynste these foresayd persons, as is aboue premised.

I should also in the same reigne of King Hēry vij. haue induced that history of Ioannes Picus Earle of Mirandula,* the mention of whose naine partly is touched before, page. 704. This Picus Earle of Mirandula being but a yong man, was so excellently witted, & so singularly learned in all sciences, and in all touns, both Latine, Greeke, Hebrew, Chaldey, and Araby, that cōming to Rome booted and spurred, he set vp 90. conclusions, to dispute in the same with any in al Christēdome, whosoeuer would come against him. Of which conclusions diuers were touching the matter of y^e Sacramēt, &c. And when none was found in all Rome, nor in Europe, that openly would dispute w^t him, priuely and in corners certaine of the Popes Clergy, Prelates, Lawyers, & Friers, by the Pope appointed, cōsulted together to inquire vpon his cōclusions, wherupon they did articulate against him for suspicion of heresie. And thus the vnlearned Clergy of Rome priuely circumuēted and intangled this learned Earle in their snares of heresy, against whome they neuer durst openly dispute. He dyed being of the age of 32. of such witte and towardnes, as is hard to say whether euer Italy bredde vp a better. In his sickenes Charles viij. the French King, moued with the fame of his learning, came to visite him. The furniture of his bookes cost him 7000. florens. A little before his death his mind was to giue all away, and to take a coule, to go about & preach, but the Lord would not permit him. His story requireth a long tractatiō, which if place do serue, we will not peraduētūre forget. With ij. Popes, that is, with Pope Innocent, & Alexander vj. he had much vexation.

AS touching the ciuil state and administration of the Common wealth, and likewise of the state of the Church, vnder the raig of king Henry 7. how he entred first in possession of y^e crowne: how the two houses of Yorke and Lancaster were in hym conioyned through marriage with Elizabeth the eldest daughter to King Edward 4. by the prudent counsaile of Iohn Morton then Bishop of Ely, after Archbishop of Canterbury, and Cardinall: howe long the sayd King reigned, and what persecution was in his time for lacke of searche and knowledge of Gods word, both in the diocesse of Lincolne vnder bishop Smith (who was erecter of the house of Brasen nose in Oxforde) as also in the diocesse of Couentrie, and other places moe: and further, what punishment and alteration God commonly sendeth vpon cities and realmes publike for neglecting the safety of his flocke, sufficiently in the former booke hath bene alrede specified: Wherin many things more amply might haue ben added, incidēt in the raig of this Prince, which we haue for breuitie pretermitted. For hee that studieth to comprehend in story all things, which the common course & vse of life may offer to the wryter, may sooner finde matter to occupie himselfe, then to profite other. Otherwise I myght haue inferred mention of the seditions tumult of Perkin Werbecke, wyth his retinue, Anno 1494. also of Blackheath field by the Blacke smith, An. 1496.* I myght also haue recited the glorious commendation of Georgius Lilius in his Latine Chronicle testifying of King Henrie 7. howe hee sent three solemne Oratours to Pope Iulius 2. to yeelde his obedience to the sea of Rome. An. 1506. and likewise howe Pope Alexander 9. Pius 3. and Iulius 2. sent to the sayde king Henry 7. three sundrie famous Ambassadors Page 800 which tree swordes, and three cappes of maintenance,* electing and admitting hym to be the chiefe defendor of the faith. The commendation of which facte, howe glorious it is in the eyes of Georgius Lilius, and Fabian, that I leaue to them. This I suppose, that when Kyng Henry sent to Pope Iulius three Orators, wyth obedience, if he had sent him thre thousand harquebuziers to furnish his fielde against the French king fighting at Rauenna, hee had pleased pope Iulius much better. If Georgius Lilius had bene disposed to illustrate his story with notes, this had bene more worthy the noting,* howe Ludouike 12. French king calling his Parliament, moued this question against Pope Iulius: whether a Pope might inuade any Prince by warlike force, wythout cause, and whether the prince might withdraw hys obedience from that Pope, or not? And it was concluded in the same Parliament wyth the king, against the Pope. Also it was concluded the same time (which was in the raig of this king Henry 7). that the *Pragmatical sanction should be receiued in ful force and effect, through all the realme of Fraunce.

And for so muche as wee are fallen into the mention of Georgius Lilius, this in hym is to be found not vnworthy noting, howe after the burning of Thomas Norice, aboue mentioned, pag. 775. at the citie of Norwich, that the same yere followed such a fire in Norwich, that the whole

Citie, well neare, was therewith consumed. Ex Geor. Lilio. Like as also after the burning of the foresayde good aged father in Smithfield,* the same yeare (which was 1500.) we reade in the Chronicle of Fabian a great plague to fall vppon the Citie of London, to the great destruction of the inhabitantes therof. Wherein agayne is to be noted (as is aforesayd) that according to the state of the church, the disposition of the common wealth commonly is guided, eyther to be wyth aduersitie afflicted, or els in prosperitie to flourish. But after these notes of King Henry 7. nowe to the storie of king Henry 8.

This king Henry 7. finishing his course in the yeare abouesayd, which was 1509. had by Elizabeth hys wife aboue named,* foure men children, and of women children as many. Of whome 3. onely suruiued: to wit, prince Henry, Lady Margarete, and Lady Mary. Of whome King Henry the eight after hys father succeeded. Lady Margaret was married to Iames the fourth king of Scottes.* Ladie Mary was affied to Charles king of Castile.

Not long before the death of king Henry, prince Arthur his elder sonne had espoused Lady Katherine daughter to Ferdinandus, being of the age of 15. yeares, and shee about the age of 17. and shortly after hys mariage, wythin 5. monethes, departed at Ludlowe, and was buried at Worcester. After whose decease the succession of the Crowne fell next to king Henry the 8. being of the age of 18. yeres, who entred hys raigne the yeare of our Lorde 1509. and shortly after married with the foresayde Katherine, his late brother Prince Arthurs wife, to the end, that her dowry being great, shoulde not be transported out of the lande. In the which his marriage being more politique, then Scripture like, he was dispensed wyth by pope Iulius, at the request of Ferdinandus her father. The raigne of this king continued with great noblenes and fame,* the space of 38. yeres. During whose time and raigne was greate alteration of things, as well to the ciuile state of the Realme, as especially to the state Ecclesiasticall, and matters of the Church appertaining. For by him was exiled and abolyshed out of the Realme, the vsurped power of the Byshop of Rome, Idolatrye and superstition somewhat repressed, Images and pilgrimages defared, Abbeyes and monasteries pulled downe, Sectes of religion rooted out, Scriptures reduced to the knowledge of the vulgarr tongue, and the state of the Church and religion redressed. Concerning all whyche things, in the processe of thys volume heere folowing, wee will endeuour (Christe willing) particularly and in order to discourse: after that first we shall comprehend a fewe matters, which within the beginning of hys raigne are to be noted and collected. Where, leauing of to write of Empson and Dudley, who in the time of king Henry 7. being great doers in executing the penall lawes ouer the people at that time, and purchasing thereby more malyce then lands, with that whych they had gotten, were shortly after the entring of this king beheaded, the one a Knight, the other an Esquier: leauing also to intermeddle w^t hys wars, triumphes, and other temporal affaires, we meane in this volume principally to bestowe our trauaile in declaration of matters concerning moste chiefly the state of the Church and of religion, as well in this Church of England, as also of the whole Church of Rome.

Wherein first commeth to our handes a turbulent tragedie, and a fierce contention, which long before had troubled the Churche, and nowe thys present yeare 1509. was renewed afresh betweene two certaine orders of begging friers, to wit, the Dominike friers, and the Franciscanes, about the Conception of the virgine Marye, the mother of Christe.

The Franciscanes were they, which did holde of S. Fraunces,* & followed the rule of his testament commonly called Gray friers, or Minorites. Their opiniō was this: that the virgine Mary preuented by the grace of the holy Ghost was so sanctified,* that shee was neuer subiecte one moment in her conception, to Original sinne. The Dominike Friers were they, which holding of Dominike, were commonly called Blacke friers, or preaching friers. Theyr opinion was, that the virgine Mary was conceiued, as all other children of Adam be: so that thys priuiledge onely belongeth to Christe, to be conceiued wythout Originall sinne: notwithstanding the sayd blessed virgin was sanctified in her mothers wombe, and purged from her Original sinne, so as was Iohn Baptist, Ieremie, or any other priuiledged person. This friuolous questiō kindling and gendring betweene these two sectes of friers, brast out in suche a flame of partes and sides taking, that it occupied the heades and wits, scholes, and vniuersities almost through the whole Church, some holding one parte wyth Scotus,* some the other parte with Thom. Aquine. The Minorites holding with Scotus their maister, disputed and concluded, that she was conceiued without al spot or note of Original sinne, and therupon caused the feast and seruice of the conception of S. Mary the virgine to be celebrate and solemnised in the Church. Contrary, the Dominike Friers taking side wyth Aquinas,* preached that it was heresie to affirme that the blessed virgine was conceiued without the guilte of Originall sinne: and that they which did celebrate the feast of her Conception, or sayd any Masses thereof, did sinne greeuously and mortally.

In the meane time as thys fantasie waxed hote in the church, the one side preaching against the other, came pope Sixtus 4. Anno 1476. who ioyning side wyth the Minorites or Franciscanes, first sent forth his decree by authoritie Apostolique, willing, ordaining, and commaunding all men to solemnise thys new found feast of the conception in holy Church for euermore: offering to al men and women,* which deuoutly frequenting the church, wold heare masse and seruice from the first euensong of the sayde feast, to the Octaues of the same, as many dayes of pardone, as Pope Urbane the 4. and Pope Mactin the 5. did graunt for hearing the seruice of Corpus Christi day. &c. and thys Decree was geuen and dated at Rome. An. 1476.

Moreouer the same Pope, to the entent that the deuotion of the people myght bee the more encouraged to the celebration of thys Conception, hee added a clause more to the Aue Maria,* graunting great indulgence and release of sinnes to all such as woulde inuocate the blessed Uirgine, wyth the same addition, saying thus: Aue Maria gratia plena, Dominus tecum, benedicta tu in mulieribus, & benedictus fructus ventris tui Iesus Christus, & benedicta sit Anna mater tua de qua sine macula, tua processit caro virginea. Amen. That is, Haile Marie full of grace, the Lord is with thee, blessed art thou among women, & blessed is the fruite of thy wombe, Iesus Christ:*,and blessed is Anna thy mother, of whome thy virgines flesh hath proceeded wythout blot of originall sinne. Amen.

Wherin thou maist note (gentle reader) for thy learning three things: First how the Pope turneth that vnproperly into a prayer, whiche properly was sent of God for a message or tidings. Secondly, howe the Pope addeth to the wordes of the Scripture,* contrary to the expresse precept of the Lorde. Thirdly, howe the Pope exempteth Marye the blessed virgine, not onely from the seede of Abraham and Adam, but also frō the condition of a mortall creature. For if there be in her no originall sinne, then she beareth not the Image of Adam, neither doth shee descende of that seede, of whose sede euil proceedeth vpon al men and women to cōdemnation, as S. Paul doth teach. Rom. 5. Wherefore if she descende of that seede,* then the infection of Originall euill must necessarily proceede vnto her. If she descend not therof, then commeth she not of the seede of Abraham, nor of the seede of Dauid. &c. Againe, seeing that death is the effect and stipende of sinne, by the doctrine of S. Paule. Roma. 6. then had her flesh iniurye by the lawe (as Christe hym selfe had) to suffer the malediction and punishment of death,* and so should neuer haue died, if originall sinne had no place in her. &c. But to returne vnto our storie: Thys constitution of the Pope being set foorth for the conception of the blessed virgin, which was the yere of our Lorde 1476. it was not long after, but the sayde Pope Sixtus perceiuing that the Dominike friers with their complices wold not conforme Page 801 themselues hereunto,* directed foorth by the authority Apostolicall, a Bul, in effect as foloweth.

Sane cum sancta Romana ecclesia de intemeratae semperque virginis. &c In English. Whereas the holy Church of Rome hath ordained a speciall and proper seruice for the publike solemnising of the feast of the conception of the blessed virgin Mary: certaine orders of the Blacke friers in their publike sermons to the people in diuers places, haue not cessed hitherto to preach and yet daily do, that all they which hold or affirme the sayd glorious virgine to haue bene conceiued without originall sinne, be heretiques: and they which celebrate the seruice of the sayde her conception, or do heare the sermons of them which do so affirme, doe sinne grieuously: also not contented herewith, doe wryte and set foorth bookes moreouer, mainteining their assertions, to the great offence and ruine of godly mindes: We therfore to preuent and wythstand such presumptuous and peruers assertions, which haue risen, and more heereafter may arise by suche opinions and preachings aforesaid, in the mindes of the faithfull: by the authority Apostolical, do condemne, and reproue the same, and by the motion, knowledge and authority aforesayd, decree and ordeyne, that the preachers of Gods word, and all other persones of what state, degree, order, or condition soeuer they be, which shall presume to dare affirme or preach to the people these foresayde opinions and assertions to be true, or shall reade, holde, or maintaine any suche bookes for true, hauing before intelligence hereof, shal incurre thereby the sentence of excommunication: from whyche they shall not be absolved otherwise then by the bishop of Rome, except onely in the time of death. Thys Bull being dated the yere of our Lord. 1483. gaue no litle heart and encouragement to the gray Friers Franciscanes, which defended the pure conception of the holy virgin, against the blacke Dominicke friers, with theyr confederates, holding the contrary side. By the vigour of which Bull, the Gray order had got such a conquest of the Blacke garde of the Dominikes, that the sayd Dominikes were compelled at length for a perpetuall memoriall of the triumph, both to geue to the glorious virgine euery night an Antheme in praise of her Conception, and also to subscribe vnto their doctrine: In which doctrine these, wyth diuers other poyntes bee contained.

1 That blessed Mary the virgine suffered the griefes and aduersities of this life,* not for any necessity inflicted for punishment of Originall sinne: but onely because she would conforme her selfe to the imitation of Christ.

2 That the sayde virgin, as she was not obliged to anye punishmente due for sinne,* as neither was Christe her sonne: so she had no neede of remission of sinnes, but in steed thereof had the diuine preservation of Gods helpe, keeping her from all sinne: which grace only she needed, and also had it.

3 Item, that where the body of the virgin Mary was subiect to death, and died: this is to be vnderstand to come not for any penaltie due for sinne, but either for imitation and cōformitie vnto Christ,* or els for the natural constitution of her body being elemental, as were y^e bodies of our first parents: who if they had not tasted of the forbidden fruit, should haue bene preserued from death, not by nature, but by grace & strength of other fruits and meates in Paradise. Which meates, because Mary had not, but did eate our cōmon meates, therfore she died, and not for any necessitie of Originall sinne. Clitouaeus lib. . cap. 2.

4 The vniuersall proposition of S. Paule, which sayth that the Scripture hath concluded all men vnder sinne, is to be vnderstand thus, as speaking of all them which be not exempted by the speciall priuiledge of God, as is the blessed virgin Mary.

5 If iustification be taken for reconciliation of him that was vnrighteous before, and now is made righteous: thē the blessed virgin is to be taken, not for iustified by Christ, but iust from her beginning by preservation.

6 If a sauour be taken for him, which saueth men fallen into perdition & condemnation, so is not Christ sauior of Mary, but is her saueour only in this respect, for sustaining her from not falling into condemnation, &c.

7 Neither did the virgine Mary geue thanks to God, nor ought so to doe, for expiation of her sinnes, but for her conseruation from case of sinning.

*8 Neither did she pray to God at any time for remission of her sinnes, but onely for remission of other mens sinnes she praied many times, and counted their sinnes for hers.

9 If the blessed virgine had decessed before the Passion of her sonne, God would haue reposed her soule not in the place among the Patriarkes, or among the iust, but in the same most pleasaunt place of Paradise, where Adam and Eue was, before they transgressed.

These were the doting dreames and phantasies of the Franciscans & of other papists, commonly then holden in the schooles, wrytten in their bookes, preached in theyr sermons, taught in churches, * and set foorth in pictures. So that the people was taught nothing els almost in the pulpits all this while, but how the virgine Mary was cōc•iued immaculate, and holy wythout Originall sinne, and how they ought to call to her for helpe, whome they wyth special termes do cal the way of mercy: the mother of grace: the loue of pietie: the comforter of mankind: the continuall intercessour for the saluation of the faithfull: and an aduocate to the king her sonne, which neuer ceaseth. &c. Verba Papae Sixti in Decret. And althoughe the greatest number of the scholedoctours were of the contrary faction, as Peter Lombardus, Thom. Aquine, Bernandus, Bonauentura, and other: yet these new papists shifted of their obiections with friuolous distinctiōs and blinde euasions, as thus: Petrus Lombardus,* they sayd, is not receiued nor holdē in the schooles, as touching thys article, but is reiected: Clitoueus lib. 2. cap. 15.

Bernardus in Epist ad Lugdunens. although hee seemeth to deny the conception of the blessed virgin to be voyd of Originall sinne,* saying that she could not be holy when shee was not, and liued not: to this they answere, that all be it she was yet in essence, not yet shee was holy in her conception, and before her conception in the diuine presence of God, which had chosen & preelected her before the worlds, to be the mother of the Lord.

Againe where Bernard doeth argue, that she was not without original sinne conceiued, because she was not cōceiued by the holy Ghost, to this they aunswere: That the holy Ghost may worke two wayes in conception: eyther without company of man, and so was Christ only conceiued: or els with company and help of man, and thus was the blessed virgin conceiued. Clit. lib. 2. cap. 14.

Bonauentura (say they) was an holy father, but hee spake then after the custome and maner of his time, when as the solemnitie and puritie of this conception was not yet decreed nor receiued by the publike cōsent and authority of the church,* now seing the authority of the church of Rome hath established the same, it oughte not to be contraried, nor can, wythout daungerous disobedience. In all mens actions, diligent respect of time must be had. That whych bindeth not at one time, afterward the same by law being ratified, may binde at an other. Ibid.

Finally for the number and multitude on the contrary side, thus they answer for themselves,* as we nowe in these our daies likewise in defence of the truth may wel answere against the Pope and all his popish Friers, turning their owne weapons against them selues: Multitude, say they, ought not to mooue vs. Uictorie consisteth not in number and heapes, but in fortitude and hearts of souldiours: yea rather fortitude and stomacke commeth from heauen, and not of man. Iudas Machabeus wyth a little handfull, ouerthrewe the great armye of Antiochus. Strong Sampson wyth a poore Asses bone slew a thousand Philistines. Daudid had no more but a seely sling, & a few stones, and with these stroke downe terrible Goliath the Gyaunt. &c. Lib. eod. cap. 13.

With these and such other like reasons, the gray Franciscans voided their aduersaries, defending the cōception of the virgine Mary to be vnblemished, and pure from all contagion of Originall sinne. Contrariwyse the Blacke gard of the Dominike friers, for theyr partes were not all mute, but laide lustily from them agayne, hauyng greate authorities, and also the Scripture on theyr side. But yet the other hauing the sea Apostolicall w^t them, had the better hande,* and in fine gate the victorie triumphantly ouer the other, to the high exaltation of theyr order. For Pope Sixtus (as I sayd) by the authoritie Apostolicall, after hee had decreed the cōception day of the virgin perpetually to be sanctified, and also with his terrible Bull had condēned for heretiques al them which withstoode the same: the Dominicke Friers wyth authoritie oppressed, were dryuen to two incōueniences, the one was, to kepe silence, the other was, to geue place to their aduersaries the Franciscanes. All be it where the mouthe durste not speake, yet the heart would worke: and though the tongue were tied, yet theyr good will was ready by all meanes possible to maintaine their quarel, and their estimation.

Whereupon it happened the same yeare of our Lorde 1509. after this dissention betwene the Dominike Friers,* & the Franciscanes, that certaine of the Dominickes thinking by subtile sleight to worke in the peoples heades,* that which they durst not atchieue with opē preaching, deuised a certaine Image of the Uirgine, so artificially wroughte, that the Friers by priuie gins made it to stirre, & to make gestures, to lament, to complaine, to weepe, to grone, & to geue answers to them that asked: in somuch that the people Page 798 therwith were brought in a maruelous perswasion, til at length the fraude being espied,* the Friers were taken, condemned, and burned at Berne, the yere aboue mentioned. 1509. Ex Peucer. Sebast. Munstero, Carione, & alijs. In the Centuries of Iohn Bale, I finde their names to be Ioannes Vetter, Franciscus Vliscus, Stephanus Bolizhorst, and Henricus Steinegger.

In the storie of Ioh. Stumfius, this story aforesayde doth partly appeare: but in the Registers and Recordes of the Citie of Berne, the order and circumstance therof is more fully expressed and set foorth both in meter and prose, and is thus declared.

*In the Citie of Berne there were certaine Dominike friers, to the nūber chiefly of 4. principall doers, and chieftaines of that Order, who had inueigled a certaine simple poore frier, who had newly planted himselfe in the cloister: whome the foresayd Friers had so infatuated wyth sundry superstitions, & fained apparitions of S. Maria, S. Barbara, and S. Catherina, and w^t their inchauntments, and imprinting moreouer in hym the woundes of S. Fraunces, that he beleueed plainely, that the Uirgine Mary had appeared to hym, and had offered to hym a red hoost consecrated, with the bloud also of Christ myraculous: whych blessed virgin also had sent him to the senatours of Berne, with instructions, declaring vnto them, from the mouth of the virgine, y^t she was conceiued in sinne, & that the Franciscane friers were not to be credited nor suffered in the city, which were not yet reformed from that erroneous opinion of her conception. He added moreouer that they shuld resort to a certaine image there of y^e virgine Mary (whych image the Friers by engines had made to sweat) & should do their worship, & make their oblations to the same. &c.

This fained deuise was not so soone forged by the Friers, but it was assone beleued of the people: so that a great while the red coloured host was takē vndoubtedly for the true body and bloud of Christ, and certain coloured drops therof sent abroad to diuers noble personages and estates for a great relieue, and that not wythout great recōpence. Thus the deceiued people in great number came flocking to the image, and to the red host, and coloured bloud, with manifolde giftes and oblations. In briefe, the Dominike friers so had wrought the matter, and had so swept all the fatte to their owne beardes, from the order of the Franciscanes, that all the almes came to their boxe. The Franciscanes seeing their estimation to decay, and their kitchen to waxe colde, and their panches to be pinched, not able to abide that contumely, & being not ignorant or vnacquainted with suche counterfaieted doings (for as the Prouerbe sayeth. It is il halting before a creeple) eftsoones espied theyr craftye iuggling, and detected theyr fraudulent myracles. Whereupon the 4. chiefe captaines aboue named were apprehended, and put to the fire: of whom the Prouinciall of that order was one.

And thus much touching the beginning & ende of this tumultuous and popish tragedy: wherein euidently it may appeare to the Reader, howe neither these turbulent friers could agree among themselues,* and yet in what friuolous trifles they wrangled together. But to let these ridiculous friers passe, w^t their trifling phantasies, most worthy to be derided of all wise men: in the meane time this is to be lamented, to beholde the miserable times of the Church, in which the deuill kept the minds of Christes people so attētiue and occupied in such frierly toyes, that nothing els almost was taught or heard in the church, but only the commendation and exaltation of the virgin Mary.* But of our iustification by faith, of grace and the promises of God in Christ, of the strength of the law, of the horreur of sinne, of difference betwene the lawe and the Gospel, of the true liberty of conscience. &c. no mētion or very litle was heard. Wherefore in this so blinde time of darknes, it was muche needefull and requisite, that the Lord of his mercy shoulde looke vpon his church, & send downe hys gracious reformation, which also he did. For shortly vpon the same, thorowe the gracious excitation of God, came Martine Luther, of whome the order of story nowe requireth that we should and will intreat (Christ willingly) after the storie of Richard Hunne, and a few other things premised, for the better opening of the storie to folowe.

Mention was made sufficiently before of the doings of Pope Iulius,* and of hys warlike affaires, for the whych he was condemned, and not vniustly in the coucell of Turone in Fraunce,* Anno 1510. and yet all thys coulde not asswage the furious affection of this pope, but the same yere he inuaded the Citie of Mutina and Mirandula in Italie,* and tooke them by force of warre. Which Pope Iulius not long after,* in the yere of our Lorde 1512. refusing peace offered by Maximilian the Emperour, was encountered by Lewes the French king, about Rauenna, vpon Easter day, where he was vanquished, and had of his army slaine to the number of xvj. thousande. Ex Chron. Carion. And the yere next folowing. Anno 1513. this Apostolical warriour,* which had resigned his keyes vnto the riuer of Tybris before, made an end together both of fighting, and liuing,* after he had raigned and fought x. yeeres. Atter whome succeded next in the sea of Rome, Pope Leo the 10. About the compasse of which time,* great mutatiōs and stirres began to worke, as well in states temporall, as especially in the state of the Church.

In the time of which Pope, Emperour, and kinges of England, and of France, great alterations, troubles, and turnes of religion were wrought into the Church, by the mighty operation of Gods hand in Italy, Fraunce, Germanie, Englande, and all Europe, suche as haue not bene seene (although muche groned for) many hundreth yeares before: as in further discourse of this historie (Christe willing) more manifestly shall appeare.

But before wee come to these alterations, taking the time as it lieth before vs, wee will first speake of Richarde Hunne, and certaine other godly minded persons heere in Englande afflicted for the woorde of Christes Gospell in great multitude, as they be found and taken out of the Registers of Fitziamas Bishop of London, by the faithfull helpe and industry of R. Carket citizen of London.

The historie of diuers good men and women, persecuted for religion in the Citie and Dioces of the Bishop of London, briefly extracted out of the Registers of Richard Fitziamas.

AMongest and besides the great number of the faithful martyrs and professours of Christe, that constantly in the strength of the holy Ghost, gaue their liues for the testimonie of his trueth,* I finde recorded in the Register of London, betwene the yeares of our Lorde. 1509. and 1527. the names of diuers other persons both men and women: who in the fulnes of that darke and mystie times of ignoraunce, had also some portion of Gods good spirite whiche induced them to the knowledge of his trueth and Gospel, and were diuersly troubled, persecuted, and imprisoned for the same: notwithstanding by the proud, cruell and bloody rage of the Catholique seat, and through the weaknes and frailtie of their owne nature (not then fully strengthned in God) it was againe in them, for the time,* suppressed and kept vnder, as appeareth by their seuerall abiuratiōs made before Richard Fitziamas then bishop of London (in hys time a most cruell persecutor of Christes church) or els before his vicar general deputed for y^e same. And for asmuch as many of the aduersaries of Gods trueth, haue of late dayes disdainefully and braggingly cried out, and made demaunds in their publike assemblies and yet do, asking where this our church and religion was wythin these 50. or 60. yeares: I haue thought it not altogether vaine, somewhat to stop such lying crakers, both by mentioning theyr names, and likewyse opening some of the chiefe and principal matters, for which they wer so vnmercifully afflicted and molested, thereby to geue to vnderstand, as wel the continuauce and consent of the true church of Christe in that age, touching the chiefe poynts of our faith, though not in like perfection of knowledge and cōstancie in all: as also by the way, something to touch what fond and friuolous matters the ignoraunt Prelates shamed not in that time of blindnesse to obiect against the poore & simple people, accounting them as heynous and great offences, yea, such as deserued death both of body and soule. But least I should seeme too prolix and tedious heerein, I will nowe briefly proceede wyth the storie, and first begin wyth theyr names, whych are these.

Here foloweth the particular examination of all these heere aboue named.

To these were diuers and sundry particular Articles, (besides the common and generall sort accustomedly vsed in such cases) priuately objected, euen such as they were then accused of either by their curate, or other their neighbours. And because I thinke it somewhat superfluous to make any large recitall of all and euery part of their seuerall processe: I minde therefore briefly only to touch so many of their articles as may be sufficient to induce the Christian Reader to iudge the sooner of the rest: being (I assure you) of no greater importance, then these that folow: Except that sometime they were charged most slanderously with horrible and blasphemous lies, against the maiestie and truth of God, which as they vtterly denied, so doo I now for this present keepe secret in silence,* as well for breuities sake, as also somewhat to colour & hide the shameles practises of that lieng generation. But to our purpose.

THE chiefest obiection against Ioanne Baker, was, that she would not only her selfe not reuerence y^e Crucifixe:* but had also perswaded a frend of hers lieng at the point of death, not to put any trust or cōfidēce in the Crucifixe, but in God which is in heauen, who only worketh all the myracles that be done, and not the dead Images, that be but stockes and stones:* and therefore she was sory, that euer she had gone so often on Pilgrimage to S. Sauour and other Idols. Also, that she did hold opinion that the Pope had no power to geue pardons, & that Lady Yong (who was not long before that time burned, died a true martyr of God, and therefore she wished of God, that she her selfe might do no worse then the said Lady Yong had done.

VNto William Pottyer, besides diuers other false and slanderous articles (as that he should denie the benefite and effect of Christes passion) it was also alleged that he should affirme,* that there were sixe Gods. The first three was the holy Trinitie, the father, the sonne, and the holy Ghost. The fourth was a priests concubine beeing kept in his chamber. The fift was the Deuill. And the sixt that thing that a man setteth his mind most vpon.

The first part of this Article he vtterly denied, confessing most firmly and truely the blessed Trinitie to be only one God in one vnitie of Deitie.*as to the other three he answered, that a Priest delighting in his concubine, made her as his God Likewise a wicked person persisting in his sinne without repentaunce, made the Deuill his God. And lastly he graunted, that hee once hearing of certaine men, whiche by the singing and chattering of birdes, would seeke to knowe what things were to come, eyther to themselues or others, sayd that those men esteemed their birds as Gods: and otherwise he spake not.

AMongst the manifold and seuerall articles objected against Thomas Goodred,* Thomas Walker, Thomas Forge, Alyce Forge his wife, Iohn Forge their sonne, Iohn Caluerton, Iohn Woodrofe, Richard Woolman, and Roger Hilliar (As that they should speake against Pilgrimages, praieng vnto Saints, and such like, this principally was propounded, that they all denied the carnall and corporall presence of Christes body and bloud in the Sacrament of the altar:* and further, had concealed, and consented vnto their teachers and instructors of that doctrine, and had not according vnto y^e lawes of the Church, accused and presented them vnto the Bishop or Ordinary. Also great and heinous displeasure was conceiued against Richard Wolman, for that he tearmed the Church of Paules, a house of theeues: affirming that Priests, and other Ecclesiasticall persons there, were not liberall geuers vnto the poore (as they ought) but rather takers away from them, what they could get.

Likewise, as Thomas Austye, Ioanne Austye hys wife,* Thomas Graunt, Iohn Garters, Christofer Rauins, Dionise Rauins his sister, Thomas Uinent, Lewes Iohn, Ioan Iohn his wife, & Iohn Webbe, were of one felowship and profession of faith, with diuers of y^e last before recited: so were they also almost all apprehended about one time, & chiefly burdened with one opinion of the Sacrament. Which declareth euidently,* that notwithstanding the darke ignoraunce of those corrupted tymes, yet God did euer in mercy opē the eyes of some, to behold the manifest truth, euen in those thinges, wherof the Papistes make now greatest vaunt and bragge of longest continuaunce. Furthermore many of them were charged to haue spoken agaynst Pilgrimages: & to haue read and vse certaine English bookes, repugnyng the fayth of the Romish Church: as the foure Euangelistes, Wickleffes Wicket, a booke of the x. commaundementes of almightie God, the Reuelation of S. Iohn, the Epistles of Paule & Iames, with other like, which those holy ones could neuer abide, & good cause why: for as darkenes could neuer agree with light, no more cā ignoraunce, the maintainer of that kingdome, with the true knowledge of Christ and his Gospel.

It was further particularly objected agaynst Ioanne Iohn, the wife of Lewes Iohn,* that (besides the premisses) she learned and mainteined, that God commaunded no holy dayes to bee kept, but onely the Sabbath day, and therefore she would keepe none but it, nor no fastyng dayes affirmyng, that to fast from sinne was the true fast. Moreouer, that she had despised the Pope, his Pardons,* and Pilgrimages: In somuch that when any poore body asked his almes of her in the worship of the Lady of Walsingham, she would straight aunswere in contempt of the Pilgrimage: the Lady of Walsingham helpe thee. And if she gaue any thyng vnto him, she would then say: Take this in the worshyp of our Lady in heauen, and let the other goe. Which declareth that for lacke of better instructiō and knowledge, she yet ignorauntly attributed too much honour to the true Saintes of God departed: though otherwise she did abhorre the idolatrous worshipping of the dead Images. By which example, as also by many others (for shortnesse sake, at this present omitted) I haue iust occasion to cōdemne the wilfull subiltie of those, that in this bright shynyng light of Gods truth, would yet vnder colour of godly remembraunce, still mainteyne the hauyng of Images in the Church, craftely excusing their idolatrous kneelyng and praying vnto them, by affirming that they neuer worshypped the dead Images, but the thynges that the Images did represent. But if that were their onely doctrine and cause of hauyng of them, why thē would their predecessours so cruelly compell these poore simple people thus openly in their recantations to abiure and renoke their speakyng agaynst the grosse adoration of the outward Images onely, and not against the thing represented? which many of them, (as appeareth partly by this exāple) in their ignoraunt implicitie, confessed might be worshipped. Howbeit, God be thanked (who euer in his mercy continue it) their coulourable and hypocriticall excuses can not now take such place in the hartes of the elect of God, as they haue done heretofore, especially seying the word of God doth so manifestly forbid as wel the worshyppyng of them, as also the makyng or hauing of them, for order of Religion.

IT was alledged against Williā Couper and Alice Couper his wife, that they had spoken against Pilgrimages,* & worshyppyng of Images: but chiefly the woman, who hauyng her childe on a tyme hurt by fallyng into a pyt or ditche, and earnestly perswaded by some of her ignoraunt neighbours, to go on Pilgrimage to S. Laurēce for helpe for her child, sayd that neither S. Laurence,* nor any other S. could helpe her child, & therefore none ought to goe on Pilgrimage to any Image made with mās hād, but oneto vnto almightie God: for Pilgrimages were nothyng worth, sauing to make the Priestes rich. Vid. plura inferius.

VNto Iohn Houshold, Robert Rascall,* and Elizabeth Stamford, as well the Article against the Sacrament of the altar was objected, as also that they had spoken agaynst praying to Saintes, & had despised the authoritie of the Byshop of Rome, and others of his Clergy.* But especially Iohn Houshold was charged to haue called thē Antichristes and whooremongers, and the Pope him selfe a strong strumpet, and a common bande vnto the world, who with his Pardōs had drowned in blindnes all Christian Realmes, and that for money.

ALso among diuers other ordinary Articles propounded agaynst George Browne,* these were couēted very heynous & hereticall: First, that he had sayd, that he knew no cause why the Crosse should be worshipped,* seying that the same was an hurt & payne vnto our Sauour Christ in the tyme of his Passion, and not any ease or pleasure, alledging for example, that if he had had a frend hanged or drowned, he would euer after haue loued that gallowes, or water, (by the which his frend dyed) rather worse for that, thē better. An other obiection was, that he had erroneously, Page 804 obstinately, and maliciously said (for so are theyr words) that the Church was too rich.* This matter, I may tell you, touched somewhat the quicke, and therefore no maruell though they counted it erroneous and malicious: for take away their gaine, and farewell their religion. They also charged him to haue refused holy water to be cast about his chamber, and likewise to haue spoken against priests, with other vaine matters.

*The greatest matter wherewith they burdened Iohn Wikes, was that he had often and of long time kept company with diuers persons suspected of heresie (as they termed them) and had receiued them into his house, and there did suffer and heare them sundry times reade erroneous and hereticall bookes, cōtrary to the faith of the Romish Church, and did also himselfe consent vnto their doctrine: and had many times secretly conueyed them from the taking of such as were appointed to apprehend them.

*Like as the greatest number of those before mentioned: so were also Iohn Southake, Richard Butler, Iohn Samme, William King, Robert Durdant, and Henrye Woolmā, especially charged with speaking words against the real presence of Christes body in the Sacrament of the Altar, and also against Images, and the rest of the seauen Sacraments. Howbeit, they burdened the last v. persons with the reading of certaine English hereticall bookes, accounting most blasphemously the Gospel of Iesus Christ, writtē by the 4. Euangelists, to be of that number, as appeareth euidently by the 8. article objected by Tho. Benet Doctour of lawe, and Chancelour and vicare general vnto Rich. Fitziamas then Bish. of London, against the sayd Rich. Butler. The very words of which article (for a more declaration of truth) I haue thought good heere to infert: which are these.Also we object to you, that diuers times, and especially vpon a certaine night, about the space of three yeares last past, in Robert Durdantes house of Yuercourt neare vnto Stanes, you erroneously and damnably read in a great booke of heresie of the sayd Robert Durdants, all that same night, certaine chapters of the Euangelists in English, conteining in them diuers erroneous and damnable opinions and conclusions of heresie, in the presence of the sayde Robert Durdant, Iohn Butler, Robert Carder, Ienkin Butler, William King, and diuers other suspect persons of heresie then being present, and hearing your sayd erroneous lectours and opinions. To the same effect and purpose tended the tenour of some of the Articles propounded against the other foure. Whereby (as also by others like before specified) we may easily iudge what reuerence they which yet will be counted the true and onely Church of Christ, did beare to the word and Gospell of Christ: who shamed not to blaspheme the same with most horrible titles of erroneous and damnable opinions, and conclusions of heresie. But why should we maruel thereat, seeing the holy Ghost in sundry places of the Scripture doth declare, that in the latter daies there should come such proud and cursed speakers, which shal speake lies through hypocrisy, and haue their consciences marked with an hot yron? Let vs therefore now thanke our heauenly father for reuealing them vnto vs, and let vs also pray him, that of his free mercies in his sonne Christ Iesus, he would (if it be to his glory) eyther turne and mollifie all such harts, or else (for the peace and quietnes of his Church) he woulde in his righteous iudgement take them from vs.

About this time Richard Fitziamas ended his life. After whose death,* Cutbert Tunstall (afterwards Byshop of Durham) succeeded in the Sea and Bishoprike of London: who soone vpon his first entrie into the roome, minding to follow rightly the footsteps of his predecessour, caused Edmund Spilman priest, Henry Chambers, Iohn Higgins, and Thomas Eglestone, to be apprehended, and so to be examined vpon sundry like Articles, as before are expressed, and in the end, either for feare of his crueltie, and the rigour of death,* or else through hope of his flattering promises (such was their weakenesse) he compelled them to abiure and renounce their true professed faith touching the holy Sacrament of Christes body and bloud: which was, that Christes corpall body was not in the sacrament, but in heauen, and that the Sacrament was a figure of his body, and not the body it selfe.

MOREouer, about the same time there were certaine articles objected against Iohn Hig, aliās Noke, aliās Iohnson, by the saide Bishops vicar generall. Amongst which were these: * First, that he had affirmed, that it was as lawfull for a tēporall mā to haue two wiues at once, as for a priest to haue two benefices. Also that he had in hys custody a booke of the foure Euangelistes in English, and did often reade therein: and that he fauoured the doctrines & opinions of Martin Luther, * openly pronouncing that Luther had more learning in his litle finger, then all y^e doctours in England in their whole bodies: and that all the Priestes in the Church were blind, and had led the people the wrong way. Likewise it was alledged agaynst him, that he had denied Purgatory, and had sayd, that while he were alyue he would do as much for him selfe as he could, for after his death he thought that prayer & almes deedes could little helpe him.

These and such like matters were they, wherewith these poore and simple men and women were chiefly charged, and as heynous heretickes excommunicated, emprisoned, and at last compelled to recant: and some of them in vtter shame and reproch (besides the ordinary bearyng of fagots before the Crosse in processiō, * or els at a Sermon) were enioyned for penaunce (as they termed it) as well to appeare once euery yeare before their ordinary, as also to weare the signe of a fagot painted vpon their sleeues or other part of their outward garment; and that during their liues, or so often and long as it pleased their ordinary to appoint. By which long rigorous and open punishing of them, they ment (as it should seeme) vtterly to terrifie and keepe backe all others from the true knowledge of Iesus Christ and his Gospell. But the Lord be euermore praysed, what effect their wicked purposes therein haue takē, * these our most lightsome dayes of Gods glorious Gospel do most ioyfully declare.

There were also troubled beside these, certaine others more simple and ignoraunt: who hauyng but a very smal smake or tast of the truth, did yet at the first (as it may seeme) gladly consent vnto the same: but beyng apprehended, they quickly agayne yelded, and therfore had onely assigned them for their penaunce, the bearyng of a litle cādle before the Crosse, without any further opē abiuryng or recantyng. Amongest which I finde two especially: the one, a woman called Elene Heyer, to whom it was objected that she had neither confessed her selfe vnto the Priest, nor yet receiued the Sacrament of the altar by the space of 4. yeares, and notwithstanding had yearely eaten fleshe at Easter, and after, as well as others that had receiued the same, contrary to the vsuall maner and conuersation of all other Christian people.

The other was a mā named Robert Berkeway who (besides most wicked blasphemies agaynst God, whiche he vtterly denyed) was charged to haue spoken heynous wordes against the Popes holy and blessed Martyr Thomas Becket, callyng him micher and theefe, for that hee wrought by craftes and imaginations.

Thus haue I (as briefly as I could) summarely collected the principall Articles objected agaynst these weake, infirme, and earthy vessels. Not minding hereby to excuse or condēne them in these their fearefull falles and daungerous defectiōs: but leauyng them vnto the vnmeasurable rich mercies of the Lord, I thought onely to make manifest the vnsaciabie bloody crueltie of y^e Popes kingdome, agaynst the Gospell and true Church of Christ, nothyng mitigatyng their enuious rage, no not agaynst the very simple idiots, and that sometye in most friuolous and irreligious cases. But now leauyng to say any further herein, I will (by Gods grace) go forthward with other somewhat serious matters.

¶The death and Martyrdome of William Swetyng, and Iohn Brewster.

IN searchyng and perusing of the Register,* for the collection of the names & Articles before recited, I finde that within the compasse of the same yeares, there were also some others, who after they had once shewed themselues as frayle & vnconstaūt as the rest (beyng either therewith pricked in conscience, or otherwise zelously ouercome with the manifest truth of Gods most sacred word) became yet agayn as earnest professours of Christ, as euer they were before, and for the same profession were the secōd tyme apprehēded, examined, condemned, and in the end were most cruelly burned. Of the which number were, Williā Swetyng, and Iohn Brewster, who were both burned together in Smithfield, the xvij. day of October in the yeare of our Lord. 1511. the chieftest case of religion alledged agaynst them in their Articles, was their fayth cōcernyng the Sacrament of Christes body and bloud. Which because it differed from the absurde, grosse, and Caparniticall opiniō of the new Scholemē, was coūted as most heynous heresie.* There were other thyngs besides obiected agaynst them: as the reading of certaine forbidden bookes, and accompanying with such persons as were suspected of heresie. But one great and heynous offence counted amongst the rest, was their putting & leauing of the paintyng fagots, which they were at their first abiuryng, enioyned to weare, as Page 805 badges, during theyr lyues, or so long as it should please their Ordinary to appoynt, and not to leaue them off, vpō paine of relaps, vntill they were dispensed withall for the same.* The breach of this iniunction was esteemed to be of no small weight, and yet the matter well & thoroughly considered, it seemeth by their cōfessions, they were both therunto by necessitie enforced. For the one, named Sweting, being for feare of the Bishops cruelty cōstrained to wander the countreys to get his poore liuing, came at length vnto Colchester, where by the parson of the parish of Mary Magdalen, he was prouoked to be y^e holy water clarke, and in that consideration had that infamous badge first taken away from him. The other (which was Brewster) leaft off his, at the commandement of the Controller of the Earle of Oxfordes house: who hiring the poore man to labour in the Earles houshold busines, woulde not suffer him, working there, to weare that counterfait cognisaunce any longer: so that (as I said) necessity of liuing seemeth to compell both of them at the first to breake that iniunction: and therefore if charitie had borne as great sway in y^e harts of the Popes Clergy, as did crueltie, this trifle would not haue bene so heinously taken, as to be brought against thē for an article and cause of condemnation to death. But where tirannie once taketh place, as well all godly loue, as also all humane reason & duties are quite forgotten. Well, to be short, what for y^e causes before recited, as also for that they had once already abiured, and yet (as they terme it) fel againe into relaps, they were both (as you haue hearde) in the ende burned together in Smithfielde: althoughe the same parties (as the Register recordeth) did againe before their death, fearefully forsake their former reuiued cōstancie, and submitting themselues vnto the discipline of the Romish Church, craued absolution from their excommunication. Howbeit, because many of the Registers notes & records in such cases may rightly be doubted of,* and so called into questiō, I refer the certaine knowledge hereof vnto the Lord (who is the trier of all trutthes) and the external iudgemēt vnto the godly and discrete reader: Not forgetting yet by the way (if that the report shoulde be true) vpon so iust an occasion to charge that catholique clergy & their wicked lawes, with a more shameles tirannie & vncharitable cruelty thē before. For if they nothing stay theyr bloudy malice towards such as so willingly submit themselues vnto their mercies: what fauour may the faithfull and constant professours of Christ looke for at their hāds? I might here also aske of them how they folow the pitiful and louing admonitiō, (or rather precept) of our Sauour Christ (whose true and only Church they so stoutly bragge to be) who in the 17. chapt. of S. Luke, sayth: Though thy brother sinne against thee seuen times in a day,*and seuen times in a day turne to thee, saieng, It repenteth me: thou shalt forgiue him. But what go I about to allure them vnto the folowing of the rule and counsaile of him, vnto whose worde and Gospell they seeme most open and vtter enemies? Wherefore, not purposing to stay any longer thereupon, I will leaue thē vnto the righteous reuengemēt of the Lord, whereunto let vs now heere adioine the story of one Iohn Browne, a good Martir of the Lord burnt at Ashford, about this fourth yeare of King Henry the eight, whose story heereunder foloweth.

¶Iohn Browne father to Richard Browne, which Richard was in prison in Canterbury, and should haue bene burned with two more besides himselfe, the next day after the death of Queene Mary, but by the proclaiming of Queene Elizabeth, they escaped.

The occasion of the first trouble of this Iohn Browne, was by a priest sitting in Grauesend barge. I. Brown being y^e same time in the barge, came & sate hard by hym, wherupon after certain cōmunicatiō, the Priest asked him, doest thou know (said he) who I am, thou sitst too neere me, thou sitst on my clothes. No sir (said he) I know not what you are. I tell thee I am a Priest. What sir, are yee a Person or Uicar, or a Ladies Chaplen. No (quoth he) againe, I am a soule priest, I sing for a soule, saith he. Do ye so sir quoth the other, that is well done. I pray you sir, (quoth he) where find you y^e soule when you go to Masse. I can not tel thee, said the Priest. I pray you where do you leaue it sir whē the Masse is done. I can not tell thee sayde the Priest. Neither can you tell where you finde it when you go to Masse, nor where you leaue it when the Masse is done, how can you then haue the soule said he. Go thy waies said y^e Priest, thou art an heretike, and I will be euen with thee. So at the landing, the Priest taking w^t hym Water More, and William More, two Gentlemen breethren, rode straightwaies to the Archb. Warham, wheruppon the said Iohn Browne within three daies after, his wife being churched the same day, & he bringing in a messe of pottage to the boord to his guests, was sent for, and hys feete bound vnder his own horse, & so brought vp to Cant. neither his wife, nor he, nor any of his, knowing whether he went, nor whether he should. And there continuing frō Lowsonday to y^e friday before Whitsonday, not knowing to his wife all this while where he was. He was set in the stockes ouer night, and on the morrow went to death, and was burned at Ashford, an. 1517. The same night as he was in the stocks at Ashford, where he & his w^{••}e dwelt, his wife then hearing of him, came & sate by him al y^e night before he should be burned, to whom he declaring y^e whole story how he was handled, shewed & told how y^t he coulde not set his feete to the ground, for they were burned to the bones, and told her how by the two Bishops, Warham, & Fisher, his feet were heat vpon the whote coales, & burnt to the bones, to make me said he to deny my Lord, which I will neuer do, for if I should deny my Lord in this world, he would hereafter denie me. I pray thee, said he, therefore good Elizabeth, continue as thou hast begon, and bring vp thy childrē vertuously & in the feare of God, & so y^e next day on Whitsonday euē, this godly Martir was burned. Stāding at y^e stake this praier he made holding vp his hands,

O Lord I yeeld me to thy grace,

Graunt me mercy for my trespasse,

Let neuer the feend my soule chase,

Lord I will bow, and thou shalt beate,

Let neuer my soule come in hell heate.

Into thy hands I commend my spirit, thou hast redeemed me O Lord of truth, and so he ended.

Ex testimonio Aliciae Browne eius filiae, cuius mariti nomen dicebatur strat. in pa•rochia S. Pulchri.

At the fire, the said Chilten the Bayly Arrant, bade cast in his children also, for they would spring (sayd he) of hys ashes.

This blessed Martyr Iohn Browne had borne a fagot seauen yeares before in the daies of King Henry the 7.

As it is the propertie of Sathā euer to malice the prosperous estate of the Saintes of God, & true professours of Christ: so ceaseth he not continually to styrrer vp his wicked mēbers to the effectuall accomplishyng of that which his enuious nature so greedily desireth: if not alwayes openly by colour of tyrannicall lawes, yet (at the leastwise) by some subtyll practise of secret murther. Which thing doth most playnly appeare not onely in a great number of the blessed Martyrs of Christes Church, mentioned in this booke, but also, and especially in the discourse of this lamētable history that now I haue in hand, concernyng the secrete & cruell murderynge of Richard Hunne, whose story here consequently ensueth, decerped and collected partly out of the Registers of London, partly out of a Bill exhibited and denounced in the Parliament house.

There was in the yeare of our Lord.* 1514. one Richard Hunne marchaūt Taylour, dwelling within the Citie of London, & freeman of the same, who was esteemed during his lyfe, & worthely reputed and taken, not onely for a man of true dealyng, and good substaunce, but also for a good Catholicke mā. This Richard Hunne had a child at nourse in Middlesex in the Parish of S. Mary Matsilon, which dyed: * by the occasion wherof one Thomas Driffield Clerke, beyng Parson of the sayd Parish, sued y^e sayd Richard Hunne in the spirituall Court for a bearyng sheete, which the sayd Thom. Driffield claymed vniustly to haue of the sayd Hunne for a mortuary for Steuē Hunne, sonne of the sayd Richard Hunne: which Steuē beyng at nourse in the sayd Parish, dyed being of the age of .v. weekes and not aboue. Hunne aūswered him agayne, that for asmuch as the child had no proprietie in the sheete, he therfore neither would pay it, nor the other ought to haue it. Whereupō the Priest moued with a couetous desire, & loth to lose his pretēded right, ascited him to appeare in the spirituall Court, there to aūswere the matter. Whereupon the sayd Rich. Hunne beyng troubled in the spirituall Court, was forced to seeke couſsell of the learned in the law of this lād, & pursued a writ of Premunire agaynst the sayd

Thomas Driffield, and other his ayders, counsellors, proctors, and adherents, as by the proces therof is yet to be sene. Which whē the rest of the Priestly order heard of, greatly disdaynyng that any lay man should so boldly enterprise such a matter against any of thē, & fearing also, that if they should now suffer this Priest to be cōdēned at the sute of Hunne, there would be therby euer after, a libertie opened vnto all others of the laity to do the like with the rest of the Clergy in such like cases: they straightwayes, both to stop this matter, and also to be reuenged of him, for that he had already done, sought all meanes they possibly could, how to Page 806 entrap and bring him within the danger of their own cruell lawes:, and therupon making secret and diligent inquisition, & seeking al corners they could against him, at lēgth they found a means how to accuse him of heresie vnto Richard Fitziamas then Bishop of London, and so did: Who (desirious to satisfie the reuenging and bloudy affection of his chaplaynes) caused thereupon him to be apprehended, and cōmitted vnto prison within the Lolards Tower at Paules,, so that none of his freendes might be suffered to come to hym. Thus Richard Hunne being clapt in the Lolards Tower, shortly after, at the earnest instigation of one Doctour Horsey the Bishops Chauncelour (a man more ready to prefer the Clergies cruell tyrannie, then the truth of Christes Gospel) was brought before the Bishop at his manour of Fulham, the second day of December, in the yeare before mentioned: where within his Chappell he examined him vpon these Articles following, collected against him by the said Horsey and his complices.

First, that he had read, taught, preached, published, and obstinately defended,*, against the lawes of almighty God: that tythes, or payeng of tythes was neuer ordeined to be due, sauing onely by the couetousnesse of priestes.

2 Item, that he had read, taught, preached, published, and obstinately defended: that Bishops and Priestes be the Scribes and Pharisees that did crucifie Christ, and damned him to death.

3 Item, that he had read, taught, preached, &c. that Byshops and Priests be teachers and preachers, but no doers, neyther fulfillers of the law of God, but catching, rauening, and all things taking, and nothing ministring, neither geuing.

4 Item, where and when one Ioanne Baker was detected and abiured of many great heresies (as it appeareth by her abiuration) the sayd Richard Hunne sayd, published, taught, preached, and obstinately tooke vpon him, sayeng, that he would defend her and her opinions, if it cost him fyue hundred markes.

5 Item, afterwards (where and when the sayd Ioanne Baker after her abiuration, was enioyned open penance according to her demerites) the sayd Richard Hunne saide, published, taught, and obstinately did defend her, sayeng: the Byshop of London and his officers haue done open wrong to the sayde Ioanne Baker, in punishing her for heresie: for her sayengs and opinions be according to the lawes of God: Wherefore the Byshop and hys officers are more woorthie to bee punished for heresie, then she is.

6 Item, that the sayd Richard Hunne hath in his keeping diuers English bookes, prohibited and damned by the law: as the Apocalyps in English, Epistles and Gospels in English, Wickliffes damnable workes, and other bookes conteining infinite errours, in the which he hath bene long time accustomed to reade, teach, and study dayly.

Particular answeare vnto these seuerall obiections, in the Register I finde none, sauynge that next vnder them, there is written in his name with a contrarye hande, these words folowing: As touching these Articles, I haue not spoken them as they be heere layd: Howbeit; vnadvisedly I haue spoken wordes somewhat sounding to the same: for the which I am sory, and aske God mercy, and submit me vnto my Lords charitable and fauourable correction. Which they affirme to be written with Hunnes owne hand: but how likely to truth that is, let the discrete wisdom of the reader indifferently iudge by the whole sequele of this proces. And further, if it were his owne act, what occasion then had they so cruelly to murder him as they did? seeing he had already so willingly confessed his fault, and submitted himselfe vnto the charitable and fauourable correction of the Bishop (for the which euen by their owne lawe, in cases of most heynous heresie, he ought to be againe receiued and pardoned, (except perhaps they will account horrible murder, to be but the Bishops fauourable correction. Again it seemeth they had very few credible witnesses to proue certainly that this was his answeare and handwriting: for the Register, or some other for him (appointed to record the same) hath certified it, as of hearesay from others, and not of his own proper sight and knowledge, as the words noted in the margent of the booke, adioining to the foresaid answeare, plainely do declare, which are these: Hoc fuit scriptum manu propria Richardi Hunne, vt dicitur. Now if he had had any sure ground to stablish this certificate, I doubt not, but he would (in steede of, vt dicitur) haue registered the names of the assistants at the time of his examination, (which he confesseth to be many) as generally they do in all their actes, especially in cases of heresie, as they teame it. But how scrupulous those good fellows that spared not so shamelesly to murder him, would be to make a lie of him that was already dead, let (as I said) the indifferent iudgement of the godly wise discern.

This examination ended, the Bishop sent him backe againe the same day, vnto the Lolardes tower: and then by the appointment of Doctour Horsey his Chauncelour, he was colourably committed from the custody of Charles Ioseph the Sumner, vnto Iohn Spalding the belringer, a man, by whose simplenes in wit (though otherwise wicked) the subtill Chauncelour thought to bring his diuelish pretended homicide the easlier to passe: which most cruelly he did by his ministers suborned, within two nights then next folowing accomplish: as is plainely proued hereafter by the diligent inquirie and finall verdict of y^e Crowner of Page 807 London, and his inquest, made by order of the lawes in that behalfe limited. But when this vsuall practise of the Papistes was once accomplished, there wanted then no secret shiftes, nor worldly wyles for the crafty colouring of this mischief: and therefore the next morning after they had in the night committed this murder, Iohn Spalding (I doubt not but by the counsaile of his maister Chauncelour) gat himselfe out of the way, into the Citie, and leauing the keyes of the prison with one of his felowes, willed him to deliuer them vnto the Sumners boy, which accustomedly did vse to cary Hunne his meate, and other necessities that he needed: thinking that the boy, first finding the prisoner dead, and hanged in such sort as they left him, they might (by his relation) be thought free from any suspicion of this matter. Which thing happened in the beginning almost as they wished. For the boy the same morning (being the fourth day of December) hauing the keyes deliuered him, accompanied with two other of the Byshops Sumners, went about x. of the clocke into the prison, to serue the prisoner, as he was woont to do, and when they came vp, they found him hanged with his face towards the wall. Wherupon they (astonished at this sight) gaue knowledge thereof immediately vnto the Chauncelour,* being then in the Church, and watching, I suppose, of purpose, for such newes: who forthwith gat vnto him certaine of his colleagues, and went with them into the prison, to see that which his owne wicked cōscience knew full well before, as was afterwards plainly proued, although then he made a faire face to the contrary, blasing abroad among the people, by their officers and seruants, that Hunne had desperately hanged himselfe. Howbeit, the people hauing good experience as well of the honest life and godly conuersation of the man,* as also of the diuelish malice of his aduersaries the Priestes, iudged rather that by their procurement he was secretly murthered. Wherof arose great contention: for the Bishop of London on the one side, taking his clergies part, affirmed stoutely that Hunne had hanged himselfe. The Citizens againe on the other side, vehemently suspecting some secret murther, caused the Crowner of London (according to law) to choose an inquest,* and to take good viewe of the dead body, and so to trie out the truth of the matter. Wherby the Bishop and his chapleines were then driuē to y^e extremitie of shifts: & therfore minding by some subtil shew of iustice, to stop the mouthes of the people, they determined that in the meane while as the inquest was occupied about their charge, the Bishop should for his part, proceede Ex officio, in case of heresie,* against the dead person: supposing (most like) that if the partie were once condemned of heresie, the inquest durst not then but finde him gilty of his owne death, and so clearely acquite them from all the former suspition of priue murther. This determinatiō of theirs they did immediately put in practise in order as foloweth.

First, besides the Articles before mentioned (whyche they affirme were objected against him in his life tyme) D. Hed did now also after his death,* collect certain others out of the prologue of his English Bible, remaining then in the Bishops handes: which he diligently perused, not to learne any good thing therein, but to get thereout suche matter,* as he thought might best serue their cursed purpose: as appeareth by the tenure of the Articles, whyche are these.

1 First the said booke damneth all holy Canons, calling them ceremonies and statutes of sinfull men and vncunning,* and calleth the Pope Sathanas and Antichrist.

2 Item, it damneth the Popes Pardons, saieng, they be but leasings.

3 Item, the sayd booke of Hunne saith, that Kings and Lords called Christen in name, and heathen in conditions, defoyle the Sanctuarie of God, bringing clarkes full of couetise, heresie, and malice, to stop Gods law that it can not be knowne, kept, and freely preached.

4 Item, the saide booke saith, that Lordes and Prelates pursue full cruelly them that would teach truly and freely the lawe of God: and cherish them that preach sinful mens traditions and statutes, by the which he meaneth the holy Canons of Christes Church.

5 Item, that poore men and idiots haue the truth of the holy Scriptures, more then a thousand Prelates and religious men, and clarkes of the schole.

6 Item, that Christen Kings and Lordes set Idols in Gods house, and excite the people to Idolatrie.

7 Item, that Princes, Lords, and Prelates so doyng, be worse then Herode that pursued Christ, and worse then Iewes and heathen men that crucified Christ.

8 Item, that euery man swearing by our Lady, or any other Saint or creature, geueth more honour to the saints, then to the holy Trinitie, and so he sayth they be idolaters.

9. Item, he sayth that Saintes ought not to be honored.

10. Item, he damnethe adoration, prayer, kneelyng, & offeryng to Images, which he calleth stockes and stones.

11. Item, he sayth, that the very body of the Lord is not conteyned in the Sacramēt of the aultar, but that men receiuing it, shall thereby keepe in mynde that Christes flesh was wounded and crucified for vs.

12. Item, he dāneth the Uniuersitie of Oxford, with all degrees and faculties in it, as Art, Ciuile, Canō, and Diuinitie, saying, that they let the true way to come to the knowledge of the lawes of God, and holy Scripture.

13. Item, he defendeth the translation of the Bible and holy Scripture into the English tongue,* which is prohibited by the lawes of our mother holy Church.

These Articles thus collected, as also the others before specified, they caused for a more shew of their pretēded iustice and innocencie, to be opēly read the next Sunday folowing by the Preacher at Paules Crosse, with this Protestation made before.

☞ Maisters and frendes, for certaine causes and considerations, I haue in commaundemēt to rehearse, shew, & publish here vnto you, the Articles of heresie, vpō which Richard Hunne was detected and examined:*, and also other great Articles and damnable poyntes and opinions of heresie contained in some of his bookes be cōmen to light and knowledge, here ready to be shewed.

And therewith he read the Articles openly vnto the people, concludyng with these wordes:

And maisters, if there be any man desirous to see the specialtie of these Articles, or doubt whether they be cōteined in this booke or not, for satisfying of his minde, let him come to my Lord of London, and he shall see it with good will. Moreouer, here I counsaile and admonishe, that if there be any persons, that of their simplenes haue bene familiar and acquainted with the sayd Richard Hunne in these Articles, or haue heard him read vpon this booke, or any other soūdyng to heresie, or haue any like bookes their selues, let them come vnto my Lord of London betwixt this and Candlemasse next, and knowledge their fault, & they shalbe charitably intreated and dealt withall, so that both their goodes and honestie shalbe saued: & if they will not come of their owne offer, but abyde the processe of the law, then at their owne perill be it, if the rigour of the law be executed agaynst them.

After which open publication & admonition, the Byshop at sundry tymes examined diuers of his Priests, and other lay persons vpon the contentes of both these Articles. Among which examinares, there was a man seruaūt and a mayde of the sayd Hunnes, who although they had of long dwelt with him, were not able to charge him with any great thing worthy reprehēsiō: no, not in such points as the Byshop chiefly obiected, agaynst him. But yet the Priestes (through whose procurement this mischief was first begon) spared no whit stoutly and maliciously to accuse him: some in the contentes of the first Articles, & some in the second. Wherefore hauyng now (as they thought) sufficient matter agaynst him, they purposed speedely to proceede to his condemnation.* And because they would seeme to doe all thynges formally, and by prescript order, they first drew out certaine short and summary rules, by the which the Byshop should be directed in this solemne Session: which are these.

1. First, let the Byshop sit in his tribunall seate, in our Ladyes Chappell.
2. Secondly, let him recite the cause of his commyng,* and take Notaryes to him, to enact that shalbe there done.
3. Thirdly, let him declare, how vppon Sondag last, at Paules Crosse, he caused to be published a generall monition, or denunciation, that all fautours and mainteyners of Richard Hunne, should come in, as by this day, & submit themselues: and let him signifie withall, how certaine haue come in, and haue appeared already.
4. Fourthly, let him protest & say, that if there remayne any yet behynd which haue not appeared accordyng to the former monition and denunciation: yet if they will come, and appeare, and submit themselues, they shalbe heard & receiued with grace and fauour.
5. Fiftly, let the Byshop or some other at his appointmēt, recite the Articles obiected agaynst Richard Hunne, in the tyme of his life: and thē the other Articles likewise, which were out of his great booke of the Bible extracted.
6. Sixtly, let the aunsweres and confessions of the sayd Richard Hunne, summarely be recited, with the Attestatiōs made to the same Articles. Also let his bookes be exhibited, and thē Thomas Brooke his seruaunt be called for.
7. Seuently, let it be openly cryed at the Quere doore, Page 808 that if there be any which will defend the articles, opinions, bookes, or the memory of the said Richard Hunne, let them come and appeare, and they shall be heard, as the lawe in that behalfe shall require.
- 8 Eightly, let it be openly cryed, as in maner before, for such as be receiuers, fauourers, defenders, or beleeuers of the sayd Richard Hunne, that all such do appear and submit themselues to the Bishop, or else he intendeth to proceede to the excommunication of them in generall, according to the exigence of the law in that behalfe.

9 Ninthly, then the Byshop speaking to the standers by, and to them which sate with him vpon the bench, of the Clergie, demaunding of them, what their iudgement and opinion is, touching y^e premisses, and whether they thinke it conuenient and agreeable for him to proceede to the sentence against the sayd Richard Hunne, in this parte to be awarded.

10 Tenthly, after their consent and counsaile geuen, let the Bishop reade out the sentence.

11 Finally, after the sentence read, let the Byshop appoint the publication and denuntiation of the foresaid sentence, to be read at Paules Crosse or elsewhere, as to hym shall seeme expedient, with a Citation likewise generally against all them that be receiuers, fauourers, and beleeuers of the sayde Hunne, to geue to vnderstand why he ought not farther to proceed against them, &c.

Now according to the tenure of these prescriptes and rules, the Bishop of London accompanied with the Bishops of Durham and Lincolne,* sate in iudgemēt the xvj. day of December, then next folowing, within the place by the same appointed: adioining also vnto them as witnesses of their proceedings, sixe publique Notaries, his owne Register, and about xxv. Doctours, Abbots, Priours and Priests of name, with a great rabble of other common annoynted Catholiques. Where after a solemne proclamatiō made, that if there were any that would defend the opinion• and bookes of Rich. Hunne, they should presently appeare, and be heard according to law, he commaunded all the Articles and obiections against Hunne, openly to be read before the assembly: and then perceyuing that none durst appeare in his defence, by the aduise of his assistants, he pronounced the sentence definitiue against the dead carkase, cōdemning it of heresie, and therewith committed the same vnto the secular power,* to be by them burned accordingly. Which ridiculous decree was as fondly accomplished in Smithfield the xx. day of the same moneth of December (being full xvj. daies after they had thus horribly murdered him) to the great grieve and disdaine of all the people. And because the Bishop in his sentence definitiue vseth a more formall and ample order of words, then accustomedly is vsed in others: and also pretendeth full hypocritically in the beginning (as it were by way of induction) diuers causes that moued him to proceed against the dead carkase: I thought therefore good, heere to insert the same, as a finall conclusion of their craftie coloured tragedie: the tenure whereof is this.

Notwithstanding, after all this tragical & cruell handling of the dead body, with their •aire and colourable shew of iustice, yet the inquest no whit stayed theyr diligent searching out of the true cause and meanes of his death. In so much that when they had bene diuers times called both be'fore the kinges priuy counsell (his maiesty himselfe being sometime present) & also before the chiefe Iudges and Iustices of this realm, & that the matter being by thē thoroughly examined & perceiued to much bolstered & borne withall by the clergy, was again wholly remitted vnto theyr determination and ending: they founde by good prooffe and sufficient evidence,* that Doctour Horsey the Chauncellour, Charles Ioseph the Sumner, and Iohn Spalding the Belringer had priuily & maliciously committed this murther, and therefore indicted them all three as wilfull murtherers. Howbeit, through the earnest sute of the Byshop of London, vnto Cardinall Woolsey (as appeareth by hys letters hereafter mentioned) meanes was founde, that at the next Sessions of Gayle deliuery, the kinges Attorney pronounced the indicement agaynst D. Horsey to be false & vntrue: and him not to be guilty of the murther. Who being then thereby deliuered in body, hauing yet in himselfe a guilty conscience, gat him vnto Exeter, and durst neuer after for shame come agayne vnto London. But now that 〈◇〉 trueth of all this matter may seeme more manifest and playn vnto all mens eyes, here shall folow word by word, the whole inquiry and verdict of the inquest, exhibited by them vnto the Crouner of Londō, so geuen vp and signed with his owne hand.

¶The Verdict of the inquest.

*The fift and the sixte day of December, in the sixte yeare of the raigne of our soueraigne Lord king Henry the eight, William Barnewel Crouner of London, the day and yeare abouesaid, with in the ward of Castelbaynard of London assembled a quest, whose names afterward do appeare, and hath sworne them truely to inquire of the death of one Richard Hunne, which lately was found deade in the Lollardes Tower within Paules Church of London: whereupon all we of the inquest together went vp into the sayde Tower, where we found the body of the sayd Hunne hanging vppon a staple of iron in a gyrdle of silke, with fayre countenaunce, his head fayre kemmed, and his bonet right sitting vpon his head, with his eyne and mouth fayre closed, without any staring, gaping, or frowning, also without any driueling or spurning in any place of his body, whereupon by one assent all we agreed to take downe the deade bodye of the sayd Hunne, and as soone as we beganne to heaue the body, it was loose, whereby by good aduisement we perceiued that the gyrdle had no knot about the staple, but it was double cast, and the linckes of an iron chayne which did hang on the same staple, were layde vpon the same gyrdle whereby he did hang: Also the knot of the gyrdle that went about his necke, stood vnder his left eare, which caused his head to leane towardes his right shoulder. Notwithstanding there came out of his nostrels two small streames of bloud, to the quantitie of foure droppes. Saue onelye these foure droppes of bloud, the face, lippes, chinne, doublet, coller, and shyrt of the sayd Hunne, was cleane from any bloud. Also we fynde that the skinne both of his necke and throte beneath the gyrdle of silke, was frette and faled away, with that thing which the murtherers had broken his necke withall. Also the handes of the sayd Hunne were wrong in the wristes, wherby we perceiued that his handes had bene bo•d. Moreouer we find that within the sayd prison was no mean wherby a man might hang himselfe, but onely a stoole, which stoole stode vpon a bolster of a bed, so tickle, that any manne or beaste might not touch it so litle, but it was ready to fall. Whereby wee perceiued that it was not possible that Hunne might hang himselfe, the stoole so standing. Also all the gyrdle from the staple to his necke, as wel as the part which went about his necke, was too litle for his head to come out therat. Also it was not possible that the soft silken gyrdle shoulde breake his necke or skinne beneath the gyrdle. Also we finde in a corner somewhat beyond the place where he did hange, a great parcell of bloud. Also we finde vpon the left side of Hunnes Iacket frō the brest downward, two great streames of bloud. Also within the flap of the left side of his Iacket, we finde a great cluster of bloud, and the Iacket folden down thereupon: which thing the sayd Hunne could neuer fold nor doe after he was hanged. Whereby it appeareth playnely to vs all, that the necke of Hunne was broken, and the great plenty of bloud was shed before he was hanged. Wherefore all we finde by God and all our consciences, that Richard Hunne was murdered. Also wee acquite the sayd Richard Hunne of his owne death.

Also there was an end of a waxe candle, whiche as Iohn Belringer sayth, he left in the prison burning with Hunne that same Sunday at night that Hunne was murdered, which waxe candle we founde sucking vpon the stockes fayre put out, about seuen or eight foote from the place where Hunne was hanged, which candle after our opinion was neuer put out by him, for many likelyhoods which we haue perceiued. Also at the going vp of mayster Chauncellor into the Lollardes tower: we haue good prooffe that there lay on the stockes a gowne either of Murrey or Crimosin in grayne furred with shankes. Whose gowne it was we could neuer proue, neither who bare it away. All we finde that Mayster William Horsey Chauncellour to my Lord of London, hath had at his commaundement both the rule and guiding of the sayd prisoner. Moreouer, all we finde that the sayde maister Horsey Chauncellor hath put Charles Ioseph out of his office, as the sayd Charles hath confessed, because he woulde not deale and vse the sayde prisoner so cruelly, and doe to him as the Chauncellour woulde haue had him to do. Notwithstanding the deliuerance of the keies to the Chauncellour by Charles on the Saturday at night before Hunnes death, and Charles riding out of the towne on that sonday in the morning ensuing, was but a conuention made betwixt Charles and the Chauncellour for to colour the murther. For the same sonday that Charles rode forth, he came agayne to the town at night, and killed Richard Hunne, as in the depositions of Iulian Littel, Thomas Chicheley, Thomas Simondes, and Peter Turner do appeare.

After colouring of the murther betwixte Charles and the Chauncellour conspired, the Chauncellour called to him one Iohn Spalding Belringer of Paules, and deliuered to the same Belringer the keyes of the Lollardes tower, geuing to the sayde Belringer a great charge, saying: I charge thee to keepe Hunne more straitely then he hath bene kept, and let him haue but one meale a day. Moreouer I charge thee, let no body come to him without my licence, neyther to bring him shirt, cappe, kirchiefe, or any other thing, but that I see it before it come to him. Also before Hunne was caryed to Fulham, the Chauncellour commaunded to be put vpon Hunnes necke a great collar of iron with a greate chayne, which is too heauy for any man or beast to weare, & long to endure.

Moreouer, it is well proued, that before Hunnes death,* the sayd Chauncellour came vppe into the sayd Lollardes tower, and kneeled downe before Hunne, holding vp his hands to him, praying him of forgeuenesse of all that he had done to him, and muste do to him. And on sonday folowing the Chauncellour commaūded the Penitensary of Paules to go vp to him, and say a Gospell, and make for him holy water and holy bread, and geue it to hym, which so did: and also the Chauncellor commaunded that Hunne should haue his dinner. And the same dinner time Charles boye was shut in prison with Hunne, which was neuer so before: and af^ter dynner when the Belringer fet out the boy, the Belringer sayd to the same boy, come no more hither with meat for him, vntill to^morow at noone, for my maister Chauncellour hath commaunded that he shall haue but one meale a day: and the same night folowing Richard Hunne was murdered: which murther could not haue bene done without consent and licence of the Chauncellor, and also by the writing and knowledge of Iohn Spalding Belringer: for there could no man come into the prison, but by the keies being in Iohn Belringers keeping. Also as by my Lord of Londōs booke doth appeare, Iohn Belringer is a poore innocent manne. Wherefore all we doe perceiue that this murther coulde not bee done, but by the commaundement of the Chauncellour, and by the witting and knowing of Iohn Belringer.

Charles Ioseph within the tower of Lond. of his owne free will & vnconstrayned said, that maister Chauncellor deuised & wrote Page 810 with his owne hand, all such heresyas as were layde to Hunnes charge,* recorde Iohn God, Iohn True, Iohn Pasmere, Richarde Gibson, with many other. Also Charles Ioseph sayth, that when Richard Hunne was slayne, Iohn Belringer bare vp the steyre into Lollardes tower a waxe candle, hauing the keyes of the doore hanging on his arme, and I Charles went next to him, and maister Chauncellour came vppe last: and when all wee came vppe, wee found Hunne lying on his bed: and then maister Chauncellour sayd, lay handes on the theefe, and so all we murdered Hunne: & then I Charles put the gyrdle about Hunnes neck, and then Iohn Belringer and I Charles did heue vp Hunne, and Mayster Chauncellour pulled the gyrdle ouer the staple and so Hunne was hanged.

¶The Deposition of Iulian Littel late seruaunt to Charles Ioseph by her free will vnconstrayned, the 6. yere of our soueraigne Lord king Henry the eight, within the Chappel of our Lady of Bethlem, shewed to the Inquest.

*FFirst Iulian sayth, that the wednesday at night after the death of Richard Hunne, Charles Ioseph her Mayster came home to his supper: then Iulian sayd to him, Mayster, it was tolde me that ye were in prison. Charles aunswered. It is mery to turne the penny: and after supper Charles trussed vp a parcel of his goodes, and with helpe of Iulian bare them into Maister Porters house to keepe: and that done, Charles sayd to Iulian: Iulian, if thou wilt be sworne to keepe my counsell, I wyll shew thee my mind. Iulian aunswered, yea, if it be neyther felony nor treason: Then Charles tooke a booke out of his purse, and Iulian sware to him therupon: then sayd Charles to Iulian, I haue destroyed Richard Hunne. Alas mayster, said Iulian, how? he was called an honest man. Charles aunswered, I put a wyer in his nose. Alas sayd Iulian, nowe be ye cast away and vndone. Then sayd Charles, Iulian, I trust in thee that thou wilt keepe my counsell: and Iulian aunswered, yea, but for Gods sake Mayster shyft for your selfe: and then Charles sayde, I had leuer then a hundred pound it were not done: but that is done, can not be vndone. Moreouer, Charles sayd then to Iulian. Upon Sonday when I rode to my cosin Baringtons house, I taryed there and made good cheare all day til it was night, and yet before it was midnight, I was in London, and had killed Hunne, and vpon the next day I rode thyther aagayne, and was there at dinner, and sent for neighbors, and made good cheare. Then Iulian asked Charles, where set you your horse that night you came to towne, and wherefore came ye not home? Charles aunswered, I came not home for feare of bewraying: and then Iulian asked Charles, who was with you at the killing of Hunne? Charles aunswered, I will not tell thee: and Iulian saith, that vpon the Thursday folowing, Charles taried all day, in his house with great feare: and vpon Friday folowing early in the morning before day, Charles went forth (as he sayd) to Paules, and at his comming in agayne he was in a great feare saying hastely, get me my horse & with greate feare and haste made him ready to ride, and bade May••er Porters lad leade hys horse into the field by the backside: and then Charles put into his sleeue hys Mase or Masor, with other plate borrowed of mayster Porter, both golde & siluer, but howe much I am not sure: and Charles went into the field after his horse, and Iulian brought hys bouget after hym. Also vpon friday in Christmas weeke folowing, Charles came home late in the night, and brought with him three Bakers and a Smyth of Stratforde, and the same night they carryed out of Charles house all hys goodes by the fieldes side to the Bell in Shordich, and early in the morning conueyed it with Cartes to Stratford.

Moreouer Iulian sayth, that the Saterdag at night before the death of Hunne, Charles came home, and brought with him a gurnard, saying, it was for Hunne, & Charles boy called to Iulian, that there was also ordeyned a piece of fresh Salmon, which Iohn Belringer had.

Also Charles said to the said Iulian, were not this vngracious trouble, I could bring my Lord of Londō to the doores of heretiques in London both of men and women, that bene worth a thousand pound: But I am afrayd that the vngracious midwife shall bewray vs all.

Also Charles sayd vnto maistres Porter in likewise & more larger, saying, of the best in London, whereto maistres Porter aunswered, the best in London is my Lorde Maior: then Charles sayde, I will not scuse him quite, for that he taketh this matter hoate.

Whereas Charles Ioseph sayth, he laye at Neckehyll with a harlot a mans wife in Baringtons house the same night, and there abode vntill the morrowe at eleuen of the clock, that Richard Hunne was murthered, wherupon he brought before the kinges Counsell for his purgation the foresayd Baude Baringtons wyfe, and also the foresayde Harlot: which purgation we haue proued all vntrue, as right largely may appeare, aswel by the deposition of Iulian Littel, Thomas Chichesley Taylor, Tho. Symondes Stationer, of Rober Iohnsonne and his wife, of Iohn Spalding Belringer: Also of Peter Turner sonne in lawe of the foresayde Charles Ioseph: who sayde before to an honest woman, a waxe chaundeler Wyfe,* that before this day seuenth night Hunne should haue a mischieuous death. &c. Also of Iohn Enderbye Baker, to whome Iohn Spalding himselfe declared these wordes: That there was ordeined for Hunne so grieuous penaunce, that when men heare of it, they shal haue great maruel therof. &c. Besides the deposition moreouer of Alen Creswel wax chaūdelor,* and Richard Horsenayle Bayliffe of the Sanctuary towne called Godsture in Essex. Which testimonyes & depositions hereafter folow.

The Deposition of Alen Creswell waxechaundeler.

THE sayde Alen sayeth, that Iohn Graunger seruaunt with my Lord of London in my L. of Londons kitchin at such time as the said Alen was seruing of Hunnes coffē, that Graūdger told to him, that he was present with Ioh. belringer the same sonday at night that Rich. Hunne was found dead in the morow when the keepers set him in the stocks. in so much the sayd Hunne desired to borow the keepers knife, & the keper asked him, what he would do with his knife, & he answered I had leuer kil my selfe, then to be thus entreated. This deposition the sayd Alen will prooue as far forth as any christian man may, saying that Graūdger shewed to him these wordes of his owne free will and minde without any question or Inquyry to him made by the sayd Alen: Moreouer the sayde Alen sayth, that all that euening Graundger was in great feare.

¶The Deposition of Richard Horsenayle. Bayliffe of the Sanctuary Towne called Goodesture in Essex.

THE sayd Richard sayeth, that friday before Christmas day last past that one Charles Ioseph Somner to my Lord of London, became a Sanctuary man, and the aforesayd Friday he registred his name, the sayde Charles saying, it was for the sauegard of his body, for there be certein men in London so extreame agaynste him for the death of Richard Hunne, that he dare not abide in London. Howbeit the sayd Charles sayth he knowledgeth himselfe guiltlesse of Hunnes death, for he deliuered the keyes to the Chauncellour by Hunnes life, also the sayd Bayliffe sayth, that Charles payd the duty of the sayd Regestring both to him and syr Iohn Studley Uicar.

¶The Copy of Richard Fitziamess Letter then Bishop of London, sent to Cardinall Woolsey.

I Beseeche your good Lordshippe to stand so good Lord vnto my poore Chauncellour now in Warde, and indighted by an vntrue quest, for the death of Richard Hunne,* vpon the onely accusation of Charles Ioseph, made by payne and duraunce, that by your intercession, it may please the kinges grace to haue the matter duely and sufficiently examined by indifferent persons of hys discreete counsell, in the presence of the parties, ere there be any more done in the cause: and that vpon the innocency of my sayde Chauncellour, declared, it may further please the kinges grace to award a Plackard vnto his Attorney to confesse the sayde Enditement to be vntrue, when the time shall require it: for assured am I, if my Chauncellour be tryed by any twelue men in London, they be so maliciously set, In fauorem hereticae prauitatis, that they will cast and condemne any Clerke, though he were as innocent as Abel. Quare si potes beate pater adiuua infirmitates nostras & tibi imperpetuum deuincti erimus. Ouer this in most humble wise I beseech you, that I may haue the kinges gracious fauour, whom I neuer offended willingly, and that by your good meanes I might speake with his grace and you, and I with all mine, shall pray for your prosperous estate long to continue.

Your most humble Oratour. R.L.

Lastly nowe remayneth to inferre the sentence of the Page 811 questmen, which foloweth in like sort to be seene and expēded, after I haue first declared the wordes of the Byshop spoken in the Parliament house.

¶The wordes that the B. of London spake before the Lordes in the Parliament house.

MEMorandum, that the bishop of London said in the parliament house, that there was a bil brought to the parliament, to make the Iury that was charged vpon y^e death of Hunne, true men: and sayde, and tooke vpon his conscience, that they were false periured Caytiffes: and sayd furthermore to all the Lordes there then being: For the loue of God, look vpon this matter, for if you do not, I dare not keepe mine owne house for heretiques: And sayde that the sayd Richard Hunne hanged himselfe, and that it was his owne deed, and no mans els. And furthermore sayde, that there came a man to his house (whose wife was appeached of heresy) to speake with him, & he sayd that he had no mind to speake with the same man, which man spake and reported to the seruauntes of the same Bishoppe, that if his wife would not hold still here opinion, he would cut her throat with his owne handes, with other wordes.

The inquisition intended and taken at the city of Londō in the Parish of S. Gregory, in the ward of Baynard Castle in London, the sixt day of December, in the 6. yeare of the raigne of K. Henry the 8. before Thomas Barnewel Crouner of our souereigne Lord the king, within the city of London aforesayd: Also before Iames Yarford, and Iohn Munday Sheriffes of the sayde City,* vpon the sight of the body of Richard Hunne, late of London Taylour, which was found hanged in the Lollardes tower, and by the oth and prooffe of lawfull men of the same warde, and of other three wardes next adioyning, as it ought to be, after the custome of the city aforesayd, to inquire how, & in what maner wise the sayd Richard Hunne came vnto his death, and vpon the oth of Iohn Bernard, Thomas Stert, William Warren, Henry Abraham, Iohn Aborow, Ioh. Paule in London, in the parish of S. Gregory in the ward of Baynard Castle aforesayd, William Horsey of London Clerke,* otherwise called William Heresy, Chauncellor to Richard Bishop of London, and one Charles Ioseph, late of London Sumner, and Iohn Spalding of London otherwise called Iohn Belringer, feloniously as felons to our Lord the king, with force and armes agaynst the peace of our soueraigne Lord the king, & dignity of his crowne, the fourth day of December, the sixt yeare of the raygne of our soueraigne Lord aforesayd, of theyr great malice, at the parish of S. Gregory aforesayde, vpon the sayde Richard Hunne made a fray, and the same Richard Hunne felonously strangled and smodered, and also the necke they did breake of the sayde Richard Hunne, and there feloniously slue him, and murdered him: and also the body of the sayde Richard Hunne afterward the same fourth day, yere, place parish, and ward aforesayd, with the proper gyrdle of the same Richard Hunne of silke, blacke of coulour, of the value of 12. d. after his death, vpon a hooke driuen into a piece of timber in the wall of the prison aforesayd, made fast, and so hanged him agaynst the peace of our Soueraigne Lord the king, and the dignity of his crowne: and so the sayd Iurye hath sworne vpon the holy Euangelistes that the sayd W. Horsey, Clerke, Charles Ioseph, and Iohn Spalding, of theyr set malice then, and there felonously killed and murdered the sayd Richard Hunne, in maner and forme aboue sayd, agaynst the peace of our soueraign Lord the king, his crowne and dignity.

Subscribed in this maner, Thomas Barnewel, Crouner of the City of London.

After that the 24. had geuen vp theyr verdict sealed and signed with the Crowners seale,* y^e cause was thē brought into the Parliament house, where the truth was layde so playne before al mens faces, and the fact so notorious, that immediately certaine of the bloudy murderers were committed to prison, and shoulde no doubt haue suffered that they deserued, had not the Cardinall by his authority practised for his Catholique Children,* at the suite o^r the Byshop of London. Wherupon the Chauncellor by the kings pardon, and secret shifting, rather then by Gods pardon, and his deseruing escaped, and went, as is sayd, to Exeter. &c. Neuerthelesse though iustice tooke no place, where fauour did saue, yet because the innocent cause of Hunne should take no wrong, the Parliament became suters vnto the kinges maiesty, that whereas the goodes of the sayd Hunne were cōfiscate into the kinges hands that it would please his grace to make restitution of all the sayde goodes vnto the children of the sayd Hunne: vpon which motion the king of his gracious disposition did not onely geue all the foresayde goodes vnto the foresayde children vnder his broade seale yet to be seene, but also did sende out his warrantes (which hereafter shall folow) to those that were the cruell murderers, commaunding them vpon his high displeasure, to redeliuer all the sayd goodes, and make restitution for the death of the sayde Richard Hunne: all whyche goodes came to the summe of 1500. poundes sterling, beside his plate and other Iewels.

TRustye and well beloued we greete you well: * whereas by the complaynt to vs made, as well as also in our high court of parliament, on the behalfe and partye of Roger Whapplot of our city of London Draper, and Margaret his wife, late the daughter of Richard Hunne. And wheras you were indicted by our lawes, of and for the death of the said Richard Hunne, the sayd murder cruelly cōmitted by you, like as by our recordes more at large plainly it doth appeare, about the 5. day of December in the sixt yeare of our raigne, the same we abhorre, neuerthelesse we of our espeall grace, certayne science, and mere motion pardoned you vpon certayne considerations vs mouing, for the intent that the goods of the sayd Richard Hunne, the administration of them were committed to the said Roger Whapplot, we then supposed and intended your amendement, and restitution to be made by you to the infantes the children of the sayde Richard Hunne, as well for hys death, as for his goodes, embeseled, wasted, and consumed by your tyranny, and cruell acte so committed, the same being of no little value, and as hitherto ye haue made no recompence, accordinge to our lawes, as might stand with equity, iustice, right, and good conscience, and for this cause due satisfaction ought to be made by our lawes: Wherefore we will and exhort, & otherwise charge and commaund you, by the tenoure of this our especiall letters, that ye satisfy and recompence the sayde Roger Whapplot, & the sayd Margaret his wife, according to our lawes in this cause, as it may stand with right and good conscience, els otherwise at your further perill, so that they shall haue no cause to returne vnto vs, for theyr further remedy eftsoones in this behalfe, as ye in the same tender to auoyd our high displeasure: otherwise that ye vpon the sight hereof, to set all excuses apart, and to repayre vnto our presence, at which your hither comming, you shalbe further aduertised of our minde.

From our Manor.

Defence of Richard Hunne agaynst Syr Thomas Moore and Alen Cope.

I Doubte not but by these premisses thou hast (Christyan reader) sufficiently to vnderstand the whol discourse and storye of Richard Hunne frō top to toe. * First how he came in trouble for denying the bearing sheete of his young infant departed: then how he was forced, for succour of hymselfe, to sue a Premunire: And thereupon what conspiracy of the Clergy was wrought agaynst him, what snares were layd, what fetches were practised, and Articles deuised to snarle him in the trap of heresy, & so to imprison him. Furthermore, being in prison, how he was secretly murdered, after his murder, hanged, after his hanging condemned, af'ter his condemnation, burned: and after his burning, lastly how his death was required by the Crowner, and cleared by acquittall of the Inquest. Moreouer, how the case was brought into the Parliament, and by the Parliament the kings precept obtained for restitutiō of his goods. The debating of whiche tragicall and tumultuous story, with all the braunches, & particular euidences of the same, takē out aswell of the publique actes, as of the Bishops registers, & speciall recordes, remayning in the custodie of Dunstan Whapplot,* the sonne of the daughter of the sayde Richarde Hunne, there to be seene, I thought here to vnwrap and discouer so much the more, for three speciall purposes.

First, as is requisite, for testimony & wnesse of truth Page 812 falsly slandered, of innocency wrongfully condemned, & of the party cruelly oppressed.

The second cause moueth me, for sir Thomas Moores Dialogues, wherein he dallieth out the matter, thinking to iest poore simple truth out of countenance.

The third cause which constraineth me, be the Dialogues of Alanus Copus, which two, the one in English, the other in Latin, rayling and barking agaynst Rich. Hunne do doublewise charge him, both to be an herericke, and also a desperate homicide of himselfe: Which as it is false in the one, so is it to be foūd as vntrue in the other, if simple truth, which hath few frendes, and many times commeth in crafty handling, might freely come in indifferent hearing. Wherefore as I haue hitherto described the order and maner of his handling with the circumstaunces thereof,* in plaine and naked narration of story, simply layd out before all mēs faces: so something here to intermit, in the defence as well of his oppressed cause, as also in discharge of my selfe, I will now compendeously aunswere to both these foresayde aduersaries, stopping as it were, with one bush two gappes, and the mouthes also, if I can, of them both together.* And first agaynst sir Thomas Moore, albeit in degree worshipfull, in place superiour, in wit and learning singular (if his iudgement in Christes matters had bene corespondent to the same) otherwise being a man with many worthy ornamentes beautified, yet being but a man, & one man, I lay and obiect agaynst the person of him, the persons and censures of 24. questmen,* the deposition of so many Iurates, the iudgement of the Crowner, the approbation of the Parliamēt, and lastly the kings Bylassigned for restitution of his goodes, with his owne broade Seale confirmed. &c. And thus much to the person and credite of Syr Thomas Moore.

*Now as touching his reasons, whereas he comming in with a flimme flamme of a horse mylne, or a mylne horse (in his owne termes I speake) thinketh it probation good enough, because he coulde not see him taken by the sleeue, which murdered Hunne: agaynst these reasons vnreasonable of his, I alledge all the euidences and demonstratiōs of the history aboue prefixed, to be cōsidered, and of al indifferent men to be peased.

First, how he was founde hanging, with his countenance fayre, with his bearde and head fayre kemmed, hys bonet right set on his head, with his eyne and mouth fayre closed, without any driueling or spurging. His body being taken downe,* was found loose, (whiche by hanging coulde not be) his necke broken, and the skinne thereof beneath the throate where the gyrdle went, frette and faced away, his gyrdle notwithstanding being of silke, and so double cast about the staple, that the space of the gyrdle betweene the staple and his necke, with the residue also which went about his neck, was not sufficiēt for his head to come out. His handes moreouer wroung in the wristes, his face, lyppes, chinne, doublet, and shyrt coller vnstayed with any bloud: when as notwithstanding in a maner somewhat beyond the place, where he did hang, a great quantitie of bloud was found. Also whereas the staple wheron he hanged, was so, that he could not climbe thereto without some meane, there was a stoole set vp vpon the bolster of a bed, so tickle, that with the least touch in the world, it was ready to fal. And how was it possible that Hunne might hang himselfe vpon that staple, the stoole so standing? Besides the confession moreouer of Charles Iosephs owne mouth to Iulian Littell, of Robert Iohnson, Iohn Spalding the Belringer, Peter Turner, and others. All whiche testimonyes and declarations being so cleare and vndeniable, may suffice (I trust) any indifferent man to see where the truth of this case doth stand: vnlesse maister Moore being a gētleman of Utopia,* peraduēture after some straūge guise of that country, vseth to cary his eyes not in his head but in his affection, not seing but where he liketh, nor beleuing but what him listeth.

Finally where Sir Thomas Moore speaking of himselfe so concludeth, that he hearing the matter, what well might be sayde, yet could not finde contrary, but Hunne to be guilty of his owne death: so in as many wordes to answeere him agayne, I perusing and searching in the storye of Richard Hunne, what may wel be searched, cannot but maruell with my selfe, either with what darcknes the eyes of maister Moore be dared, not to see that is so playne, or els with what conscience he would dissemble, that shame can not deny. And thus by the way to the Dialogues of Syr Thomas Moore.

Thirdly touching the Dialogues of Alen Cope, which had rather the Bishops Chauncellor and officers to be recounted among theues and murderers,* then Hunne to be numbred among the martyrs, I haue herein not much to say, because himselfe sayth but litle: and if he had sayd lesse, vnlesse his groūd were better, it had made as little matter. But forasmuch as he saying not much, sendeth vs to seeke more in Moore: so with like breuity agayne I maye sende him to William Tindall, to shape him an aunswere. Yet notwithstanding, least Cope in saying something, shoulde thinke Hunnes innocent cause to lack some frends, which will not, or dare not aduenture in defence of truth, somewhat I will answeere in this behalfe.

And first touching this murder of Hunne, not to be his owne wilfull acte, but the deede of others:* besides the demonstrations aboue premised to sir Thomas Moore, now to M. Cope, if I had no other euidences, but onely these two, I would require no more: That is, his cap founde so streight standing vpon his head, and the stoole so tottering vnder his feet. For how is it, I will not say, like, but how is it possible, for a man to hang himselfe in a silken gyrdle double cast about a staple, in suche shortnesse,* that neyther the space of the knot coulde well compasse his head about, and yet hauing his cap so streight set vpon his head, as his was?

Again, how is it possible, or can it be imagined, for him to hang himselfe, climbing vp by a stoole which had no stay for him to stand vpon, but stood so tickle, that if he had touched the same neuer so litle, it must needes haue fallen?

But Cope being something more prouidēt in this matter, seemeth to excede not altogether so farre as doth M. Moore. For he vnderstanding the case to be ambiguous, & doubtfull, so leaueth it, in suspēse, neither determining that Hunne did hange himselfe, and yet not admitting that hee died a martyr,* no more then they which are quelled by theues & murderers in high way sides. Well, be it so as Cope doth argue, that they which dye by the handes of felōs and murderers in theeuish waies, be no martyrs, yet notwithstanding this his owne similitude, cōparing the Bishops Chauncellour & officers to theeues and murderers, doth graunt at least that Hunne dyed a true man, although no Martyr. Now if the cause be it, and not the paine, that maketh a Mar•yr, in pondering the cause why Hunne was slayne, we shall finde it not altogether like to the cause of them whiche perishe by Theeues and Robbers.* For such commonly because of theyr goodes, and for some worldlye gayne to be sought by theyr death, are made away, & beyng true men, may peraduenture haue y^e reward, although not the name of Martyrs: Whereas this mannes death being wrought neyther for money, nor any such temporall lucre to redounde to his oppressors, as it hath an other cause, so may it haue an other name, and deserue to be called by the name of Martyrdome. Like as Abel being slayne by wicked Cain, albeit he had no opinion of religion articulate agaynst him,* but of spite onely and of malice was made away, yet notwithstanding is iustly numbred among the Martyres: so what let to the contrary, but that Hunne also with him may be reckoned in the same societie, seeing the cause wherefore they both did suffer, proceedeth together out of one fountayne? And what moreouer if a man should cal Naboth (who for holding his right inheritance was slayne) a Martyr, what great iniury should he do eyther to the name or cause of the persō, worthy to be carped? Agaynst Thomas Becket yet know M. Cope no speciall article of fayth was layd, wherefore he dyed. And why thē do you bestow vpon him so deuoutly the title of a martyr, for withholding that from the king, which by law of God, and of the realme did belong vnto him: and cannot suffer Hunne to be titled for a Martyr.,* dying in his owne right by the handes of spirituall theeues and homicides, as you your selfe do terme them? But what do I strayne my trauell any further, to proue Hunne a martyr, whē as Copes own confessiō doth import no lesse, though I said nothing? For if I should take no more but his owne very wordes & say,* that he was knowne to be an heretique as Cope doth affirme? what could I say more, seing he dyed for theyr heresy, to proue him to dye a Martyr? For to dye an hereticke with the Papistes, what is it els (to say trueth) but to dye with God a Martyr?

But howsoever it pleaseth either Syr Tho. Moore to iest, or Alen Cope to skowld out the matter, & to stile Richard Hunne for a knowne and desperate heretique: yet to all true godly disposed mē, Hunne may well be known to be a godly and vertuous person: no heretique, but faythful and sound, saue that onely he semed rather half a papist: at least no full Protestant, for that he resorted dayly to masse, and also had his Beades in prison with him,* after the Catholique maner: albeit he was somewhat inclining (as may appeare) toward the Gospell. And if the name of a martyr be thought to good for him, yet I trust maister Cope wyll stand so good maister to him, to let him at least to be a martirs Page 813 fellow. But what now if I goe further with Mayster Cope, & name Richard Hunne not onely •or a martyr, but also commend him for a double martyr? Certes as I suppose, in so saying I should affirme nothing lesse thē trueth, nor any thing more then truly may be sayd, and iustly proued. But to geue and graunt this confession vnto the aduersary, which notwithstanding might be easily proued: let vs see now the proofes of maister Cope, how he argueth that Rich. Hunne is no martyr: because saith he, true men being killed in hie wayes by theeues & murderers, are not therfore to be counted martyrs. &c. And was there nothing els in the cause of Hunne, but as is in true men killed by theeues & murderers? They that are killed by theeues and murderers, are killed for some pray, or money about them. And what pray or profit was in the death of Hunne, let vs see, to redound to them whiche oppressed him? If it were the mortuary, or the bearing cloth, that was a small thing, and not worthy his death. If it were the Premunire, the daunger therof pertained to the Priest, and not to them. If they feared least the example thereof once begun, should afterward redound to the preiudice of the whole church, thē was the cause of his death not priuate, but publick, tēding to the whole Church and Clergy of Rome: and so is hys death not altogether like to the death of thē, which for priuate respectes are killed of theeues and murderers.

But he was an heretique, sayth Cope. By the same reason that Cope taketh him for an heretique, I take hym the more to be accepted for a martyr. For by that waye, which they call heresy, the liuing God is serued, by no way better. And if he were an heretique, why then did they not proceed agaynst him as an heretique while he was alyue? when they had him at Fulham before them, if they had ben sure to entrappe him in that snare, why did they not take theyr aduauntage,* when they might with least ieoperdye? why did they not proceede and condemne hym for an heretique? why made they suche haste to preuent his death before? why did they not tary the sentence of the law, hauing the law in theyr owne handes? But belike they perceiued that he coulde not be prooued an heretique while he liued: and therfore thought it best to make him away priuily, and to stop the Premunire, and afterward to stop the pursuite of his death, by making him an heretique: And therfore were articles deuised by the Chauncellour (as is proued by witnesse of Charles Ioseph and other pag. 785.) agaynst hym, and he condemned for an heretique,* and all his fauourers also, who so euer durst styrr to take his part, and so therevpon was committed to the secular power, and burned. Wherin they did him double wrong, first in that they burned him for an heretique, hauing before submitted himselfe to theyr fauourable correction, as it appeareth yet in the Bishops Registers by his owne hand, as it is there pretēded: whiche was agaynst theyr owne lawes. Agayne, if he had not submitted himselfe at that time, yet did they hym wronge to burne him, before they knewe and hearde hym speake (as Tindall sayth) whether he woulde recant or no. And yet admit that he was condemned and burned for an heretique,* yet to be killed and burned of them, for an heretique, that taketh not from him the name of a martyr, but rather geueth him to be a double martir. But Cope yet pro|ceeding in his hoat coler agaynst Rich. Hunne, after he hath made him first no martyr, and then an heretique, thirdly he now maketh him also a murtherer of himselfe, and sayeth, that no other man was any part of his death,* but only his owne handes, and that either for indignation and anger, or for desperation, or for some cause, he knoweth not what. And in his Epilogus to make it probable, he allegeth the example of one, but namelesse, who in Queene Maries time in like sort went about to hang himself, had he not bene taken in the maner, and rescued. Furthermore, as touching the Chauncellour, he argueth that there was no cause why he should attempt any such violence agaynst him, both for his age, and for his dignitye, for his learning, and for the greatnesse of his owne perill, which might ensue thereof. Who if he had maligned the man, and had bene so disposed to worke his destruction, had meanes otherwise without daunger, to bring that about, hauing him within his daūger conuict and fast tyed for heresy. Wherunto I aunswere that to all this matter,* sufficient hath bene aunswered by the story it selfe of his death, aboue specified. Whereby the maner of his death, by circumstaunces of his handling, and hanging,* by his necke broke, by his bodye loose, by his skinne fretted, by his wristes wroung, by his gyrdle in such shortnesse double cast about the staple, by his cap right vpon his head, by his heare kemmed, by his eyes closed, by the cake of bloud founde in the floore, by his Shyrt coller, Doublet, Iacket, and other outwarde partes of his garmentes without drop of bloud vnspotted, by the stoole so standing vpon the bolster, by the Chauncellours Murrey gowne round the day after vpon the stockes, the waxe candle fayre put out: furthermore by the verdict of the inquest, by the attestatiō of the witnesses sworne, by the Crowners iudgement, by the assent of the Parliament, by the kynges Letters assigned, and broade Seale of restitution of hys goodes: and finally by the confession of the parties themselues whiche murthered him. &c. and yet thinketh Cope to make men such fooles, hauing theyr true wits to weene yet that Hunne did hange himselfe, after so many demonstrations and euidences to the contrary, as in euery parte of this storye may appeare. And though it were, as it was vnlike, and hard for a man to beleue, that D. Horsey a man of such age, dignity, and learning, woulde so much forgette himselfe, to attempt such a villany, yet so great is the deuill sometimes with man (where GOD permitteth) that he worketh greater thinges then this, and more vncredible. For who would haue thought it like, that Cain woulde euer haue killed Abell his owne naturall Brother? whiche was more then a Byshoppes Chauncellour to kyll a Citizen: yet so he did.* And where Cope pretendeth the causes of anger, and desperation whereby Hunne did hang hymselfe: how is it like, or who did euer heare,* a man beinge in such extremity of desperation, to stand first trimming himselfe, and kemming hys head, before he goe to hang himselfe? No lesse credite is also to be geuen to that whiche followeth in the same Cope, where he sayth, that Richard Hunne being in prison, was conuict of heresy. By the which word conuict, if he meane that Hunne was proued an heretique, that is false, for that he being at Fulham examined vpon cert•yne Articles, both denyed the Articles to be true, as they were obiected, and also if they were true, yet he submitted himselfe to theyr fauourable correction, and therefore not standing obstinately in the same, coulde not be proued an heretique. And if by this terme conuict, he meane that he was by sentence cast, so was Hunne neuer cast by any sentence for an heretique, so long as he lyued, but after his death, when hee coulde nothing aunswere for himselfe.* And because this vntrueth should not goe wythout his felow, see howe he hudleth vp one false narration in the necke of another: affirming moreouer, that Hunne was cast in prison,* before he entred his suite of Premunire agaynst the Priest. Which is vtterly false and vntrue, both disagreeing to other storyes, and also refuted by the words of Syr Thomas Moore his owne authour, who reporteth that Hunne (insuing his Premunire agaynst the Priest) being set vpon a glory of victorie, made his boasting among his frendes, that he trusted to haue the matter long spoken of, and to be called Hunnes case. Haec Morus. Whereby it appeareth,* that Hunne was not then in prison clapt vp for heresy: but was abroad seeking counsell among the Lawyers, and boasting among his friendes, as writeth More Lib. 3. Dial.

After this heape of vntruthes aboue passed,* adde yet further an other copy of Copes false dealing: who seeking all corners, and euery where how to picke matter agaynst my former history, chargeth me with arrogancy, as though I tooke so highly vpon me to vndoe & derogate the kinges acts and iudgements in the acquittall of D. Horsey. If it so pleased the king to acquite D. Horsey, by his gracious pardon, I am not agaynst it, neither do I deny but the king so did, neyther do I say, nor euer did, but the king of his supereminent prerogatiue may so do: & wherein then do I vnrippe or loose the kinges actes here done & concluded? But if the question be this, whether D. Horsey with his coniurates did kill Richard Hunne or no: then do I say, that the pardon of the king doth not take away the veritye of the crime cōmitted, but remoueth away the penalty of the law deserued: and so if the life of them was sauēd by way of pardon (as M. Moore himselfe seemeth not to deny) thē was it not through theyr innocency clayming iustice, that they escaped, but through petition standing neede of mercy. For what needeth pardon, where iustice absolueth? yea, who sueth pardon, but in so doing must yeld himselfe guilty? for pardon neuer commeth lightly eyther with God or man, except the crime first be confessed. Wherefore, if they escaped by iustice, as Cope pretendeth,* how then doth M. Moore say, they were sauēd by pardon? And if they escaped by pardon, how then doth Cope say, they were not guilty? And be it admitted, that the sentence of the kinges Attorney, in the kinges name did absolue them as vnguiltie, according as the king was then informed by the Cardinall and suite of frendes: yet afterwarde the king being better informed by the Parliament, and the truth better knowne, detested and abhorred their fact, and yet continued his pardon vnto thē, as by the kings owne actes and his broad seale appeared, yet remayning in recordes to be seene.

Page 814 And as touching my former historyes set soth in latine and in English, which speake first of the foremanne of the quest, then of the kinges Attorney to be labored with some giftes or mony: as Cope hath yet proued no vntruth in my saying, so lesse can he finde any repugnaunce or disagreeing in the same. For he that speaketh of bribing, first of one person, and then afterward of another, where both might be bribed together, is not contrary (I thinke) to himselfe, but rather doth comprehend that in the one booke, whiche he before leaueth out in the other, and yet no great repugnāce either in the one or in the other, seing y^t which is sayd, may be verified in both, as it is no other like but in this matter it was. For how is it otherwise like or possible, but that there must nedes be found some priuy packing in this matter, seeing after such euidence found and brought in by the Crowners inquest and Iury of 24. chosen persons, after so many marks and tokens of the murder so cleare and demonstrable, and layd forth so playne to the eies of all the world, that no manne coulde deny, or not see the same? yet through the handling of the foresayde Attorney, and of the foreman of the quest, the murderers were borne out, & confessed to be no murderers. If such bolstring out of matters and parciality were then suche a rare case in the Realme of England in the time of Cardinal Wolsey, who then vnder the king, and in the kinges name did what he list: then let it seeme vntrue in my former stories, that I haue writtē. And yet the words of my story which Cope carpeth at so much, be not mine,* but the words of Ed. Hall his owne author. Wherefore if his disposition be so set, that he must needs be a censor of other mens writinges, let him expostulate wyth Hall, and not with me.

But I trouble the reader too much in this matter of Richard Hunne, being of it selfe so cleare, that no indifferent iudge can doubt therof. As for wranglers and quarrellers they will neuer be satisfied. Wherefore to returne agayn to the purpose of our story intermitted, in the table aboue, cōteining the names of them whiche about this time of Richard Hunne,* were forced to deny and abiure their professed opinions, pag. 774. mention was made of Elizabeth Stamford, Iohn Houshold, and other mo, abiuring about the yeare of our Lord. 1517. Whose vexation and weaknesse although it be pitifull to behold, yet to consider the confession of theyr doctrine in those aūcient dayes, it is not vnprofitable. Wherein we haue to see the same fourme of knowledge and doctrine then taught and planted in the harts of our foreelders,* which is now publicquely receiued, as well touching the Lordes Sacrament of his body, as also other specialties of sincerity. And although they lacked thē publique authority to maynteyne the open preaching and teaching of the Gospell, which the Lords merciful grace hath geuē vs now, yet in secret knowledge and vnderstanding they seemed then little or nothing inferiour to these our times of publicke reformation: as may appeare by this cōfession of Elizabeth Stamford here vnder written, whiche only may suffice for exāple to vnderstand what ripe knowledge of Gods worde was then abroad,* although not in churches publickely preached, for daunger of the bishops, yet in secret wise taught and receiued of diuers.

In number of whom was this Elizabeth Stamford, who being brought and examined before Fitziames Bishop of London ann. 1517 confessed that she was taught by one Thomas Beele, sometime dwelling at Henley, these wordes, 11. yeares before: That Christ feedeth, and fast nourisheth his Church with his owne precious body, that is, the breade of life comming downe from heauen: this is the worthy worde that is worthely receiued, and ioyned vnto man for to be in one body with him. Soth it is that they be both one, they may not be parted: this is the wisely deeming of the holy Sacrament Christes owne body: this is not receiued by chewing of teeth, but by hearing of eares and vnderstanding with your soule, and wisely working thereafter.

Therefore saith S. Paule, I feare me amongst vs, brethren, that many of vs be feeble and sicke, therefore I counsell vs brethren to rise & watch, that the great day of dome come not sodēly vpon vs, as the theefe doth vpon the Marchaunt. Also the sayd Thomas taught and shewed her, that the Sacrament of the aultar was not the very body of Christ, but very bread: and that the Sacrament was the very bodye of Christ put vppon the Crosse, after a diuine or mistical maner. And moreouer that y^e said Thomas Beele did many times and ofte teache her thys foresayd lesson, that she should confesse her sinnes to God, and that the Popes pardons and indulgence were nought worth and profited not, and that worshipping of Images and pilgrimages are not to be done.

To this Elizabeth Stamford, may also be annexed the doctrine and confession of Ioane Sampson,* wife of Iohn Sampson Carpenter of Aldermanbury in London: Against whom being cited, and examined before the Bishop of London, certaine witnesses were producted: who vpon theyr othe being sworne, did detect and denounce the sayde Ioane Sampson in these articles and opinions folowing.

1. First, that she being in her labour what time Ioane Sampson her predecessor then being aliue, was with her,* and after the maner then of women, called much vpon the helpe of the virgin Mary, she spitting thereat, was in such sort agreeued, that the other party was compelled to forsake the house.
2. Also, that she spake against pilgrimage, and the worshipping of the blessed virgine, and of all saints, affirming that there is none holy but one.
3. Item, an other time in the hearing of one Margaret Anworth, when shee and other women were inuocating the blessed Uirgine to helpe in womens labour, shee stode agaynst them, and contumeliously spake agaynst the inuocators.
4. Item, that shee speaking agaynst the Pilgrimage of our Lady of Wilsedon, (as she was then called) and of S. Sauour at Barmsey, called the sayd Saynt Sauour, S. Sawyer.
5. Item, for hauing two certayne bookes in Englishe, one bigger, and an other lesser, whiche shee committed to one Iohn Austed a Cooke, which bookes in the Register be not named.
- 6 Item, that the sayde Ioane Sampson at a Supper in the hearing of certayne men,* and of a certayne widdow named Ioane White, spake openly in contempt of the Sacrament of the aultar, saying that the Priestres were Idolaters which did lift vp the breade ouer theyr heades, making the people to worship it & making the people to beleue that it was the Lords body, and that it was better to eat the aultar cloth, if it might be eaten and digested as easily as the other.

Here followeth moreouer the names of diuers other which in the Registers be specified to abiure, as

- Iohn Spencer.
- Patricke Dowdal alias Capper.
- Robert Aleyn.
- Iohn Finch Cooke.
- Iohn Southwyke.

Agaynst this Iohn Southwike last named, was layde & obiected,* that whē one Riuelay cōming frō the church of the Gray friers in London, had sayde to his wife (asking where he had bene) that he had heard Masse, & had sene his Lord God in forme of bread & wine ouer y^e priests head. &c. the foresayd Iohn Southwike there present aunswered agayn & sayd: nay, William, thou sawest not thy Lord God: thou sawest but bread, wine, & the Chalice. And when the sayd William answered agayn in y^e same words, as before, saying: I trust verily that I saw my Lord God in forme of bread & wine, & this I doubt not: the other replying again answered & sayd, as before: nay, I tel thee, thou sawest but onely a figure or sacramēt of him, y^t which is in substance, bread and wine &c. This was in the yere of our Lord. 1520 In which he was compelled to abiure.

All these aboue named in one key of doctrine & religion did hold & concord together, agaynst whō were obiected 5. or 6. especiall matters: to witte,* for speaking agaynst worshipping of saynts, agaynst pilgrimage, agaynst inuocatiō of the blessed virgin, agaynst the sacramēt of the Lords body, & for hauing scripture bookes in English: which bookes especially I finde to be named, as these: the booke of the 4. Euangelistes, a booke of the Epistles of Paule and Peter, the Epistle of S. Iames, a booke of the Apocalips, and of Antichrist, of the 10. Commaundementes, and Wickeliffes wicker, with such other like.

¶Iohn Stilman. Martyr.

IT would aske a long tractation & tedious, to recite in or^der the greate multitude and number of good men & women,Page 815 beside these aboue rehearsed, which in those dayes recanted and abiured about the beginning of king Henryes raigne and before:, among whō yet notwithstanding, some there were whom the Lord reduced againe, & made strong in the profession of his truth, and constant vnto death: of which number, one was Iohn Stilman by name, who about the xxiiij. day of Sept, in the yeare of our Lord. 1518. was apprehended and brought before Richard Fitziamas then B. of Lond. at his manor of Fulham, and by him was there examined and charged, that notwithstanding his for^mer recantation, oth, and abiuration made about xi. yeres then past, before Edmund Byshop of Salisbury, as well for speaking against y^e worshipping, praying, and offering vnto Images, as also for denying the carnal and corporal presence in y^e sacrament of Christes memoriall: yet sithens that time he had fallen into the same opinions againe, and so into the daunger of relapse, and further he had highly commended and praysed Iohn Wickliffe, affirming that he was a saint in heauen, and that hys booke called y^e Wicket,* was good and holy. Soone after hys examination he was sent from thence vnto the Lollardes tower at London, and the xxij. day of October then next ensuing, was brought openly into the consistory at Paules, and was there iudicially examined by Thom. Hed the byshops vicare generall, vpon the contentes of these articles followyng.

1. First I object vnto you, that you haue confessed before my Lord of London, and me D. Hed his vicar generall, that about xx. yeares past one Steuen Moone of the Dioces of Winchest.* (With whom you abode 6. or 7. yeares after) did teach you to beleue that the going on pilgrimage and worshipping of images (as the Lady of Walsingham and others) were not to be vsed.* And also that afterwards one Richard Smart who was burned at Salisbury about 14. or 15. yeares past, did read vnto you Wickliffes Wicket, and likewise instructed you to beleue that the sacrament of the altar was not the body of Christ: all whiche thinges you haue erroneously beleued.

2. Item, you haue diuers times read the said book called Wickleffes Wicket, and one other booke of the x. Commaundementes, which the sayd Richard Smart did geue you, and at the tyme of your first apprehensiō, you did hide thē in an old oke, and did not reuele them vnto the bishop of Salisbury, before whom you were abiured of heresie about xi. yeares since: where you promised by oth vpon the Euangelistes, euer after to beleue and hold as the Christē fayth taught and preached, and neuer to offend agayne in the sayd heresies, or any other, vpon payne of relapse. And further you there promised to performe all such penaunce as the sayd Bishop of Salisbury did enioyne you: who thē enioyned you, vpon the like payne, not to depart his Dioces, without hys speciall licence.

3. Item, it is euident that you be relapsed aswel by your own confession, as also by your deedes in that about two yeares after your abiuration you went into the sayd place where you had hidden your books, and then taking them away with you: you departed the foresayd dioces, without the licence of the Bishop and brought them with you to London, where nowe being tached and taken with them vpon great suspicion of heresie, you are brought vnto the Bishop of London. By reason of whiche your demeanor, you haue shewed by your impenitent and dissembled conuersation from your errors, and also your vnfaithful abiuration and disobedience vnto the authoritie of our mother holy Church, in that you performed not the penance, in whiche behalfe you be voluntarily periured and also relapsed, in that you departed the sayd dioces wythout licence.

4. Item you be not onely (as afore is sayd) impenitent, disobedient, voluntarily periured, & relapsed by this your foresayd hereticall demeanor, but also sithens your last attachment vpon suspicion of heresie, you haue maliciously spoken erroneous and damnable wordes, affirming before my Lord of London your Ordinary and me, iudicially sitting at Fulham, that you were sorye y^t euer you did abiure your said opinions, and had not suffered then manfully for them: for they were and be good and true, and therefore you will now abide by them, to die for it. And furthermore you haue spoken against our holy father the pope and hys authoritie, damnably saying that he is Antichrist, and not the true successor of Peter, or Christes vicar on earth: and that his pardons and indulgences which he graunteth in y^e sacrament of penaunce, are nought, and that you will none of thē: And likewise y^t the colledge of Cardinals be limmes of the sayd Antichrist: and that all other inferiour prelates and Priestes are the sinagogue of Sathan.* And moreouer you sayd, that the doctors of the Churche haue subuerted the truth of holy Scripture, expounding it after their own mindes, and therefore theyr workes be nought, and they in hell: but that wickleffe is a Saint in heauen, and that the booke called his Wicket, is good, for therein he sheweth the truth. Also you did wish that there were xx. thousand of your opinion against vs Scribes and Pharisies, to see what you would doe for the defēce of your fayth. Al which heresies you did afterwarde erroneously affirme before y^e Archbishop of Caunterbury, and then said that you would abide by thē to dye for it: notwithstanding his earnest perswasions to the contrary: and therefore for these premisses you be evidently relapsed, and ought to be committed vnto the secular power.

All these articles thus propounded, and his constant perseuering in the truth perceiued, Doctour Hed vicar generall the xxv. day of October by his sentence definitiue, did condemne him as a relapsed hereticke, and so deliuered him the same present day, vnto the Sheriffes of London, to be openly burned in Smithfield.

¶Thomas Man Martyr.

NEXT to Iohn Stilman aboue mentioned, followeth in this blessed order of Martyrs, the persecution and cōdemnation of Thomas Man.* Who the 29. day of Marche in the yeare of our Lord. 1518. was burned in Smithfield. This Tho. Man had likewise bene apprehended for y^e profession of Christes Gospell, about 6. yeares before, the 14. day of August. an. 1511. and being at that time brought before D. Smith B. of Lincolne, was by him examined vpon dyuers and sundry articles: the effect wherof are these.

1. First, that he had spoken against auricular confession, and denyed the corporall presence of Christes body in the sacrament of the altar.
2. Item, that he beleued that al holy men of his sect were onely priestes.
3. Item, that he had affirmed that the father of heauen was the altar, and the second person the sacrament,* & that vppon the Ascension day the sacrament ascended vnto the altar, and there abideth still.
4. Item, that he beleued not aright in the sacrament of extreme vnction.
5. Item that he had called certaine priestes meanelly arrayed, pyld knaues.
6. Item, that he had sayd that pulpits were priestes lying stooles.
7. Item, that he had beleued that images ought not to be worshipped: and that he neyther beleueed in the Crucifixe, nor yet would worship it.
8. Item, that he had affirmed that he heard say, the word of God and God to be al one, and that he worthily receiueth the word of God, receiueth God.
9. Item, that he had sayd, that the popish Church was Page 816 not the church of God, but a sinagoue: and that holy men of his sect, where the true church of God.

For these and suche like matters was he a long time, emprisoned, and at last through frailtie and feare of death, was contented to abiure & yeld himselfe vnto the iudgement of the Romish Church, and thereupon was enioyned, not only to make hys open recantation, but also from thenceforth to remayne as prisoner within the monastery of Osney besides Oxford,* and so to beare a fagot before the first crosse at the next generall Procession within the Uniuersitie. Howbeit not long after, the Bishop hauing neede of the poore mans helpe in hys housholde busines, tooke him out of the said Monastery, and placed him with in his owne house, vntill his busines was ended, and then (hys turne once serued) hee appoynted D. Wilcockes his vicar generall, that in hys next iudicial Session within the sayd Priorie of Frideswide at Oxforde,* he shoulde assigne him to remayne within the sayd Priorie, and not to depart thence without licence of the Prior for the tyme being, vpon payne o• relapse: and vpon lyke payne he also enioyned him to weare the signe of a Fagot vnder his vppermost garment, vntill he were dispensed withall for the same. Al which notwithstanding, he (beyng belike both sory for hys offence in denying the trueth, and also weary of his seruile and prisonlike bondage) bethought hymself how he might best escape their cruell handes, and therefore after a while, seying good opportunitie offered him,* he fled the dioces and iurisdiction of Lincolne: and seeking abroad in other coūtries for worke (thereby to susteine his poore lyfe) he most commonly abode, sometime in Essex, sometime in Suffolke: where also he associated and ioyned himselfe vnto such godly professors of Christes Gospel, as he there could heare of. But within fewe yeares after (such is the cruell rage of Sathan and hys wicked members, whiche neuer suffer the godly long to continue vntroubled) he was againe accursed of relapse,* by the inquest of the inquisition of London, and therupon was apprehended & brought vn'to Rich. Fitziames then Bish. of Lond. &

the 9. day of February. an. 1518. he was examined by D. Hed the Bishops vicar generall within his pallace at Lond. where the sayde Hed iudicially assisted with diuers of his complices, declared first vnto man, that for as much as he was since hys first abiuring againe detected and accused by certayne credible and honest persons, of the same heresies which he had once before recanted: and further (contrary to the order of pennaunce enioyned hym by the late Byshop of Lincolne) he had departed the Priorie of Saint Frideswide, and the Dioces of Lincolne without leaue,* eyther of the Byshop or Prior: and was now also found within y^e dioces of Lōdon; and that without hys badge assigned hym by y^e sayde bishops vicar generall: he therefore as Chauncellour and vicar generall vnto the bish. of Lond. deputed for that pur|pose, did then meane to proceede agaynst hym as a relapse by order of Ecclesiasticall lawes in that behalfe prouided: Wherefore he appoynted hym to appeare agayne in the cōsistory of Pauls, the 12. day of February next after, there to answere vnto such articles as then should be propounded agaynst him. At which day and place the Chauncellor (first reciting the causes before mentioned, why he did then proceede against him) objected vnto him these articles folowing.

*1. First, that he was of the Dioces of London.

2. Itē, that he was a Christen man & professed Christes Fayth, and the determinatiōs of holy Church concernyng the seuen Sacramentes, and other articles of the Catholicke fayth.

3. Item, that it was not lawfull for any man (especially a lay man) erroneously and obstinately to hold, teach, or defend any opinion contrary vnto the determinations of the sayd church, and that the person so doing is an hereticke.

4. Item, that within one of the 12. monthes of the yeare of our Lord. 1511. he had bene detected before the Bishop of Lincolne that then was,* of diuers poyntes of heresie: as that he had affirmed that the very body and bloud of christ was not in the sacrament of the altar, but materiall bread and wine, and that he had receiued it at Easter as holye bread, and likewise had affirmed that the crucifixe & other Images in the Church were not to be worshipped, and also that confession made vnto a priest, was of none effect, with diuers other like opinions and heresies.

5. Item, that for these and such like poyntes of heresie he had bene abiured in S. Mary church at Oxford before D. Wilcockes Chauncellour vnto the sayde Byshop of Lincolne, in the month of October, in the yeare last abouesayd and there dyd renounce them and all other, promising no more to fal into the like.

6. Item, that there also he had taken a solemne oth, to do such pennaunce as should be enioyned him by the authoritie of the sayd Bishop.

7. Item, that then he was enioyned to abide within the monastery of Osney by Oxforde: and also there to beare a fagot before the first Crosse in the generall Procession.

8. Item, that after a certayn tyme that he had bene within the monastery of Osney the Byshop of Lincolne (for certayne causes) tooke him into his owne house and seruice, respiting his pennaunce for a time.

9. Item, that afterwarde, which was the 9. day of October. anno, 1512. the sayd Bishops Chauncellour iudicially sitting in the Chapter house of the Priorie of S. Frideswide in Oxford, did enioyne him that he should tary wⁱn the sayd Priory, and not to goe out of the gates thereof without licence of the Prior for the tyme beyng, vntill he had other commaundement from the Byshop, vpon payn of relapse: and further that he should from thenceforth (vp on the lyke payne) weare a signe of a Fagot vnder his vppermost garment.

10. Item, y^t after hys abiuration, and sithens the promises thus done, he was yet agayne detected to the B. of Lōdon by open fame, and denounced by worshipfull and credible persons, y^t he had vsed like false errorrs and heresies & had spoken and taught certaine conclusions of heresie against the Christen fayth,* and determinations of holye Church: and that he had fallen into the like heresies, as before his abiuration, both against the sacrament of the altar agaynst pilgrimages and worshipping of Images: and had blasphemed our blessed Lady, calling her Mably.

11. Item that when he wrought with one Iohn Bates in Stratford Langthorne in Rogation weeke, then 3. yeares past, and beyng bidden by the sayd Bates wife to goe and heare the gospell, he aunswered, and sayd vnto her, I wyll not come there, go you if ye list, ye shal haue as much meed for it as to put your finger in the fire, and to burne it.

12. Item, that in times past for feare of abiuration, he had fled from Colchester to Newbery, and after that vnto Hamersham, and had there damnably accompanied with hetiques and had taught heresies among them: & also since y^e tyme of hys abiuration he had sayd, that he and hys wyfe had turned sixe or seuen hundreth people vnto those opinions which he was abiured of, and others also, contrary to Christes fayth, and determinations of holy Church.

Hys aunswere vnto these Articles was, that as touching the first nine, hee graunted in part to be true, confessing to the seconde, that hee was a true Christian, and did professe the true Christian faith: but the contentes of the last thrée he vtterly denied to be true, affirming for certaine aunswere vnto the 11. article, that at the time mentioned in the same, he did not worke in the towne of Stratford. Upon which answere the Chauncelour called foorth two witnesses to be sworne and examined against hym,* willyng hym that if he had any iust matter against any of them, hee should refuse them. But to what purpose this his faire offer and trim shewe of vpright iustice serued, I can not see. For notw^tstanding that hee charged the one of the witnesses with theft and adulterie (for that hauing a wife of hys owne, he did yet runne away wyth an other mannes wife and goodes) and also alleged that the other was too young to be a sworne witnesse in case of life and death: yet were they both still retained & allowed by the Chauncelour, and sworn not to depart away or hide themselues,* but to be alwaies ready to iustifye that which they had to say against the sayde Thomas Man: and so for that time as well they, as also all the rest were commanded to depart, and the prisoner sent againe to hys prison.

And here in the order of the othe ministred vnto these witnesses, I finde one note (me thinketh) worthy present remembrance, both for that it is mentioned in this proces, and also because it somewhat openeth y^e foolish, ridiculous, and fained figuratiue Ceremonies of the Papists, who do attribute a spirituall signification almost vnto all their doinges.* The Register discoursing at large the manner of their othe hath these wordes: Ad sancta Dei Euangelia iurari feelt, tribus medris digitis erectis, & super librum positis in signum Trinitatis, & fidei Catholicae: & duobus (videl. police & auriculari) suppositis & suppressis, & sub libro positis, in signum damnationis corporis & animae, si non deposuerint veritatem in hac parte. That is to say, he caused them to sweare vpon the holy Euangelistes, with their three middle fingers stretched out right, and laide vpon the booke in signe of y^e Trinitie and Catholique faith: and the other two (to wyt, the thombe and the litle finger) put downewardes vnder the booke, in token of damnation of body and soule, if they did not depose the truth in the matter. This Ceremoniall order and exposition of theirs as it is of their owne fonde inuention, without any ground or example of the scriptures Page 817 of God so minde I to leaue it still vnto thēselues, w^t other their apish toies & ridicles, as things worthy to be laught at, and will now further proceed with the rest of this processe, which I haue in hand.

The xv. day of February, D. Hed the Chauncellour, againe iudicially sitting in the consistory at Paules,* commaunded Thomas Man to be brought before him, and there causing the articles objected against him by the Byshop of Lincolne with his order of abiuration & penance and also his owne articles last propounded to be first read he called forth a third witnes to be sworne and examined vpon the same. But because he would seeme to do all thinges by order of iustice, and nothing against law, he therefore appoynted vnto the sayd Thomas Man, certain Doctours and aduocates of the Arches, as his counsellors, to plead in his behalfe: Which was euen like as if the lambe should be committed to the defence and protection of the wolfe,* or the hare to the hounde. For what good helpe could he looke for at their handes, whiche were both most wicked haters and abhorers of his Christian profession, and also stout vpholders and maintainers of that Antichristian law, by the which he was for the same cōdemned? And that full well appeared by the good aduice and profitable counsell which they gaue him against his next examinations. For aswell vppon the 20. and also the 23. dayes of the same month of February, in theyr seuerall Sessions he seing his owne negations to their obiections, to take no place against their sworne witnesses, had no other thinge to allege for himselfe, but that through his xx. weekes of hard imprisonment vnder the byshop of Lincolne, he was forced to recant and abiure: whiche was a poore shifte of counsell, God knoweth: And yet D. Raynes beyng one of his chiefe assigned aduocates (in steede of aduice) coulde by his subtile questioning,* then make him to confesse, that certaine talke, whereof one of the witnesses had accused hym, was spoken about fiue yeares before past: which because it was since his recantatiō, was rather an accusation of hym selfe, then an excusing: and therefore it is easie to iudge to how fauourable and vpightfull hartes they tooke vppon them to be his aduocates and defenders. The Chauncellour likewise charged him vpon the same xxij. daye y^t since his last imprisonment he had said vnto Robert Cluny the Bishops Sumner, and his keeper, that as far forth as he could see or perceiue for his parte in this his matter, the lawes of the Church were grounded vpon Pilate & Cayphas.* Which obiection he graunting to be true, the Chaūcellour did for that time dismisse the Courte, vntill the first daye of Marche nexte following. Uppon whiche daye (minding to make quicke dispatche) he in fewe wordes asked Man, what matter he had to alledge for himselfe, why he shoulde not then (considering the premisses) bee pronounced a relapsed heretique, and receiue suche punishment by the seculare power, as to suche was due by order of lawe. But he hauing no other allegations then before whiche might take place with them, was finally condemned as an heretique. And notwithstanding that, as the register noteth (but howe truely, God onely knoweth) he did agayne forsake his former renewed profession of Christes Gospell, and yelded himselfe vnto the Bish. of Rome requiring to be absolved from his curse of excommunication, and contented to doe such penance, as they should enioyne him, he was yet the xxix. day of Marche deliuered by Doctour

Hed vnto the Sheriffe of London,* to be then presently burned, with this protestation made before, that he might not consent to the death of any, and therefore he desired the Sheriffe that he woulde receiue this person as relapsed and condemned, and yet to punishe him otherwise then by rigorous rigour. The wordes to be marked in their sentence be these Rogamus attentè in visceribus Iesu Christi, vt huiusmodi dignae seueritatis vltio & executio de te & contra te in hac parte fienda taliter moderetur, vt non sit rigor rigidus, ne{que} mansuetudo dissoluta, sed as salutē & sanitatem animae tuae &c. That is, We desire in the bowels of our lord Iesus Christ, that the punishment and execution of due seueritie of thee, & against thee in this part, may so be moderate, that there be no rigorous rigour, nor yet no dissolute mansuetude, but to the health and wealth of thy soule. &c. Wherein these Catholique Churchmen doe well declare, accordyng to the wordes of Thomas Man before expressed, that the lawes of their church be grounded vpō Pilate & Caiphās. For like as Caiphās with his court of Phariseis, cried against Christ vnto Pilate: It is not lawfull for vs to put anye man to death: But if thou let hym go, thou art not Caesars friend. Euen so they, first condemning the saints of God to death and then deliuering them vnto the secular Magistrate, to be thereupon executed, woulde yet couer their malignant hartes with the cloke of hipocriticall holines, and vnwillingnes to shedde bloude. But God be thanked, whiche bringeth all thinges to light in his due time, & vncouereth her hipocrisie, at last that she may be seene and knowne in right colours.

Thus Thomas man, the manly martyr of Iesu christ, being condemned by the vniust sentence of Hed the Chaūcellour, was deliuered to the Sheriffe of London sitting on horsebacke, in Pater noster rowe, before the Byshops doore, an. 1518. protesting to the sayde Sheriffe, that he had no power to put him to deathe, and therefore desired the Sheriffe to take him as a relapse and cōdemned to see him punished, Et tamen citra Mortem, that is, without death, as the wordes stand in the Register. The Sheriffe receiuing neither articles to be read at his burning, nor any Indentures of that his deliuerye,* immediately caryed him to Smithfielde, and there in the same day in the foorenoone caused him to be put into Gods Aungell, according to the wordes of the sayd Thomas Man before, saying that if he were taken againe of the pilled knaue priestes, as he called them, he wist well he should goe to the holy Aungell, and then be an angell in heauen.

In the deposition of one Thomas Risby, weauer of Stratford Langthorn, against y^e forenamed Martyr Tho. Man, it appeareth by the Registers, that he had bene in diuers places and countryes in England, and had instructed very many, as at Amersham, at London at Billerica, Chemsford, at Stratford Langford, at Oxbrige, at Burnham, at Henley vpon Thamīs, in Suffolke, and Northfolke, at Newbery, and diuers places moe: where he himselfe testifieth, that as he went Westward, he found a great company of well disposed persons, being of the same iudge'ment touching the sacrament of the Lordes supper, that he was of, and especially at Newbery, where was (as he confessed) a glorious and sweete societie of faythfull fauourers, who had continued the space of xv. yeares together,* till at last by a certaine lewd person, whome they trusted and made of their counsell, they were bewrayed, and then many of them, to the number of sixe or seuen score were abiured, and three or foure of them burnt. From thence he came then (as he confessed) to the forest of Windsore, where he hearing of the brethren which were at Hamersham, remoued thither, where he found a godly and a great compaⁿy, which had continued in that doctrine and teaching 23. yeares: whiche was from this present time 70. yeares agoⁿe.* And this congregation of Buckingham shyre men remayned till the time of Iohn Longham Bishop of Lincolne, whereof we shal (Christ willing) heare more anone. Against these faythfull Christiā^s of Amersham, was great troble and persecution in the time of W. Smyth Byshop of Lincolne, about the yeare of our Lord 1057. at whiche time diuers and many were abiured, and it was called Page 818Abiuratio Magna, the great abiuration, and they whiche were noted of that doctrine and profession, were called by the name of knowne men or iust fast men. &c. In this congregatiō of the faithful brethren, were 4. principall readers or instructors. Wherof one was Tilesworth called thē D. Tilesworth, who was burnt at Amersham, mentioned in our history before, by the name of William Tilseley: whō I suppose rather to be called Tilseworth, pag. 774. An other was Thomas Chase,* called amongst them, Doctour Chase, whom we declared before to be murdered and hanged in the Bishop of Lincolnes prison at Woborne, called Little ease, pag. 774. The third was this Tho. Man, called Doctor Man, burned as is here mentioned in Smithfield, an. 1518. who, as by his owne confession, and no lesse also by his trauaile appeareth, was Gods champion and suffered muche trouble by the priestes, for the cause and lawe of God. Hee confesseth himselfe in the same Register, that he had turned seuen hundreth people to his Religion and doctrine,* for the which he thanked God. He conueyed also fīue couples of men and women from Amershā, Oxbrige, Burnham, and Henley vppon Thamis, where they dwelt vnto Suffolke and Northfolke, that they mought be brought (as he then termed it) out of the deuils mouth. The fourth was Robert Cosin, named likewise among them, Doctor Cosin.

¶Robert Cosin Martyr.

THIS Robert Cosin seemeth to be the same, which in the former part of our history is forementioned, being called by the name of father Robert, and was burnt in Buckingham, pag. 749. Of this Robert Cosine, I finde in the Registers of Lincolne: that he with Thomas Man had in^structed and perswaded one Ioane Norman, about Amersham, not to go on pilgrimage, nor to worship any Images of Saints. Also when she had bowed a peece of siluer to a saint for the health of her childe they dissuaded her from the same, and that she needed not to confesse her vnto a Priest, but to be sufficient to lift vp her hands to heauen. Moreouer they were charged by the bishop for teaching y^e sayd Ioan that she might aswell drinke vppon the sonday before Masse:* as any other day. &c. Ex. Regist. Ioan. Longland. And thus you see the doctrine of these good men, for the which they were in those daies abiured, and condemned to death.

William Sweeting, otherwise named Clerke, first dwelt with the Ladye Percy at Dalington in the County of Northampton for a certayne space, and from thence went to Boxsted in the County of Essex, where he was the holy water Clerke, the space of seuen yeares: after that was baliffe and fermer to maystres Margerye Wood, the terme of 13. yeares. From Boxted he departed and came to the towne of saint Osithe, where he serued the Prior of saint Sythes named George Launde, the space of 16. yeares and more.* Where he had so turned the Prior by his perswasions, that the sayd Prior of saynt Osithe was afterward compelled to abiure. This William Sweting comming vp to London with the foresayd Prior, for suspicion of heresie was committed to the Lollardes Tower, vnder the custody of Charles Ioseph, and there being abiured in the Church of saint Paule, was constrayned to beare a fagot at Paules crosse, and at Colchester. And afterward to weare a fagot vpon his coat all his life. Which he did two yeares together vpon hys left sleeue, till at length the person of Colchester required hym to helpe in the seruice of the Church, and so pluckt the badge from hys sleeue: and there he remayned two yeares, being the holye water Clerke. From thence afterward departed, and traauailing abroad, came to Rederith in the dioces of Winchester, where he was holye water Clerke the space of a yeare: then went to Chelsith, where he was theyr neat heard, and kept the towne beastes. In the which towne vpon Saint Annes day in the morning, as he went forth with his beastes to the field, the good man was apprehended & brought before the Bishop: and hys chamber searched for bookes. This was anno. 5511.

*The crimes whereupon he was examined be these.

First, for hauing mucche conference with one William Man of Boxsted,* in a booke which was called Mathew.

Item, that he had familiaritie, and frequented much the company of Iames Brewster, who had bene before abiured.

Item, that when his wife should go on pilgrimage, he asked of her, what good she should receiue by her going on pilgrimage, adding moreouer, that as he supposed, it was to no purpose, nor profite, but rather it were better for her to keepe at home, and to attend to her busines.

Item, that he had learned:* and receiued of William Man, that the Sacrament of the Priestes altar was not the present very body, but bread in substaunce, receiued in memoriall of Christ.

Item, that he propounded, and affirmed the same doctrine to Iames Brewsteer.

Item,* because he had reprehended his wife for worship'ping the Images in the church, and for setting vp candles before them.

And thus haue you all the causes and crimes layde against this William Sweting, wherfore he was condemned. Who then beeing asked what cause he had, why hee should not be iudged for relapse, sayd he had nothing els, but onely that he committed himselfe to the mercye of almighty God.

¶Iames Brewster Martyr.

With William Sweting also the same time was examined and condemed Iames Brewster,* of the Parish of saint Nicholas in Colchester. This Iames Brewster was a Carpenter, dwelling ten yeares in the town of Colchester, who being vnlettered, could neyther reade nor write, and was apprehended vpon the daye of S. Iames, in one Walkers house in S. Clementes parish.

About sixe yeares before, whiche was ann. 1505. he had bene abiured by William Warham Archbishop of Caunterbury, the see of London being then vacant. And after other penance done at Colchester, was enioyned to weare a Fagot vpon his vpper garment during his life. Whiche badge he did beare vpon his left shoulder neare the space of two yeares, till the Controller of the Earle of Oxforde pluckt it away, because he was labouring in the workes of the Earle.

The crimes whereupon he was examined,* and which he confessed were these: first that he had bene fiue tymes with William Sweting in the fields keeping beastes, hea^ring hym read many good thinges out of a certayne booke. At which reading also were present at one time, Wodroffe or Woodbynde, a Nette maker, with his wife: also a brother in law of William Sweting: and an other time Thomas Goodred, who heard likewise the sayde Thomas Sweting read.

Item, because he vsed the company and conference of Page 819 Henry Hert Carpenter, of Westminster, and wrought with him in his science at Westminster, Item for hauing a certaine litle booke of Scripture in English, of an old writing, almost worne for age, whose name is not there expressed.

*Item, because he hearing vppon a time, one mayster Bardfield of Colchester thus say, that he will not worship the Maozim in hart and thought, shall dye in sight, he asked afterwarde of William Man, what that worde Maozim should meane: who told him that it signified as much as the masing God, to wit the sacrament of the altar.

Itē, that he had much conference, with Henry Hert a^gainst ablations & Images, & that it was better bestowed money which was geuen to the poore, then that that was offered in pilgrimage.

Item, for that he had communication and conference w^t Roger Heliar and one Walker a Thicker of S. Clements concerning diuers such matters of Pilgrimage, offering to Images, worshipping of Saintes, and the sacrament of the altar.

*Item, when Thomas Goodred, William Sweting, and he in the fieldes keeping beastes, were talking together of the sacramente of the Lordes bodye, and like matters, this Iames Brewster shoulde thus say: Nowe the sonne of the liuing God helpe vs. Unto whome William Sweting agayne shoulde aunswere, Nowe almighty God so doe.

And thus haue you the causes likewise and crymes layd against Iames Brewster, vpon which he with William Sweting was together examined and condemned. Then being asked, as the Romishe maner is, whether he had any cause why he shuld not be adiudged for relapse, he trusting to finde fauoure and grace in submitting himselfe, sayd, that he submitted him to the mercy of almighty God, and to the fauourable goodnes of him his iudge. And likewise did William Sweting submit himselfe, trusting belike that they should finde some fauour and reliefe in thys humble subiecting themselues vnto their goodnes.

But note here the vnmerciful and vnchristian dealing of these Catholique fathers,* who vpon their submission were contented to geue out a solemne commission, the tenor whereof was to release and pardon them from the sentence of the excommunication, whereinto they had incurred: But immediately after vpon the same, the Byshop all this notwithstanding, pronounced vpon them the sentence of death and condemnation. Whereupon they were both deliuered to the secular power,* and both together brent in Smithfield at one fire, the 18. day of October. an. 1511.

¶Christopher Shoomaker Martyr.

TO these blessed saintes before past, we will also adioyne Christopher Shoomaker: of whom this I finde briefly in the Register of syr Iohn Longland: and that the sayde Christopher Shoomaker,* a parishioner of great Missendē came to the house of one Iohn Say, and after other matters of talke, read to him out of a little booke, the woordes which Christ spake to his disciples. And thus comming to his house about foure times: at euery time read something out of the same booke vnto him: teaching him not to be deceiued in the priestes celebration at Masse, and declaring that it was not the same very present body of Christ as the priestes did phantasie: but in substance bread, bearing the remembraunce of Christ. And taught him moreouer, that the Pilgrimage, worshipping and setting vp can'dles to saintes were all vnprofitable. And thus the sayde Ioh. Say beyng taught by this Christopher, and also confirmed by Iohn Okendē, and Robert pope, was brought to the knowledge of the same doctrine. Thus much briefly I find in that Register concerning Christopher Shoomaker, declaring further that he was burned at Newbery about this time, which was an. 1518. And thus much out of Registers of London.

IN turning ouer the Registers and Recordes of Lincoln likewise, and comming to the yere of our Lord. 1520. and 1521. I finde that as the light of the Gospell began more to appeare, and the number of the professors to growe, so the vehemencie of persecution, and stirre of the bishops began also to encrease. Whereupon ensued great perturbatiō & greeuous affliction in diuers & sondry quarters of thys realm, especially about Buckingham shyre, and Amershā, Uxbrige, Henley, Newbery, in the dioces of London, in Essex, Colchester, Suffolke and Northfolke, and other partes moe. And this was before the name of Luther was heard of in these cuntryes among the people. Wherefor for they are much begyled and misse informed, whiche condemne this kinde of doctrine now receaued, of noueltie, asking where was this church and religion xl. yeares agoe, before Luthers time?* To whome it may be aunswered, that this Religion and forme of doctrine was planted by the Apostles, and taught by true Byshops, afterward decayd, and nowe reformed againe, although it was not receiued nor admitted to the Popes Clergye before Luthers time, neyther yet is, yet it was receiued of other, in whose heartes it pleased the Lorde secretly to worke, and that of a great number, whiche both professed and suffered for the same, as in the former times of this history may ap'peare. And if they thinke this doctrine be so newe, that it was not heard of before Luthers time how thē came such great persecution before Luthers time here in Englande? If these were of the same profession, whiche they were of, thē was their crueltie vnreasonable, so to persecute theyr

* owne Catholicke fraternitie. And if they were otherwise how then is this doctrine of the Gospell so new, or the professors thereof so late start vp, as they pretend them to be? * But this commeth onely of ignoraunce, & for not knowing nor considering well the times & antiquities of the church which hath bene before vs. Which if they did, they shold see and say, that the church of England hath not lacked great multitudes, which tasted & folowed the sweetnes of Gods holy worde, almost in as ample maner, for the number of well disposed hartes as now. Although publique authoritie then lacked to mayntayne the open preaching of the gospel, yet y^e secret multitude of true professors, * was not much vnequall: certes the feruent zeale of those Christian dayes seemed much superior to these our dayes and times: as manifestly may appeare by their sitting vp all night in reading and hearing, also by their expenses and charges in buying of bookes in Englishe: of whome some gaue fiue markes, some more, some lesse for a booke. Some gaue a lode of hay for a few chapters of S. Iames or of S. Paule in English. In whiche raritie of bookes, and want of teachers this one thing I greatly maruel and muse at, to note in the Registers & to consider howe the worde of trueth notwithstanding did multiply so exceedingly as it dyd amongst them. Wherein is to be seene no doubt y^e meruellous working of Gods mighty power. For so I finde and obserue in considering the Registers, howe one neighbour resorting and conferring with an other, eftsoones with a few wordes of the first or second talke, did win and turne their mindes to that wherein they desired to perswade them, touching the trueth of Gods worde and hys sacramentes. To see their trauailes, * theyr earnest seeking their burning zeales, their readings, their watchinges, their sweete assemblies, theyr loue and concord, their godly liuing, their faythfull meaning with the faythfull, may make vs now in these our dayes of free profession to blush for shame.

Page 820 Foure principall pointes they stood in against the Church of Rome, in pilgrimage, adoration of saintes, in reading scripture bookes in English, and in the carnall presence of Christes body in the sacrament.

* After the great abiuration aforesayd, which was vnder William Smith Bishop of Lincolne: they were noted and termed among themselves by the name of knowne men, or iust fast men: * as now they are called by the name of Protestantes.

As they were simple, & yet not vncircumspect in theyr doings, so the crafty serpent being more wily then they, by fraudulent subtletie did so circumuent thē, that they caused the wife to detect the husband: * the husband the wife, the father the daughter, the daughter the father, the brother to disclose the brother, and neighbour the neighbor. Neither were there any assemblies nor readings kept, but both y^e persons and also the bookes were knowne: * Neither was any word so closely spoken, nor article mentioned, but it was discovered. So subtilly and sleightly these Catholicke prelates did vse their inquisitions and examinations, that nothing was done or sayd among these Knowne men, xv. or xx. yeares before so couertly, but it was brought at length to their intelligence. Such captious interrogatories, so many articles and suspicions they had, suche espyals and priue scoutes they sent abroad, such authoritie and credite they had with the king, and in the kinges name: such dilligence they shewed in that behalfe, so violently and impudently they abused the booke, of y^e peaceable Euangelistes, wresting mens consciences vppon their othe, swearing them vpon the same to detect thēselues, their fathers & mothers, & other of their kinred, with their friends & neighbours, and that to death. All whiche thinges in the further processe of the table ensuing (Christ willing) whiche we haue collected out of some part of the Registers of Lincolne, shall appeare.

For the better declaration wherof, first here is to be premonished by the way, touching the see of Lincoln, that after William Smith, succeeded Iohn Longland. This William Smith,* although he was somewhat eger & sharpe against the poore simple flocke of Christes seruautes vnder whome some were burned, many abiured, a great nūber molested, as partly hath bene afore declared: yet was he nothing so bloudy or cruell,* as was the sayd Longland, which afterward succeeded in that Dioces. For so I fynde of him, that in the time of the great abiuratiō and troublesome affliction of Buckinghamshyre men, wherein many were abiured, & certaine burned, yet diuers he sent quietly home without punishment: and pennaunce, bidding them go home, and liue as good Christen men should doe. And many which were enioyned penaunce before, he did release This Smith dyed about the yeare of our Lord. 1515. by whome was builded, as is aforesaid, the Colledge of Brasen nose in Oxford.*

Not long after him folowed Iohn Longland, a fierce & cruell vexer of y^e faythfull poore seruautes of Christ: who to renue again the old sparkles of persecutiō, whiche were not yet vtterly quenched first began w^t one or two of them which had bene abiured, whom he thought to be most notorious, causing them by force of their othe, to detect & bewray not onely their owne opinions touching poyntes of religiō: but also to discouer al other of their affinitie, which were either suspected or abiured before. And them likewise he put to their othe, most violently constraining them to vtter and confesse both themselues, and whom els so euer they knew. By reason whereof, an incredible multitude of men, women, and maydens were brought forth to examination, and straightly handled. And such as were found in relapse, were burned.

The rest were so burdened with superstitious and idolatrous penaunce and iniunctions, that eyther through grieve of conscience they shortly dyed:,* or els with shame they liued. All which tragicall doyngs and proceedings of the byshop against these Knowen and Iuste faste men, in these tables here vnder following (Christ graunting) shall appeare, both with with the accusers, and with the parties them selues accused, and also the crimes obiected.

But before we enter into the table, it shalbe requisite first to heare the order and copy of his captious and crafty interrogatoryes, whereby he constrayned the simple poore men to accuse and appeach one an other: which interrogatoryes were these in order as followeth.

The interrogatories or articles: which Longland Bish. of Lincolne vsed most commonly to minister to these examinares or known men,* in number were 9. and are these as followeth.

1 First, whether they or any of them did know, that certayne of the parish of Amersham, had bene conuented before William Smyth late Bishop of Lincolne, for heresie.

2 Item, whether they knew, that they so conuented before the sayd Bishop, did erre in the sacrament of the altar, or in any other sacrament of the Church. And if they did in what Sacramentes, or in whiche of them: Also whether they knew that the sayd parties so conuented, did confesse their erroures, and receiued penance for the same.

3 Item, whether they, or any of them, were of the society of them so conuented for heresie: and if they were what fellowship they had with them and with whom?

4 Item, whether they or any of them, were euer conuersant with such a one (naming the person whome they knew suspected) as with Thustan Littlepage. And if they were, what conuersation they had with him, how long, & when: And whether they knewe the sayde person to haue bene suspect of heresie?

5 Item, whether they, or any of them were euer conuersaunt with him, or him (naming some other person whom they suspected) as Alexand. Mastal. And if they were, how and how long? and whether they knew the sayd person to be suspected of heresie?

6 Item, whether they, or any of them had bene before time detected of heresie to the office of the foresayd William Bishop of Lincolne: And if the were, by what person or persōs they were detected? Or els whether they were onely called by the foresayd William Bishop, for heresie?

7 Item, whether he or they be noted and holden for heretickes, or be reputed and diffamed to be of the sect of thē which were conuented for heresie: And whether he or they be named for a Knowen man amongst them?

8 Item, whether he, or they haue bene euer at any readings of such as haue bene so conuented for heresie?

9 Item, whether he, or they were euer in any secret cōmunication or conuenticle with them: Whom, or which of them he knew to be named and reputed for a Knowen man, or holding against the sacrament of the altar, or other Sacramentes and articles of faith? And if they knew any such to declare where, and when, and what they were, and who were present the same time?

These articles and interrogatories thus declared, now followeth to be shewed, a certayne briefe summe compendiously collected out of the Registers of Iohn Longland bishop of Lincolne, declaring in order of a table the names first of them which by othe were constrayned against theyr willes to detect and and accuse other. Secondly the persōs that were accused. Thirdly, the crimes to them objected, as in the proces of this table shall follow to be seene.

And first, for asmuch as the Bishop perceiued that Roger Bennet, William Chedwell, Edmund Dormer, Thomas Harding, Robert Andrew, with such other were mē especially noted to be of that side, therefore to work his purpose the better, he began with them producing the same as witnesses, to ditect first Robert Bartlet of Amersham, & Richard his brother: vnderstanding that these forenamed witnesses, because they had bene abiured before, durst now doe no other, vpon payne of relapse, but needes confesse what soeuer was put vnto them. And therefore because Rob. Bartlet & Richard hys brother being called before y^e bishop and sworn vpon their othe, would confesse nothing against themselues, the Bishop to conuict them by witnesses, went first to William Chedwell, lying sore sicke in his bed, causing him vpō the Euangelists to sweare, whether he knewe the foresayde Robert and Richard Bartlet to be knowen men. Which being done, the Bishop then called before him Robert Andrew Roger Bennet, Iohn Hill, Edmund Dormer. Iohn Milsent, Thomas Bernard, Thomas Littlepage, Iohn Dosset, all Amersham men: who being abiured before, as is sayd, durst no otherwise do, but confesse vpon their othe, that Robert and Richard Bartlet were knowen men. And yet the Bishop not contented w^t this, caused also theyr two wiues to wit, Margaret the wife of Robert Bartlet, & Isabel y^e wife of Richard Bartlet, to depose & geue witnessse againste their owne naturall husbandes. Albeit Isabel Bartlet being somewhat more temperate of her tongue, refused vtterly to confesse any thing of her husband, & denied her husbands words to be true, til at last she being conuict of periury, was constrained to vtter the truth, as in the proces of this table folowing more particularly foloweth to be seene.

THis Robert Bartlet, and Rich. his brother were Detected by these foresayde accusers, to be knowne men, that is, to be of the same company and affinitie wyth these Iurates, and other that had ben abiured before in the time of William Smith, Byshop of Lincolne, about the yere of our lord 1508. and that in y^e house of Thomas Hardyng, they were so noted by the woordes of Hardinges wife: who speakyng to Roberte Bartlet, sayde, that she was glad that he was conuerted to grace, and chosen to almyghtie God, requiring hym neuer to forsake y^t he was called to, for if he did, ther was no Sacrifice left for him. Also the sayde Hardinges wife speaking to Richarde Bartlet

Heere commeth a good man, and I hope he wil be a good man, but he hathe so muche minde of buying and selling, and taking of from all goodnesse. By whych wordes it appeared, sayd they,

that hee was a Knownen man.
Item, that Robert Bartlet speaking to Hardings wife, sayd, he had thought to haue called William Tilseworth false heretique: but now hee was better confessing nothing before the witnes, (as aboue appeareth) and noted therefore of periurie.

Wherefore incurring into greater daunger, they were constrained at their nexte examination to vtter them selues, and confesse what they had both done and sayde:
that is,* that the sayde Robert had red vnto Richarde hys brother, a parcel of scripture beginning thus:
Iames the seruaunt of God, to the

that he taught the same to his

the wordes of William

teaching him that the true

The crime wherein Roberte
Bartlet appeached hys brother
Rich. was this, because he said, hys brother Rich. had beene learned of hym the counsailes and secretes of those men.

Also, that hee had learned of hym, some of the Epistle of S.

The cause wherein Roberte Bartlet did detecte his wife, was thys,* that when the

for her husband, she vttered these wordes, saying: Alas, he was now an vndone man, and she but a dead woman.*

Furthermore, y^e said R. being demanded of y^e Bishop, whether he knewe Isabell hys heretiques before hee married her, sayde yea. Beeing asked again, if shee hadde not ben of that sect, whether then he would haue married her, he graunted the same likewise.

- The sayde Roberte Bart. detected also these to bee of the number of Knowen men: for that they resorted many times together, reading and conferringe amonge themselues, & talkinge againste worshippinge of Images, & Pilgrimage: And if any came in amongste them, whiche was not of theyr side, thē they wold saye no more, but keepe all silence. &c.

Thirdly, for speakyng against worshippinge of Images, and goyng on Pilgrimages.

This Richarde Bertlet also in hys confessyon, sayde of his Father, that he was a better manne, then hee was taken for. For the other daye there came a manne to him, as hee was threashing, and sayde, God speede father Bertlet, yee worke sore, yea sayde hee,* I threshe God almighty out of the strawe.

brought and examined before the Bishop, were ministred these interrogatories, which for certaine causes I thought here to inserte, for our posteritie to note and consider, and they are these, as foloweth.

Agnes Wellys.

- 1 WHether shee knewe that certaine of the Paryshe of Amersham were conuented before William Smith, late Byshoppe of Lincolne for heresie?
- *2 Item, whether she knew that certaine of them so conuented before the Bishop for heresie, did erre in the Sacrament of the altar, or in other Sacraments, and what errorrs they were, and wherein?
- 3 Item, whether she knewe anye other to be susspect of the same heresie or sect, beside them of Amersham so conuented, who they were, and how many?
- 4 Item, whether shee had bene of the same company, or sect, or opinion with them, which were conuented before the Bishop for heresie: and if she were, what company she vsed, and whose?
- 5 Whether she was at any time conuersant with Thurstane Litlepage: and if shee were, how ofte she had bene in his company:

howe, what time, in what place, who else were present, for what causes, and whether she knew him to be suspected for heresie?

- 6 Item, whether shee
knewe and had beene conuersant wyth Alexander Mastall, and if shee were,
howe, when, in what place, who were present, for what causes, and whether shee knewe him suspected for heresie?
- 7 Item, whether she was
euer detected to the office of Willi. Smith late Bishop of Lincolne: at what time, or since the time that Litlepage and Mastall were conuented before the Byshop for heresie: and whether shee was then called and conuented before the Bishop for heresie, or not?
- 8. Item, whether she had bene present, or is now noted, had, holden, or reputed, or diffamed to be of the same sect with Thurstan Litlepage, or other conuicted of heresie, and whether she be or hath bene nominated for a Knownen woman among them?
- 9 Item, whether she hath ben present at any time at the readings or conferrings betweene Thurstane Litlepage, and other conuicts?
- 10 Item, whether Thurstane Litlepage did euer teache her the Epistle of Sainte Iames,* or the Epistles of Saint Peter or Paule in English, and whether shee hath repeated oft times the sayde Epistle of saint Iames, vnto the sayde Thurstane, in the presence of Richard Bartlet her brother?

- 11 Item, whether Richarde Bartlet her brother dyd teache her at any time the Epistle of S. Iames, and if he did, howe oft, and in what place?
- 12 Item, whether shee hadde beene instructed by Thurstane Litlepage, or by any other, in the foresayde secte, that in the Sacrament of the aultare was not the true body of Christe, but onely the substaunce of bread?
- 13 Item, whether shee hadde bene instructed by Thurstane Litlepage, or any other, that Pilgrimage was not to be vsed, nor the Images of Saintes to be adored?
- 14 Item, whether shee did credite the sayd Thurstane Litlepage, or any other, teaching her in the premisses, and whether she did beleue or expresly cōsent with them in the foresayd articles?
- 15 Item, whether that Roberte Bartlet her brother did euer teach her the Epistle of S. Iames, and if he did, howe often, and where?

¶ Unto these captions and cruell Interrogatorie Articles ministred agaynst Agnes Wellys, shee answered negatiuely, almost to them all, refusing to vtter any person vnto the Byshop: But soone after, being otherwise schooled, I can not tell howe, by the Catholiques, shee was compelled to detect both her selfe, her brother Roberte Bartlet, Thurstane Litlepage, and also Isabel Morwyn, wife of Iohn Morwyn. &c.

Isabel Bartlet was then brought, & examined before the Bishoppe:
where shee

beinge asked whether shee spake these woordes followyng to her husbände, at the commynge of the Byshoppes manne: Alasse, nowe are you an vndone manne, and I but a deade womanne.

Firste, shee stoode in long deniall of the same, and althoughe her husbände gaue witnessse againste her, yet stoode shee that her husband sayd not trueth. At last, shee was compelled to graunte those woordes to bee spoken: and then being asked what shee meant by them,* thus she excused her selfe, that her husbände hadde beene vnkinde vnto her a long time, and therefore shee desired to depart from him.

Whereuppon now for sorrowe
she spake those woordes. &c.
The whyche woordes her husband did excuse somethynge otherwyse, sayinge, that hys wyfe spake those woordes betweene the thresholde and the Hall doore, because of a vehemente feare for the losse of her goodes.

	• W. Rogers • Tiler. • W. Harding. • Roger Harding.	These were detected by Roger Bennet, for that they being admonyshed to appeare before y ^e Bishops Chaunceloure at Amersham, neglected so to do.
Roger Bennet, by like compulsion of hys othe,* was caused to detecte these persons	• I. Iennings seruaunt to Iames Morden. • George, seruaut of Tho. Tochel. • Tho. Gray, seruaunt of Roger Bennet.	These were detected for caryng about certen bookes in English.
	• Wil. Smith Wheeler. • The wife of Io. Milsent. • The wife of W. Rogers. • Ro Stampe, & his wife. • The wife of Rob. Bartlet.	These good womenne here named, were detected to the Byshoppe by Roger Bennet, for that vppon the holye dayes, when they goe and come from the Churche, they vse to resorte vnto one I. Colingworths house, and there to keepe theyr conuenticle.
	The wife of Dauid Lews & her father▪	Thys womanne was charged for speking these wordes: that the churchmen in the olde time dyd leade the people, as the Henn• dothe leade her chickens: but our priests now do leade the people to the deuil.
	• Agnes Frāk, wife of Wil. Franke. • I. Gardiner▪ • I. Samme. • I. George. • Iam. Mordē.	Because shee tourned awaye her face from the Crosse, as it was caryed about on Easter daye in the morning, at the resurrection. Fol. 10.
Tho. Rowland put likewise to his othe, did detect	Iohn Scriuener the elder.	For carrying aboute Bookes from one to an other.

Thomas Rowland.

For these woordes following: If I chide, fight, or threat: then am I woorthye for to be beate, I pray you good maister mine, if I offende in any of these nine,

Amend me with a good scouring.

Iames Morden compelled in like manner by his oth, did detect

Thomas Chase.

In the like also was charged Thomas Chase because hee hearde hym twise recite the Epystle of Sainte Iames.
Begynnyng: Iames the seruaunt of GOD, and of our lord Iesus Christ, to the twelue kinds. &c.

Also for these woordes: It was by the dayes of Herode king of Iewes, that there was a Prieste, Zacharie by name, and hee came of the sorte of Abias, and hys wyfe of the Daughter of Aaron: bothe they were iust before GOD, goynge in al the commandements. &c.

The cause layde to this Agnes, was for teaching this Iames the woordes following:

- W. Norton.
- Agnes Ashforde of Chesham.

Wee bee the salt of the earth, if it be putrified and vanished away, it is nothing worth. A citie set vpon an hill may not be hyd. Teend ye not a candle and put it vnder a bushell, but sette it on a candlesticke, that it may geue a light to all in the house.
So shine your light before menne,* as they may see your workes, and glorifie the father that is in heauen. No title nor letter of the lawe shal passe ouer, till all things be done. And fiue times went hee to the foresaid Agnes to learn• this lesson. Item, that the sayde Agnes did teach him to say thys Lesson: Iesus seeing his people, as hee went vp to a hill, was set, and his disciples came to him: hee opened his mouth and taught them, saying: Blessed be the poore men in spirite, for the kingdome of heauen is theirs. Blessed be milde men: for they shall welde the earth: And twise hee came to her to learne thys lesson. Ex Regist. Longl. fol. 11.

And these lessons the sayde Agnes was bidde to recite before 6. bishops: who straightly inioyned and commaunded her, that she should teache those lessons no more to any man, and especially to her children. Ex Regist. fol. 11▪

¶To thys Iames Morden with other moe abiurers, it was enioyned by Bishoppe Smith, for seuen yeares, to visite the church of Lincolne twice a yeare from Amersham. And when diuers had gotte licence of the Bishoppe for length of the iourney, to visite the Image of our Ladie of Missenden, for the space of v. yeares, thys Iames Morden, when hee coulde not obtaine licence so to doe, yet notwithstanding for the tediousnesse of the way, went with them to the same Image, and thereuppon was charged for violatyng the Bishops iniunction.

Also because, to get his liuing, hee wrought halfe a yeare out of the dioces, when he had bene inioyned by the Bishop not to goe out of the diocesse of Buckingham. Fol. 11.

This Iam. Morden confessed y^t he vsed his Pater noster and Creede so much in English, that he had forgot many words therof in Latin, and therefore was Page 824 inioyned by bishop Smith to say it no more in English, but only in Latine, and because he kept not this iniunction, he fell therefore in relaps.

maner as followeth.

Elizabeth Coplande witnesseth against

Isabel Morwyn, her owne sister.

Firste because in talke together
comming from their father, being at the poynte of death,
Isabell sayde to her sister Elizabeth, that all whych dye, either passe to hel or heauen.
Nay sayde the other, there is betweene them purgatorie.

Agayne, when Elizabeth came from the roode of rest sayd Isabell, that if she knew so much as shee hath heard, shee would go no more on pilgrimage while she liued: for all Saints, said she, be in heauen.

Then asked Elizabeth wherefore pilgrimage was ordeined of Doctours and Priestes. Said the other, for gaine & profit. Who hath taught you this quoth Elizabeth? man or womā? Your Curate, I dare say, neuer learned you so. My Curate sayd she, will neuer knowe so much: and moreouer sayd to Elizabeth her sister, that if she woulde keepe counsaile, & not tell her husband, she would say more. And when Elizabeth answered, that she would not tell: but sayth the other, I will haue you to sweare: and because she woulde not sweare, the other would not proceed any further.

consecrated, was not the verye
true bodye of Christe. In prooffe whereof, they sayde, that let a Mouse bee put in the pixe wyth
the hoste,* and the Mouse woulde eate it vp. And for more prooffe, they declared vnto the sayde Iohn Butler, that there were two Priests in Essex, which put a mouse in the pixe to a consecrated hoste, and the mouse did eate it. Afterwarde the facte of these Priestes beyng knowne and brought to the Byshop, one of the Priestes was burned for the same.

Also the same Uulford and Geffrey told him and Iohn agaynst the singynge seruice used then in Churches.

This Thomas Man, was burnt and dyed a Martyr, of whō mention is made before. pag.
817.

William Kyng.

This William Kyng was appeached because he lodged Thomas Man in his house vpon a certayne holy day at diuine seruice: vnto whom resorted Richard Uulford, and Ioh.
Clerke, & this Ioh. Butler: to whom the sayd Tho. Man declared, that pilgrimage was naught, & that Images were not to be worshypped.

Rob. Carder.

Durdant. Rich. Butler his own brother. Wil. Kyng

To these was layd that Thom.
Ca•der brought this Ioh. Butler to Durdantes house at Iuēcourt by Stanis, where was Rich. Butler his brother, and William Kyng readyng in a certayne Engglishe booke: At whiche tyme Durdant desired thē not to tell, that he had any such English booke in his house, least hee should be burned for the same.

Rich. Nash or Ashford.

Also an other tyme, that Iohn Butler with Richard Butler his brother, and Robert Carder wēt to the house of Rich. Ashford or Nashe, to heare the same Ashford read in a certayne little booke, but which cōteined many good things.

Agayne, when Elizabeth came from the roode of rest sayd Isabell, that

heard, shee would go no more on pilgrimage while she liued: for all Saints, said she, be in heauen.
Then asked Elizabeth wherfore pilgrimage was ordeined of Doctours and Priestes. Said the other, for gaine & profit. Who hath taught you this quoth Elizabeth?
man or womā? Your Curate, I dare say, neuer learned you so. My Curate sayd she, will neuer knowe so much: and moreouer sayd to Elizabeth her sister, that if she woulde keepe counsaile, & not tell her husband, she would say more.
And when Elizabeth answered, that she would not tell: but sayth the other, I will haue you to sweare:
and because she woulde not sweare, the other would not proceed any further.

Alice Browne. forced by her othe too detect.

Iohn Tracher of Chessham.

The cause why this Iohn Tracher was denounced, was thys, for that hee taught her in the Gospell this sayeng of Iesus: Blessed bee they that heare the word of GOD and keepe it. Also, because hee taughte her the eyghte beatitudes in English.

¶Emme Tilseword because she refused to detect other by vertue of her othe, and denied such matter as by witnes and by the Bishops actes were prooued against her, in paine of relaps the Bishop enioyned her to make certaine fagots of cloth, and to weare the same, both before her vpper garment, and behinde, so long as she liued. Ex Regist. Longland.

Thomas Afrike.

For asking howe hys cousin Widmore clerke, the elder, and Iohn Fip did at Hichenden:
whether they kepte the lawes of GOD as they were woont.

W. Phippes forced by his othe to detect.

Roger Parker deceased.

Ioh. Phip.

For sayeng that Images are not to bee woorshipped, because they are made and carued wyth mans hande, and that such ought not to be worshipped.

Iohn Gardiner.

For that to the sayde Wil. this Gardiner sayd, that all which are burned for thys secte, are true Martyrs.

Iohn Stilman.

Iohn Butler by his othe was forced to detect.

Thomas Geffray firste of Vxbridge
then of Ipswich Taylor.

For reading and teaching him in the acts and preachings of the Apostles. Item, for hauing a Scripture Booke in English:
whyche Booke, the sayde Gefferay gaue to the Byshoppe of London when hee was accused.

Item, that the sayde Gefferay sayde, that true Pilgrimage was barefoote to go and visite
the poore, weake, and sicke, for they are the true Images of God.

Richard Vulford.

This Uulforde, and Thomas
Gefferay tolde the sayde Iohn
Butler, that the hoste
consecrated, was not the verye
true bodye of Christe. In prooffe whereof, they sayde, that let a Mouse bee put in the pixe wyth the hoste,* and the Mouse woulde eate it vp. And for more prooffe, they declared vnto the sayde Iohn Butler, that there were two Priests in Essex, which put a mouse in the pixe to a consecrated hoste, and the mouse did eate it. Afterwarde the facte of these Priestes beyng knowne and brought to the Byshop, one of the Priestes was burned for the same.

Ioh. Clerke of Dēham.

Also the same Uulford and Geffrey told him and Iohn Clerke, that holy bread, and holy water were but a vayne glorye of the world: for God neuer made them, but were mennes inuentions: and that GOD neither made Priestes, for in Christes time there were no priests

Moreouer, that Thomas Geffrey caused this Iohn Butler diuers Sōdayes to goe to London to heare Doctour Colet.*

Because this Iohn Butler had an olde booke of Richard Uulford.

Andrew Fuller of Vxbridge.

Also an other greate booke of Andrewe Fuller for whiche hee payde sixe shillyngs and foure pence and an other litle booke of Thomas Man, which he brought to the Byshop.

The foresayd Iohn Butler did detect.

Thomas Man.

Moreouer, this Thomas Man, was appeached, because hee read to this deponent ten yeares agoe: howe Adam and Eue were expelled out of Paradise: and for speakyng agaynste Pilgrimage and worshyppynge of Images, and agaynst the singyng seruice vsed then in Churches.

This Thomas Man, was burnt and dyed a Martyr, of whō mention is made before. pag. 817.

William Kyng.

This William Kyng was appeached because he lodged Thomas Man in his house vppon a certaine holy day at diuine seruice: vnto whom resorted Richard Uulford, and Ioh. Clerke, & this Ioh. Butler: to whom the sayd Tho. Man declared, that pilgrimage was naught, & that Images were not to be worshypped.

- Rob. Carder.
- Durdant.
- Rich. Butler his own brother.
- Wil. Kyng

To these was layd that Thom. Carder brought this Ioh. Butler to Durdantes house at Iuēcourt by Stanis, where was Rich. Butler his brother, and William Kyng readyng in a certaine Engglishe booke: At whiche tyme Durdant desired thē not to tell, that he had any such English booke in his house, least hee should be burned for the same.

Rich. Nash or Ashford.

Also an other tyme, that Iohn Butler with Richard Butler his brother, and Robert Carder wēt to the house of Rich. Ashford or Nashe, to heare the same Ashford read in a certaine little booke, but which cōteined many good things.

Richard Vulman of London.

This Uulman was detected vpon this, for that he would haue red to this Iohn Butler a certaine english booke, and spake against pilgrimage and images.

Henr. Vlman & his wife of Uxbridge.

This Rafe Carpenter was detected, for hauing certaine bookes of the Apocal. in English. Also for that thys Carpēter and his wife did bring him and the wife of Henry Uulman to a cornerhouse of Fridaystreete, where the goodman of y^e house hauing a stumpe foote, had diuers such bookes, to the intēt they should heare them read.

- Radulph Carpenter of London.
- A daughter of Iohn Phip.
- A daughter of William Phip.

These were detected partly for holdyng against the Sacrament of the alter, partly also, because they were reading two houres together in a certayne booke of the actes of the Apostles in English at Chersham in Ashfords house.

- R. Butler.
- Ienkin Butler his owne breethren.
- The mother of Richard Ashford.
- I. Butler his other brother.

Iohn Phip compelled by his othe to detect.

The wife of Robert Pope.

For hauing certaine bookes in English,* one bound in bourds, and three with parchment couerings, with foure other sheetes of paper written in english, conteining matter agaynst the Romish Religion. Also another booke of the seruice of the virgin Mary in

Thomas Stilman.

Tho. Stilman was therefore detected, for y^t he told Wil. Fip how that he being in lolards tower, did climbe vp the steeple where y^e bels were, and there cutting y^e belropes, did tye two of them together, and so by them slipped downe into Paules Churchyard, & escaped.

Tho. Tredway compelled by his othe to detect.

- Iohn Mordē of Ashly greene.
- Rich. Asheford his brother.
- Agnes Ashford his owne mother.

These were accused & detected, because Iohn Morden had in hys house a booke of y^e Gospels, and other chapters in english, & read three or foure times in the same: In whiche booke his brother Ashford also did rede once. Item, because I. Morden spake against Images, and spake these words: our Lorde Iesus Christ saith in hys Gospell: Blessed bee they that heare y^e word of God, & kepeth it, &c. Tredway also detected his mother for teaching him y^t he shuld not worship y^e images of saints.*

¶Likewise Ioane Bernard being accused by Robert Copland, was sworne by her othe to detecte Thomas Bernarde hir owne naturall father, for speaking against pilgrimage, against worshipping of Saints, and against diriges and praieng for the dead, and for warning his daughter not to vtter any of all this to her Ghostly father.*

¶The like othe also was forced to Richard Bernard that he should in like maner detect Thom. Bernard his owne naturall father, for teaching him not to worship images, nor to beleeue in the Sacramente of the aulter, but in God onely which is in heauen: and that he should not vtter the same to the Priest.

The vicar of Iuer, and Richard Taylor witnes, accused.

Richard Carder.

Agnes Carder, wife of Richard Carder detected.

Richard Carder her husband.

For defending the cause of Ienkin Butler, and for saieng that the Bishop dyd hym iniurie.

Item, for sayeng that if he had knowne the Byshops man woulde haue set hym so to the Bishop, hee woulde haue giuen hym warning thereof before.

Item, for sayeng, that if hee shoulde call him, hee woulde confesse nothing although he burned him.

For sayeng that hee suspected that shee was too much familiare with the Uicar of Iuer. And when shee aunswered againe: howe coude hee bee euill with her, seeing he sayeth Masse euery day, and doth not confesse hymselfe before: then her husbande sayde, that hee coude confesse himselfe to a post or to the alter.

¶Where note that the Bishop then examining her of that offence, whether she was culpable, and whether she was commonly in the voyce of the people diffamed with him or no: she confessed so to be.
Whereupon no other penaltie nor penance for that crime of adultery was enioined her of the Bishop, but only this, that she should frequent the Uicares house no more.

Ioh. Clerke of Denham forced by his othe to detecte.

- Richard Vulford of Riselyp.
- Iohn Butler.

Iohn Mastall detected.

The daugh|ter of Iohn Fippe of Hinchenden.

- Rob. Rowland.
- William Franke.
- Thomas Houre.
- Tho. Rowland.
- Ioane Franke.
- Ioh. Baker, all these detected.

Alice Sanders, wife of Richard Saunders of Amersham.

For speaking agaynste Images, Pilgrimages,* oblations, and agaynste the Sacramente of the alter.

Item, when this Iohn Clerke had made a weeie for fish, Richard Uulford commyng by,
asked hym when hee had made hys weeie, whether the weeie now coulde turne againe and make hym: and hee sayd no. Euen so (quoth hee) God hath made all Priests as thou hast made the weeie, and how can they turne againe & make God?

For sayeng that she was as well learned, as was the parishe Priest in all things, except only in sayeng of Masse.

For geuing twelue pence to Thomas Holmes to buy a certayne Booke in Englishe for her daughter. To whome Tomas Holmes answered agayne, that a noble woulde not suffice to buy it.

Another tyme, for geuing syxe pence to the buieng of a certaine booke in english, which cost fiue markes.

Another time, Thomas Houre commyng from Owburne, shee asked what newes, and hee sayde, that manye were there condemned of heresie:

and therefore hee would leane to that Page 829 waye no more. Then saide she, if he did so, he would gaine nothyng thereby. Whereby hee had no more worke with her husband, and after was put from his holy water
Clerkeship in that towne.

Another time, for saieng to Thomas Rowland these wordes: yee may see how Thomas Houre and other which laboured to haue heretikes detected before B.
Smith▪ are broughte now to beggery: you may take exāple by thē.

For sayeng to one Ioan Timberlake, and to Alice Tredway ten yeares ago▪ that shee could neuer beleue pilgrimages to be profitable, nor that Saints were to be worshipped: and desired them not to tell their Curate. Which Alice immediately caused her to be called before the Bishop.

For that shee beeyng not sicke, but in good health, and beeing rebuked dyuers tymes of her husband for the same, yet woulde not go to the Church, but taried at home and kept her worke as well holyday as worke daye, the space of three yeares together.

For speaking against Pilgrimages, in the companie of Iohn and Elizabeth Gardiner, as he was going to our Lady of Lincolne for hys

- Ioane Franke, William Franke the elder, William Frāke the yonger. Ioane Colingborne.
- Alice Tredway detected.

- Isabel Gardiner.
- Iohn Gardiner forced by their othe to detect the Vicare of Wicombe. Thomas Raue of great Merlow.

penance enioyned by Byshoppe Smyth. Also the same tyme, as hee met certayne commyng from Sainte Iohn Shorne, for sayeng they were fooles, and calling it Idolatry.

Also in the same voyage,
when he saw a certaine
chappell in decay and ruine, he sayde: lo, yonder is a faire milkehouse downe.

Item, when he came to Lincolne, he made water in the Chappell at masse time, excusing afterward that he did it of necessitie. Item, the same time speakyng against the Sacrament of the aulter, he sayde, that Christ sitteth in heauen at the right hand of the father almighty, and brought forth this parable, sayeng, that Christ our Lord sayd these wordes, when he went from his disciples, and ascended to heauen: That once he was in sinners hands, & woulde come there no more. Also when hee came to Wicomb there to do his penaunce, he bound his fagot with a silken lace. Also, being demanded of D. London, whether he had done his penaunce in comming to our Lady of Lincolne, he aunswered, that Bishop Smith had released him, to come to our Lady of Messenden for sixe yeares.
And three yeares he came, but whether he came any more,
because he did not there register his name, therefore he sayd he could not prooue it.

	The wife of Tho. Potter of Hychenden.
Roger Benet forced by hys othe to detect.	The wife of Wil. Tilseworth now of Haukewel.	For not thinking catholikely, that is, after the tradition of Rome, of the Sacrament of the alter.
	- The wife of Robert Stampe. - Marian Randall.	For not accomplishyng her penaūce inioyned by Byshop Smith.
	Iohn Butler.	For hauyng of him a certaine booke in English conteinyng a lewe and a Christian.
	His owne wife deceassed.
	Iohn Clerke of Denham.	For communing with hym, agaynst Images,* Pilgrimage, and the Sacrament of the aultar.
	Thom. Gef frey, of Vxbrige, & his wife departed.	For communyng agaynst the Sacrament of the aultar, worshyppyng of Saintes, Pilgrimage. &c.
Richard Vulford, de tected.	Henry Vul man of Vxbrige.	For speakyng and teaching agayng the Sacrament of the aultar eleuen yeares agoe, and saying it was but a trifle.
	- The mother of William Kyng of Vxbrige. - William Kyng. - Robert Carder, the elder. - Iohn Baker of Vxbrige.
Iohn Scriuener the elder, detected.	- Geldener the elder. - His two daughters.	For beyng present and harkenyng vnto Richard Benet readyng the Epistle of Saint Iames in English.*
	Emme, sister of W. Tilseworth mart.

- Iohn Lee Carpenter of Henly.

¶ Here is to be noted, that in the towne of Chesham were two men: One named Robert Hutton. The other Iohn Sparke. Of whiche two, the one called the other hereticke: * The other called hym agayne theefe. Sparke whiche called Hutton theefe, was condemned to pay for his slaūder x. shillynges. But Hutton which called the other hereticke, payed nothyng. It happened that the wife of this Sparke not long after, had certeine money stolne. For the whiche the sayd Sparke her husband sent for the counsaile of two Friers, who gaue him counsaile to make two balles of clay, and to put them in the water and in the same balles to inclose the names of thē whom he suspected, * and so doying the sayd Sparke came to his money agayne. And this was detected to Byshop Longland the same tyme by Thomas Clement. But of all this matter there was no inquisition made, nor interrogatories ministred, nor witnesse producted, nor any sentence geuen. Ex Regist. Longlang. fol. 50.

Iohn Grosar, beyng put to his oth, detected.

- Thomas Tykill.
- Thomas Spēser and his wife.
- Iohn Knight.

This Iohn Grosar was examined whether he had a booke of the Gospels in Englishe, who confessed that he receaued such a booke of Thomas Tykill morrowe. Masse Prieste in Milkestreete, and afterwarde

Lente the same booke to Thomas Spenser: Whiche
Thomas Spenser with hys wife vsed to read vppon the same.*
After that it was lent to Ioh.
Knight who at length deliuered the booke to the Uicare of Rikemansworth.

Fraunces Funge was examined for speakyng these wordes to his brother I. which wordes he had learned of Thomas Clarke:
If the Sacramēt Page 830 of the alter be very God & man, flesh & bloud, in forme of bred, as priests say that it is:
then haue we many Gods, and in heauen there is but one God. And if there were an hūdreth houseled in one parish,* and as manye in another, then there must needes bee more then one God. I will not denie, but it is a holy thing: but it is not the body of the Lord that suffered Passion for vs: for hee was once in mans hands heere, and ill entreated, and therefore he will neuer come in sinfull mens handes againe.

Also for speaking these wordes: the Pope hath no authority to geue pardon, and to release any mans soule from sinne, and so from payne: it is nothyng but blinding of the people, to haue their money.

Also for these wordes, or suche like: If a man do sowe twentie quarters of corne, as Iohn Fūge forced by his othe to

- Fraunces Funge and his brother
- Thomas Clerke.

	Thomas Clerke.	wheate or barley, or other corne, he ought to deduct his seede, and of the residue to tithe, or else he hath wrong, &c. For speaking against the reall presence of Christe in the Sacramente vnto Fraunces Funge, as before, &c. For sayeng these wordes: That the Sacrament of the aulter is not the body whiche was borne of the blessed virgine Mary. Item, for speakyng such wordes foureteene yeares paste: That folkes were ill occupied that woorshipped any thynges grauen with mans hande: for that is grauen wyth mans hand, is neither God, nor our Lady, but made for a remembrance of Saints. Nor we ought to worship any thing, but God and our Lady, and not Images of Saints, whiche are but stockes and stones. For hauing and reading vpon a suspected booke: whyche booke when hee perceaued to be seene in his hand, he closed it, and caried it to his chamber.
Fraunces Funge and Alyce his wife were put to their othe to detect.	Robert Raue of Dorney.
Henry D•yn forced by his othe to detect.	• Edmund Hill of Penne. • Robert Freeman, parishe priest of Orton by Colobroke • Thomas Groue and his wife, of Amersham. • Matild Philby, wife of Edward Philby of Chaldwey.
Iohn Hill forced by his othe, did detect.	Ioanne Gunne of Chessham.	Because she instructed and taught the sayd Hill before his abiuration, in the Epistle of Saint Iames, and other opinions.

- William Atkyns of great Missenden.
- Richard Murden, of Chesham.
- Emme Murden, his wife.

William Gudgame forced by his othe to detect.

Ioanne Gudgame his owne wife.

For being in the same opinion of the Sacrament that hee was of: who notwithstanding did swear the same Matild not to bee true, that her husband sayd.

Alyce Nashe, or Chapman, of Missenden.

Matilde Symonides, and Iohn Symonides her husband, put to their othe detected.

One Haggar of London.

For speaking in theyr house, an. 1520. these wordes: That there shoulde be a battayle of Priests,* and all the Priests shoulde be slayne, and that the Priests shoulde a while rule: but they shoulde all be destroyed, because they holde agaynste the law of holy Church, and for making of false Gods, and after that they should be ouerthrowne.

Item, another time he sayd, that men of the Churche shoulde be put downe, and the false Gods that they make: and after that he sayde they should know more, and then should be a mery world.

Thomas Clerke forced by his othe did detect.

Christopher Tin^lker of Wicombe.

The cause of thys Tinkers trouble was, for that he comming to this mans house, and complaining to him of y^e pouerty of the world, hadde these wordes: That there was neuer so misgouerned people, and that they bare thēselues so bolde vppon pardons and pilgrimages, that they cared not whatsoeuer they did, and so he departed.

And after that seauen dayes, thys Tinker comming againe, asked hym how his communication with hym last did please him, and he said well.

Then the Tinker sayd he knewe more, and that hee coule tell hym more, and bad him that he should beleue in God in heauen: for heere be many Gods in earth, and there is but one God: and that he was once heere, and was ill dealt with, and woulde no more come heere till the daye of doome: and that the Sacrament of the aulter was a holy thing, but not the flesh and bloud of Christ that was borne of the virgine, and charged hym not to tell this to hys wife, and especially to his wiues brother a Priest.

Afterward as the Priest was dryeng singing bread being wet, which his sister had bought, the foresayde Thomas Clerke sayde, that if euery one of these were a God, then were there many Gods. To whome the Priest aunswered, that till the holy wordes were spoken ouer it, it was of no power, and then it was very God, flesh and bloud, sayeng moreouer, that it was not meete for anye lay man to speake of such thyngs.

These wordes of the Priest beeyng after recited to the Tinker, by the sayd Clerke: then sayd he, let euery man say what they will: but you shall finde it as I shew you: and if you will take labour to come to my house, I will shewe you a farther prooffe of it, if you will take heede, &c.

To these was objected for that they hadde communicatiō and cōference with thys Roberte Pope in the Gospell of S. Mathew, before the great abiuratiō, in y^e towne of Amersham.

Robert Pope first of Amersham, after of Westādred, caused by his oth, did detect these folowing.

- Thomas Afrike, aliās Litle page, and hys wife.
- Thomas Scriuener father to Thomas Holmes wife.

Thys Scriuener was detected, for that the sayde Pope had of him a booke of the Epistles in English.

Hychenden.

Ioh. Fyppe William Fyppe.

For readyng a certaine Treatise vppon the Pater noster in Englishe, whiche this Iohn Fippe did read to hym, and to his father.

¶This foresayd Robert Pope moreouer detected Edward Pope his owne father of litle Missenden,* for hearyng the Gospell of Mathew read vnto him, and for communynge vpon the same with this Robert Pope his sonne, hee detected likewise Edward Pope his brother.

¶Furthermore, he detected his owne wife, who had before abiured vnder Byshop Smith, to continue still in her opinions.

- Thomas Clerke the elder,
of Hychenden.
- Laurence Herne, of Hychenden.

W. Halyday of Easthenred.

This Halyday was detected,* for hauyng in his custodie a booke of the Actes of the Apostles in English, whiche the sayd Robert Pope brought vnto hym, at the takyng of Roger Dodde.

- William Squire, and hys
brother of Schaw.
- Thomas Steuēton, & Matilde his daughter, of Cherney.

Rob. Pope before abiured, did detect these here folowyng.

- Thomas Philippe, pointer.
- Laurence Tayler of London.

For that these two beyng in the house of Richard Colyns at Gynge, there did read in an English booke,* the Epistle of Saint Paule to the Romaines, and Laurence did read the first Chapter of S. Lukes Gospell.

- Andrew Maysey, of Burton.
- The wife of Richard Colynes, of Gynge.

These beyng together at Upton in Iohn Harrys house, did talke of the Apocalips, and of the Actes of the Apostles, and therfore were suspected & thus detected. Ex Regist. Longl fol 71.

- Iohn Harrys▪ his wife.
- Alyce Colyns, wife of Richard Colyns.

Item, because Iohn Harrys spake against Pilgrimage, Images, and was heard to talke of seauen leane, and seauen fat Oxen.

Roberte Colyns of Hertford Wallis, Mason.

Tho. Grey, of Westhēdred.

For receiuing certeine bookes of this Roberte Pope.

Margarete House, wife of William House, of Estginge.

For keepyng companye, and receauyng y^e doctrine of Alyce Colins.

- Iohn Nashe, of little Missenden.
- Henry Etkyn, and hys mother, of little Missenden.
- Richard Dell, of Missenden.

Roberte Colyns beeyng sworne vpon the Euangelistes, did detecte these persons. Richarde Colyns of Gynge.

First, for that this Richard Colyns did reade vnto the sayde Roberte Colyns the ten Commaundements: * and after taught him the Epistles of

Iames, and another small Epistle of Peter: and after that, tooke hym the Gospell of Saint Iohn in English, & bade him reade therein hymselfe.

Also, for teaching him not to worship Images, nor to set vp candels, nor to go on pilgrimage.

Another crime against Richard Colyns: Because hee taughte this Robert, that in all such things wherein hee offended
God, he shoulde onely shrine hymselfe to God: & in which things he offēded mā, he should shrine hym to man.

*Also for teaching him that the Sacramente of the Altar is not very God, but a certaine figuratiue thing of Christ in bread: and that the Priest hath no power to consecrate the body of Christ.

Also, for that the sayd Richard did teach him in Wickliffes Wicket: howe that a man
maye not make the bodye of our Lorde, which made vs: and how can wee then make him againe? The father is vnbegotten, and vnmade: the Sonne is onely begotten and not made: and how then can mā make that which is vnmade, said he.

And in the same booke of Wickliffes Wicket, followe the wordes of Christ thus speaking: If my wordes be heresie, then am I an hereticke: And if my words be leasings, then am I a lyer, &c.

Also, another cryme against Richarde Colyns: For hauing certayne English Bookes, as Wickleffes Wicket, the Gospell of Sainct Iohn, the Epistles of Sainct Paule, Iames, and Peter in English, an exposition of the Apocalips, a booke of our Ladies mattens in english, a booke of Salomon in english, a booke called the pricke of conscience.

The crime againste Iohn Iohn Edmundes, of Burford Taylor. Edmundes, for hauing a certain english book of y^e cōmandemēts.

The foresayd Robert Colyns being sworne vpon the Euangelists, did detecte these persons.

Iohn Harrys.

The crime againste Iohn Harrys: For communing with hym of the first Chapter of Sainct Iohns Gospel: * In the beginning was the word, and the word was wyth God, and God, &c. Also for communing of a Chapter in Mathew of the viij. beatitudes.

Thomas Hall.

Item, for counsaylyng hym not to go on pilgrimage to Saints, because they were Idols.

- Rob. Lyuord.
- William Lyuord.
- Bruges, & Ioanne his wife.
- Harrys, & his wife.
- Rich. Colyns.

All these were detected, for that they beeing together in Bruges house at Burford, were reading together in the booke of the exposition of the Apocalyps, and communed concerning the matter of opening the booke with seauen claspes, &c.

- Iohn Ledisdall, or Edon of Hungerford.

- Iohn Colyns of Burford.
- Iohn Colyns, and his wife, of Asthall.
- Iohn Clerke, of Claufield.
- The wife of Richard Colyns, of Ginge.

Thom. Colyns, and his wife, of Gynge.

This Thomas was charged for hauyng a booke of Paul & Iames in English.

- William Colyns.
- Robert Pope, of Henred.
- Hakker, of Colmanstreete in London.

Stacy brickmaker of Colmōstreete.

For hauing the booke of the Apocalypse.

Tho Phillip. Laurence Wharfar of London.

For readyng the Epistle of Saint Peter in English in the house of Roberte Colyns at Asthall.

- Ioanne Colyns his owne sister, of Asthall.
- Thomas Colyns hys cousen, of Asthall.
- Maistres Bristow, of London.
- Iohn Colyns sonne of Richard Colyns, of Gynge.
- Ioanne Colyns daughter of Richard Colyns of Gynge.
- Henry Stacy sonne of Stacy of Colmanstreete.
- Thomas Steuenton of Charney in Barkeshyre.
- Iohn Brabant in Stanlake.
- Iohn Baker weauer, of Wytney.

Richard Colyns.

The wordes of Richarde Colyns were these: That the Sacramente was not the true bodye of Christ in flesh and blood: but yet it ought to be reuerenced: albeit not so as the true body of christ.

The crime agaynste Thomas Colins: For that eight yeares past, this Thomas Colins his Father had taught this Iohn his sonne in the presence of hys
Mother, the x.

Commaundementes, and namely, that he should haue but one GOD, and shoulde worshyp nothing but GOD alone: * and that to worship Sayntes and to go on pilgrimage was Idolatry.

Thom. Colins of Gynge, hys owne naturall Father.

Also that he should not worshippe the Sacrament of the aulter as God, for that it was but a token of the Lordes bodye. Which thing so muche discontented this Iohn Colyns, that he sayd he would disclose his Fathers errorrs, and make him to be burned: but his Mother entreated him not so to doe.

The crime against Rob. Colyns:
That this Robert readde to him in a certaine thicke booke of Scripture in English.

Rob. Colins of Asthall.

The crime layd to loh.
Edmundes: For that hee readde
to this Iohn the x.
Commaūdementes, & tolde him that Iohn Baptiste sayd, that one shoulde come after him whose buckle of his shoo, he was not worthy to vndoe.

Iohn Colins of Burford, appeached to the Byshop these persons her named.

Iohn Edmundes and his wife.

Alice, wife of Gunne of Wytney.

Iohn Hakker, and his sonne of London.

This Iohn Hakker of London, comming to Burford, brought a book speaking of the x. plagues of Pharao, Also after that, an other booke, entreatyng of the seauen Sacramentes.

- Laurence Taylor of Shordich.
- Thomas Philip of London.
- Philip, seruaunt of Richard Colins.
- Waunsell fishmonger, of the Vise.
- Ioane Robert.
- Burges wife.
- Iohn Boyes, and his brother, a Monke of Burford.
- Thomas Baker, Father to Gunnes wife of Whatley.
- Agnes, daughter of Iohn Edmundes.
- The Mother of Iohn Boyes, of Sedbery.
- Edward Red Scholemayster of Burford.
- Robert Hichman of Lechelade.

Elynor Heggess of Burford.

This Elynor was charged that she shold burne the Sacrament in an Ouen.

- Iohn Through, of the Priory of Burford.
- The Mother of Robert Burges wife.

Roger Dods of Burford, by his othe was cōpelled to vtter these persons here named.

Syr Iohn Drury Vicare of Windrish in Worcetershyre.

The crime against this Syr Iohn Drury was, for that, when Roger Daddes came first to him to bee hys seruaunte, hee sware him vppon a booke to keepe his counsels in all thinges: and after that he shewed hym a certayne woman in his house whome hee sayde to bee hys wife, counselling moreouer the sayd Roger Dods vpon an embring day, to suppe with bread & cheese, sayinge: that whiche

goeth into a mannes body defileth not a mans soule, but that whiche goeth out of the body defileth both body and soule.

Also that the sayde Uicare taught him the A.B. C. to the intent he shoulde haue vnderstanding in the Apocalips, wherein he sayde that he shoulde perceiue all the falsehood of the world, and all the trueth. He said farthermore vnto him, when he had bene at the Ladye of Worcester, at the bloud of hayles, which had cost him xviij. pence, that he had done as an ill husbände, that had ploughed his lande and sowed
it, but nothing to the purpose:
For he hadde worshipped mans handye worke and cast away his money, which had bene better geuen to the poore:
for he should worship but one God, and no handye worke of man.

Item, when the people would offer candles, where hee was Uicare to Mary Magdalene, he would take thē away & say they were fooles, y^t brought them thether.

- Elizabeth More, of Easthenred.
- Robert Pope, of Westhenred.

Henry Miller or Tucke, by Ware. This Henrye dyd shew to Roger Dods a certain story of a woman in the Apocalips, riding vpō a red beast. The sayd Henry was twice abiured.

Iohn Fyppe of Hychenden. For reading vnto the said Roger Dods, a certayne Gospell in English.

W. Fyppe of Hychenden and Henry his sonne. This William had exhorted Roger Dods that he should worship no Images, nor commit no Idolatrye, but worship one God: and tolde the same Roger, that it was good for a man to be mery & wise meaning, that he shold keepe close that was tolde him for els strait punishment woulde folow.

Roger Parker of Hichenhen. This Parker sayd to Iohn Fyppe for burning of his bookes, that he was fowle to blame, for they were worth a hūdreth markes. To whom Iohn aunswared, that hee had rather burne his bookes, then that hys bookes shoulde burne hym.

The wife of Thomas Wydemore, daughter of Roger House, of Hychenden, Olde Wydmores wife, sister to Iohn Phip of Hychenden.

Iohn Ledisdall of Hungerford. *For reading of the bible, in Robert Burges ouse at Burforde vpon holy roode day, with Colyns Lyuord, Thomas Hall and other.

Rob. Colins & his wife. Iohn Colins, For buying a Bible of Stacy, for and his wife. 20. s.

The father of Rob. Colins. This father Colins had beene of his doctrine from the yeare of our Lord. 1480.

The foresaid Roger Dods of Burford, by his othe was compelled to vtter these persons here annexed.

- Tho. Baker of Whatley.
- Robert Lyuord.
- Iohn Symson of Steuenton.
- Tho. Ryley, of Burford.
- Iohn Clemson, seruaunt to the Prior of Burford.
- Iohn Edmundes, of Burford.
- William Gunne of Wytney,

To these was layd, that they beyng in the house of Iohn Harris of Upton, at the mariage of Ioane the wife of Roberte Burges, dyd reade in a Booke called Nicodemus gospell, that made the cloth which our Lorde was buried in (as the Register sayth) and in that Booke is the story of the destruction of Hierusalem.

- Iohn Baker, Weauer of Wytney,
- The Bayliffe of Wytney.

- Iohn Hakker.
 - Iohn Brabant, and his wife.
 - Iohn Brabant his
sonne,*with his wife.
 - Iohn Brabant the younger
sonne, with his wife.
 - Reginald Brabant, of Stanlake.
- For reading in a certayne English book of Scripture, they being together in Ioh. Brabantes house of Stanlake.

Henry Fyppe.

The crime and detection against this Hēry was, for that he being asked of this D•ddes an. 1515.
Whether he would go to Wycomb or not, aunswered
agayne, that hee was chosen Rood man, that is, keeper of the Roode loft, saying y^t he muste go & tind a candle before his Blocke almightye.*

Olyuer Smyth of Newlyne, and his Wyfe.

William Hobbis.

This William Hobbis was detected, first by Radulphe Hobbys his brother to Byshop Smyth, but was deliuered throughe the suite of the Curate of Westwycame.

Iohn Edmundes, otherwise called Iohn Ogins of Burford, did detect

Philp Brabant seruaunt of Rich. Colyns.

For saying, that the sacrament of the aultar was made in the remē|braūce of Christs own body, but it was not y^e body of Christ.

The shepheardes kalender was also accused & detected.

Because the same Edmundes sayde that hee was persuaded by this booke, readynge these woordes: o that the Sacrament was made in the remembrance of Christ.

The booke of William Thorpe likewise was muche complayned of both by thys Iohn Edmundes, and diuers other.

Richard Colyns of Gynges.

This Richard Colins, as he was a great doer among these good men: so was he muche complayned vppon by diuers, & also by thys Edmundes, for bringing with him a booke called the king of Beeme, o into theyr company, and did read thereof a greate parte vnto them, in this Edmundes house of Burford.

Iohn Edmundes, otherwise called Iohn Ogyns of Burford did detect

Alice Colins, wife of Rich. Colyns.

This Alice likewise was a famous womā among them, and had a good memory & could recite much of y^e scriptures, and other good bookes: And therefore when any conuenticle of these men did meete at Burford, commonly she was sent for, to recite vnto them the declaration of the x. commaundementes, & the Epistles of Peter, and Iames.

Ioanne Colyns daughter of Rich. and of Alice Colyns.

This Ioanne also following her fathers and Mothers steppes was noted, for that she had learned with her father and mother, the x. Commaūdementes,* the seuē deadly sinnes, the seuen woorkes of mercy, the fiue wittes bodely and ghostly, the eight blessings, and v. chapters of S. Iames Epistle.

Agnes Edmundes his owne daughter.

This Agnes Edmundes was also detected by her Father, that he brought her to the house of Richarde Colyns, to seruice,* to the intent shee myght bee instructed there in Gods law, where she had learned likewise the x. Commaundementes, the fiue wits Bodely and Ghostly, and the 7. deadly sins.

- Alyce Gunne.
- W. Russell. of Colmanstreet.
- One mother Ioanne.
- Father Iohn Hungerford.
- Ioanne Taylor, seruaunt of Iohn Harrys, of Burford.
- Thomas Quicke, Weauer of Redyng.
- Philip Brabant, Weauer.
- Iohn Barbar, Clerke of Amersham.
- Iohn Eding, of Hungerford.
- One Brabant, brother to Philippe Brabant, of Stanlake.

Robert Butterfield.

Thomas Whyte, and Thomas
Clerke did appeach.

William Dorset.

The wordes of William Dorsette were these: that pilgrimage was of none effect, and offering candles or other things to saynts, stode in no steede, and was but cost lost.

Iohn Baker being vrged vpon his othe,*did disclose.

Iohn Edmundes.

Also when his Wyfe was going on pilgrimage, and hee asked whether? and she sayd to our Ladye of Wilsedon: our Lady, sayd he is in heauen.

This Iohn Edmūdes was detected because that hee, talking with the sayde Baker, of pilgrimage bad hym goe offer his money to the Image of GOD. when the other asked, what that was, he said that the Image of GOD was the poore people, blinde, and lame:
and sayde that hee offended almighty God in goinge on pilgrimage.

William Phippe adiured by his othe did accuse.*

Henry Phippe his owne sonne.

For communing with Roger Dods agaynst pilgrimage and adoration of Images.

*Henry Phip being examined, and abiured by the Bishop was compelled to disclose his owne wordes spoken to Roger Dods, saying to him, that he must light a candle before his BLOCKE ALMIGHTYE, being then roode

man.

Roger Parker. William Phip his owne father.

For talking together agaynste
Pilgrimage and Idolatry.

Iohn Brabant, the elder sonne of Iohn Brabant, did nominate

- Iohn Hakker.
- Robert Pope.

For reading the holy Scripture in his fathers house, and for saying these woordes: Christ made his maūdy and sayd: take thys breade, eate it, thys is my body:

Take this wine, drinke it, thys is my bloude: And Priestes saye by these woordes, that the Sacrament of the aulter is the body of Christ.

Iohn Brabant his Father, & his Mother.

For being present when Hacker was reading the Scripture in theyr house.

Philip Brabant his Vncle.

The wordes of Philippe Brabant, were these: that it was deadly sin to goe on pilgrimage.

¶Concerning this Iohn Brabant, here is to be noted the forme and effect of the Byshoppes examination, asking and demaunding thus of the sayde
Brabant: *An vnquam audiuit
Ioannem Hakker legentem sacram Scripturam contra determinationem Ecclesiae. That is, whether he euer heard Iohn Hacker reade the which wordes, if he meane, that it is agaynst the determination of the church, to read the holy Scripture, it may therby appeare to be a blind church. And if they meane that the holy scripture conteineth anye such thing in it whiche is agaynst
the determination of the church, then it appeareth theyr church to be cōtrary vnto God, seing it determineth one thing, and Gods word an other.

Iohn Baker did detect	• Robert Pope. • Richard Nobbis. • Iohn Edmundes.	For speaking againste going on pilgrimage, and Image worship.
Iohn a Lee denounced	Iohn a Weedon.	When this Iohn a Lee had tolde the sayd Weedon, how the B. had said in his sermon these woordes: That all whiche were of the sect of heretickes beleued that God was in heauen, but they beleued not that the bodye of Christ on the aulter was God: to this hee aunswearing agayne, sayd: ye be bold vpon that worde, deryding the B. in so saying.
	W. Dorset of kinges Langley.	For saying that images stooode for nothing: and that Pilgrimage serued to spend folkes mony, & nothing els.
Ioane Steuenton denounced	• Alice Colyns. • Iohn Harrys	For teaching the sayd Ioane Steuenton. in Lent, y^t x. Commaundements, thus beginning: I am thy Lord God that led thee out of the Land of Egypt and brought thee oute of y^e house of thraldom. Thou shalt not haue no alyen Gods before me, neither make to thee any image grauē w^t mans hādes, that is in heauen aboue, neyther in the earthe beneath. &c. Itē, for teaching her y^e first chapter of S. Iohns Gospell: In the beginning was the word. &c. For teaching her the 1. chapter of Peter.
Sir Iohn a Priest, and also Rob. Robinson detected	• M. Cotismore of Brightwell: • Also Maistres Cotismore, otherwise called Maistres	For speaking these woordes to one Iohn Baynton her seruant: that if shee went to her chamber & prayd there shee

shoulde haue as much merit as though she went to Walsingham on pilgrimage,

Item, when the sayd Sir Iohn came to her, after the death of M. Cotismore hys Mayster, requyryng her to sende one Iohn Stayner her seruante to our Lady of Walsingham for Maister Cotismore which in his lyfe time being sicke, promised in his owne person to visite that place, shee would not consēt therto, nor let her seruaunt go. Item for saying y^t when women go to offer to Images or saints they did it to shewe theyr newe gay geare, & that images were but carpenters chips: * and that folkes go on pilgrimage more for the grene way then for deuotion.

Iohn Hakker did detect.

Tho. Vincent of London.

To Tho. Uincent it was objected for geuinge this Hakker a booke of

- William Stokeley of Henley.
- Iohn Symondes and his wife of great Marlow.
- Iohn Austy of Henley.
- Thomas Austy of Henley.
- Grinder of Cookham.

Iohn Heron.

For hauing a booke of the exposition of the Gospels fayre written in English.

Tho. Groue, end also Io. of Reding put to theyr othe, did detect.

Richard Grace.

For speaking these words falowing: that our blessed Lady was the Godmother to S. Katherine: & therefore the Legend is not true in saying, that Christe did mary with S. Katherine, and bad Adrian put on his vestmēt, and saye the seruice of Matrimonye: For so Christ should liue in adulterye, for mariyng wyth hys Godsyster: which thing if he shold do, he shold be thought not to do well.

Item, for saying by the picture of S. Nicholas being newly paynted, that he was not worthy to stand in y^e Roode loft, but that it better beseemed hym to stand in the Belfray. &c.

In this Table aboue prefixed, thou hast gentle reader, to se and vnderstand: First the number and names of these good men and women troubled and molested by the church of Rome, and all in one yeare: of whom few or none were learned, being simple laborers and artificers, but as it plea'sed the Lord to worke in them knowledge and vnderstanding, by reading a few English bookes, such as they could get in corners. Secōdly what were theyr opiniōs we haue also described. And thirdly herein is to be noted moreouer, the blind ignorance & vncourteous dealing of the bishops agaynst them, not onely in that they, by theyr violent othe, and captious interrogatoryes, constrayned the children to accuse theyr parentes and parents the childrē: the husband the wife, & the wife the husband. &c. but especially in y^e most wrongfully they so afflicted them, without all good reason or cause, onely for the sincere verity of Gods worde, & reading of holy Scriptures.

Now it remaineth, that as you haue heard the opiniōs (which principally in number were 4.) so also we declare their reasons & scriptures wherupon they grounded,* & after that consequently the order & maner of penance to them inioyned by the Byshop. And first agaynst pilgrimage and agaynst worshipping of Images, they vsed this text of the Apoc. 9. I saw horses in a vision, and the heads of thē, as the heads of Lions: smoke, fire, and brimstone came out of theyr mouthes: with these 3. plagues, the third part of men were slayne of the smoke and of the fire, and of the brimstone that came out of the mouthes of them. They that were not slayn of these 3. plagues were such as worshipped not deuils, and images of gold and siluer of brasse, of tree, and of stone. &c. Ex Regist. Longland. Fol. 72. Also they vsed & alledged the first commaundement, that there is but one God, & y^t they ought not to worship mo Gods then one. &c

And as touching the Sacrament and the right doctrine therof,* they had theyr instruction partely out of Wickliffes wicket, partly out of the Shepheardes Calender: where they read: That the sacrament was made in remembraūce of Christ, and ought to be receiued in remembraunce of his body. &c. Moreouer they alledged and folowed the wordes of Christ spokē at the supper, at what time he sitting with his Disciples, and making with them his Maundy, tooke bread, and blessed, and brake, and gaue to his disciples: And sayd, eat ye: this (reaching forth his arme,* and shewing the bread in his hand, and then noting his owne naturall body and touching the same, and not the bread consecrate) is my body, which shall be betrayed for you: doe this in remembraunce of me: And likewise tooke the wine and had them drinke, saying: this is my bloud which is of the newe Testament. &c.

Item,* that Christ our Sauior sitteth on the right hand of the father, and there shalbe vnto the day of dome: Wherefore they beleued that in the Sacrament of the altiar was not the very body of Christ.

Item (sayd one of them) men speak much of the Sacrament of the altiar, but this will I bide by,* that vpō share-thursday Christ brake bread vnto his disciples, and bad thē eate it, saying, it was his flesh and bloud. And then he wēt from them, and suffered passion: and then he rose frō death to life, and ascended into heauen, and there sitteth on the right hande of the father, and there hee is to come vnto the day of dome, when he shal iudge both quick and dead: And therefore how he shoulde be here in the forme of breade, he sayd, they could not see.

Such reasons and allegations as these and other lyke, taken out of the scripture, and out of the Shepheardes Kalender, Wickliffes wicket, and out of other bookes they had amongst them. And although there was no learned man with them to ground them in theyr doctrine, yet they conferring and communing together among themselues, dyd conuert one another, the Lordes hand working with them maruellously: So that in short space,* the number of these Knowne or Iust fast men (as they were then termed) did exceedinly increase, in such sort, that the Byshop seying the matter almost past his power, was driuen to make his cōplaynt to the king, and required his ayde for suppression of these men. Wherupon king Henry being then young, & vn'expert in the bloudy practises and blind leadings of these apostolicall prelates, incensed with his suggestions and cruell complayntes, directed down letters to his Shirifs, bailifs, officers, & subiectes for the ayd of the bishop in this behalfe: the tenor of which letters here ensueth.

¶The copy of the kinges letter for the ayde of Iohn Longland B. of Lincolne, agaynst the seruauntes of Christ, falsely then called heretickes.

HENry the 8. by the grace of God, king of England & of Fraūce Lord of Ireland, defender of the fayth: to all Mayors, Shyriffes, Bayliffes and Constables, and to all other our Officers, Ministers, and Subiectes, these our letters hearing or seeing, and to euery of them greeting. For as muche as the right reuerend father in God our trusty and right welbeloued Counsellour the Bishop of Lyncolne, hath now within his Dioces no small number of hereticks, as it is thought to his no little discomfort and heauines: We therfore being in will and minde safely to prouide for the sayde right reuerend father in God and his officers: that they ne none of thē, shall bodily be hurt or damaged hy any of the sayde heretickes or theyr fautours,* in the executing and ministring of Iustice vnto the sayd hereticks accordingly to the lawes of holy church: do straitly charge and commaund you and euery of you, as ye tender our hie displeasure, to be ayding, helping and assisting the sayd right reuerend Father in God, and his sayde officers in the executing of Iustice in the premisses, as they or any of them shal require you so to do, not fayling to accomplishe our commandement & pleasure in the premisses, as ye entend to please vs, and will aunswere to the contrary, at your vttermost perils. Yeuen vnder our signet at our castle of Wyndsour the 20. day of October the 13. yeare of our raigh.

The bishop thus being armed no lesse with the authority of the kinges letter then incited with his owne fierceness, forslacked no time, but eftsoones to accōplish his moody violence vpon the poore flock of Christ called before him sitting vpon his tribunall seat, both these aforementioned persons, and all other in his dioces which were neuer so little noted or suspected to incline toward those opiniōs: of whō to such as had but newly bene taken, and had not before abīured, Page 837 he inioyned most strayght & rigorous penance. The other in whō he could find any relaps, yea albeit they submitted themselues neuer so humbly to his fauourable curtesy,* and though also at his request, and for hope of pardō, they had shewed thēselues great detectors of their brethrē being moreouer of him feed and flattered therunto, yet not withstanding, contrary to his fayre wordes, & their expectation, he spared not, but read sentēce of relaps against thē comitting them to the secular arme to be burned.

And first as touching them who being brought to abiuration, were put to theyr penaunce, long it were to recite the names of all. Certayne I thought to recite here in a catalogue, first reciting the persons, afterward the rigorous, penaunce to them enioyned.

The names of them which were abiured in the Dioces of Lincolne, the yeare of our Lord. 1521.

The bookes & opiniōs, which these were charged with all, & for the which they were abiured, partly are before expressed, partly here folow in a briefe summary to be seene.

¶A briefe summe of theyr opinions.

*The opinions of many of these persons were, that he or she neuer beleued in the Sacrament of the aluter, nor euer would, and that it was not as men did take it.

*For that he was knowne of his neghbor, to be a good felow, meaning that he was a knowne man.

*For saying that he would geue 40. pence, in cōditiō that such a one knew so much, as he did know.

*Some for saying, y^t they of Amershā, which had bene abiured before by Bishop Smyth, were good men, & perfect Christians, & simple folk which could not answere for thēselues, & therefore were oppressed by power of the bishop.

Some for hiding other in theyr barnes.

*Some for reading the Scriptures or treatises of Scripture in English: some for hearing the same read.

Some for defending: some for marying with thē whiche had bene abiured.

*Some for saying that matrimony was not a Sacramēt.

Some for saying, that worshippinge of Images was Mawmetrey: some for calling Images carpenters chips: some for calling them stockes and stones: some for calling them dead thinges.

*Some for saying that money spent vpon pilgrimage, serued but to mainteine theues and harlots.

Some for calling the Image in the Rood loft block almighty.

*Other for saying that nothing grauen with mans hand was to be worshipped.

*Some for calling them fooles which came from master Iohn Shorne in pilgrimage.

*An other for calling his vicar a poll shorne priest.

*An other for calling a certayne blinde chappell being in ruine, an old fayre milckhouse.

*An other for saying that he threshed God almighty out of the straw.

*An other for saying that almes shoulde not be geuen, before it did sweat in a mans hand.

*Some for saying, that they which dye, passe straight either to heauen or hell.

*Isabell Bartlet was brought before the Byshop, and abiured, for lamēting her husband when the Bishops man came for him, and saying, that he was an vndone man, and she a dead woman.

*For saying that Christ departing from his disciples into heauen, sayd: that once he was in sinners handes, & would come there no more.

Robert Raue hearing a certayne Bell in an vplandish steple, sayd: lo yonder is a fayre bell, and it were to hang about any cowes neck in this towne: and therfore, as for other such like matters moe he was brought coram nobis.

Item for receiuing the Sacrament at Easter, & doubting whether it was the very body, and did not cōfesse their doubt to theyr ghostly father.

Some for saying that the pope had no authority to geue pardon or to release mannes soule from sinne, and so from payn, and that it was nothing but blinding of the people, and to get theyr money.

The penaunce to these partyes enioyned by this Iohn Longland Bishop of Lincolne,* was almost vniforme and all after one condition, saue onely that they were seuerally committed and deuoted into seuerall and diuers monasteryes, there to be kept and found of almes all theyr life, ex|cept they were otherwise dispensed with by the bishop: as for example I haue here adioyned the Bishoppes letter for one of the sayd number, sent to the Abbey of Ensham, there to be kept in perpetuall penaunce. By whiche one, an estimation may be taken of the rest, which were bestowed like wise sundrly into sundry Abbeyes, as to Osney, to Frideswide, to Abingdon, to Tame, to Bessetor, to Dorchester, to Notley, to Ashrige, and diuers moe. The copy of the bishops letter sent to the Abbot of Ensham, here followeth vnder written.

The Bishops letter to the Abbot of Ensham.

MY louing brother, I recommend me hartely vnto you: and where as I haue, according to the lawe,* put this bearer R.T. to perpetuall penaunce within your monastery of Ensham, there to liue as a penitent, and not otherwise, I pray you, and neuerthelesse, according vnto the law, cōmaund you to receiue him, & see ye order him there accordingly to his iniunctiōs which he wil shewe you, if ye require the same. As for his lodging, he will bring it with him. And his meat and drinke, he may haue such as ye geue of your almes. And if he can so order himselfe by his labour within your house in your busines, whereby he may deserue his meate and drinke, so may you order him, as ye see conuenient to hys desertes, so that he passe not the presynct of your monastery. And thus fare you hartely well from my place &c.

As touching the residue of the penaunce and punishment inflicted to these men, they doe little or nothing disagree, but had one order in them all. The maner and forme whereof in the sayd Bishops Register doth proceed in cōdition as foloweth.

Penaunce enioyned vnder paine of relapse by Iohn Longland Bishop of Lincolne, the 19. day of December. an. 1521.

Inprimis, that euery one of them shall vpon a market day, such as shall be limited vnto them in the market time,* go thrise about the market at Burford, and then to stande vp Page 838 vpon the highest grece of the Crosse there a quarter of an houre with a fagotte of wood euery one of them vpon hys shoulder,* and euery one of them once to beare a fagotte of wood vpon theyr shoulders, before their procession vpon a Sondag, which shall be limited vnto them at Burford, frō the quyre doore going out, to the quyre doore going in, and all the high Masse time to holde

the same fagot vpon theyr shoulders, kneeling vpon the grece afore the high aultar there, and euery of them likewise to doe likewise in theyr owne parish Church, vpon such a Sondag as shalbe limited vnto them: and once to beare a fagot at a generall procession at Oxbridge, when they shalbe assigned therto: and once to beare a fagot at the burning of an hereticke, when they shalbe monished therto.

Also euery one of them to fast bread and ale onely euery Friday during theyr life, and euery euen of Corpus Christi euery one of them to fast bread and water during theyr life vnles sicknes vnfayned let the same.

Also to say euery of them euery Sondag and euery friday during theyr life, once our Ladye Psalter, & if they forget it one day, to say as much another day for the same.

Also they nor none of them, shall not hide the marke vpon theyr cheeke, neyther with hat, cap, hood kerchiefe, napkin, or none otherwise, nor shall not suffer theyr beardes to grow past 14. dayes, nor neuer to haunt againe together with any suspect person or persons, vnles it be in the open market, fayre, church or common Inne or alehouse, where other people may see theyr conuersation.

And all these iniunctions they and euery of them, to fulfill with their penance, and euery part of the same, vnder payne of relaps.

And thus haue you the names, with the causes and the penance of them which were at this present time abiured. By the which word * abiured, is ment that they were constrayned by theyr othe, swearing vpon the Euangelists, & subscribing with theyr hand, and a crosse to the same, that they did vtterly and voluntarily renoūce, detest, & forsake, and neuer should hold hereafter these, or any other like opinions, contrary to the determination of the holy mother church of Rome: and further, that they should detect vnto theyr ordinary, whome so euer they shoulde see, or suspect hereafter to teach, hold, or mayntayne the same.

¶Here folow the names of them, which were condemned for relaps, and committed vnto the secular power.

AMong these aforenamed persons, which thus submitted themselues, and were put to penance, certeine there were which because they had bene abiured before, as is aboue mentioned, * pag. 814. vnder bishop Smith, were now condemned for relaps, and had sentence read agaynst them and so were committed to the secular arme, to be burned: Whose names here follow.

Martyrs.

- Thomas Bernard.
- *James Morden.
- Robert Raue.
- Iohn Scriuener.

Of these mention is made before, both touching theyr abiuration, and also their martirdome, pag. 814. vnto whō we may adioyne.

- Ioane Norman.
- Thomas Holmes.

This Thomas Holmes, albeit he had disclosed and detected many of his brethrē,* as in the table aboue is expressed, pag. 824. thinking thereby to please the Bishoppe & to saue himselfe, & was thought to be a feed man of the bishop for the same: yet notwithstanding in the sayd bishops register appeareth the sentence of relaps, & condemnation written & drawne out agaynst him: and most like that he was also adiudged and executed with the other.

¶As touching the burning of Ioh. Scriuener, here is to be noted,* that his children were compelled to set fire vnto their father, in like maner as Ioane Clerke also daughter of William Tilseworth, was cōstrayned to geue fire to the burning of her owne natural father, as is aboue specified, pag. 774. The example of whiche cruelty, as it is contrary both to God and nature, so hath it not bene seene nor heard of in the memory of the heathen.

Where moreouer is to be noted, that at the burning of this Iohn Scriuener,* one Thomas Dorman, mentioned before, pag. 775. was present and bare a fagot at Amershā: Whose abiuration was afterwarde layde agaynst hym, at what time he should depose for recouery of certeyne lands from the schole of Barchamsted.* This Thomas Dorman (as I am credibly informed of certeyne about Amersham) was then vncle to this our Dorman, & found him to schole at Barchamsted vnder M. R•ue, which now so vncharitably abused his pen in writing agaynst the contrary doctrine, and rayleth so fiercely agaynst the bloud of Christes slayne seruauntes, miscalling them to be a donghill of stinkin Martyrs.

Well, how soeuer the sauour of these good Martyrs doe sent in the nose of M. Dorman. I doubt not but they geue a better odour and sweter smel in the presence of the Lord: Preciosa enim in conspectu Domini mors sanctorum eius. Precious is in the sight of the Lord the death of his Sayntes. And therefore howsoeuer it shall please M. Dorman wyth reprochfull language to misterme the good martirs of christes, or rather Christ in his Martyrs▪ his vnseemely vsage more cartlike then clerke like, is not greatly to be weyed. For as the daunger of his blasphemye hurteth not them which are gone: so the contumely an• reproch thereof, as well comprehendeth his owne kindred, frendes, and country, as any other els: and especially redoundeth to himselfe and woundeth his own soule and none els, vnto the great prouoking of Gods wrath agaynst him, vnlesse he be bles•sed with better grace by time to repent.

Doctour Colet.

MUch about this time, or not past 2. yeares before,* died D. Iohn Colet, of whom mention was made in the ta'ble about pag. 801. To whose sermons these knowen men about Buckinghamshyre, had a great minde to resort. After he came from Italy and Paris, he first beganne to read the Epistles of S. Paule openly in Oxford,* in sted of Scotus and Thomas. From thence he was called by the kyng and made Deane of Paules: where he accustomed much to preach, not without great auditory, as well of the kinges court, as of the citizēs and other. His diet was frugall: his life vpright: in discipline he was seuere: In so much that his Canons because of theyr strayer rule, complained that they were made like monkes. The honest and honourable state of matrimony he euer preferred before the vnchast sin'glenes of priests.* At his dinner commonly was read either some chapter of S. Paule, or of Salomons Prouerbs. He neuer vsed to sup. And although the blindnesse of that time caryed him away after the common error of Popery: yet in ripenes of iudgemēt he seemed something to incline frō y^e vulgar trade of that age. The religious orders of monks and friers he fantised not. As neither he coulede greatly fauour the barbarous diuinity of the schole Doctours, as of Scotus, but least of all, of Thomas Aquine.* In so much that when Erasmus speaking in the prayse of Thom. Aquine, did commēd him that he had red many old authors, and had written many new workes as Catena aurea, & such like, to proue and to know his iudgement: Colet first supposing that Erasmus had spoken in iest, but after supposing that he ment good fayth, brusteth our in great vehemency, saying: what tell you me (quoth he) of the commēdation of that man, who except he had bene of an arrogant and presumptuous spirit, would not define and discusse all thinges so boldly & rashly: and also except he had bene rather wordly minded, then heauenly, would neuer haue so polluted christes whole doctrine with mans prophane doctrine, in such sort as he hath done.

The Bishop of London at that time was Fitziames,* of age no lesse then 80. Who bearing long grudge and displeasure agaynst Colet, with other 2. Bishops taking hys parte, like to himselfe entred action of complaynt agaynst Colet to the Archb. of Cant. being then W. Warham. The matter of his complaint was deuided into 3. Articles. The first was for speaking agaynst worshipping of Images. The second was about hospitalitey, for that he entreating vpō the place of the gospell, pasce, pasce, pasce, feed, feed, feed: when he had expounded the 2. first, for feeding with example of life and with doctrine: in the third, which the scholemen doe expounde for feeding with hospitalitey, hee left out the outwarde feeding of the belly, and applyed it an other way. The third crime wherewith they charged him,* was for speaking agaynst suche as vsed to preache onely by bosome Sermons, declaring nothing els to the people, but as they bring in theyr prayers with thē. Which because the Bishop of London vsed then much to do for his age,* he tooke it as spoken against him, and therefore bare him this displeasure. The Archbishop more wisely weying the matter, and being well acquaynted with Colet, so tooke hys part agaynst his accusers, that he at that time was rid out of trouble.

Page 839 William Tyndall in hys booke aunswering that M. More addeth moreouer, and testifieth that the Byshop of London would haue made the said Colet Deane of Paules, an hereticke for translating the Pater noster in Englishe, had not the Byshop of Caunterbury holpen the Deane.

But yet the malice of Fitziames the Byshop so ceased not: who being thus repulsed by the Archbishop, practised by an other trayne how to accuse hym vnto the king. The occasion thus fel. It happened the same time, that the king was in preparation of warre agaynst Fraunce. Whereupon the Byshop with his coadiutors taking occasion vpon certaine wordes of Colet, wherein he seemed to preferre peace before any kinde of warre,* were it neuer so iust, accused him therefore in their sermons, and also before the Kyng.

Furthermore it so befell the same time y^t vpon good friday D. Colet preaching before the king, entreated of the victory of Christ, exhorting all Christians to fight vnder y^e standard of Christ, against the deuill, adding moreouer what an hard thing it was to fight vnder Christes banner, and that all they which vpon priuate hatred or ambition, tooke weapon against their enemy, one christian to slay an other suche did not fight vnder the banner of Christ, but rather of Satan, & therefore concluding his matter, he exhorted that Christian men in theyr warres would followe Christ their Prince, & captayn, in fighting against their enemies rather then the example of Iulius or Alexander &c. The king hearing Colet thus to speake, and fearing lest by hys words the hartes of his souldiours might be withdrawne from his warres which hee had then in hande,* tooke hym aside, and talked with him in secret conference in his garden walking. Bish. Fitziames, Bricot, and Stādish, who were his enemies, thought now none other, but that Collet must needs be committed to y^e Tower, & wayted for his comming out. But the king with great gentlenes intertayning D. Colet, and bidding him familiarly to put on his cap, in long curteous talk had with him in the garden much commended him for his learning & integritie of lyfe agreeing with him in all poyntes,* but that onely he required him (for that the rude souldiours shuld not rashly mistake that which he had said) more playnly to explaine hys words and minde in that behalfe, which after he dyd: and so after long communication and great promis•s, the king dismissed Colet with these wordes, saying: let euery man haue his Doctour as him liketh: this shall be my Doctour and so departed. Wherby none of his aduersaries durst euer trouble him after that time.

Among many other memorable actes left behind him, he erected a worthy foundation of the schoole of Paules (I pray God the fruites of the schoole may answer y^e foun'dation) for the cherishing vp of youth in good letters, prouiding a sufficient stipende as well for the maister as for the Husher, whome he willed rather to be appoynted out of the number of maryed men, then of single priestes with their suspected chastitie. The first moderator of this schoole was Guliel. Lilius, a man no lesse notable for hys learnyng, then was Colet for his foundation. Ex. Epist. Eras. ad Iodoc. Ionam. This Colet died the yeare of our Lord 1519.

Not long before the death of this Colet and Lily, lyued Gulielmus Grocinus, and Gulielmus Latimerus, both English men also, and famously learned. This Grocinus as he began to read in his opē lecture in y^e church of S. Paul the booke of Dyonisius Areopagita, commonly called Hierarchia Ecclesiastica (for the reading of the holy scriptures in Paules was not in vre) in the first entry of his preface, he cryed out with great vehemency agaynst them who soeuer they were, whiche eyther denied, or stooode in doubt of the authoritie of that booke: in the number of whome hee noted Laurence Valla & diuers other of like approued iudgement and learning. But afterward the same Grocine, when he had continued a few weekes in hys reading thereof, and did consider further in him, he vtterly altered, and recanted his former sentence, protesting openly, that the forenamed booke to his iudgement, was neuer written by that authour whom we reade in the actes of the Apostles to be cal'led Dyonisius Areopagita. Ex. Eras. ad. Parisiens.

The tractation of these two couples aboue rehearsed, doe occasion me to adioyne also the remembraunce of an o'ther couple of like learned men: The names of whom not vnworthy to be remembred, were Thomas Linacre, and Richard Pace: which two followed much vpon the tyme of Colet, and of Wil. Lily. But of Richard Pace, whiche was Deane next after the foresayd Iohn Colet, more conuenient place shall serue vs hereafter to speake, comming to the story of Cardinall Wolsey.

Moreouer to these two I thought it not out of season, to couple also some mention of Geffrey Chaucer, and Iohn Gower.* Which although being much discrepant frō these in course of yeres, yet may seeme not vnworthy to be mat'ched with these forenamed persons in commendation of their study and learning. Albeit concerning the full certain'ty of the tyme and death of these two, we cannot find: yet it appeareth in the prologe of Gowers work, intituled confessio Amantis, that he finished it in the 16. yeare of K. Rich. the second. And in the end of the viij. booke of hys sayde treatise he declareth, that he was both sicke and old, when he wrote it, wherby it may appeare, that he liued not long after. Notwithstanding, by certayne verses of the sayde maister Gower placed in y^e latter end of Chaucers works both in Latine and Englishe, it may seeme that he was aliue at the beginning of the raigne of king Henry the iiij. and also by a booke which he wrote to the same K. Henry By his sepulture within a Chappell of the Church of S. Mary Oueries,* whiche was then a monastery where he & his wife lye buried, it appeareth by hys cheyn & his garlād of Laurell, that he was both a knight, and flourishing than in poetry. In the which place of his sepulture were made in hys grauestone 3. books, the first bearing the tytle, Speculum meditantis, The second, Vox Clamantis, The thyrd. Cōfessio amantis. Besides these, diuers Chronicles and other workes moe he compiled.

Likewise as touching the tyme of Chaucer, by hys owne works in the end of hys first booke of Troylus and Cr•scide it is manifest, that he and Gower were bothe of one tyme,* although it seemeth that Gower was a great deale his ancient: both notably learned, as the barbarous rudenes of that tyme did geue, both great friends together and both in like kinde of study together occupied, so endeuoring themselues, and employing their tyme, that they excelling many other in study and exercise o• good letters did passe forth their liues here right worshipfully & godly to the worthy fame and commendation of theyr name. Chaucers workes be all printed in one volume, and therfore knowne to all men.

This I meruaile to see the idle lyfe of the priestes and clergie men of that tyme, seeing these lay persons shewed themselues in these kinde of liberall studyes so industrious & fruitfully occupied: but muche more I maruell to consider thys,* how y^t the bishops condemning and abolishing al maner of Englishe bookes and treatises whiche might bring y^e people to anye light of knowledge, did yet authorise the workes of Chaucer to remaine still & to be occupied:* Who (no doubt) saw in Religion as much almost as euen we do now, & vttereth in hys works no lesse, and seemeth to be a right Wicleuian, or els was neuer any, and that all his workes almost, if they be thoroughly aduised will testifie (albeit it be done in mirth, & couertly) & especially y^e latter end of hys thyrd booke of y^e Testament of loue for there purely he toucheth the highest matter, that is the communion: Wherin, except a man be altogether blind, he may espy him at the full. Although in the same book (as in all other he vseth to do) vnder shadows couertly, as vnder a visour, he suborneth trueth, in suche sort,* as both priuilye she may profite the godly minded, and yet not be espyed of the crafty aduersary: And therefore the bishops belike, taking his woorkes but for iestes and toyes, in condemning other bookes, yet permitted his bookes to be read.

So it pleased God to blind then the eyes of them, for y^e more commoditie of his people, to the intent that through the reading of his treatises, some fruit might redound ther'of to his Church, as no doubt it dyd to many: As also I am partly enformed of certayne whiche knew the parties, which to them reported, y^t by reading of Chaucers works,* they were brought to the true knowledge of religion. And not vnlike to be true. For to omitte other partes of his volume, whereof some are more fabulous then other, what tale can be more playnly tolde then the tale of the ploughman? or what finger can poynt out more directly the Pope with his prelates to be Antichrist, then doth the poore Pellican reasoning agaynst the greedy Griffon? Under which Hypotyposis or Poesie, who is so blind that seeth not by the Pellican, the doctrine of Christ: and of the Lollardes to be defended against the Church of Rome? Or who is so impudent y^t can deny that to be true, which the Pellicā there affirmeth in describing the presumptuous pryde of that pretended Church? Agayne what egge can be more lyke, or fig vnto an other: then the wordes properties, and conditiōs of that rauening griphe resembleth the true Image, that s, the nature and quallities of that which we call y^e church of Rome, in euery poynt & degree? and therefore no great meruaile, if that narratiō was exempted out of the copies of Chaucers workes: whiche notwithstanding now is restored Page 840 agayne, and is extant for euery man to reade that is disposed.

This Geffrey Chaucer being borne (as is thought) in Oxfordshyre, and dwelling in Woodstocke, lyeth buried in the Church of the minster of S. Peter at Westminster, in an Ile on the southside of the sayd Church, not far from the dore leading to the Cloister, and vpon his graue stone first were written these two old verses.

Galfridus Chaucer vates & fama poesis

Maternae, hac sacra sum tumulatus humo.

Afterward about the yeare of our Lord. 1556. one M. Brickham bestowing more cost vpon his tombe, did adde thereunto these verses following.

Qui fuit Anglorum vates ter maximus olim,

Galfridus Chaucer conditur hoc tumulo.

Annum si quaeras Domini, si tempora mortis,

Ecee nota subsunt, quae tibi cuncta notent.

25. Octob. Anno. 1400.

Here beginneth the reformation of the church of Christ, in the tyme of Martine Luther.

ALthough it can not be sufficiently expressed with toūg or pen of man,* into what miserable ruine & desolation the church of Christ was brought in those latter dayes: yet partly by the reading of these storyes aforepast, some intelligence may be geuen to them, whiche haue iudgement to marke or eyes to see: in what blindnes and darckenes the world was drowned during the space of these 400. yeares heretofore and more. By the viewing and considering of which times and histories, thou mayst vnderstand (gentle reader) how the religion of Christ, which onely consisteth in spirit and veritie, was wholly turned into outward obseruations, ceremonies, and idolatry. So many Sainctes we had, so many gods, so many monasteries, so many pilgrimages. As many churches, as many reliques forged & teyned we had. Agayne, so many reliques, so many lyeng miracles wee beleued. In stede of the onely liuing Lorde▪ we worshipped dead stocks and stones. In place of Christ immortall, we adored mortall bread. In stead of his bloud we worshipped the bloud of duckes, How the people wer led, so that the priestes were fed, no care was taken. In stead of Gods word, mans worde was set vp. In stead of Christes testament, the Popes testament, that is the Canon lawe: in stead of Paule, the mayster of sentence tooke place, and almost full possession. The law of God was litle read: the vse and end therof was lesse knowne. And as the ende of the lawe was vnknowne, so the difference betweene the Gospell and the lawe, was not vnderstanded, y^e benefite of Christ not considered, the effect of faith not expended. Through the ignoraunce wherof, it cannot be told what infinite erroures, sectes and religious crept into the church ouerwhelming the world, as with a floud of ignoraunce and seduction. And no maruell, for where the foundation is not well layd, what building can stand and prosper? The foundation of all our Christianitie is onely this: The promise of God,* in the bloud of Christ hys sonne, geuing and promising life vnto all that beleue in him: Geuing (sayth the Scripture) vnto vs, and not barganing or indenting with vs: And that freely (sayth the Scripture) for Christes sake,* and not condicionally for our merites sake.

Furthermore freely (sayth the scripture) by grace that the promise might be firme and sure, and not by the workes that we doe, which are alwaies doubtfull. By grace (sayth the scripture) through promise to all and vpon all y^t beleue, and not by the law vpon them that do deserue. For if it come by deseruing, thē is it not of grace: If it be not of grace,* thē is it not of promise. And contrariwise if it be of grace and promise, then is it not of works sayth S. Paul. Upon this foundatiō of Gods free promise and grace first builded the Patriarckes,* kinges and prophets. Upon the same foundation also Christ the Lord builded his church. Upon the which foundation the Apostles likewise builded the Church Apostolicall or Catholicall.

This Apostolicall and Catholicke foundation, so long as the Church did retayn, so long it continued sincere and sound: which endured a long seasō after the apostles time. But after, in proces of yeares, through wealth and negligence crept into the Church, so soone as this foundation be'gan to be lost, came in newe builders, which would build vpon a new foundation, a new Church more glorious, which we call now the Church of Rome. Who beyng not contented with the olde foundation and the head corner stone, whiche the Lord by his word had layd, in place therof, they layde the ground worke vppon the condition and strength or the lawe and workes. Although it is not to be denyed, but that the doctrine of gods holy law, and of good workes according to the same, is a thing most necessary to be learned and followed of all men: yet is not that y^e foundation, wherupon our saluation consisteth, neither is that foundation able to beare vp the weight of the kingdome of heauen: but is rather the thing, which is builded vppon the foundatiō: which foundatiō is Iesus Christ, according as we are taught of Saint Paul, saying: * No man can lay any other foundation, beside that whiche is layde, Christ Iesus. &c.

But this auncient foundation with the olde auncient Church of Christ (as I sayd) hath bene now of long tyme forsaken, & in stead therof a new Church,* with a new foun'dation hath bene erected and framed, not vpon gods promise & his free grace in Christ Iesus, nor vpon free iustification by fayth, but vpon merits & desertes of mens working. And hereof haue they planted al these their new deuises, so infinite that they cannot wel be numbred as masses, trecenares, diriges, obsequies, mattens and houres singing seruice, vigiles, midnightrising, barefootgoing, fishtasting, lentfast, imberfast, stations, rogations, iubiles, aduocatiō of saints, praying to images, pilgrimage walking, workes of supererogation, application of merites, orders rules, sectes of religion, vowes of chastitie, wilful pouerty, pardons, relations, indulgences, penance and satisfac'tion, with auricular confession, sounding of Abbaies, building of Chappels, geuing to Churches, And who is able to recite all their laborious buildinges: falsly framed vpon a wrong ground, and all for ignoraunce of the true founda'tion, whiche is the free iustification by fayth in Christ Iesus the sonne of God.

Moreouer to note,* that as this new founde Church of Rome was thus deformed in doctrine: so no lesse was it corrupted in order of life & deepe hipocrisie, doing al thinges onely vnder pretenses and dissembled titles. So vnder y^e pretence of Peters chayre, they exercised a maiestie a'boue Emperours and kinges. Under the visour of their vowed chastitie, reigned adultery, vnder the cloke of professed pouerty, they possessed the goodes of the temporalty.* Under the tytle of being dead vnto the world, they not only reigned in y^e world, but also ruled the world: vnder the colour of y^e keyes of heauē to hang vnder theyr girdle, they brought all the states of the worldes vnder theyr girdle, & crept not onely into the purses of men, but also into theyr consciences: they heard theyr confessions: they knew their secrets: they dispensed as they were disposed, & loosed what them listed: And finally when they had brought the whole world vnder theyr subiection, yet dyd theyr pryde neyther cease to ascend, neyther could their auarice be euer satisfied. And if the example of Cardinall Wolsey and other Cardinales and popes cannot satisfie thee, I beseech the (gentle Reader) turne ouer the foresayd booke of the ploughmans tale in Chaucer aboue mencioned, wher thou shalt vnderderstād much more of theyr demeanour, then I haue here described.

In these so blynd and miserable corrupt dayes of darck'nes and ignoraunce,* thou seest good Reader (I doubt not) howe necessary it was, and high time, that reformation of the Church should come, which now most happily & graciously began to worke, through the mercifull and no lesse needfull prouidence of almighty God. Who although he suffered hys Church to wander and start aside through the seduction of pride and prosperitie a long time, yet at length it pleased his goodnes to respect hys people, and to reduce hys church into the prestine foundation and frame againe, from whence it was pitiously before decayed. Whereof I haue now consequently to intreat, intending by the grace of Christ: to declare how and by what meanes, first this re'formation of the church began, and howe it proceeded, increasing by little and little into this perfection which now we see, and more I trust shall see.

And herein we haue first to behold the admirable work of Gods wisdom.* For as the first decay and ruine of the church, before began of rude ignoraunce, & lacke of knowledge in teachers: so to restore y^e church agayne by doctrine and learning, it pleased God to open to man y^e arte of printing, the time wherof was shortly after y^e burning of Hus and Hierome. Printing being opened, incontinent ministred to the Church, the instrumentes and tooles of learning & knowledge, which were good bookes and authors, which before lay hid and vnknowne.* The science of Printing being found, immediately followed the grace of God: whiche styrred vp good wittes aptly to conceiue the light of knowledge and of iudgement: by which light, darcknes Page 841 began to be espied, and ignoraunce to be detected, trueth from errour, religion from superstition to be discerned as is aboue more largely discoursed, where was touched the inuventing of printing. pag. 707.*

Furthermore, after these wittes styrred vp of God, folowed other more, increasing dayly more and more in science, in tongues, and perfection of knowledge: who now were able, not onely to discerne in matters of iudgement but also were so armed and furnished with y^e helpe of good letters that they did encounter also with the aduersary, su^tstayning the cause & defence of learning against barbaritie of veritie, against errour: of true religion, against superstition. In number of whom, amongst many other here vnnamed were, Picus, and Franciscus Mirandula, Laur. Valla, Franc. Perarcha. Doct. Wesalianus, Reuelinus, Grocinus, Coletus Rhenamus, Erasmus. &c. And here began the first pushe and assault to be geuen against the ignoraunt & barbarous faction of the popes pretended Church. Who after that by their learned writings and laborious trauaile, they had opened a window of light vnto the worlde, and had made (as it were) a way more ready for other to come after: Im^mmediately, according to Gods gracious appointment, folowed Martine Luther, with other after him, by whose ministry it pleased the Lorde to worke a more full reformation of his church, as by their actes and proceedinges hereafter shall followe (Christ willing) more amply to be declared.

And now comming to the tyme and storye of Martine Luther, whom the Lord did ordayne and appoint to be the principall organe and minister vnder him, to reforme religion and to subuert the sea of the pope, first before we enter into the tractation hereof, it shall not be impertinent to y^e purpose, to inferre such prophecies and forewarnings, as were sent before of God, by diuers and sundry good men, long before the time of Luther, which foretold and prophe^cied of this reformation of the Church to come.

Prophecies going before Martine Luther.

*And first, to begin with the prophecie of Iohn Husse, and Hierom, it is both notable, and also before mentioned what the sayd Iohn Husse at the time of his burning, prophecie vnto his enemies, saying: that after an hundreth yeares come and gone, they should geue accounte to God and to to him.

¶Where is to be noted, that counting from the yeare 1415. (in the which yeare Iohn Hus was burned) or from the yeare 2416. when Hierome did suffer) vnto the yeare, 1516, (when Martine Luther began first to write) we shal finde the number of an hundereth yeares expyred.

Likewise, to this may be adioyned the propheticall vision or dreame,^{*} which chaunced to the sayd Iohn Hus lying in the dungeon of the friers in Constance, a litle before he was burned, His dreame as he himselfe reporteth it in his Epistles writing to M. Iohn Chlum, and as I haue also before recorded the same pag. 630. so will I nowe repeate the same agayne in like effect of wordes, as he wrote it himselfe in Latine: the effect of which latine is this.

I pray you expounde to me the dreame whiche I had this night. I sawe y^t in my church at Bethelme (whereof I was person) they desired and laboured to abolish all the images of Christ, and did abolish them. I the next day following, rose vp & saw many other paynters, which painted both the same and manye more images, and more fayrer, which I was glad to behold: wherupon the painters with the great multitude of people said: Now let the Byshops and priestes come, and put vs out these images if they cā. Which thing done, much people reioyced in Bethlem, and I with them: & rising vp I felt my selfe to laugh.

This dreame maister I. of Chlume first expounded.* Then he in the next Epistle after expounded it himselfe to this effect. Stante mandato Dei. &c. That is: the Commaudemēt of God standing, that we must obserue no dreames yet notwithstanding I trust that the life of Christ was painted in Bethlehem by me through his word in y^e harts of men, the which preaching they went about in Bethlehē to destroy, first in commaunding that no preaching should be neyther in the church of Bethlehem, nor in the chappels therby: Secondly that the Church of Bethlehem shoulde be throwne downe to the ground. The same life of Christ shall be paynted vp agayne by mo preachers muche better then I, and after muche more better sorte, so that a greate number of people shall reioyce thereat: all such as loue the life of Christ: and also I shall reioyce my selfe: at what tyme I shall awake, that is, when I shal ryse agayn from the dead.

Also in hys 48. Epistle,* he seemeth to haue a like prophetical meaning, where he sayth: That he trusted that those thinges which he spake then within the house, should afterward be preached aboute the house top. &c.

And because we are here in hand w^t the prophecies of I. Hus, it is not to be omitted, what he writeth in a certayne treatise,*De sacerdotum & monachorum carnalium abominatione, thus prophesying of the reformation of the church, The Church, he sayth, cannot be reduced to hys former dignitie and reformed, before all thinges first be made new, (the trueth wherof appeareth by the temple of Salomon) as well the clergie and Priestes, as also the people and laitye. Or els, except all suche as now be addicted to auarice from the least to the most, be first cōuerted and renued, as well the people as the clerkes, and priestes thynges cannot be reformed. Albeit,as my mynde nowe geueth me, I beleue rather the first that is, that then shal ryse a newe people, formed after the new man, whiche is created after God. Of the whiche people, new clerkes and priestes shall come forth and be taken, which al shal hate couetousnes, and glory of thys lyfe, labouring to an heauēly conuersation. Notwithstanding al these thynges shal be done and wrought in continuance and order of tyme dispensed of God for the same purpose. And thys God doth and wil doe of hys owne goodnes and mercy, and for the riches of hys pacience and sufferance, geuing tyme and space of repentaunce to them that haue long layne in their sinnes, to amend & flye from the face of the Lordes fury: vntill at length all shall suffer together, and vntill both the carnall people, and priestes, and Clerkes in processe and order of tyme, shall fall away and be consumed, as is cloth consumed and eaten of the moth. &c.

With this prophesie of Iohn Hus aboue mentioned, speaking of the hundreth yeares, accordeth also the testimony of Hierome his fellow Martyr, in these words: And I recite you all (sayd he) to answere before the most high and iust iudge, after an hundreth yeares.

*This Hierome was burnt an. 1416. and Luther began to write an. 1516. which was the iust hundreth yeare after, according to the right accompt of Hieromes Prophecy.

Phillip Melancthon in his Apologie, cap. De votis Monast. testifieth of one Iohn Hilton a Monke in Thuring, who, for speaking against certayne abuses of the place and order where he liued, was cast in prison, At length beyng weake and feable through imprisōment, he sent for y^e Warden of the Couent, desiring and be•eching him, to haue some respect of his woefull state, & pittifull case. The Warden rebuking and accusing hym for that he had done & spoken: He aunswered againe and sayde that he had spoken nothyng Page 842 whiche might be preiudiciall or hurtfull to their monkery, or against their Religion:*But there shoulde come one (and assigned the yeare, an. 1516.) Who should vtterly subuert all monkery. and they should neuer be able to resist him &c.

Long it were to induce here all Prophecies that be read in histories. Certeine I minde briefly to touch & passe ouer.* And first to omit the reuelations of Brigit (wherunto I doe not muche attribute) who prophesying of the destruction of Rome in her 4. booke, cap. 17. sayth: That Rome shalbe scoured and purged with three thinges, with sworde, fire, and the plough:*resembling moreouer the sayd Church of Rome to a plant remoued out of the old place into a new. Also to a body condemned by a iudge, to haue the skinne flayne off the bloud to be drawn from the fleshe, the flesh to be cut out in peeces, and the bones thereof to be broken, and all the marow to be squiesed out from the same, so that no part thereof remayne whole and perfect. &c. But to these speculations of Brigit, I geue no great respect, as neither I doe to the predictions of Katherine De Senis.

And yet notwithstanding, Antoninus writing of the same Katherine in hys 3. part.*Tit. 23. cap. 14. reciteth her wordes thus, prophesying of the reformation of the church to Fryer Reymund her ghostly father: By these tribulations (sayth she) God after a secret maner vnknowne to man, shall purge his holy Church, and after those thinges shall follow such a reformation of the holy Church of God,*and such a renouation of the holy pastours, that the onely cogitation and remembrance thereof maketh my spirite to reioyce in the Lord: And, as I haue oftentimes told you heretofore, the spouse which is now all deformed and ragged, shalbe adourned and decked with most ritch and precious ouches and brouches: and all the faythfull shalbe glad and reioyse to see themselues so bewtified with so holye pastours. Yea and also the infidels then allured by the sweete sauour of Christ, shall returne to the catholicke folde, and be conuerted to the true byshop and shepheard of theyr soules. Geue thanks therefore to GOD, for after this storme, hee will geue a great calme. &c.

Of the authoritie of this prophetisse, I haue not to affirme or iudge, but rather to heare what the Catholique iudge will say of this their owne saint and Prophet. For if they do not credite her spirite of prophesie, why then doe they authorise her, for a pure saint amōg y^e Sisters of deare S. Dominick? If they warrēt her prophesie, let them say then when was this glorious reformation of the Church, euer true or like to be true, if it be not true now in this maruellous alteration of the Church, in these our latter dayes? Or when was there any such conuersion of Christian peo'ple in all countries euer heard of, since the Apostles tyme, as hath bene since the preaching of Martine Luther.

*Of Hieronimus Sauonarola I wrote before, pag 000 shewing that he prophesied: That one shoulde passe ouer the Alpes like to Cyrus, who shoulde subuert and destroy all Italye. Which may well be applyed to Gods word, and the Gospell of Christ, spreading nowe in all places since Luthers time.

*Theodoricus Bishop of Croacia, liued neare about the time, when Hus and Hierome were martyred. Who in y^e ende of his propheticall verses, which are extant in print, declareth: That the sea of Rome whiche is so horriblie polluted with Simonie and auarice, shall fal, and no more shal oppresse men with tyranny, as it hath done, and that it shalbe subuerted by hys owne subiectes, and that the Church and true pietie shal flourish agayne more then euer it did before.

Nouiomagus testifieth, that he in the yeare of our Lord, 1520. heard Ostendorpius, * a Canon of Dauntreie, say: that when he was a young man Doctor Weselus a Phrysian, which was then an old man, told him, That he should liue to see this new schoole diuinitie of Scotus, Aquinas, and Bonauen^ture to be vtterly forsaken and exployded of all true Christians.

In a booke of Carolus Bouillus, mention is made of a certaine vision, which one Nicholas: an heretique of Heluetia, had, in which vision he saw the popes head crowned with 3. swordes proceeding from hys face: and 3. swordes comming toward it. This vision is also imprinted in the bookes of Martine Luther, with hys preface before it.

Nicholas Medlerus, being of late superintendent of Brūswyke, * affirmed and testified: That he heard and knewe a certayne Priest in his country, which told the priests there, that they layd aside Paule vnder their desks and pues: but the time would come, when as Paule should come abroad, and driue them vnder the desks and darcke stalles, where they shoulde not appeare. &c.

Matthias Flaccius, in the ende of his booke intituled: De testibus veritatis, speaketh of one Michael Stifelius, which Michael being an old man, told him that he heard the Priestes and Monkes say many tymes, by old prophecies, that a violent reformation must needes come amongst them: and also that the sayd Michael heard Cōradus Stifelius his father, many tymes declare the same: who also for the great hatred he bare agaynst this filthy sect of Monkes and priestes, told to one Peter Pi•er a friend and neighbour of hys, that he should lyue and see the day, and therefore desired him, that when the day came, besides those Priestes which he should kill for himselfe, he woulde kill one priest more for hys sake Haec ex Flaccio.

This Stiteus thought belike, that this reformation shuld be wrought by outward violence, * and force of sword but he was thereing deceiued. Although the aduersarye vseth all forcible meanes, and violent tyranny, yet the proceeding of the Gospell alwaies beginneth with peace, and quietnes.

In the table of Amersham men I signified a little before pag. 000. how one Haggard of Londō, speaking of this reformation to come: declared: That the Priestes should make battaile, and haue the vpper hand a while, but shortly they should be vanquished, and ouerthrowne for euer.

In the tyme of pope Alexander the 6. and about the yeare of our Lord. 1500. as is before specified, * pag. 000. the hygh angell which stode in the top of the popes church and castle of

S. Angell, was throwne downe with a terrible thunder, into the riuer of Tybris: whereby might seeme to be declared the ruine and fall of the popedome.

To this may be adioyned, whiche in certayne Chronicles, and in Iohn Bale is recorded: which sayth, that in y^e yeare of our Lord. 1516. whiche was the same yeare when Martine Luther began, Pope Leo the x. dyd create 31. Cardinals: In the which yeare and day of theyr creation, there fell a tēpest of thūder and lightning in Rome, which so strake the church where the Cardinals were made, that it remoued the little Childe Iesus out of the lappe of hys mother, and the keyes out of Saint Peters hand.* Whiche thing many then did interprete to signifie and foreshow the subuersion and alteration of the sea of Rome.

Hetherto pertayneth also a strange portente and a prodigious token from heauen, in the yeare of our Lord. 1505.* In the which yeare, vnder the reigne of Maximilian Emperour, there appeared in Germany, vpon the vestures of men as well of Priestes, as lay men, vpon womens garmentes also, and vpon theyr rockes as they were spynning, diuerse printes and tokens of the nayles, of the sponge, of the spayre, of the Lordes, coate, and of bloody Crosses. &c. All which were seene vpon theyr cappes and gownes, as is most certaynly testified and recorded by diuers, which both did see & also did write vpon the same. Of whom first was Maximilian the Emperour, who both had and shewed the same to Franciscus Mirandula, which wrote thereupon a booke in Latine meter called Staurostichon: wherein for the more credite, these verses be conteyned.

Vidimus: Innumeros prompsit Germania testes. &c.

Of this also writeth Iohn Carion, Functius,*Phil. Melanct. Flaccius, with diuers other moe. These markes and tokēs, as they were very straunge, so were they diuersly expounded of many, some thinking that they pretended affliction and persecution of the church to drawe neare: some, that God by that token did admonishe them or foreshewed vnto them, the true doctrine of their iustification, which onely is to be sought in the Crosse and passion of Christ, and no other thing. This I maruell, that Christianus Masseus, and other of that profession, doe leaue it out. Belike they sawe some thinge in it, that made not to theyr liking. For whether it signifieth persecution to come vpon the Germaines they cannot be euill that suffer and beare the Crosse wyth Christ: Or whether it signifieth the true doctrine of Christ comming to the Germaines it cannot otherwise be, but that the doctrine of the Byshop of Rome must needes be wrong, which is contrary to this which God hath styrrd vp in Germany.

By this and such like prophecies it is euident to vnderstand, the time not to be farre of, when God of his determinate prouidēce was disposed to reforme & to restore his Church. And not onely by these prophecies the same might well appeare but also, and much rather by y^e hartes of the people at that tyme, whose mindes were so insenced and inflamed with hatred agaynst the pompe and pryde of Rome, both through all nations, and especially the people of Germany, that it was easie to perceauē the tyme was neare at hand, whē the pride of popish prelacy would haue a fall. Such disdeyne there was, such contempte and derision began to ryse on euery side then agaynst the pope and the Courte of Rome, that it might soone appeare by the hartes of the people, that God was not disposed to haue Page 841 it long to stand. For neither were their detestable doinges of secret that men did not see them: neither did any man be hold them, hauing any sparckle of godlines, that could abide them. And thereupon grewe these prouerbes to their derision, in euery country: As in Germany it hath bene Prouerb amongst them.

*Was ist nu in der werlt fur ein wesen,

Wir moegen fur den pfaffen nicht genesen.

What is this, to see the world now round about,

That for these shaueling priestes no man that once maye route?

Quàm primum clericus suscipit rasuram, statim intrat in eum diabolus.

That is,

So soone as a Clerke is shorne into his order, by and by the deuill enterth into him.

In nomine Domini incipit omne malum.

That is:

In the name of God beginneth all euill alluding to the Popes Bulles, which commonly so begin.

Item when Bulles come from Rome, bind well your purses.

The nearer Rome, the farther from Christ.

Item, he that goeth once to Rome, seeth a wicked man.

He that goeth twice, learneth to know him.

He that goeth thrise, bringeth him home with him.

Item, the Courte of Rome neuer regardeth the sheepe without the woll.

Once were wodden chalices and golden priestes.

*Now we haue golden chalices, and wodden Priestes.

Once Christan men had blinde churches and light hartes,

Now they haue blinde hartes and light Churches.

Item, many are worshipped for Saintes in heauen, whose soules be burning in hell.

What should I speake of our English prouerbe which so vily esteemeth the filthy Friers, that it compareth them (sauing thy reuerence good Reader) to a fart?

In Fraunce, Gallus Senonensis writeth .400. yeares agoe, that amongst them it was an old saying: Romae solui Satanam in perniciem totius Ecclesiae. That is: That Sathan was let lose at Rome to destroy the whole Church.

Thomas Becket himselfe, in his time writing to the Colledge of Cardinals, denieth it not, but to be a common word both through town and city, Quod non sit iustitia Romae. That is, That there is no right at Rome.

To these may be adioyned also the A. B. C. Whiche we find in the margent of a certayne ould register, to be attributed to William Thorp, whose story we haue comprehended in the booke before.

¶A wake ye ghostly persons, awake, awake,

By these and such like sayinges, whiche may be collected innumerable, it may soone be seen what harts & iudge'ments the people had in those dayes of the Romish Clergy. Which thing, no doubt, was of God, as a secret prophe'cie, that shortly religion shoulde be restored: according as it came to passe, about thys present tyme whē Doct. Martin Luther first began to write,* after that Picus Mirandula, and Laurentius Ualla, & last of all, Erasmus Roterodamus, had somewhat broken the way before & hadd shaken the monkes houses, But Luther gaue the stroke, & pluckt downe the foundation, & all by opening one wayne long hid before, wherein lyeth the touchstone of all trueth & doctrine, as the onely principall origine of our saluation which is our free iustifying by faith onely in christ y^e sonne of God. The laborious trauailes, and the whole processe & the constant preachings of this worthy mā, because they be sufficiētly declared in the history of Iohannes Sleidanus, I shall the lesse neede to stand long thereupon, but one'ly to runne ouer some principall matter of his life & actes as they are briefly collected by Phillip Melanthon.

MArtine Luther, after he was growne in yeares,* being borne at Isleben in Saxonie, an. 1483. was set to the Uniuersity, first of Magdeburg, thē of Erford. In this Uniuersitie of Erforde, there was a certayne aged man, in the Couēt of the Agustines (who is thought to be Weselus aboue mentioned) wyth whom Luther beyng then of the same order a fryer Augustine, had conference vppon diuers thinges, especially touching the Article of remission of sinnes, the whiche Article the sayd aged father opened vnto Luther after this sorte, declaring that wee must not generally beleue onely forgeunes of sinnes to be, or to belong to Peter, to Paule, to Dauid, or suche good men alone: but that Gods expresse commaundements is, that euery man should beleue particularly hys sinnes to be forgeuen him in Christ: and further sayd, that thys interpretation was confirmed by the testimonies of S. Barnerd, and shewed him the place,* in the Sermon of the Annunciation, where it is thus set forth: But adde thou that thou beleuest this, that by him thy sinnes are forgiuen thee. This is the testimony that the holy Ghost giueth thee in thy heart, saying: Thy sinnes are forgiuen thee. For this is the opinion of the Apostle, that man is freely iustified by fayth.

By these wordes Luther was not onely strengthened, but was also instructed of the full meaning of S. Paule, who repeateth so many tymes this sentence: We are iustified by fayth. And hauing read the expositions of many vppon this place, he then perceiued as well by the purpose of the old man, as by the comfort he receiued in his spirit, the vanitie of those interpretations, which he had read before, of the scholemen: And so reading by litle and litle, with cōferring the sayinges and examples of the Prophetes & Apostles, and continuall inuocation of God, and excitatiō of fayth by force of prayer, hee perceiued y^e doctrine more euidently. Then began he to read Saint Agustines bookes, where he founde many comfortable sentēces among other in the exposition of the Psalmes and specially in the booke of the Spirite and Letter,* which confirmed this doctrine of fayth and consolation in hys hart, not a little. And yet he layd not aside the Sentenciaries, as Gabriell and Cameracensis. Also he read the bookes of Occam, whose subtilty he preferred aboue Thomas Aquine, & Scotus. He read also and reuolued Gersō: but aboue al the rest, he perused all ouer S. Augustines workes with attentiu cogitation. And thus continued he his study at Erford, y^e space of 4. yeares in the Couent of the Augustines.

About this tyme one Staupicius a famous mā,* who ministring his helpe to further the erection of an Uniuer|sitie in Wittenberg, and endeouoring to haue schooles of Diuinitie founded in this new Uniuersitie: when he had cōsidered the spirite & towardnes of Luther, he called him from Erford, to place him in Wittenberg, in y^e yeare .1508. and of his age xxvi. There his towardnes appeared in y^e ordinary exercise both of hys disputations in the schooles & preaching in churches, where as many wise and learned mē attentiuely heard Luther, namely D. Mellerstad.

This Mellerstad would oftentimes say, that Luther was of suche a marueilous spirit, and so ingenious,* that he gaue apparant signifcation, that he would introduce a more compendious, easie, and familier maner of teaching and altar and abolishe the order that then was vsed.

There first he expounded the Logick and Philosophy of Aristotle, & in the meane while,* intermitted no whit his study in Theology. Three yeares after, he went to Rome, about certayn contentions of the Monkes, and returning the same yeare, he was a graded Doctour:* at the expenses of Elector Fredericke, Duke of Saxonie, according to the solemn maner of scholes: for he had heard him preach: well vnderstanded the quickenes of his spirite: dilligently considered the vehemency of hys wordes, and had in singular admiration those profound matters, whiche in hys Sermons he ripely and exactly explained. This degree Stanpicius, against his will enforced vpon him, saying merely vnto him, that God had many thinges to bring to passe in hys Church by him. And though these wordes were spoken merely, yet it came so to passe anone after, as many predictions or presages proue true before a chaunge.*

After this he began to expound the Epistle to the Romaines, & consequently the Psalmes: where he shewed the difference betwixt the lawe and the Gospell. He also confounded the errour that raigned then in schooles and Sermons, teaching that men may merite remission of sinnes Page 844 by their proper works, and that they be iust before God by outward discipline, as the Phariseis taught. Luther dilligently reduced the mindes of men, to the sonne of God. As Iohn Baptist demonstrated the lambe of God that tooke away the sinns of the world: euen so Luther shining in the church of a bright starre after a long cloudy and obscure skye,* expresly shewed that sinnes are freely remitted for the loue of the sonne of God, and that we ought faythfully to embrace this bountifull gift.

These happy beginniges of so good matters, got him great authoritie, especially seeing his lyfe also was correspondent to his profession. The consideration whereof allured to him meruailously the hartes of his auditors, and also many notable personages.

All this while Luther yet altered nothing in the ceremonyes,* but precisely obserued his rule amōg his felowes he medled in no doubtfull opinions, but taught this onely doctrine, as most principall of al other to all men, opening & declaring the doctrine of repentance, of remission of sins of fayth, of true comfort in times of aduersitie. Euery man receaued good taste of this sweet doctrine, and the learned conceiued high pleasure to behold Iesus Christ, the Prophets & Apostles, to come forth into light out of darcknes, wherby they began to vnderstand the difference betwixt y^e law and the Gospell: betwixt the promises of the law, and the promise of the Gospell: betwixt spiritual iustice, & ciuil things: which certainly could not haue bene foūd in Thomas Aquine, Scotus, nor such like schoole clerkes.

It happened moreouer about this time, that manye were prouoked by Erasmus learned workes, to study the Greek & Latine tongues, who perceiuing a more gentle & ready order of teaching then before, began to haue in contempt the Monkes barbarous and sophisticall doctrine: & specially such as were of liberall nature and good disposition. Luther began to study the Greeke and Hebrue tonge to this end, that after he had learned the phrase and proprietic of the tongues, and drawne the doctrine of the very fountaynes, he might geue more sound iudgement.

As Luther was thus occupied in Germany, whiche was the yeare of our Lord 1516.* Leo y^e x. of that name succeeding after Iulius. 2. was Pope of Rome. Who vnder pretence of warre against the Turke, sent a Iubile wyth his pardons, abroad through all Christen Realmes & dominions: whereby he gathered together innumerable riches and treasure. The gatherers and collectors whereof perswaded the people, that whosoever would geue x. shillings, shuld at his pleasure, deliuer one soule from y^e payns of Purgatory. For this they held as a generall rule, that God would do,* whatsoeuer they would haue him, according to the saying: Quicquid solueritis super terram, erit solutum in coelis &c. Whatsoeuer you loose vpon earth, the same shal be loosed in heauen. But if it were but one iotte lesse then x. shillings, they preached that it would profite thē nothing. Ex Christia. Messeo lib. 20. Chro.

This filthy kind of the popes merchandise, as it spread through all quarters of Christian regions,* so it came also to Germany, through the meanes of certayne Dominicke Fryers named Tecellius, who most impudently caused y^e Popes indulgences or pardons to be caryed & sold about the country. Whereupon, Luther muche moued with the blasphemous sermōs of this shameles Fryer, and hauing his hart earnestly bent with ardent desire to mayntayne true religion, published certayne propositions concerning indulgences, which are to be read in the first Tome of hys works,* and set them openly on the temple that ioyneth to the Castle of Wittenberge, the morrow after the feastes of all Saintes, the yeare .1517.

This beggerly Fryer, hoping to obtaine y^e popes blessing,* assembled certayne Monkes & sophisticall diuines of his couent, & forthwith commanded thē to write something against Luther. And whilst he would not himselfe seeme to be dumme, he began not onely to enuey in his sermons but to thunder against Luther, crying: Luther is an hereticke,* and worthy to be persecuted with fire: and besides this, he burned openly Luthers propositions, and the sermon whiche he wrote of indulgences. This rage and fumish fury of this Frier, enforced Luther to treat more amply of the cause, and to mayntayne his matter.

And thus rose the beginniges of this controuersie, wherein Luther neyther suspecting ne dreaming of anye chaunge that might happen in the ceremonies, did not vtterly reiect the indulgences, but required a moderation in them: and therefore they falsely accuse him, which blase that he began w^t plausible matter, wherby he might get prayse. to the end that in processe of time, he might change the state of the common weale, and purchase authoritie, eyther for himselfe or other.

And certes, he was not suborned or styrred vp by them of the courte (as the Duke of Brumwike wrote:*) in so much that the Duke Frederick was sore offended that such contention and controuersie should arise, hauing regarde to the sequele thereof.

And as this good Duke Frederick was one of al y^e princes of our time, that loued best quietnes and common tran^quilitie, neither was auaricious, but willingly bent to referre al his counsels to the common vtilitie of all the world (as it is easy to be coniectured diuers waies:) so he neither encouraged nor supported Luther, but often represented semblaunce of heauines and sorrow, which he bare in hys hart, fearing greater dissensions: But being a wise prince and following the Counsaile of Gods rule, and well deliberating therupon, he thought with himselfe that the glory of God was to be preferred aboue all thinges. Neyther was he ignoraunt what blasphemy it was, horribly condemned of God, obstinately to repugne y^e truth. Wherefore he did as a godly Prince should do: he obeyed God, cōmitting himselfe to his holy grace, and omnipotent protectiō. And although Maximilianus the Emperour, Carolus K. of Spaine, & Pope Iulius had geuen commaundement to the sayd Duke Fridericke, that he should inhibite Luther from all place and libertie of preaching: yet the Duke considering with himselfe the preaching and & writing of Luther and weighing dilligently the testimonies and places of the Scripture by him alledged, would not withstād the thing, which he iudged sincere. And yet neyther did he this, trusting to his own iudgemēt, but was very anxious & inquisitiue to heare y^e iudgements of other, whiche were both aged, & learned. In the number of whom was Erasmus, whō the Duke desired to declare to him his opinion touching y^e matter of Martine Luther, saying & protesting that he would rather the ground shuld open and swallow him, then he would beare w^t any opinions, which he knew to be cōtrary to manifest truth: & therefore he desired him to declare his iudgement in y^e matter, to him freely & frendly.

Erasmus thus being entreated of the Duke, began thus iestingly and merely to answeere the Dukes request,* saying: that in Luther were two great faultes: first, that he would touch the bellyes of monkes: the second, y^t he would touch the popes crown: which two matters in no case are to be dealt withall. Then opening his minde playnly to y^e Duke, thus he sayde,* that Luther did well in detecting errorrs, and that reformation was to be wished, and very necessary in the church: and added moreouer, that the effect of his doctrine was true, but onely that he wished in him, a more temperate moderation and maner of writing and handling. Whereupon Duke Friderick shortly after wrote to Luther seriously,* exhorting him to temperate the vehemency of his style. This was at the City of Colen, shortly after the Coronation of the newe Emperour, where also Huttenus, Aloisius, Marlianus, Ludouicus, viues, Halonius, with other learned men, were assembled together wayting vpon the Emperour.

Furthermore the same Erasmus, the yeare next folowing that,* wrote vp to the Archbishop of Mentz a certayne Epistle touching the cause of Luther. In whiche Epistle thus he signifieth to the Byshop: That many thinges were in the books of Luther condemned of monkes and Diuines, for hereticall, whiche in the bookes of Bernarde and Austen are redde for sound and godly.

Also, that the world is burdened with mens institutions, with schole doctrines and opinions,*and with the tyrannye of begging Friers: which Fryers when they are but the Popes seruauents and vnderlinges: yet they haue so growne in power and multitude, that they are nowe terrible both to the pope himselfe, and to all princes. Who so long as the pope maketh with them, so long they make him more thē a God. But if he make any thing agaynst their purpose or commoditie, then they wey his authoritie no more then a dreame or phantasie.

Once (sayd he) it was counted an heresie, when a man repugned agaynst the Gospell, or Articles of the fayth. Now he that dissenteth from Thomas of Aquine, is an hereticke, whatsoeuer doth not like them, whatsoeuer they vnderstand not, that is heresie. To speake Greeke, is heresie. Or to speake more finely then they do, that is with them heresie. And thus much by the way, concerning the iudgement of Erasmus.

Now to returne and to entreate something orderly of the actes and conflictes of Luther with hys aduersaries: after y^e Tecelius the foresayd Fryer, w^t his fellow monkes and Frierly fellowes, had cried out w^t open mouth against Luther, in mayntayning the popes indulgences, and that Luther agayn in defence of hys cause, had set vp propositions against the open abuses of the same, maruell it was to see how soone these propositions, were sparckled abroad in sundry and farre places, and howe greedely they were caught Page 849 vp in the hands of diuers, both far & near. And thus y^e contentiō of this matter increasing betwene them,* Luther was cōpelled to write therof more largely & fully, thē other wise he thought: which was in y^e yeare of our Lorde. 1517.

Yet all this while, Luther neuer thought of any alteration to come of any ceremony, much lesse such a reforma'tion of doctrine and ceremonies, as afterward did follow. But onely hearing that he was accused to the Bishop of Rome, he did write humbly vnto him: in the beginning of which writing, he declareth y^e vnordinate outrage of those his pardonmongers, whiche so excessiue did pill & pole the simple people, to the great slaunder of the Church, and shame to his holines: and so proceeding in the ende of the sayd his writing, thus he submitteth himselfe.

Wherefore (sayth he) most holy father. I offer my selfe prostrate vnder the feete of your holines, with all that I am, and that I haue. Saue me, kill me, call me, recall me, approoue me, reprove me, as you shall please. Your voyce, y^e voyce of Christ in you speaking, I wil acknowledge. If I haue deserued death, I shall be contented to dye: For the earth is the Lordes, and all the fulnes therof, who is to be blessed for euer. Amen. This was the yeare of our Lorde. 1518.

After that Martine Luther, prouoked thus by Tecelius, had declared hys minde in writing lowly and humbly and had set vp certayn propositions to be disputed: not lōg after,* among other monkes and Fryers, steppeth vp one Siluester de Priero a Dominicke Frier who fyrst began to publish abroad a certayne impudent and rayling Dialogue against him. Unto whom Luther answered agayn, first alledging the place of the Apostle. 1. Thes. v. That we must proue all thinges. Also the place. Gal. 2. That if an aungell from heauen do bryng an other Gospell, then that we haue receiued, he ought to be accursed.

*Item, he alledged the place of Austen vnto Hierome, where the sayd Austen sayth: That he is wont to geue thys honour onely to the book of Canonickall Scripture, that who soeuer were the writers thereof, he beleueth them verily not to haue erred. But as touching all other mens writings, were they neuer so holy men or learned, he doth not beleue them therefore, because they so say, but in that respect as they doe agree with the Canonickall Scripture, which cannot erre.

*Item, he alledged the place of the Canon law: Clem. de Poenit. & remis. C. Abusionibus. Wherein he proued, y^t these pardonsellers, in their setting forth of the popes indulgences, ought to go no further by the lawe, then is enioyned them within the letters of their commission.

And in the latter part of his aunswer, thus Luther writeth to the reader, Let opinions (sayth he) remayne opinions, so they be not yokes to the Christians. Let vs not make mens opinions equall with the articles of fayth, & to the decrees of Christ, and Paule. Moreouer I am ashamed (quod he) to heare the common saying of this Diuine schole doctours, who holding one thing in the schooles, and thinking otherwise in their own iudgement, thus are wont, secretly among thēselues,* and with their priuy friendes, talking together to say: Thus we do hold, and thus would I say, being in the schooles, but yet (be it spoken here amongst vs) it cannot be so proued by the holy Scriptures, &c. Ex. Paralip. Abb. Vrsperg.

*Next after this Siluester, stept forth Eckius, and impugned the conclusions of Luther. Agaynst whom encoun^tered D. Andraeas Bedenstein. Archdeacō of Wittenberg, makynge hys Apologie in defence of Luther.

Then was Martin Luther cited, the 7. of August. by one Hieronimus B. of Ascalon, to appeare at Rome. About which tyme Thomas Caietanus Cardinall, y^e popes Legate, was then lieger at the Cittie of Augusta, who before had beene sent downe in commission, with certayne mandates from Pope Leo,* vnto that City: The vniuersitie of Wittenberg vnderstanding of Luthers citation, eftsoones directed vp their letters, with their publique seale to y^e pope, in Luthers behalfe. Also an other letter they sent to Carolus Militius the popes chamberlayne beyng a Germaine borne. Furthermore good Fridericke ceased not for his part, to sollicite the matter with his letters & earnest suit, with Cardinall Caietanus, that the cause of Luther might be freed from Rome, and remooued to Augusta, in the hearing of the Cardinall. Caietanus at y^e suyt of the Duke, wrote vnto the Pope, from whome he receaued this answer again, the 23. of the foresayd month of August,* that he had cited Luther, to appeare personally before him at Rome, by Hieronimus Bishop of Ascalon, Auditour of the chamber: whiche byshop dilligently had done, that was commaunded hym, but Luther abusing and contemning the gentlenes offered, did refuse not onely to come, but also became more bold and stubborne, continuing or rather increasing in his former heresie, as by hys writing did appeare: Wherefore he wold that the Cardinal should cite and call vp the sayd Luther to appeare at the city of Augusta before him, adioyning withall, the ayd of the princes of Germany & of the Emperour, if neede required so that when the sayd Luther shoulde appeare, he shoulde lay hand vpon him, & commit him to sate custody, and after he should be brought vp to Rome: and if he perceaued him to come to any knowledge or amendment of hys faulte, he should release him, and restore hym to the church again, or els he shuld be interdict, with al other his adherents, abettors, & mayntainers, of what soeuer estate or cōdition they were, whether they were Dukes, Marqueses, Earles Ba^rons. &c. Against all which persons and degrees, he willed hym to extende the same curse and malediction (onely the person of the Emperour excepted) interdicting by the censure of the church, all such landes, Lordships, Townes, tenementes, villages, as should minister any harbour to the sayd Luther, & were not obedient vnto the sea of Rome. Contrariwise to all such as shewed themselues obedient, he should promise full remission of all theyr sinnes. Likewise the pope directeth other letters also the same tyme, to Duke Friderick, complayning with many grieuous wordes, agaynst Luther.

The Cardinall thus being charged with iniunctions from Rome; according to his commission, sendeth with all speede, for Luther to appeare at Augusta before hym.*

About the beginning of October Martin Luther yealding his obedience to the Church of Rome, came to Augu'sta, at the Cardinals sending (at the charges, of the noble Prince Electour) and also hys letters of commendation, where he remayned 3. dayes before he came to his speache: for so it was prouided by his frendes, that he shoulde not enter talke with the Cardinall, before a sufficient warrant or safe conduct was obtained of the Emperour Maximilian. Which being obteyned, eftsoones he entred,* offeringe himselfe to the speach of the Cardinal, and was there recey'ued of the cardinall very gently: who according to y^e popes commandement, propounded vnto Martin Luther three thinges, or as Sleaden sayth, but 2. to witte.

1. That he should repent and reuoke hys erroures.
2. That he shoulde promise from that tyme forward, to refrayne from the same.
3. That he shoulde refrayne from all thinges that myght by any meanes trouble the Church.

When Martin Luther required to be informed wherin he had erred,* the Legate brought forth the extrauagants of Clement, which beginneth: Vnigenitus &c. because that he contrary to that Canon had held & taught in his 58. proposition, that the merites of Christ are not the treasure of indulgences or pardons. Secondly, the cardinall, contrary to the seuenth proposition of Luther, affirmed that fayth is not necessary to him that receaueth the sacrament.

Furthermore, an other day in the presence of 4. of the Emperours Counsaile, hauing there a Notary and witnesses present, Luther protested for himselfe and personally in this maner following.

In primis, I Martine Luther, a Fryer Augustine, protest that I do reuerence and followe the Church of Rome in all my sayinges and doings, present, past, and to come:* And if any thing haue bene or shalbe said by me to the contrary, I count it, and will that it be counted and taken as though it had neuer beene spoken. But because the Cardinall hath required at the commaundement of the Pope three thinges of me to be obserued:

- 1 That I should returne againe to the knowledge of my selfe.
- 2 That I should beware of falling into the same agayne here after.
- 3 That I shoulde promise to abstayne from all thinges which might disquiet the church of God:

I protest here this day, that whatsoeuer I haue sayde, seemeth vnto me to be sound, true and Catholicke: Yet for the further profe therof, I doe offer my selfe personally eyther here or elsewhere, publikely to geue a reason of my say'inges. And if this please not the Legate,* I am ready also in writing to aunswere hys obiections, if he haue anye agaynst me: And touching these thinges, to heare the sentence and iudgement of the Uniuersities of the Empyre. Basill, Friburge, and Louane. Hereof when they had receiued an answeere in writing, they departed.

After thys Luther by and by prepareth an aunswere to the Legate, teaching that the merites of Christ are not committed vnto men: that the popes voyce is to be heard when he speaketh agreably to the Scriptures: that y^e pope may erre: that he ought to be reprehended, Act. 15. Moreouer he shewed that in the matter of fayth. not onely y^e generall councell, but also euery faythfull christian is aboue the Pope, if he leaue to better authoritie and reason: that the Page 846 Extrauagant containeth vntruthes: that it is an infallible veritie, that none is iust: that it is necessary for hym that commeth to the receiuing of the sacrament, to beleue: that fayth in the absolution and remission of sinnes, is necessary that he ought not nor might not decline from the veritie of the Scripture: that he sought nothing but the light of the truth.* &c.

But the Cardinall would heare no scriptures: he disputed without scriptures, deuised gloses and expositions of his owne head, and by distinctions (wherewith the Diuinitie of the Thomistes is full) like a very Proteus, he auoyded al thinges. After this, Luther being commaunded to come no more in the presence of the Legate, excepte he would recant, notwithstanding abode there still & would not depart. Then the Cardinall sent for Ioannes Stupitius, vicare of the Augustines, & moued him earnestly to bryng Luther to recant of his own accord. Luther taried the next day also, and nothing was sayd vnto him. The thyrd daye moreouer he taryed and deliuered vp his minde in writing in whiche,* first he thanked him for his curtesie and great kyndenes which he perceaued by the words of Stupitius toward him, and therefore was the more ready to gratifie him in whatsoeuer kinde of office he could do him seruice: confessing moreouer, that where he had bene somewhat sharpe and eger agaynst the popes dignitie, that was not so much of his own minde, as it was to be ascribed to the importunitie of certaine which gaue him occasion. Notw^tstanding, as he acknowledged his excesse therin, so he was ready to shew more moderation in that behalf hereafter, & also promised to make amendes for y^e same vnto the bish. & that in the pulpit, if he pleased. And as touching the matter of pardons, he promised also to proceede no further in any mention therof, so y^t his aduersaries likewise were bound to keep silence. But where as he was prest to retracte hys sentence before defended, forasmuch as he had said nothing but with a good conscience, and whiche was agreable to y^e firme testimonies of the scripture: therefore he humbly desired the determination therof, to be referred to the bishop of Rome, for nothing could be more gratefull to hym, then to heare the voyce of the Church speaking &c.

¶Who doth not see by this so humble and honest submission of Luther, but that, if the Bishop of Rome would haue bene answered with any reason, or contented wyth sufficient meane, he had neuer bene touched any further of Luther. But the secret purpose of GOD had a farther worke herein to do: for the tyme now was come, when God thought good that pride shoulde haue a fall. Thus while the vnmeasurable desire of that B. sought more then inough,* and like to Aesopes dogge, coueting both to haue y^e fleshe, and shadowe, not onely he missed that he gaped for, but also lost that which he had.

But to the purpose of our matter agayne: this writing Luther deliuered to the Cardinall the third daye after he was commanded out of his sight. Which letter or writing the Cardinall did little regard. When Luther sawe that he would geue no aunswere nor countenance to the letter, yet notw^tstanding he remayned after that, the fourth daye, and nothing was aunswere: the fift day likewise was pas'sed with like silence, and nothing done. At the length, by the counsell of hys frendes, and specially because the Cardinall had sayde before, that he had a commaundement to imprison Luther and Iohn Stupitius the vicare, after y^t he had made and set vp hys appeale where it might be seen and read, he departed, thinking that he had shewed suche daungerous obedience long enough. Luther a beholder & a doer of these things, recordeth the same and sheweth the cause why he submitted himselfe to the church of Rome: de|claring also, that euen those thinges, which are most truely spoken, yet ought to be mayntayned and defended, with humilitie and feare. Some thinges he suppresseth and conceileth, whiche he supposeth the reader to vnderstand not without grieve and sorrow. At length he protesteth that he reuerenceth and followeth the church of Rome in al thinges,* and that he setteth himselfe onely agaynst those, which vnder the name of the church of Rome, goe about to set forth and commend Babylon vnto vs.

Thus you haue heard how that Luther being reiectcd from the speache and sight of Caietanvs the Cardinall, after sixe dayes wayting,* departed by the aduise of his friendes & returned vnto Wittēberg, leauing a letter in writing to be geuen to the Cardinall, wherein hee declared sufficiently, first his obedience in hys comming, the reasons of hys doctrine, his submission reasonable to the Sea of Rome, hys long wayting after he was repelled from the Cardinals speache, the charges of the Duke, and finally, the cause of his departing. Besides this letter to the Cardinall, he left also an Appellation to the Byshop of Rome, from the Cardinall,* which he caused openly to be affixed be'fore his departure.

After that Luther was thus departed and returned agayn into hys country, Caietanvs writeth to Duke Fridericke, a sharpe and a byting letter, in which first he signifieth to him hys gentle intertaynment & good will shewed to reduce Luther from hys errour. Secondly, he complayneth of y^e sodayn departing of him, & of Stupicius. Thirdly, he declareth y^e pernicious daunger of Luthers doctrine against the Church of Rome. Fourthly, hee exhorteth the Duke, that as he tendereth hys own honour and safetie, & regardeth the fauour of the hye byshop, he will send him vp to Rome, or expell hym out of hys dominiō, forsomuch as such a pestilence breeding, as that was, coulde not, ney'ther ought by any meanes long so to be suffered.

To this letter of the Cardinall,* the Duke aunswereth agayne at large, purging both Luther, and himselfe: Luther, in that he following hys conscience grounded vpon y^e word of god, would not reuoke that for an errour, which could be proued no errour: & himselfe he excuseth thus, that where is required of hym to banish hym hys countrey, or to send him vp to Rome, it would be little honesty for him so to do, and lesse conscience, vnles he knew iust cause, why he should so do: Which if the Cardinall would or could declare vnto him, there should lacke nothing in hym, whiche were the part of a Christian Prince to doe, and therefore he desireth hym, to be a meanes vnto the Byshop of Rome, that innocency and truth be not oppressed, before y^e cryme or errour be lawfully conuicted.

This done, the Duke sendeth the letter of the Cardinall, vnto Martin Luther.* Who aunswered agayne to the Prince, shewing first how he came obediently vnto Caietanvs, with the Emperours warrant: & what talke there was betweene them: how Caietanvs pressed hym against his conscience and manifest truth, to reuoke these errours. First that the merites of Christes Passion, were not y^e trea'sure of the popes pardons. Secondly that fayth was necessary in receauing the Sacramentes. Albeit in the first he was content to yeeld to the Cardinall. In the second, because it touched a great part of our saluation, he coulde not with a safe conscience relent, but desired to be taught by the Scripture: at least that the matter might be brought into open disputation in some free place of Germanye, where y^e truth might be discussed and iudged of learned men. The Cardinall not pleased w^t this, in great anger cast out of ma'ny manacing words, neither would admit hym any more to hys presence or speache: whereas yet notwithstanding persisting in his obedience to the church of Rome, gaue attendaunce, wayting vpon the Cardinals pleasure a sufficient tyme.

At last, when no aunswere woulde come, after hee had wayted y^e space of v. or .vi. dayes, to his great detriment, & greater daunger, by the perswasion of hys friendes, he departed. Whereat if the Cardinall were displeased, he had most cause to blame hymselfe. And now whereas the Cardinall threatneth me (sayth he) not to let the action fall, but y^t the proces thereof shalbe pursued at Rome vnlesse I eyther come and present my selfe, or els be banished your dominions, I am not somuch greeued for myne owne cause, as y^t you should susteyne for my matter any daunger or perill. And therefore seeyng there is no place nor countrey,* which can keep me frō the malice of mine aduersaryes, I am willing to depart hence and to forsake my coūtry, whether soeuer it shall please the Lorde to leade me: thanking God which hath counted me worthy to suffer thus muche for the glory of Christes name.

Here (no doubt) was the cause of Luther in great dan'ger, beyng nowe brought to this straye,* that both Luther was ready to flye the countrey, and the Duke agayne was as much afayrd to keepe hym, had not the maruelous prouidence of God (who had this matter in guiding) here pro'uided a remedy, where the power of man did fayle,* by styrring vp the whole vniuersitie of Wittingberg, who seeyng the cause of truth thus to declyne,* with a full and a general consent, addressed theyr letters vnto y^e Prince, in defence of Luther & of his cause, making their hūble suit vnto hym, y^t he of hys princely honour, would not suffer innocency and the simplicity of trueth so cleare as is the Scripture, to be foyled and oppressed by mere violence of certayne malignant flatterers about the Pope: but that the errour first may be shewed and conuicted, before the partye be pronounced gylty.

By the occasion of these letters the Duke began more seriously in hys minde to consider the cause of Luther, and to read hys workes, and also to harken to hys Sermons. Wherby (through Gods holy working) he grew to know'ledge and strength, perceauing in Luthers quarrell more Page 847 then he did before. This was about the beginning of December. an. 1518.

As this past on, Pope Leo playing the Lyon at Rome in the meane time in the month of Nouember, to stablishe his seate against this defection, whiche he •eared to come, had sent forth new indulgences into Germany, & al quarters abroad, w^t a new Edict, wherein he declared this to be the catholicke doctrine of the holy mother church of Rome Prince of al other churches, that Bishops of Rome which are successours of Peter, and vicares of Christ, haue thys power and authoritie geuen to release, and dispense, also to graunt indulgences auaylable both for the liuing and for the dead, lyeng in the paynes of purgatory. And thys dotrine he charged to be receiued of all faythfull Christen men, vnder payne of the great curse, and vtter separation from all holy Church.

This Popishe decree and indulgence, as a new Marchandise,* or Alestake to get money, being •et vp in al quarters of Christendome for y^e holy fathers aduantage, came also to be receiued in Germanye about the moneth of December. Luther in the meane time hearing how they were about in Rome, to proceede and pronounce agaynst him, prouideth a certayne appeallation conceiued in due forme of law,* wherein he appealeth from the pope to the general Councell.

When Pope Leo perceaued that neyther his pardons would prosper to his minde, nor that Luther coulde be brought to Rome, to assay how to come to his purpose by crafty allurementes, he sent his Chamberlayne Carolus Miltitius, aboue mentioned, which was a Germaine, into Saxony to Duke Fridericke, with a golden rose, after y^e vsuall ceremony accustomed euery yeare to be presented to him, with secret letters also to certayne Noble men of the Dukes counsaile, to sollicite y^e popes cause, and to remoue the Dukes minde, if it might be from Luther.

But before Miltitius approched into Germany, Maximilian the Emperour deceased in the month of Ianuary an. 1519. At what tyme two there were which stooode for the election:* to wyt Fraunces the Frenche king, and Charles king of Spayne, which was also Duke of Austriche, and Duke of Burgundy. To make this matter short, through the meanes of Fredericke, Prince Elector, (who hauing the offer of the preferment, refused the same) the election fell to Carolus, called Carolus the v. surnamed Prudence: which was about the end of August.

In the month of Iune before, there was a publike disputation ordeined at Lypsia,* which is a Cittie in Misnia, vnder the dominion of George Duke of Saxonie, vncler to Duke Fredericke. This disputation first began thorough the occasion of Ioannes Eckius, a Fryer, and Andraeas Carolostadius, Doctour of Wittenberge. This Eckius had impugned certayne propositions or conclusions of Martine Luther, which he had written the yeare before, touching y^e popes pardons. Agaynst him Carolostadius wrote in defence of Luther.* Eckius agayne to aunswere Carolostadius, set forth an Apology. Whiche Apology Carolostadius agayn confuted by writing. Upon this began the disputation, with safe conduct graunted by Duke George, to al & singular,* persons, that would resort to the same. To thys disputation came also Martine Luther, with Philip Melanctho, who not past a yeare before was newly come to Wittenberge, Luther not thinking then to dispute in anye matter, because of his appellacion aboue mentioned, but onely to heare what there was sayd and done.

First, before the entry into the disputation, it was agreed, that the Actes should be penned by Notaryes, and after to be diuulged abroad. But Eckius afterward went backe from that, pretending that the penning of the Notaries should be an hinderaunce & a stay vnto them, wherby the heate of them in their reasoning shuld the more languish and theyr vehemency rebayte. But Carolostadius without Notaryes woulde not dispute. The summe of their disputations was reduced to certain conclusions.* Among which first came in question to dispute of free wyll, which the Greekes call < in non-Latin alphabet > . That is, whether a man haue of himselfe, any election or purpose, to do that is good: or (to vse the termes of the schoole) whether a man of congruence, may deserue grace, doing y^t whiche in hym doth lye? Herein when y^e questiō was to be discussed, what y^e will of mā may do of it selfe, without grace: they through heat of contention (as the maner is) fell into other by matters and ambages, little or nothing appertayning to that which Carolostadius proposed.* Eckius affirmed, that the pure strength to do good, is not in mans will, but is geuē of God to man to take interest & increase of man agayne, which first he seemed to deny. Then being asked of Carolostadius whether y^e whole & full good worke that is in mā proceedeth of god: to this he answered; y^e whole good work but not wholly: graunting that the will is moued of God:* but to cōsent, to be in mans power. Agaynst this reasones Carolostadius, alledging certain places of Austen, & name'ly of S. Paule, whiche sayth,*that God worketh in vs both to will and to performe. And this sentence of Carolostadius seemed to ouercome. Eckius for his assertion, in erred certayne escriptes out of Bernard, which seemed little to the purpose. And thus was a whole weeke lost about this cōtentious and sophisticall alteration betweene Eckius, and Carolostadius.

Luther (as was sayd) came, not thinking at all to dispute, but hauing free libertie graunted by the Duke, & vnder the popes authoritie, was prouoked, & forced agaynst hys will to dispute with Eckius. The matter of their controuersie was about y^e authoritie, of the Bishop of Rome.* Here is fyrst to be admonished, that Luther before had set forth in writing this doctrine: y^t they which do attribute y^e preheminance to the church of Rome, haue no foundation for them, but out of the Popes decrees,* set forth not much past 400. yeares heretofore: whiche decrees he affirmed to be contrary to all aunient historyes, aboue a thousande yeares past, contrary also to the holy scriptures, and vnto Nicene Councell.

Agaynst this assertion Eckius set vp a contrarye conclusion saying,* that they whiche holde that the supremacie and preheminance of the Church of Rome aboue all other Churches, was not before the time o^r Pope Siluester the first, do erre, for as much as they which succeeded in the see and fayth of Peter, were alwayes receiued for the successours of Peter, and vicars of Christ in earth.

This being the last of all the other Themes of Eckius yet thought he chiefly to begin with this against Luther, to bring him into more displeasure with the B. of Rome, wherein Luther himself much refused to dispute, alledging that matter to be more odious then necessary, for that present time, and that also for the B. of Romes sake, he had much rather keepe silence in the same. Wherunto if he must needes be vrged, he would the fault should be vnderstanded of all men to be where it was, namely in his aduersary which prouoked him thereunto, & not in himselfe. Eckius agayn clearing himselfe, translateth all the fault vnto Luther, which first in his treatise, De indulgentijs Papae, defended that before pope Siluesters tyme the church of Rome had no place of maioritie, or preheminance aboue other churches, & also before y^e Cardinall Caietanvs affirmed y^e Pope Pelagianus wrested many places of the Scripture out of their sense, vnto hys owne affection and purpose. Wherefore the fault hereof (sayd he) to him rather is to be imputed, which ministred the first occasion.

Thus Luther being egged and strayned to dispute, whether he would or no,* the question began to be propounded touching the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome: whiche supremacy Eckius did contend to be founded & grounded vpon Gods law. M. Luther on the other side, denyed not the supremacie of the Byshoppe of Rome aboue other churches, neither denyed the same moreouer to be vniuersall ouer all churches: but onely he affirmed it not to be instituted by Gods lawe. Upon this questiō the disputation did continue the space of 5. dayes. During al which season.* Eckius very vnholonstly & vnclerously demeaned himselfe, studying by all meanes how to bring his aduersary into y^e hatred of the auditors, & into danger of the P. The reasons of Eckius were these. For so much as y^e church beyng a ciuill body, cannot be without an head,* therefore as it standeth w^t Gods law, that other ciuill regimēts should not be destitute of theyr head▪ so is it by Gods law requisite that the pope should be the head of the vniuersall Church of Christ. To this M. Luther aunswered, that he confesseth & graunteth y^e Church not to be headles, so long as Christ is aliue, who is the onely head of y^e Church, neither doth the Churche require any other head beside hym, for so much as it is a spirituall kingdome, not earthly: and he alledged for hym the place of Collos. 1.* Eckius agayne produced certayne places out of Hierome and Cyprian, whiche made very little to proue the primacie of the P. to hold by gods law.* As touchīg y^e testimony of Bernard neither was y^e authoritie of y^e author of any great force in thys case, neither was the place alledged so greatly to y^e purpose.*

Then came he to the place of S. Math. 16. Tues Petrus &c. Thou art Peter,and vpon thys rock I will build my Church &c. To this was aunswared, that thys was a confession of faith, and that Peter there representeth the person of the whole vniuersall Church, as Austen doth expound it. Also that Christe in that place meaneth himselfe to be the Rocke, as is manifest to collecte, both by hys wordes and order of the sentence, and many other coniectures. Page 848 Likewise to the place of S. Iohn. Pasce oues meas: Feede my sheepe.* Which wordes Eckius alleged properly and peculiarly to be spoken to Peter alone. Martin aunswared, that after these wordes spoken, equall authoritie was geuen to all the Apostles, where Christ sayeth vnto them, Receiue ye the holy Ghost: whose sinnes soeuer yee remit, they are remitted. &c. By these wordes (sayeth hee) Christ assigning to them their office,* doeth teache what is to feede, and what he ought to be that feedeth. After thys Eckius came to the authoritie of the Councell of Constance, alleging this amongst other articles, De necessitate salutis est, credere Rom. pontificem Occumenicum esse, That is, that it standeth vpon necessitie of our saluation to beleue the Bishop of Rome to bee supreme heade of the Churche:* alleging moreouer, that in the same Councell was debated and discussed, that the general Councel could not erre. Whereunto Martin Luther againe did answere discreetly, saying that al the articles which Iohn Hus dyd holde in that Councell, were not condemned for hereticall: with much other matter more. Againe, of what authoritie that Councel of Constance is to be esteemed, that he leaft to other mens iudgemēts. This is most certain (said he) that no Councell hath such authoritie to make newe articles of faith. Here M. Luther began to be cryed out of by Eckius and his complices, for diminishing y^e authority of generall Councels. Although in deede he meane nothing lesse, but euer labored to confirme the authority of the same: yet was he called hereticke & schismaticke, and one of the Bohemes faction, with many other termes moe of reprochful contumely. Eckius then graunted the authoritie of the Apostles to be equal: & yet not to folow therby, the authoritie of all Byshops therefore to be equall: For betwene Apostleship and ministerie (sayd he) there is great difference.

To conclude, Eckius in no case coulde abide that anye creature shoulde decline from any worde or sentence of the Popes decrees, or the cōstitutions of the forefathers. To this againe Luther aunswared, grounding him selfe vpon the place ad Gal. 2. where S. Paule speaking of the principall Apostles,* sayeth: And of them which seemed to be great, what they were before, it maketh no matter to mee, for God accepteth no mans person: neuerthelesse, they that were of some reputation, dyd auayle nothing at all, &c. Eckius to this said, that as touching the authoritie of the Apostles,* they were all chosen of Christ, but were ordeyned Bishops of Saint Peter. And whereas Luther brought in the constitution of the decree, which sayeth, Ne Romanus pontifex vniuersalis Episcopus nominetur, &c. Yea let not the Bishop also of Rome bee called vniuersal Bishop, &c. To this Eckius aunswared on this sort, that the Bishop of Rome ought not to be called vniuersal Bishop: yet he may be called (sayd he) Byshop of the vniuersall church. And thus much touching the question of the Popes supremacie.

From this matter, they entred nexte to Purgatorie wherein Eckius kept no order.* For whē they should haue disputed, what power the Pope hath in Purgatorie, Eckius turneth the scope of the question, and proueth that there is Purgatorie, & allegeth for him the place of Machab. Luther leaning vpon the iudgement of Hierom, affirmeth the booke of Machabees not to be Canonical.* Eckius againe replyeth the booke of Machabees to be of no lesse authoritie then the Gospels. Also he alleged the place 1. Corinth. 3.*Hee shall bee saued▪ yet so as it were by fyre. Moreouer he inferred the place of Math. 5. Agree thou with thine aduersary while thou art in the way with him,least he commit thee into prison, from whence thou shalt not escape, tyll thou hast payed the vttermost farthing.&c. To this he added also the place of the Psalmes: We haue passed through the fire and water.*&c. Howe these places be wrasted to purgatory, let the reader discerne and iudge.

Then was inferred the question of indulgences, wherof Eckius seemed to make but a toy & a matter of nothing, and so passed it ouer.*

At last they came to the question of penance, touching which matter, the reasons of Eckius digressed much from the purpose, which went about to proue that there be some maner of paynes of satisfaction: whiche thing Luther dyd neuer deny. But that for euery particuler offence, such particuler penaunce is exacted of Gods iustice vpon the repētant sinner, as is in mans power to remitte or l•ease, as pleaseth him: such penance neither Luther, nor anye other true Christian did admit. And thus haue ye the chiefe effect of this disputation betweene Luther and Eckius at Lypsia.* Which was in the month of Iuly. an. 151•.

About the beginning of the same yeare .151•. Uldericke Zuinglius came first to Zuricke, and there began to teach. Who in the 16. article, in his booke of articles, recordeth, that Luther and both at one time, one not knowing nor hearing of an other, began to write against the popes pardons and indulgences. Albeit if the time be rightly counted, I suppose we shall finde that Luther began a yeare or two before Zuinglius.* Notwithstanding this doth Sledan testifie, that in this present yeare, when Sampson a Franciscan, came with the popes pardons to Zurick, Uldericke Zuinglius did withstand him, and declared hys chaffer and pardons to be but a vayne seducing of the people, to inueagle away their money. Ex Sled Lib. 1.

The next yeare ensuing,* which was 1250. the Fryers and Doctours of Louane, and also of Colen, condemned y^e bookes of Luther as hereticall. Agaynst whom Luther agayne effectuously defended himselfe, and charged them with obstinate violence, and malicious impiety. After this within fewe dayes flasheth out from Rome the thunderbolt of pope Leo against the said Luther notwithstanding he so humbly and obediently before had reuerenced both the person of the pope, and agnised the authoritie of his see and also had dedicated vnto him,* and bookes intituled De Christiana libertate: that is, of Christian libertye: In which booke these two poyntes principally hee discusseth and proueth.

1 That a Christen man is free and Lorde of all thinges, and subiect to none.

2 That a Christen man is a dilligent vnderling and seruauant of all men, and to euery man subiect.

Moreouer, in the same yeare he set out a defence of all his articles, which the popes Bull had before condemned.

An other booke also he wrote to the nobilitie of Germanie,* in the which booke he impugneth and shaketh y^e three principall walles of the papistes: the first whereof is this.

1 Where as y^e papistes say, that no temporal or prophane magistrate hath any power vpon the spiritualtie: but they haue power ouer the other.

2 Where any place of Scripture being in controuersie is to be decided, they say, No man may expound y^e scripture, or be iudged thereof, but onely the Pope.

3 When any Councell is brought against them, they say, that no man hath authoritie to call a Councell, but onely the Pope.

Moreouer, in the foresayd booke diuers other matters he handleth and discourseth:* That y^e Pope can stop no free Councell. Also what things ought to be handled in Coūcels. That the pryde of the pope is not to be suffered. What money goeth out of Germany yearly to the pope, mounting to the summe of 3000000. Florences. The true meaning of this verse he expoundeth: Tu supplex ora: tu protege, tu{que} labora. Wherein the three estates with their offices and duties are described: to wyt, the minister the magistrate, & the subiectes. Furthermore in the sayd booke he prooueth and discusseth, that the Emperour is not vnder the Pope but contrariwise: that the donation of Constantine is not true, but forged: that priestes may haue wiues: that y^e voyces of the people ought not to be separte from the election of ecclesiasticall persons: that interdicting and suspending of matrimony at certayne times, is brought in of auarice: what is the right vse of excommunicatiō: that there ought to be fewer holy daies: that liberty ought not to be restrained in meates: that wilfull pouerty and begging ought to be abolished, what damage and inconuenience haue growen by the Councell of Constance: and what misfortunes Sigismund the Emperour sustained, for not keeping faith and promise with Iohn Hus and Hierom: that hereticks should be conuincd, not by fire and fagot, but by euidence of Scripture and Gods word, how schooles and vniuersities ought to be reformed: what is to be sayd and iudged of the popes Decretals, that y^e first teaching of children ought to begin with the Gospell. Item, he writeth in the same booke agaynst excessiue apparell among the Germaines. Also against their excesse in spyces. &c.

In this yeare moreouer followed not long after,* the coronation of the new Emperour Carolus quintus: whiche was in the month of Octob. at Aquisgraue.

After whiche coronation being solemnised about the month of nouemb. Pope Leo sent againe to Duke Fridericke two Cardinals, hys Legates: of whom the one was Hieronymus Aleander, who after a few wordes of high cōmendation first premised to the Duke touching his noble progenie, and other his famous vertues, they made two requestes vnto him in the Popes name: First that he would cause all bookes of Luther to be burned. Secondly, Page 849 that he would eyther see the said Luther there to be executed, or els would make him sure, and send him vp to Rome vnto the popes presence.

These two requestes seemed very strange vnto y^e duke who answering again to the Cardinals said, that he being long absent from thence,* about other publique affayres, could not tell what there was done, neither did hee communicate with the doinges of Luther. Notwithstanding this he heard y^e••kius was a great perturber not only of Luther, but of other diuers learned and good men of hys vniuersitie. As for himselfe he was alwayes ready to doe his duety, first in sending Luther to Ch••etanus the Cardinall, at the cittie of Auguste, and afterward at y^e Popes commaundement would haue sent him away out of hys dominion, had not Meltituis the popes owne Chamberlayne geuen contrary shewed ⟨◇⟩ him still in hys owne country, fearing least y^t in other countrys he might do more harme, where he was lesse knowne: and so nowe also was as ready to doe his duety, where soeuer ryght & ⟨◇⟩ did so require. But for so much a• ⟨◇⟩ this cause, he seeth muche hatred and violence ⟨...⟩ the one part▪ and no error yee conuicted on the other ⟨◇⟩, but that it had rather the approbation of diuers we• learned & found men of iudgement: and for so much as also the cause of Lu'ther was not yet heard before the Emperour therefore he desired the sayd Leg•tes to be a meane to the Popes holines, that certaine learned persons of grauitie and vpriht iudgement, might be assigned to haue the hearing and determination of this matter, & that his error first might be known, before he were made an heretique, or his books burned. Which being done, when he should see his error by manifest and sound testimonies of scriptures re••ced, Luther should find no fauour at hys handes. Otherwise he trusted that y^e popes holines would exact no such thyng of him, which he might not with equitie and honour of his place and estate, reasonably performe. &c.

Then the cardinals, declaring to the duke agayn, that they could no otherwise do, but accordyng to the forme of theyr prescript commission,* they must proceede: tooke the books of Luther, and shortly after set fire vpon them, and openly burnt them. Luther hearing this, in like manner called all the multitude of studentes and learned men in Wittenberge, and there taking the popes decrees, and the Bull lately sent downe agaynst him,* openly and solemnly accompanied with a great number of people followyng him, set them likewise on fire, and burnt them, which was the tenth of December.

A little before these thinges thus passed betweene the Pope and M. Luther, the Emperour had commaunded & ordayned a sitting or assemble of the states of al y^e Empyre to be holden at the City of Wormes, agaynst the sixt day of Ianuary next ensuing. In the whiche assemble, through y^e meanes of Duke Fredericke, the Emperor gaue forth that he woulde haue the cause of Luther there brought before him, and so it was. For at what tyme the assemble was commenced in the city of Wormes, the daye and moneth aforesayd, which was the 6. of Ianuary, afterward vpon y^e sixt day of marche following, the Emperour through the instigation of Duke Fredericke,* directed hys letters vnto Luther, signifying, that for so muche as he had set abroad certayne bookes, he therfore by the aduise of his pieres & princes about him, had ordayned to haue y^e cause brought befor him in hys owne hearing, and therefore he graunted hym licence to come and returne home agayne. And that he might safely and quietly so doe, and be therof assured he promised vnto him by publicke fayth and credite, in the name of the whole Empyre, his Pasport and safeconduite as by the instrument whiche he sent vnto hym, he might more fully be ascertayned. Wherefore without all doubte or distrust, he willed him eftsoones to make hys repayre vnto him, and to be there present the 21. day after the receit thereof: and because he shoulde not misdoubt anye fraude or iniurye herein, he assured to him his warrant and promyse.*

M. Luther being thus prouided for his safeconduict by the Emperour, after he had bene first accursed at Rome vpon Maundy Thursday, by the popes censure, shortly af'ter Easter speedeth hys iourney toward the Emperour, at Wormes. Where the sayde Luther appearing before the Emperour and all the states of Germany, how constantly he stoocke to the truth, and defended hymselfe, and aunswered his aduersaryes, and what aduersaryes hee had, here followeth in ful history with the actes and doings as there happened, according as in our former edition partly was before described.

IN the yeare of our saluation .1521. about seuentene dayes after Easter,* Martin Luther entered into Wormes, being sent for by the Emperour Charles the 5. of y^e name, &c. who the first yeare of hys Empyre, made an assemble of princes in the foresayd Cittie. And whereas M. Luther had published three yeares before, certayne propositions to be disputed in the towne of Wittenberge in Saxonie, against the tyranny of the pope (which notwithstanding were torne in peeces, condemned and burned by y^e papistes, and yet by no manifest Scriptures, nor probable reason conuincen) the matter began to grow to a tumult & vprore, & yet Luther mayntayned all this while openly his cause against y^e clergy.* Wherupon it seemed good to certain y^t Luther shoulde be called, assigning vnto hym an Heralde of armes, with a letter of safe conduict, by the Emperour and Princes. Being sent for, he came, and was brought to the Knightes of the Rhodes place, where he was lodged, well entertayned, and visited of many Erles Barons, knightes of the order, Gentlemen Priestes and the comminaltie, who frequented his lodging til night.

To conclude, he came contrary to the expectatiō of many, as wel aduersaries, as other. For albeit he was sēt for by the Emperours messenger, and had letters of safeconduct: yet for that a few dayes before his accesse, his bookes were cōdemned by publique proclamations, it was much doubted of by many y^t he would not come: and the rather, for that his frendes deliberated together in a village nye hand, called Oppenhime (where Luther was first aduertised of these occurrentes) & many perswaded him not to aduenture him selfe to suche a present danger, considering howe these begynnings answered not to the fayth of promise made▪ Who whē he had heard their whole perswasiō & aduise, he answered in this wise: As touchyng mee,* since I am sent for, I am resolued & certainly determined to en'ter Wormes, in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christe, yea although I knew there were so many deuils to resist me, as there are tyles to couer the houses in Wormes.

The fourth daye after his repayre, a Gentleman, named Ulicke of Pappenheim, Lieutenaunt generall of the men at armes of the empire, was commanded by the emperour before dynner, to repayre to Luther, and inioyne hym at foure of the clocke in the after noone, to appeare before the Imperial maiestie, the Princes Electors, Dukes, and other estates of the Empire, to vnderstande the cause of his sendyng for: Wherunto he willingly agreed, as hys duetie was.

And after iiij. a clocke Ulicke Pappenheim: and Casper Sturm the Emperors Heralde (who conducted M. Luther from Wittenberge to Wormes (came for Luther, and accompanied him through the garden of the knightes of the Rhodes place, to the Earle Palatines pallace: and least the people should molest him, that thrōged in, he was led by secrete stayres to the place where he was appointed to haue audience. Yet manye, who perceyued the pretence, violently rushed in, and were resisted, albeit in vaint many ascended the galleries, because they desired to behold Luther.*

Thus standing before the Emperour, the Electours, Dukes, Earles, and all the estates of the Empire, assembled there, he was first aduertised by Ulricke of Pappenhim, to keepe silence vntil such time as he was required to speake. Then Iohn Eckius aboue mentioned,* who then was the Bishop of Triers general officiall, with a loude and intelligible voyce, first in Latine, then in Dutche, according to the Emperours commaundement, saide & proponed this sentence in maner as ensueth, or like in effect.

Martyn Luther, the sacred and inuincible Emperiall maiestie hath enioyntd by the consent of all the estates of the holye Empyre, that thou shouldest be appealed before the throne of his maiestie, to the ende I might demaunde of thee these twoo poyntes.

First, whether thou confessest these bookes here (for hee shewed a heape of Luthers bookes written in the Latine and Dutch tongues) and which are in all places dispersed, intituled with thy name, be thine, and thou doest affirme them to be thine, or not Secondly, whether thou wylt recant and reuoke them, and al that is contayned in them, or rather meanest to stand to that thou hast written?

Then before Luther, prepared to aunswere, Mayster Ierome Scurffus, a Lawyer of Wittenberge,* required that the tytles of the bookes should be read. Forthwith the foresaid Eckius named certayne of the bookes, and those principally whiche were imprinted at Basill, among the Page 850 whiche he nominated his Comentaries vpon the Psaltar his booke of good works, his Commentary vpon y^e Lords prayer, and diuers other, which were not contentions.

*After this Luther answered thus in Latine & in dutch, Two things are proponed vnto me by the Emperial maiestie. First, whether I will auouche for mine, all those books y^t beare my name: Secondly, whether I will maintayne or reuoke any thing that hytherto I haue deuised & published. Whereunto I wil answere as breifly as I can,

In the first, I can do none other then recognise those bookes to be mine,* which lastly were named, & certaynely I will neuer recant any clause therof. In the second to declare whether I will wholly defend, or call backe any thing cōprised in them: forasmuch as there be questiōs of faith & y^e saluation of the soule (& this concerneth y^e word of God, which is the greatest & most excellent matter that can be in heauen or earth, & the which we ought duely euermore to reuerēce:) this might be accōuted in me a rashnes of iudgemēt, & euen a most dangerous attēpt, I• I wold pronōuce any thing before I wer better aduised, cōsidering I might recite something lesse then the matter importeth, and more then the truth requireth, if I did not premeditate y^e whiche I would speake. The which two thinges well considered doth set before mine eyes this sentence of our Lord Iesus Christ, wherein it is said: Whosoeuer shall deny me before mē, I will deny him before my father. I require then for this cause and humbly beseech the Emperiall maiestie, to graunt me liberty and leysure to deliberate,* so that I may satisfie the interrogatiō made vnto me, without preiudice of y^e worde of God, and perill of mine owne soule.

Wherupon the princes began to deliberate. This done Eckius the prolocutor pronounced what was their resolu'tion, saying: Albeit M. Luther, thou hast sufficiently vnderstanded by the Emperours commaundement, y^e cause of thy appearance here, & therfore doest not deserue to haue any further respite geuen thee to determine: yet the Empe'rous maiestie of his mere clemencie, graunteth thee one day to meditate for thine answere, so that to morow at this instant houre thou shalt repayre to exhibite thyne opinion, not in writing, but to pronounce the same with liuely voyce.

This done, Luther was led to hys lodging by the herauld. But herein I may not be obliuious, that in the way going to the Emperour & when he was in the assemble of princes, he was exhorted of other to be couragious, & māly to demean himself,* and not to feare them that kil the body, but not the soule: but rather to dread him that is able to send both body and soule to euerlasting fire.

Furthermore he was encouraged with this sentence: When thou art before kinges, thinke not what thou shalt speake: for it shall be geuen thee in that houre.*

The next day after foure a clocke, the Herauld came & brought Luther from his lodging to the emperours courte, where he abode till sixe a clocke, for that the princes were occuppyed in graue consultations, abiding there and being enuironed with a great number of people, and almost smo'thered for the prease that was there. Then after when the Princes were set, and Luther entred, Eckius the Officiall began to speake in this maner.

Yesterday at this houre, the Emperours maiestie assigned thee to be here M. Luther,* for that thou didst affirm those books y^t we named yesterday to be thine. Further, to y^e interrogation by vs made, whether thou wouldest approue al y^t is contayned in thē, or abolish and make voyde any part therof, y^u didst require time of deliberation, which was graunted, & is now expyred. Albeit thou oughtest not to haue oportunitie graunted to deliberate, considering it was not vnknowne to thee wherefore we cited thee. And as concerning the matter of fayth, euery man ought to be so prepared, that at all times when soeuer he shalbe required, he may geue certayne & constant reason therof, & thou especiall being counted a man of such learning, and so long tyme exercised in Theologie. Then goe to, aunswere euen now to the Emperours demaund, whose bountye y^u hast proued in geuing thee leisure to deliberate. Wilt thou now maintayn all thy bookes which thou hast acknowledged, or reuoke any part of them, and submit thy selfe. The Officiall made this interrogation in Latine and in Dutche. Martine Luther answered in Latine and in Dutch in this wise, modestly and lowly, and yet not without some stoutnes of stomacke and Christian constancie, so as his aduersaries woulde gladlye haue had hys courage more humbled and abased, but yet more earnestly desired his recantation, wherof they were in some good hope, whē they heard him desire respite of time to make his answere.

His aunswere was this.

MOst magnificent Emperor, and you most noble princes and my most gentle Lordes,* I appeare before you here at the houre prescribed vnto me yesterday: yelding the obedience that I owe, humbly beseeching for Gods mercy, your most renowned maiesty, and your graces & honors, that ye will minister vnto me this curtesy, to attende this cause beningly, which is the cause (as I trust) of Iustice and verity. And if by Ignoraunce I haue not geuen vnto euery one of you your iust titles, or if I haue not obserued the ceremonies and countenance of the Court, offending against them: it may please you to pardone me of your benignities, as one that onely hath frequented cloysters, and not courtly ciuylities. And first, as touching my self, I can affirme or promise no other thinge, but onely this, that I haue taught hitherto in symplycyye of minde, that which I haue thought to tende to Gods glory, & to the saluation of mens soules.

Now as concerninge the two articles objected by your most excellent maiestye,* whether I woulde acknowledge those bookes which were named, and be publyshed in my name, or whether I would mainteine & not reuoke thē: I haue geuē resolute answer to the first, in the which I persist & shall perseuer for euermore, y^t these bookes be myne, and publyshed by me in my name, vnlesse it hath syth happened that by some fraudulent misdealing of myne enemies there be any thyng foysted in them, or corruptly corrected? For I will acknowledge nothing, but that I haue wrytten, and that which I haue wrytten, I will not deny.

Now to answeare to the second article, I beseech your most excellent maiestye, and your graces,* to vouchsafe to geue eare. Al my bookes are not of one sort. There be some, in which I haue so simply and soundly declared & opened the religion of Christen faith and of good workes, that my very enemyes are compelled to confesse them to be profitable and worthy to be read of all Chrystyans. And truely the Popes Bull (how cruell and tyrannous so euer it be) iudgeth certayne of my bookes inculpable, albeyt the same with seuer sentence, thundreth against me, and with monstrous cruelty condēneth my bookes, which books if I shuld reuoke. I might worthely be thought to neglect and transgresse the office of a true Christian, and to be one alone, that repugneth the publicke confession of all people. There is an other sort of my books, which containe inuectiues agaynst the Papacie, and other of the popes retinue, as haue with theyr pestiferous doctrine, and pernicious examples, corrupted the whole state of our Christianitie. Neyther can any deny or dissemble this, whereunto vniuersall experience, and common complaynt of all beare witnesses that the consciences of all faythfull men be most miserably entrapped, vexed, and cruelly tormented by the Popes lawes and doctrines of men. Also that the goodes and substaunce of Christen people are deuoured, especially in this noble and famous cuntry of Germanye, and yet without order, and in most detestable maner, are suffered still to be deuoured, without all measure, by incredible tyranny: notwithstanding that they themselues haue ordayned to the contrary in theyr owne proper lawes,* as in the Distinct. 9. & .25. q. i. & .2. where they themselues haue decreed that all such lawes of popes which be repugnant to y^e doctrine of the Gospell, and the opinions of the auncient Fathers, are to be iudged erroneous, and reproued.

If then I shall reuoke these, I can do none other, but adde more force to theyr tyranny, and open not onely wyn'dowes, but wide gates to theyr impiety, whiche is like to extend more wide, and more licenciously then euer it durst heretofore: And by the testimonie of this my retraction, their insolent kingdome shalbe made more licencious, and lesse subiect to punishment, intollerable to the cōmon people, and also more confirmed and established, especially if this be bruited, that I. Luther haue done this by the authoritie of your most excellent maiestie, and the sacred Romaine empyre. Oh Lord, what a couer or shadow shall I be then to cloke theyr naughtines and tyranny?

The rest, or thyrd sort of my bookes are such as I haue written against certaine priuate and singular persons, to wyt, against such as with tooth and nayle labour to maintaine the Romish tyranny, and to deface the true doctrine and religion, which I haue taught and professed. As touching these, I playnly confesse I haue bene more vehemēt, then my religion and professeion required. For I make my selfe no Saint, and I dispute not of my life, but of the doctrine of Christ.

And these I cannot without preiudice cal back. For by this recantacion it will come to passe, that tyrannie and impietie shall raigne, supported by my meanes, and so shal they exercise crueltie against people, more violently and ragyngly then before.

Page 851 Neuertheles, for that I am a man, and not God, I can none otherwise enterprise to defend my bookes,* then did my verry Lorde Iesus Christ defende his doctrine. Who being examined of his learning before Annas, and hauing receiued a buffet of the minister, sayd, If I haue spoken euill, beare witnesse of the euill.

If the Lord (who was perfect, and could not erre) refused not to haue testimony geuē agaynst his doctrine,* yea of a most vile seruauant: howe much the more then I, that am but vile corruptiō, and can of my selfe doe nothing, but erre, ought earnestlye to see and require, if any will beare witnesse agaynst my doctrine?

Therefore I require, for Gods mercy, your most excellent maiesty, your graces and right honorable Lordshyps, or what so euer he bee of high or lowe degree, here to lay in his testimony, conuict my errorrs, and confute me by the Scriptures, either out of the Prophetes or the Apostles, and I will be most ready (if I be so instructed) to reuoke any maner of errorr: yea and will be the first that shall cōsume mine owne bookes and burne them.

I suppose hereby it may appeare, that I haue perpended,* and well weyed before, the perils and daungers, the diuisions and dissentions which haue risē throughout the whole world, by reason of my doctrine, wherof I was vehemently and sharply yesterday admonished. Concerning which diuisions of mens minds, what other mē do iudge, I know not, as touching my selfe, I conceiue no greater delectation in any thing, then when I behold discords and dissensions styrrd vp for the word of God, For such is the course and proceeding of the Gospell. Iesus Christ sayth: I came not to send peace but a sworde.* I came to set a man at varyance with his father.

And further, we must thinke, that our God is maruellous and terrible in his Coūcels, least perhaps that which we endeuour with earnest study to atchieue and brynge to passe (if we begynne first with condemning of hys worde) the same rebound agayne to an huge sea of euill: and least the newe raigne of this younge and bounteous Prince Charles (in whome next after GOD, we all conceaue singular hope) be lamentable, vnfortunate, and miserably begunne.

I could examplify this with authorities of the Scriptures more effectually,* as by Pharaο, the King of Babylon, and the Kinges of Israel, who then most obscured the bright sunne of theyr glory, and procured theyr own ruine, when by sage counsels they attempted to pacify and establish theyr Gouvernementes and Realmes, and not by Gods Counselles: for it is he that intrappeth the wilye in theyr wylynesse, and subuerteth mountaynes before they be ware. Wherefore it is good, and Gods worke, to dreade the Lord.

I speake not this, supposing that so politique and prudent heades haue need of my doctrine or admonition, but because I would not omit to profite my countrey, and offer my duty or seruice that may tend to the aduancement of the same. And thus I humbly commend me to your most excellēt maiesty, and your honorable Lordships, beseching you that I may not incurre your displeasures, neyther be contemned of you,* through the pursute of my aduersaryes. I haue spoken.

These wordes pronounced, then Eckius the Emperours Prolocutor, with a sterne countenance beganne, and sayd, that Luther had not aunswere to any purpose, neyther it behoued him to call in question, thinges in time past concluded and defined by generall Councils: and therefore they required of him a playne and direct aunswere, whether he would reuoke or no.

Then Luther: considering (sayde he) your soueraigne maiesty,* and your honors require a playne aunswere: thys I say and professe as resolutely as I may, without doubling or sophistication, that if I be not conuincd by testimonies of the Scriptures, & by probale reasons (for I beleeeue not the Pope, neither his generall Councils, which haue erred many times, and haue bene contrary to themselues) my conscience is so bound and captiued in these scriptures and word of God which I haue alledged, that I will not, nor may not reuoke any maner of thing, considering it is not godly or lawfull to do any thing against cōsciēce. Herevpon I stand and rest. I haue not what els to say. GOD haue mercy vpon me.

The princes consulted together vpon this answere geuen by Luther: and whē they had diligently examined the same, the prolocutor began to repell him thus.

Martin (sayd he) thou hast more immodestly aunswere,* then beseemed thy person, and also litle to the purpose. Thou deuident thy bookes into three sorts, in such order as all that thou hast sayd, maketh nothing to the interrogation proponed: and therefore if thou haddest reuoked those, wherein the greatest parte of thine errours is contayned, the Emperours Maiesty, and the noble clemency of other would haue suffered the rest that be sound, to susteyn no iniury. But thou doest reuiue and bringest to light againe, all that the generall Councell of Constance hath condemned▪ the which was assembled of all the nation of Germany, & now doest require to be conuincd with scriptures, wherin thou errest greatly. For what auayleth it to renue disputation of thinges so long time past condemned by y^e church and Councils, vnlesse it should be necessary to geue a reason to euery man of euery thing that is concluded? Nowe were it so, that this should be permitted to euery one that gaynestandeth the determination of the Church and councils, that he may once get his aduantage,* to be conuincd by the Scriptures, we shall haue nothing certayne and established in Christendome.

And this is the cause wherefore the Emperours maiesty requireth of thee a simple aunswere, either negatiue or affirmitiue, whether thou mindest to defend all thy works as Christian or no?

Then Luther turning to the Emperour, and the nobles, besought them, not to compell him to yeelde agaynst his conscience confirmed with the holy Scriptures, wythout manifest argumentes alledged to the contrary by hys aduersaryes. I haue declared and rendred (sayd he) myne aunswere simply and directly: neyther haue I any more to saye, vnlesse mine aduersaryes with true and sufficient probations grounded vpon the Scripture, can reduce and resolue my minde, and refelle mine errorrs, which they lay to my charge. I am tyed (as I sayde) by the Scriptures, neither may I, or canne with a safe conscience assent vnto them. For as touching general Councels,* with whose authority onely they presse me, I am able to proue, that they haue both erred, and haue defined many times things contrary to themselues: and therefore the authority of them, he sayd not to be sufficient, for the which he should call back those thinges, the verity wherof standeth so firme and manifest in the holy Scripture: that neyther of him it ought to be required, neither could he so do without impiety.

Wherunto the Official agayne answered, denying that any man could proue the Coūcels to haue erred. But Luther alledged that he coulede, and promised to proue it, and now night approaching, the Lordes rose and departed. And after Luther had taken his leaue of the Emperour, diuers Spaniardes scorned and scoffed the good man in the way going toward his lodging, halowing and whoping after him a long while.

Upon the friday folowing, when the Princes electors, Dukes, and other estates were assembled, the Emperour sent to the whole body of the councell, a certaine letter containing in effect as foloweth.

¶ The Emperours letter.

OVr predecessours, who truely were Christian princes,* were obedient to the Romish Church, which Martin Luther presently impugneth. And therefore in as much as he is not determined to call backe his errors in any one poynt, we cannot without great infamy and stayn of honor, degenerate from the examples of our elders, but will mayntayne the auncient fayth, and geue ayde to the see of Rome. And further, we be resolved to pursue Martin Luther and his adherentes, by excommunications and by other meanes that may be deuised, to extinguish his doctrine. Neuerthelesse we will not violate our fayth, which we haue promised him, but meane to geue order for safe returne to the place whence he came.

THE Princes electors, Dukes,* and other estates of the Empire, sate and consulted vpon this sentence, on fryday al the after noone, and saterday the whole daye, so that Luther yet had no aunswere of the Emperour.

During this time, diuers Princes, Earles, Barons, Knightes of the Order, Gentlemen, Priestes, Monkes, with other the laitie and common sort, visited him. Al these were present at al houres in the Emperours Courte, and could not be satisfied with the sight of him. Also there were bylles set vp, some against Luther, and some, as it seemed, with him. Notwithstanding many supposed, and especially such as wel conceiued the matter, that this was subtilly done by his enemies, that therby occasion might be offered to infringe the safe conduct giuen him, the which the Romane Ambassadors with all diligence endeououred to bring to passe.

The Monday following, before supper, the Archebyshoppe of Triers aduertised Luther,* that on Wednesdaye nexte hee shoulde appeare before hym, at nine of the clocke Page 852 before dynner, and assigned hym the place▪ On Sainte Georges daye a certaine Chapleine of the Archebishop of Triers, about supper tyme came to Luther, by the commaundement of the Byshop, signifying that at that houre and place prescribed, he must the morowe after haue accesse to his maister.

The morow after saynt Georges day, Luther obeying the Archbishops commaundement,* entred his palace, being accompanied thither with his sayd chaplayne and one of the Emperours Heraldes, and such as came in his company out of Saxony to Wormes, with other his chiefe frendes: where as Doctour Voeus, the Marques of Bades chaplein began to declare and protest in the presence of the Archbishop of Triors,* Ioachime Marques of Brandeburge, George Duke of Saxonye, the bishops of Ausburge and Brandeburge, the Earle George, Iohn Bo•ke of Strasburge, Uerdcheymer and Peutinger Doctours, that Luther was not called to be conferred with, or to disputation, but onely that the princes had procured licence of the Emperors maiesty, through Christian charity, to haue liberty graunted vnto them, to exhort Luther beningly & brotherly.

He sayd further, that albeit the Councels had ordeyned diuers thinges,* yet they had not determined contrary matters. And albeit they had greatly erred, yet theyr authority was not therefore abased or at the least, not so erred, that it was lawful for euery man to impugne theyr opinions: inferring moreouer many thinges of Zacheus and the Centurion: Also of the constitutions and traditions and, of Ceremonies ordeyned of men, affirming that all these were established to repressse vices, according to the qualite of tymes: and that the Church could not be destitute of human constitutions. It is true (sayde he) that by the fruites the tree may be known, yet of these lawes and decrees of men, many good fruites haue proceeded:* and saint Martin, saint Nicholas, and many other Sayntes haue bene present at the Councels.

Moreouer, that Luthers bookes would breede a great tumult and incredible troubles, and that he abused the cōmon sort wich his booke of Christian liberty, encouraging them to shake of theyr yoke, and to confirme in them a disobedience: that the world now was at another stay, then when the beleuers were all of one hart and soule, and therefore it was requisite and behouefull to haue lawes. It was to be considered (sayde he) albeit he had writtē many good thinges, and (no doubt) of a good mind, as De Triplice iustitia, and other matters, yet howe the deuill now by craftye meanes goeth about to bring to passe, that all his workes for euer should be condemned: for by these bookes which he wrote last, men (sayd he) would iudge and esteeme him, as the tree is knowen, not by the blosome, but by the fruit.

Here he added something of the noone deuill, and of the spirite comming in the darcke,* and of the flying arrow. All his oration was exhortatory, full of Rhetoricall places of honesty, of vtility, of lawes, of the daungers of conscience, and of the common particular wealth, repeating ofre this sentence in the proheme, midle, and epilogue of his oratiō: that this admonition was geuen him of a singulare good will, and great clemency. In the shutting vp of his oration, he added manacinges, saying: that if he would abide in his purposed intent, the Emperour woulde proceede further, and banish him from the Empyre, perswading hym deliberately to ponder, and to aduise these and other thinges.

Martin Luther answered, Most noble Princes, and my most gracious Lordes,* I render most humble thanks for your benignities and singuler good wils, whence proceedeth this admonition:

For I knowe my selfe to be so base, as by no meanes I canne deserue to bee admonished of so mighty estates.

Then he franckely pronounced, that he had not reprooued all Councels, but onely the councel of Constance, and for this principall cause, for that the same had condemned the word of GOD, which appeared in the condemnation of this article proponed by Iohn Hus: The Church of Christ is the Communion of the predestinate. It is euident (sayde he) that the Councell of Constance abolished this Article, and consequently the Article of our fayth: I beleue the holy church vniuersall: and sayd that he was ready to spend life and bloud, so he were not cōpelled to reuoke the manifest word of God, for in defence therof we ought rather to obey God then men: And that in this he could not auoid the scandall, or offence of fayth, for there bee two maner of offences, to wit, of charity, and of fayth. The slaunder of charity consisteth in maners and in life. The offences of fayth or doctrine rest in the word of God: and as touching this last, he could escape it no maner of wayes, for it lay not in his power to make Christ not to be a stone of offence. If Christes sheepe were fedde with pure pasture of the gospell, if the fayth of Christ were sincerely preached, and if there were good Ecclesiasticall magistrates who duely would execute theyr office: we shoulde not neede (sayth he) to charge the Church with mens traditions. Further, that he knew wel wee ought to obey the Magistrates and higher powers, how vniustly and peruersly so euer they liued. We oughte also to be obedient to theyr lawes and iudgementes: all which he had taught (sayd he) in all his works, adding further that he was ready to obey them in all poyntes, so that they enforced him not to deny the word of God.

These wordes finished, Luther was bid stand aside, & the Princes consulted what answere they might geue him.* This done, they called him into a parlor, whereas the foresaid Doctour Voeus repeated his former matters, admonishing Luther to submit his writings to the Emperour, & to the Princes iudgement.

Luther answered humbly and modestly, that he coulde not, neither would permit that men shoulde say he woulde shunne the iudgement of the Emperour, Princes, and superiour powers of the Empyre. So farre was it off, that he woulde refuse to stand to theyr tryall, that he was contented to suffer his writings to be discussed, considered and iudged of the simplest, so that it were done with y^e authority of the worde of God, and the holy Scripture: and that the word of God made so much for him,* and was so manifest vnto him, that he could not geue place, vnlesse they coulde confounde his doctrine by the worde of God. This lesson (sayd he) he learned of S. Austē, who writeth, that he gaue his honour onely to those bookes which are called Canonicall, that he beleued the same onely to be true. As touching other Doctors, albeit in holynesse and excellēcy of learning the passed, yet he would not credit them further then they agreed with the touchstone of Gods word. Further (sayde he) S. Paule geueth vs a lesson, writing to the Thessalonians: Proue all thinges, folow that is good. And to the Galathians: Though an Aungell should descende from heauen,*if hee preach any other doctrine, let him be accursed, and therefore not to be beleued.

Finally he meekely besought them, not to vrge his cōscience captiued in the bands of the word of God and holy scripture, to denye the same excellent worde. And thus hee commended his cause and himselfe to them, and specially to y^e Emperours maiesty, requyring they fauour, y^t he might not be compelled to doe anye thing, in this matter against his conscience: in all other causes he would submit himself with all kinde of obedience and due subiection.

As Luther had thus ended his talke, Ioachimus Elector, Marques of Brandeburge, demaūded if his meaning was thus, that he woulde not yelde, vnlesse he were conuincd by the Scripture? Yea truely right Noble Lorde (quoth Luther) or els by auncient and euident reasons. And so the assemble brake, and the Princes repayred to the Emperours Court.

After theyr departure, the Archbishoppe of Triers, accompanied with a fewe his familiars, namely Iohn Eckius his Officiall, and Cochleus, commaunded Luther to repayre into his parlour. With Luther was Hieronimus Scurffius, and Nicholas Ambsdorff, for his assistaunce. Then the Officiall beganne to frame an argument like a a Sophist and Canonist, defending the Popes cause: that for the most part at all times holy Scriptures haue engendred errors, as the error of Heluidius the heretique,* out of that place in the Gospell, where is expressed: Iosephe knewe not his wyfe tyll she was deliuered of her first childe. Further, he went about to ouerthrow this proposition, that the Catho^lique Church is the Communion of Sayntes.

Martin Luther and Hierome Scurffe reprooued (but modestly) these follies, and other vain and ridiculous matters, which Eckius brought forth as thinges not seruinge to the purpose. Sometime Cochleus would come in with his fiue egges, and laboured to perswade Luther to desiste from his purpose, & vtterly to refraine thenceforth to write or teach, and so they departed.

About euening the Archbishopp of Triers aduertised Luther by Ambsdorff, that the Emperours promise made vnto him, was prolonged two daies, and in the mean season he would conferre with him the nexte day, and for that cause he would send Peutinger, and the Doctour of Bade which was Voeus, the morow after to him, and he himselfe would also talke with him.

The friday after, whiche was S. Markes day, Peutinger, and the Doctour of Bade trauelled in the forenoone to perswade Luther simply and absolutely to submitte the iudgement of his writinges to the Emperor and Empire.* He aunswered he would doe it, and submit any thing they Page 853 would haue hym, so they grounded with authority of holy Scripture: otherwise he would not consent to doe any thing. For God sayd by his Prophet (sayth he) Trust ye not in Princes, nor in the childrē of men, in whom there is no health. Also, Cursed be he that trusteth in man. And seeing that they did vrge him more vehemently, he answered: We ought to yeld no more to y^e iudgement of men, thē the word of God doth suffer. So they departed, and prayed him to aduise for better answeere, and sayd, they would returne after dinner.

After dinner they returned, exhorting him as before, but in vayne.* They prayed him, that at the least he woulde submit his writing to the iudgement of the nexte generall Councell. Luther agreed therunto, but with this conditiō, that they themselues shoulde present the Articles collected out of his bookes to be submitted to the Councell in suche sort, as notwithstanding the sentence awarded by the coūcell, should be authorised by the Scripture, and confirmed with the testimonyes of the same.

They then leauing Luther, departed, and reported to the Archbishop of Triers,* that he had promised to submit his writinges in certayne articles to the next Councell, & in the meane space he woulde keepe silence, which Luther neuer thought: who neither with admonitions, ne yet manaces could be induced to deny or submit his bookes to the iudgementes of menne (he had so fortified hys cause wyth cleare and manifest authorities of the Scripture) vnlesse they could proue by sacred scripture, and apparant reasōs to the contrary.

*It chaunced then by the speciall grace of God, that the Archbishop of Triers sent for Luther, thinking presently to heare him. And when he perceiued otherwise then Peutingen, and the Doctour of Bade had tolde him, he sayde, that he would for no good, but that he had heard himselfe speake: for els he was euen now going to the Emperour, to declare what the Doctors had reported.

Then the Archbishop entreated Luther, and conferred with him very gently, *first remouing such as were presēt, as well of the one side as of the other. In this conference Luther concealed nothing from the Archbishop, affirming that it was daūgerous to submit a matter of so great importaunce to them, who after they had called hym vnder safeconduct, attempting him with new commaundementes, had condemned his opinion, and approued the Popes Bull.

Moreouer, the Archbishop bidding a frend of his draw nigh required Luther to declare what remedy might bee ministred to helpe this. *Luther answered: there was no better remedy then suche as Gamaliel alledged in the fyfte chapter of the Apostles, as witnesseth S. Luke, saying: If this Councell or this woorke proceede of men, *it shall come to nought, but if it be of God, ye can not destroy it. And so he desired that the Emperour might be aduertised to write the same to the Pope, that he knewe certaynely if this his enterprise proceeded not of God, it would be abolished within three, yea within two yeares.

The Archbishop enquired of him what he would do, if certayne articles were taken out of his bookes, to be submitted to the generall councell. *Luther aunswered, so that they be not those, which the counsell of Constance condemned. The Archbyshoppe sayd, I feare they will be the very same: but what then? Luther replied, I will not, nor I cannot holde my peace of such, for I am sure by theyr decrees the word of God was condemned: therefore I wyll rather loose head and life, then abandon the manifest word of my Lord God.

Then the Archbishop seing Luther would in no wise geue ouer the word of God, to the iudgement of men, gētly bade Luther farewell, who at that instaunt prayed the Archbishop to entreat the Emperours maiesty to graunt him gracious leaue to depart. He aunswered, he woulde take order for him, and speedely aduertise hym of the Emperours pleasure.

Within a small while after, Iohn Eckius the Archbysshops officiall, in the presence of the Emperours Secretary, who had bene Maximilians Chauncellour, sayde vnto Luther in his lodging, *by the commaundement of the Emperour: that since he had bene admonished diuersly of the Emperiall maiesty, the Electors, Princes and estates of the Empyre, and that notwithstanding he woulde not returne to vnity and concord, there remained that the Emperour as aduocate of the Catholique fayth should proceed further: and that it was the Emperours ordinaunce that he should within 21. dayes, returne boldly vnder safe conduct, and be safely garded to the place whence he came, so that in the meane while he styrred no commotion amonge the people in his iourney, either in conference, or by preaching.

Luther hearing this, answered very modestly, & christianly: euen as it hath pleased God, so is it come to passe, the name of the Lord be blessed. He sayde further, he thanked most humbly the Emperours maiesty, and all the Princes and estates of the Empyre, that they had geuen to hym benigne and gracious audience, and graunted safe conduct to come and returne. Finally he sayd, he desired none other of them, then a reformation, according to the sacred word of God, and consonancy of holy Scriptures, which effectually in his hart he desired: Otherwise he was prest to suffer all chaūces for the Emperiall maiesty, as life and death, goodes, fame, and reproch, reseruing nothing to himselfe, but the onely word of God, which he would constantly confesse, to the latter end, humbly recommending hym to the Emperours maiesty, and to all the Princes and other estates of the sacred Empyre.

The morow after, which was the 26. day of Aprill,* after he had taken his leaue of such as supported him, and other his beneuolent frends, that often times visited hym, and had broken hys fast, at tenne of the clocke he departed from Wormes, accompanied with such as repayed thither with him, hauing space of time limited vnto him, (as is sayd) for 21. dayes, and no more. The Emperours Heralde Casper Sturine, folowed and ouertooke him at Oppenhime, being commaunded by the Emperour to cōduct him safely home.

CONFIRME (O God) in vs that thou hast wrought, and perfect the worke that thou hast begunne in vs, to thy glory. So be it. Ex histor. Phil. Melanct. Ex Sledano. Ex Paral. Abb. Vrsperge. & ex Casp. Peucero.

MARTIN Luther thus being dismissed of the Emperour, according to the promise of his safeconduct made (as you haue heard) departed from Wormes toward his countrey the 26: of Aprill,* accompanied with the Emperours Heralde, and the rest of his company, hauing onely xxi. dayes to him graunted for his returne, and no more. In the which meane space of his returne, hee writeth to the Emperour, and to other nobles of the Empyre repeating briefly to them the whole action and order of things there done, desiring of them, theyr lawfull good will and fauour, which as he hath alwayes stand neede of, so now he moste earnestly craueth, especially in this, that hys cause whiche is not his but the cause of the whole church vniuersall, may be hearde with indifferency and equitye, and may be decised by the rule and authority of holy Scripture: signifying moreouer, that when so euer they shall please to send for him, he shall bee ready at theyr commaundement, at any time or place, vpon theyr promise of safety, to appeare. &c.

During the time of these doinges, the Doctours and Schoolmen of Paris, were not behinde with theyr partes,* but to shewe theyr cunning, condemned the bookes of Luther, extracting out of the same, especially out of hys booke De Captiuitate Babilonica, certayne Articles as touching the Sacramentes, lawes and decrees of the Church equalitye of workes, vowes, contrition, absolution, satisfaction, Purgatory, free will, priuiledges of holy Church, coūcelles, punishment of heretiques, Philosophie, Schole diuinity, with other more.* Unto whom Philip Melancton maketh aunswere, and also Luther himselfe, albeit pleasantly and iestingly.

It was not long after this, but Charles the new Emperour,* to purchase fauor with the Pope (because hee was not yet confirmed in his Empyre) prouideth and directeth out a solemne writ of outlawry agaynst Luther, & all them that take his part, commaunding the said Luther, where so euer he might be gotten, to be apprehended, and his bookes burned. By which decree proclaymed agaynst Luther, the Emperour procured no small thanke with the Pope: in so much that the Pope ceasing to take part with the French king, ioyned himselfe whollye to the Emperour. In the meane time Duke Fridericke, to geue some place for the time to the Emperors Proclamation,* conueyed Luther a litle out of sight secretly, by the helpe of certain noble men, whom he well know to be faythfull and trusty vnto him in that behalfe. There Luther being close and out of company, wrote diuers Epistles, and certayne bookes also vnto his frendes among which he dedicated one to his companie of Augustine Fryers, entituled, De abroganda Missa, Which Friers the same time being encouraged by him,* beganne first to lay downe theyr priuate Masses. Duke Fridericke fearing least that would breede some great styrre or tumult, caused the censure and iudgementes of the whole Page 854 Uniuersity of Wittenberge, to be asked in the matter, committing the doing thereof to foure, Iustus, Ionas, Philip Melanctho. Nic. Ambsdorssius, Ioh. Dulcius.

The mindes of the whole Uniuersity being searched it was shewed to the Duke, that he shoulde doe well and Godly,* by the whole aduise of the learned there, to commaund the vse of Masse to be abrogate through his dominion: and though it could not be done without tumult, yet that was no let, why the course of true doctrine should be stayed,* for the multitude, which commonly ouercommeth the better part. Neyther ought such disturbaunce to be imputed to the doctrine taught, but to the aduersaries, which willingly and wickedly kicke agaynst the trueth: wherof Christ also geueth vs forewarning before. For feare of such tumults therefore we ought not to surcease frō that which we know is to be done, but constantly must go forward in defence of Gods truth, how so euer the world doth esteeme vs, or rage against it. Thus shewed they their iudgemēt to Duke Fridericke.

*It happened moreouer about the same yeare and time, that king Henry also pretending an occasion to impugne the booke De Captiuitate Babylonica, wrote agaynst Luther. In which booke:

1. He reproueth Luthers opinion about the Popes pardons.
2. He defendeth the supremacy of the Byshop of Rome.
3. He laboreth to refell all his doctrine of the Sacramēts of the Church.

This booke, albeit it carryed the kinges name in the title,* yet it was an other that ministred the motion, an other that framed the stile. But who so euer had the labor of this booke, the king had the thanke, and also the rewarde. For consequently vpon the same, the bishop of Rome gaue to the sayd king Henry for the style agaynst Luther,* y^e style and title of Defender of the Christen fayth, and to his successors for euer.

Shortly after this, within the compasse of the same yere, Pope Leo after he had warred agaynst the Frenche men, and had gotten from them, through the Emperors ayd, the Citties of Parma, Placentia, and Millen. &c. he sitting at supper, & reioycing at three great giftes that God had bestowed vpō him. 1. That he being banished out of his cōtry, was restored to Florence agayn with glory. 2. That he had deserued to be called Apostolique.* 3. That he had driuē the Frenchmen out of Italy: after he had spokē these wordes, he was stroken with a sodayne feuer, and dyed shortly after, being of the age of 47. yeares: albeit some suspect that he dyed of poyson. Successour to whom was Pope Adrian the vi. scholemayster sometime to Charles the Emperour:,* who liued not much aboue one yeare and a halfe, in his Papacy. During whose small time, these three especiall thinges were incident: A great pestilence in Rome, wherein aboue an hundreth thousande people were consumed.* The losse of Rhodes by the Turke. And thyrdly the capitall warre, which the sayd Pope Adrian, with the emperour, and the Uenetians, and the king of Englande, dyd hold agaynst Fraunces the French king.

This pope Adrian was a Germane borne, brought vp at Louane,* and as in learning he exceded the common sort of Popes: so in moderatiō of life and maners he semed not all together so intēperate as some other Popes haue bene, and yet like a right Pope, nothing degenerating from hys Sea,* he was a mortall enemy against Martin Luther and his partakers. In his time, shortly after the Councell of Wormes was broken vppe, an other meeting or assemble was appoynted by the Emperor at Norenberge of y^e princes, nobles and states of Germany. an. 1522.

Unto this assemble the sayde Adrian sent his letters in maner of a briefe,* with an instruction also vnto his Legate Cheregatus, to informe him how to procceede, and what causes to alledge agaynst Luther, before the Princes there assembled. His letter with the instruction sent, because they are so hypocritically shadowed ouer with a fayre shew and colour of paynted zeale and Religion,* and beareth resemblaunce of great trueth and care of the Church, able to deceaue the outward eares of them, which are not inwardly in true Religion instructed: I thought therefore to geue to the Reader a sight therof to the intent that by the experiēce of them, he may learne hereafter in cases like, to be prudent & circumspect in not beleuing ouer rashly the smoth talke, or pretensed persuasions of men, especially in Church matters, vnlesse they carry with them the simplicity of playne truth, goyng not vpon termes, but grouēded vpon y^e word and reueled wil of God, with particular demonstrations, prouing that by the Scripture, which they pretend to perswade. First the letter of this Pope conceiued & directed agaynst Luther, proceedeth in this effect.

Adrian Pope vi. to the renowmed Princes of Germanye, and to the Piers of the Romaine Empyre, greeting, and Apostolique benediction.

RIght honourable brethren, and deare children,* greeting and Apostolique benediction. After that we were first promoted (through Gods diuine prouidence) to the office of the see Apostolick, he which hath so aduanced vs, is our witness, how we both daye and night reuoluing in our mindes, did cogitate nothinge more, then how to satisfye the partes of a good Pastour, in attending the health and cure of the flock, both vniuersally & singularlye committed vnto vs:,* so that there is no one particular sheepe through the whole vniuersall flock, so infected, so sicke, or so farre gone astray, whome our desire is not to recouer, to seeke out, and to reduce into the Lordes folde agayne. And chiefly, from the first beginning of our pastorall function, our care hath alwayes bene, as well by our messengers, as our dayly letters, howe to reclayme the mindes of Christian Princes from the intestine wars and dissensions among themselues, to peace and concorde, or at least, if they woulde needes fight, that they woulde conuert theyr strēgth and armour agaynst the cōmō enemyes of our fayth. And to declare this not onely in worde, but rather in deede, God doth knowe with what charges and expences wee haue burdened our selues, to extend our subsidy and reliefe, to the souldiers of Rhodes for defence of themselues and of the Christian fayth, agaynst the Turkish tyranny, by whom they were besieged.

And now to bend our care from these forreyne matters, and to consider our inwarde troubles at home, we heare, to the great grieve of our hart,* that M. Luther a newe rayser vppe of olde and damnable heresy: first after the fatherly aduertisemētes of the See Apostolique, then after the sentence also of condemnation awarded agaynst him, and that by the assent and consent of the best learned, and of sundy Vniuersities also: and lastly after the Emperiall decree of our well beloued sonne Charles, elect Emperour of the Romaines, and Catholique king of Spayne, beyng diuulged through the whole nation of Germany, yet hath neyther bene by order restrayned,* nor of himselfe hath refrayned from hys madnesse begunne, but daily more and more forgetting and contemning all Christian Charity and Godlynesse, ceaseth not to disturbe and replenish the worlde with new bookes, fraught full of errorrs, heresy, contumely, and sedition (whether vppon hys owne head, or by the healpe of other) and to infect the country of Germany, and other Regions about, with this pestilence,* and endeouureth still to corrupt simple soules, and maners of men, with the poyson of his pestiferous tongue: and (which is worst of all) hath for his fautours and supporters, not of the vulgare sort onely, but also diuers personages of the Nobility: in so much that they haue begunne also to inuade the goodes of priestes (whiche perhappes is the chiefe ground of this styrr begunne) contrarye to theyr obedience which they owe to ecclesiasticall and temporall persons, and nowe also at last haue growen vnto ciuill warre and dissention among themselues, which thing how vnfortunately it falleth out now, at this present season, especially amongst vs Christians, you may soone repute with your selues and consider. For although the Apostle hath tolde vs before,* that heresy must needes be, that they which be tried, may be made manifest. &c. yet was there neuer time, either so vnconuenient to rayse vp heresy, or so necessary for the repressing thereof, when any such are raysed, as now. For whereas the Deuill, the perpetuall enemy of mankinde, roaring in the shape of a Lyon, by the power of the Turkes, doth continually inuade the flocke of Christ, how can we then resist the violent inuasions of him, oppressing vs without, so long as we nourish at home the same Deuill,* vnder the coulour of a wyly Dragon, sowing such heresy, discorde, and seditions among our selues: And albeit it were in our power easily to vanquish these forreigne aduersaries, yet were that but labor lost, seruing to no profite, to subdue our enemyes without, and at home with heresy and schismes to be deuided.

We remember, before the time of our Papacy, when we were in Spayne, many thinges we heard then of Luther, and of his peruerse doctrine. Which rumours and tydings, although of thē selues they were grieuous to be hearde, yet more gireuous they were for this, because they proceeded out of that cuntry, where we our selfe, after the flesh, tooke our first beginning: but yet thys comfort we had, supposing that either for the iniquity, or els for the foolishnesse thereof being so manifest, this doctrine woulde not long holde: reputing thus with our selfe, that such pestiferous * plantes translated from other cuntries into Germany, would neuer grow vppe to any prooffe in that ground, which was euer woont to be a weeder out of all heresy and infidelity. But now, since this euill tree (whether by Gods iudgement correcting the sinnes of the people, or by the negligence of suche as first should haue resisted such beginniges) hath so enlarged and spread his braunches so farre: you therefore, both Princes, and people of Germanye, must this consider and prouide, leaste you, which at the first springing vp of this euill, might peraduenture Page 855 be excused as no doers therof, now through this your ouermuch sufferaunce, might be found vnexcusable, and seeme to consent to that which you do not resist.

Here we omitte and passe ouer, what enormity, and more the enormity, that is, that such a great, and so deuoute a nation, should by one fryer (who relinquishing the Catholique fayth and Christian religion, which he before professed playeth the Apostata, & hath lyed to God) be nowe seduced from that way, whiche first * Christ our redemer & his blessed apostles haue opened vnto vs, which so many Martyrs, so many holy Fathers, so many greate learned men, & also your owne foreelders and old auncitours haue alwayes hitherto walked in, as though onely Luther had all wit and cunning, as though he onely nowe first had receiued the holy ghost (as the heretick Montanus vsed to boast of himselfe) or as though the Church (frō which Christ our sauour promised himselfe neuer to depart) hath erred hitherto alwayes in darcke shadowes of ignorance and perdition, tyll now it should be illuminate with newe r'splendent beames of Luther. Al which thinges, there is no doubt, but to such as haue iudgement, will seeme ridiculous, but yet may be pernicious to simple and ignoraunt mindes: and to the other which being wery of all good order, do gape stil for new changes, may breed matter and occasion of such mischiefes, as partly your selues haue experienced already. And therefore do you not consider (O princes and people of Germany) that these be but prefaces & preambles to those euils and mischiefes, which Luther with the secte of his Lutherianes, do intend & purpose here after? * Do you not see playnly & perceiue with your eyes, that this defending of the verity of the Gospell first begun by the Lutherians to be pretended, is now manifest to be but an inuentiō to spoile your goods which they haue long intēded? Or do you thinke that these sonnes of iniquity do tend to any other thing, then vnder the name of liberty, to supplant obedience, and so to open a generall * licence to euery man, to do what him listeth? And suppose you, that they will any thing regard your commaūdementes, or esteeme * your lawes, whiche so contemptuously vilipend the holy Canons, and decrees of the fathers, yea and the most holy Councels also (to whose autorite the Emperors lawes haue alwayes geuen roome and place) & not onely vilipēd them, but also with a diabolicall audacitye haue not feared to rent them in pices, and set them on a light fire? They which refuse to render due obedience to priestes, to byshops, yea to the high bishop of al, & which dayly before your owne faces make theyr bootyes of Church goodes, and of thinges consecrated to God: thinke ye that they will refrayne theyr sacrilegious handes frō the spoyle of lay mens goods? yea that they wil not plucke from you whatsoeuer they can rap or reauē? * Finally to conclude, how can you hope that they will more spare you, or hold theyr murdering handes from your throates, which haue bene so bold to vexe, to kill, to slay the Lordes annoynted, which are not to be touched? Nay thinke you not contrary, but this miserable calamity will at length redound vpon you, your goodes, your houses, wiues, children, dominio's, possessions, & these your temples, which you hallow & reuerēce, except you prouide some speedy remedy agaynst the same.

Wherefore we exhort your fraternities, nobilities, & deuotions of all and singuler in the Lord, and beseech you for Christian charity & religion (for which religion your forefathers oft times haue geuen their bloud, to vpholde and encrease the same) and notwithstanding require you also in vertue of that obedience, which all Christians owe to God & blessed S, Peter, * and to his Vicar here in earth, that setting aside all other quarrels and dissentions among our selues, you conferre your helping handes euery man to quench this publique fire, and endeuour and study the best way ye can, howe to reduce the sayd M. Luther and all other fautours of these tumultes and errorrs, to better conformitye and trade both of lyfe and fayth. And if they which be infected, shal refuse to heare your admonitiōs, yet proued that the other part, which yet remayneth sound, by the same contagion be not corrupted. He to whom all secretes of men are open, doth know how we both for our nature, and also for our pastorall office, whereto we are called, are much more prone to remit, then to reuenge. But when this pestiferous canker can not with supple and gentle medecines be cured, more sharper salues must be proued, and fiery searinges: the putrified members must be cut of from the body, least the sound partes also be infected. So God did cast downe into hell the schismaticall brethren * Dathan and Abiron. And him that would not obey the authority of the priest, God commaunded to bee punished with death. So Peter prince of the Apostles, denounced sodeine death to Ananias, and Saphira, which lyed vnto God. So the olde and godly Emperours commaunded * Iouinianus and Priscillianus, as heretiques, to be beheaded. So S^r Ierome wisheth Vigilantius as an heretick, to be geuen to the destructiō of the flesh, that the spirit might be sauēd in the day of the Lord. So also did our predecessours in the Councell of * Cōstance condemne to death Iohn Hus & his felow Hierome, which now appeareth to reuiue agayne in Luther. The worthy* acts and examples of which forefathers, if you in this doinges (seeing otherwise ye can not) shall imitate: wee doe not doubt, but Gods mercifull clemency shall eftsoones releue his Church, which being now sore vexed of infidels, hath her eies chiefly and principally directed vpō you, as being the most puisaunt and most populous nation that wee haue in Christendome.

Wherefore vpon the blessing of almighty God and of blessed S. Peter, which here we send vnto you, take courage vnto you,* as well agaynst the false Dragon, as the strong Lion, that both these: that is, as well the inward heresy, as the forreigne enemyes by you being ouercome, you may purchase to your honours an immortal victory, both here and in the world to come. This we geue you to vnderstand, that whatsoeuer the Lord hath geuen vs to aid you withall, either in money or authoritye, wee will not fayle to support you herein,* yea and to bestowe our life also in this holye quarrell, and for the health of our sheepe to vs committed. Other thinges as touching the matter of Luther, we haue committed to this Cheregatus our Legate, whom wee haue directed purposelye for the same, vnto your assemble, whom we wish you to Credite, as being our trusty Legate.

pontificatus nostri anno primo.

¶ By this letter aboue prefixed, thou hast (gentle reader) to note and vnderstand, what eyther wylly perswasions, or strength of authoritie could deuise against Luther, here not to haue lacked. If plausible termes or glosyng sentences, or outward facyng and bracyng could haue serued, where no ground of scripture is brought, this might seeme apparantly a pithie Epistle. But if a man should require the particulars or y^e specialties of this doctrine which he here reprehendeth, to bee examined and tryed by Gods word, there is no substaunce in it, but onely wordes of office, whiche may seeme well to serue for waste paper. And yet I thought to exhibite the saide letter vnto thee, to the entent, that the more thou seest mans strength with all his policie bent against

Luther, the more thou mayst consider the almightie power of God, in defending the cause of this poore man, against so mightie enemies.

Nowe heare further what instructions the sayde Pope Adrian sent to his Legate Cheregatus, how and by what reasons to moue and inflame the princes of Germany to the destruction of Luther, and his cause, and yet was not able to bring it to passe.

Instructions geuen by Pope Adrian to Cheregatus his Legate, touching his proceedings in the diete of Norenberg, how and by what persuasions to incense the Princes agaynst Luther.

IN primis,* you shall declare to them the great grieve of our hart for the prospering of Luthers secte, to see the innumerable soules redemed with Christs bloud, and committed to our pastorall gouvernement, to be turned away from the true fayth and religion, into perdition by this occasion: & that especially in the nation of Germany, being our natieue country, which hath bene euer heretofore, til these few yeares past, most faythfull and deuour in religion: & therefore our desire to be the greater, that this pestilence should Page 856 be stopped by time, least the same happen to that countrey of Germany, which happened of late to Bohemia. And as for our part,* there shalbe no lacke to helpe forward what we may: As likewise we desire them, to •ndeouore them selues to the vttermost of theyr power, whom these causes ought to moue, which here we direct vnto you, to be declared vnto them.

*First the honor of God, which before all other things ought to be preferred: whose honor by these heresydes is greatly defaced and his worship not onely diminished, but rather whollye corrupted. Also the charity toward our neighbor, by which charity euery man is bound to reduce his neighbor out of errour: otherwise God will requyre at theyr handes all such as by theyr negligence do perish.

The second cause to moue them agaynst Luther,* is the infamy of theyr nation, whiche being counted before time alwayes most Christian, now by these sectaries of Luther, is euill spoken of in all other quartes.

The third cause is the respecte of theyr owne honour, which notoriously will be disteined,* if they which most excell in nobility and authority among the Germaines, shall not bend all theyr power to expell these heresydes: First for that they shall appeare to degenerate from theyr progenitors, who being present at the condemnatiō of Iohn Hus, & of other heretickes, are sayd some of thē with theyr owne hands to haue led Iohn Hus to the fire: Secondly, for that they or the greater part of thē approuing with theyr autho^rity * the emperiall edict set forth of late in cōdemnatiō of M. Luther, now except they shall folow the execution of y^e same, shall be noted inconstant, or may be thought to fauor the same, seing it is manifest that they may easily exterminate him, if they were disposed.

The fourth cause is the iniury wrought by Luther to them their parentes,* and progenitors, for as much as their fathers, progenitors, and themselues also haue alwayes holden the same fayth, which the catholick church of Rome hath appoynted: contrary to which fayth, Luther with his sectaries now doeth holde, saying that many thinges are not to be beleued, which they foresaid aunceters haue holden to be of fayth: it is manifest therefore that they be condēned of Luther for infidels and hereticks, and so consequētlly by Luthers doctrine, all theyr foreelders & progenitors which haue deceased in this our fayth be in hell: for error in fayth importeth damnation.

The fift cause to moue them is, that they should wel aduise & consider the end,* whereunto all these Lutherians do tēd: * which is, that vnder the shadow of Euangelicall liberty, they may abolish all superiority and power▪ For although at the first beginning they pretended onely to adnule and repress our power ecclesiasticall, as being falsely & tyrannously vsurped agaynst the Gospell: yet for as much as liberty is all theyr foundation and pretence, by the which liberty the secular power and magistrates can not binde men by any commaundementes (be they neuer so iust, or so reasonable) * to obey thē vnder paine of mortall sinne: it is manifest that theyr scope is to enfeeble and infringe as much or more, the secular state also, although couertly they pretend to salue it: to the end, that when the secular Princes shall beleue this theyr working not to be directed against them, but onely agaynst the vsurped domination of the church and churchmē, then the laity (which commonly hath bene alwayes agaynst men of the Church) holding with them, shall suffer the Churchmen to be deuoured: Which done, no doubt, but * they will afterward practise the like vpon the secular Princes and potestates, which now they attempt agaynst our ecclesiasticall iurisdiction.

The sixte cause to mooue and perswade them agaynst Luther is this, for them to consider the fruites which folow of that sect:* as slaunders, offences, disturbaunce, robberyes, murders, * seditions, dissensions, which this sect hath and dayly doth styrrē vp through whole Germany: Also blasphemyes. * slaunderous wordes, scoffing iestes and bitter tauntes whiche are euer in theyr mouthes. Agaynst which, vnles that they shall finde a present remedy, it is to be feared, least the desolation of Gods wrath will fall vpon Germany, being so diuided: or rather vpō the Princes of Germany, who hauing the sword geuen of God into theyr hands for the suppression of malefactors, suffer such enormities amongst theyr subiectes.*Cursed is he (sayth the Prophet) which doth the worke of the Lorde negligently: and holdeth backe his sworde from the bloud of wicked doers.

The seuenth reason is,* that the princes should consider how Luther vseth the same way of seducing the people of Christ, as hath the venimous vyper *Mahumet practised in deceiuing so many thousands of soules, in permitting to them the libertye of those thinges which flesh desireth, and afterward in exempting them from such thinges as be more sharp in the law, but that Luther a litle more temperately handleth the matter, whereby he may deceiue more effectually: For Mahumet geueth licence to haue many wiues, and to diuorce and mary other at their pleasure. This Luther, to drawe vnto him the fauor of nunnes, monks, and priests, such as be lasciuious in flesh, preacheth that vowes of perpetuall continencye be vnlawfull, much lesse to be obligatory: and therefore permitteth vnto thē that they may mary, forgetting by the way what the Apostle writeth of yōug widowes, saying:*That when they waxe wanton agaynst Christ then will they marrye, hauing condemnation, because they haue made voyd theyr first fayth.

These & other such like reasons, being opened & layd before thē, you shal thē in our name exhort y^e foresaid princes, prelats, & people to awake, and employ their diligēce how to gainestand: First the iniury of these Lutherians toward God, & toward his holy religiō: Secōdly theyr villany toward the whole nation of the Germanes & their princes, & especially the shamefull contumely toward theyr fathers & elders, whō in effect they condemne to hel. In consideratiō wherof you shal cal vpō thē to remēber thēselues, & to proceed effectually to the executiō of y^e apostolicall sentēce, & of the Emperors edict, geuing pardon to thē that wil amend & acknowledge their fault: the other which obstinately persist in their error, punishing with the rod of district seuerity according to the decrees of the Canons and lawes of the Church, that by theyr example, such as stand, may remaine in fayth, and they which are fallen may be reduced.

And if any shall object again, y^e Luther was condēned by the apostolicke see before he was heard, & y^t his cause ought first to haue bene heard & iudged, before he was cōuinced: you shall aunswere, that those * thinges which pertaine to faith, are to be beleued for theyr owne authority, & not to be proued. Take away (sayth Ambrose) argumentes, where fayth is sought, there the fishers, not the Philosophers must bee trusted. Truth it is, & we graunt no lesse, but the lawfull defence & hearing ought not to bee denyed in such cases, where the question is of the fact, whether it were done or not, as whether he spake, preached, writ, or not? But where the matter is of Gods law, or in cause of the sacramentes, there must we alwayes stand to the authority of holy fathers & of the Church. Now all thinges almost wherein Luther dissenteth from other, are reproved before by diuers Councils. Neither ought those things to be called into questiō, which haue bene defined before by general cōūcels, & y^e vniuersal-Church, but ought to be receiued by fayth: For els he doth iniury to the Synode of the church, who so bringeth again into controuersy thinges once rightly discussed & settled. Otherwise what certaynty can there be amongst mē, or what end shal there be of contēding & disputing, if it shalbe lawfull for euery lewd & presumtuous person, to decline from the thinges which haue bene receiued and ratified by the cōsent, not of one, nor of fewe, but of so many ages, so many wise heades, & of the Catholicke church, which God neuer permitteth to erre in matters vnto fayth apperteyning? And how can it otherwise be chosen, but that all muste bee ful of disturbance, offences, and confusion, vnlesse the thinges which haue bene once, yea many times by ripe iudgement cōstituted, be obserued of al mē as inuiolable? Wherefore, seing Luther and his felowes do cōdemne the Councils Page 857 of holy fathers, do burne the holy canons, do cōfound al things at their pleasure, & do disquiet the whole world, what remaineth, but that they are to be reiected & exploded, as enemies and perturburs of publike peace?

Further this you shal say vnto them, y^t we confesse our selues, & deny not, but that God suffreth this persecutiō to be inflicted vpon his churche,* for the sinnes of men, especially of priests and prelates of the clergie. For certain it is, that the hand of the Lord is not shortned, that he cannot saue: but our sinnes haue diuided betwene God and vs: and therfore he hideth his face from vs, that he wil not heare vs. The scripture testifieth, that the sinnes of the people doe issue out from the sinnes of the priests. And therfore saith Chrysostom,) Christ going about to cure the sicke citie of Hierusalē, first entred into the temple, to correct the sinnes of the priestes, like a good phisitiō, which first beginneth to cure the disease from the very rote. We know that in this * holy see there haue bene many abhominable thinges of long time wrought & practised: as abuses in matters spirituall, and also excesses in life and maners, and all thinges turned cleane cōtrary. And no maruell if the * sicknesse first beginning at the heade, that is, at the high Bishops, haue descended afterward to inferior prelates. Al we (that is, prelates of the church) haue declined euery one after his owne waye. Neither hath there ben one that hath don good, no not one. Wherefore nede it is y^t al we geue glory to God, and that we humble our soules to him, considering euery one of vs, from whence hee hath fallen,* and that euery one doe iudge himself, before he be iudged of God in the rod of his furie. For the redresse wherof you shal insinuate

vnto them, and promise in our behalfe, that in vs shall be lacking no diligence of a better reformation, first beginning w^t our owne court, that like as this contagion first from thence descended into all the inferior partes: * so reformation & amendement of all that is amisse from the same place againe, shall take his beginning. Wherunto they shall finde vs so much the more ready, for that we see y^e whole worlde so desirous of the same. Wee our selues (as you knowe) neuer sought this dignity, but rather coueted, if we otherwise might, to lead a priuate life, and in a quiete state to serue God. And also would vtterly haue refused the same, had not the feare of God, and the maner of our election, and misdoubting of some schisme to follow after, haue vrged vs to take it. And thus tooke we the burden vpon vs, not for any ambition of dignity, or to enrich our frends, and kinsfolks, but only to be obediēt to the will of God, and for reformation of the catholique church, and for reliefe of the pore, and especially for the aduancement of learning & learned men, with such other things moe, as apperteineth to the charge of a good Bishop & lawful heire of S. Peter. And though all errors, corruptions, and abuses, be not straight wayes amended by vs, men ought not therat to maruell. The sore is great and farre growen, * and is not single, but of manifolde maladies together compacted, & therefore to the curing therof we must proceede by litle and litle, first beginning to cure the greater and the most dangerous, least while we intend to amend all, we destroy all. All sodaine mutations (sayth Aristotle) in a common wealth, are perilous. And he that wringeth too hard, straineth out bloud. Prou. 30

And whereas in your last letters you wryte, that the Princes complaine, howe this See hath bene and is preiudiciall to their ordinaunces and agreements: heereunto you shall thus aunswere: That suche excesses which haue bene done before our time, ought not to be imputed to vs, who alwayes haue misliked these derogations, and therefore bidde them so assure them selues, that though they had required no such matter, we of our owne accorde, woulde haue refrained the same, partly for that it is good, right, & reason, that euery one haue that which is due vnto hym: and partly also that the sayd noble natiō of Germany shal haue by vs no hinderance, but furtherance rather, so much as in vs shall lie to do for them.

And as touching the processes, whyche they desire to haue remoued away a Rota, and to be referred down to the parties, * you shall signifie vnto them that we will gratifie them herein asmuch as honestly we may. But because our auditors are now presently absent from the citie by reason of the Plague, wee can not be infourmed as yet, touching the qualitie of those processes. Assoone as they shall returne (which we hope will be shortly) we shal do in the Princes fauour, what reasonably we may.

Further, wheras we vnderstande, that there be many fresh flourishing wits in Germanie, and many well learned men, which are not seene vnto, but be reiected and vnlooked to, while in the meane time, throughe the Apostolicall prouisions, dignities, * and promotions are bestowed vpon tapsters, and dauners, and vnfitte persons: we wil therefore that you inquire out what those learned men are, and what be their names, to the intent that when any such vacation of benefices in Germany do fal, we of our voluntary motiō, may prouide for them accordingly. For why, we consider howe much it is against Gods glory, * and against the health and the edification of soules, that benefices and dignities of the church, haue now so long time bene bestowed vpon vnworthy and vnable persons.

As touching the subsidie for the Hungarians, we send no other information to you, but that which we gaue you at your departure, saue onely that we will you to extende your diligence therein, as we also will do the like, in soliciting the matter with the princes and cities of Italie, that euery one may helpe after his abilitie. Ex Orth. Gratio.

These popish suggestions and instructions of the Pope himselfe against Luther, I thought (Christen reader) to set before thine eyes, to the intent thou maiest see here (as in a paterne, and go no further) all the crimes, obiectiōs, exclamations, suspitions, accusations, slāders, offenses, contumelies, rebukes, vntruths, cauillations, railings,* what soeuer they haue deuised, or can deuise, inuent, articulate, denounce, infer, or surmise against Luth. and his teaching. They crie, heresy, heresy: but they prooue no heresy. They cry, Councils, Councils: and yet none trāsgresseth Councils more then themselues. If Councils go alwaies with Scripture, then Luther. goethe with them. If Councils doe iarre sometime from the Scripture, what heresie is in Luth. in standing with Scripture against those councils? And yet neither hath he hitherto spoken against any councils, saue onely the Councell of Constance. They inflame kings and princes against Luth▪ and yet they haue no iust cause wherefore. They accuse him for teaching libertie.* If they meane the libertye of fleshe, they accuse him falsely: if they meane the liberty of spirit, they teach wickedly, which teach contrary: and yet when they haue all sayde, none liue so licentiously as themselues. They pretēde the zeale of the Church, but vnder that church lieth their owne priuate welfare, and belly cheare. They charge Luth. with disobedience, and none are so disobedient to Magistrates and ciuile lawes, as they. They lay to his charge, oppression and spoiling of lay mens goods: and who spoileth the lay mēs liuings, so much as the Pope? For probation whereof, let the Popes accountes be cast,* what hee raketh out of euery Christian realme. Briefly, turne only the names of the persons, and in steede of Luthers name, place the name of the Pope, and the effect of this letter aboue prefixed, shal agree vpon none more aptly, then vpon the Pope him selfe, and his owne sectaries. Now to proceede further in the proces of this foresaide matter, let vs see what the Princes againe for their partes answere to these foresaide suggestions and instructions of Pope Adrian, sent vnto them in their diete of Norenborg, in the cause of Luther: the answer of whom here foloweth vnder wrytten.

The answere of the noble and reuerend princes and states of the sacred Romane Empire, exhibited to the Popes ambassador.

THE noble & renowned Prince Lord Ferdinandus,* Lieutenant to the Emperors maiesty, with other reuerend pieres in Christ, and mighty princes Electors, and other states and orders of this present assemblie of the Romane Empire in Norenborge conuented, haue gratefully receiued, and diligently perused the letters sent in forme of a Brief, with the instructions also of that most holy father in Christ, and L.L. Adrian, the hie Bishop of the holy and vniuersall Church of Rome, presented vnto them in the cause of Luthers faction.

By the which foresaid letters and wrytings, first where as they vnderstande his holinesse to haue bene borne, and to haue had his natie origine and parentage out of this noble nation of Germanie, they doe not a little reioyce.* Of whose egregious vertues and ornaments both of minde and body, they haue heard great fame and commendation, euen from his tender yeares: by reason wherof they are so muche the more ioyous of his aduancement and preferment, by such consent of election, to the hie tippe of the Apostolicall dignitie, and yeelede to God most hartie thanks for the same: praying also from the bottome of their hearts, for his excellent clemencie, and perpetuall glory of his name, and for healthe of soules, and incolumitie of the vniuersall Church, that GOD wil geue his holines long continuance of felicity. Hauing no misdout, but that by such a ful & consenting election of such a pastor of the vniuersall catholike church, great profite and commoditie will ensue. Which thing to hope and looke for, his holinesse openeth to them an euident declaration in his owne letters, testifying Page 858 and protesting what a care it is to him both day & night, how to discharge his pastorall function, in studying for the health of the flocke to him committed: and especially in conuertinge the minds of Christian princes, from warre to peace: declaring moreouer what subsidie and reliefe his holinesse hath sent to the souldiers of Rhodes. &c. All which things they perpēding with them selues, conceiue exceeding hope and comfort in their mindes, thus reputing and trusting that this cōcord of Christian princes, wil be a g•eat helpe and stay to the better quieting of things now out of frame: without which neither the state of the cōmon welth, nor of Christian religion can be rightly redressed, and much lesse the tyrannie of the barbarous Turke repressed.

Wherfore, the excellent prince, Lord Lieutenant to the Emperors maiestie, with the other princes Electors, and orders of this present assemble, most hartily doe pray that his holines wil persist in this his purpose & diligence, as he hath vertuously begun, leauing no stone vnremoued, how the disagreeing hearts of Christē princes may be reduced to quiet and peace: * or if that will not be, yet at least some truce and intermission of domestical dissensions may be obtained for the necessity of the time now present, wherby all Christians may ioine their power together, with the helpe of God, to go against the Turke, & to deliuer the people of Christ from his barbarous tyrannie and bondage: Whereunto both the noble prince Lord Lieutenant, and other princes of Germany, wil put to their helping hands, to the best of their abilitie.

And wheras by the letters of his holines, with his instruction also exhibited vnto them by his Legate, they vnderstand, that hys holines is afflicted with great sorow, for the prospering of Luthers sect, * wherby innumerable soules committed to his charge, are in danger of perdition, & therefore his holines vehemently desireth some speedy remedy against the same to be provided, with an explication of certaine necessary reasons & causes, wherby to moue the Germane princes therunto, and that they will tender the execution of the Apostolique sentence, and also of the Emperours edict, set forth touching the suppression of Luther: to these the L. Lieutenant and other princes and states doe answere, that it is to them no lesse grieffe and sorow, then to his holines, and also do lament as much for these impieties and perils of soules, and inconueniences which grow in the religion of Christ, either by the sect of Luther, or any otherwise. Further, what help or counsel shall lie in them, for the extirping of errors, & decay of soules health, what their moderation can do, they are willing and ready to performe, considering how they stand bound & subiect, as wel to the Popes holines, as also to the Emperours maiestie.

But why the sentence of the Apostolike see, & the Emperours edict against Luther, hath not ben put in execution hetherto, ther haue bene (said they) causes great and vrgent, which haue led thē therto:  as first in weying and considering with them selues, that great euils & inconuenience wold therupon ensue. For the greatest part of the people of Germany haue alwaies had thys persuasion, & now by reading of Luthers bokes, are more therin cōfirmed, that great greeuances and inconueniences haue come to this nation of Germanie, by the courte of Rome: and therefore if they shuld haue proceded with any rigor in executing the Popes sentence,  & the emperors edict, the multitude would conceiue & suspect in their minds, this to be done for subuerting the verity of the gossell, & for supporting & confirming the former abuses & greuances, wherupon great warres & tumults (no doubt) would haue ensued: which thing vnto the princes & states ther, hath ben wel perceiued by many arguments. For the auoiding wherof, they thought to vse more gentle remedies, seruing more oportunely for the time.

Againe, wheras the reuerend L. Legate (said they) in the name of the Popes holines hath ben instructed, to declare vnto thē, that God suffreth this persecution to rise in the Church for the sins of men,* & that his holines doth promise, therefore to begin the reformation with his owne court, that as the corruption first sprāg from thence to the inferior parts, so the redres of al againe should first begin with the same: Also, wheras his holines, of a good & fatherly heart, doth testify in his letters, that he himselfe did alwaies mislike that the Court of Rome should intermeddle so much, and derogate from the cōcordates of the princes, and that his holines doeth fully purpose in that behalfe, during his papacie, neuer to practise the like, but so to endeuer, that euery one, and especially the nation of the Germanes may haue their proper due and right, graunting especially to the sayde nation, his peculiar fauour: who setteth not by these premisses, but that this moste holy B. omitteth nothing, which a good father or a deuout pastor may or ought to do to his sheepe? Or who wil not be moued hereby to a louing reuerence, and to amendement of his defaultes, namely seeing hys holinesse so intendeth to accomplish the same in deede, which in word he promiseth, according as he hath begon.

And thus vndoubtedly both the noble L. Lieutenant, & all other princes & states of the empire, wel hope that he wil, and pray most hartily that he may doe, to the glory of our eternall God, to the health of soules, & to the tranquillitie of the publike state. For vnles such abuses and greuances, with certain other articles also, which the seculare princes (assigned purposely for the same) shall draw out in wryting, shall be faithfully reformed,* there is no true peace & cōcord betwene the ecclesiasticall & seculer estates, nor any true extirpation of this tumult, & errors in Germanie that cā be hoped. For partly by lōg warres, partly by reason of other greuances & hinderances this nation of Germanie hath bene so wasted and consumed in money, that vnneth it is able to sustaine it selfe in priuate affaires, and necessary vpholding of iustice wythin it selfe: much lesse then to minister aid and succor to the kingdom of Hungary, & to the Croatians, against the Turke. And wheras al the states of the sacred Romane Empire doe not doubt, but the Popes holines doth right well vnderstād how the Germane princes did graunt & condescend for the money of Annates to be leaued to the see of Rome for terme of certen yeres,* vpon condition that the said mony shuld be conuerted to maintain warre against the turkish infidels, and for defence of the catholike faith: & wheras the terme of these yeres is now expired long since, when as the said Annates should be gathered, and yet that mony hath not ben so bestowed to that vse, whereto it was first graunted: therefore if any such necessitie should nowe come, that any publike helpes or contributions against the Turke, should be demanded of the Germane people, they would aunswer againe, why is not that money of Annates reserued many yeares before to that vse, nowe to bee bestowed and applied, and so woulde they refuse to receiue any more such burdens for that cause to be laid vpon them.

Wherefore the said Lord Lieutenant, and other Princes & degrees of the Empire make earnest petition, that the Popes holines wil with a fatherly consideration expend the premisses, and surcease hereafter to require such Annates,* which are accustomed after the death of bishops and other prelates, or ecclesiasticall persons, to be payd to the court of Rome, and suffer them to remaine to the chamber of the Empire, whereby iustice & peace may be more cōmodiously administred, the tranquillitie of the publike state of Germanie mainteined, and also by the same, due helpe may be ordeined and disposed to other Christen potentates in Germanie, agaynst the Turke, which otherwise without the same, is not to be hoped for.

Item, wheras the Popes holines desireth to be informed what way were best to take, in resisting these errors of the Lutherians: to this the Lord Lieutenant, with other Princes add nobles do answere, that whatsoever helpe or counsell they can deuise, with willing harts they will be ready therevnto. Seeing therefore the state, aswell ecclesiasticall, as temporall, is farre out of frame, and haue so much corrupted their wayes, and seeing not onely of Luthers part, and of his sect, but also by diuers other occasions besides, so many errors, abuses, & corruptions, haue crept in: much requisite and necessary it is, that some effectuall remedie be prouided, as well for redresse of the church, as also for repressing of the Turks tyrannie. Now what more present or effectuall remedy can be had, the Lord Lieutenant, with other estates and princes do not see, then this, that the Popes holines,* by the consent of the Emperors maiestie, do summon a free Christen Councell in some conuenient place of Germanie, as at Strausburgh, or at Mentz, or at Colen, or at Metz, and that with as much speede as conueniently may be, so that the congregating of the said Councell be not deferred aboue one yere:* in the which Councell it may be lawfull for euery person that there shall haue interest, either temporal or ecclesiastical, freely to speake & consult, to the glory of God, and health of soules, and the publike wealth of Christendome, without impeachment or restraynt, whatsoever oth, or other bond to the contrary notwithstanding: yea and it shalbe euery good mans part there to speake, not onely freely, but to speake that which is true, to the purpose, and to edifying, & not to pleasing or flattering, but simply and vprightly to declare his iudgements, without all fraud or guile.

And as touching by what waies these errors & tumultes of the Germane people may best be staid and pacified in the meane time, vntil the councell be set: the foresaid L. Lieutenant,* with the other princes, therupon haue cōsulted & deliberated, that for as much as Luth. and certaine of his fellowes be within the territorye and dominion of the noble duke Friderike, the saide L. Lieutenant and other states of the Empire shall so labour the matter wyth the aforementioned Prince duke of Saxonie,* that Luther and his followers shall not wryte, sette foorth, or print any thing during the sayde meane space, neither doe they doubt but that the sayde noble prince of Saxonie, for his Christian pietie, and obedience to the Romane Empire, as becōmeth a Prince of such excellent vertue, will effectually condescend to the same.

Item, the said L. Lieutenant and princes shal labour so with the preachers of Germany, that they shall not in their sermōs teach or blow into the peoples eares, such matters, whereby the multitude may be moued to rebelliō or vpror, or be induced into error: and that they shall preach & teach nothing, but the true, pure, sincere,* & holy gospell, & aproued scripture, godly, mildly, & christianly, according to the doctrine and exposition of the Scripture, being approued and receiued of Christes Church, abstaining from all suche thynges, whych are better vnknownen, then learned of the Page 859 people, and which to be subtilly searched, or deeply discussed, it is not expedient. Also that they shall mooue no contention of disputation among the vulgare sorte, but what so euer hangeth in controuersie, the same they shall reserue to the determination of the Councell to come.

Item, the Archbishops, Bishops, and other prelates wythin their diocesse shall assigne godly and learned men, hauing good iudgement in the scripture, which shall diligently and faithfully attende vpon such preachers: * and if they shall perceiue the sayde preachers either to haue erred, or to haue vttered any thing vnconueniently, they shall godly, mildely, and modestly aduertise, and informe them thereof, in such sort as no man shall iustly complaine the trueth of the Gospell to be impeached. But if the preachers continuing still in their stubbornesse shall refuse to be admonished, and will not desist from their lewdnesse, then shall they be restrained and punished by the Ordinaries of the place, wyth punishment for the same conuenient.

Furthermore, the sayde Princes and nobles shall prouide and vndertake, so much as shall be possible, that from hencefoorth during the foresaide time, * no new booke shalbe imprinted, especially none of these famous libels, neither shall they priuily or apertly be sold. Also order shalbe taken amongst al potestates, that if any shall set out, sell, or imprint any newe worke, it shall first be seene and perused of certaine godly learned, and discrete men appoynted for the same: * so that if it be not admitted and approoued by them, it shal not be permitted to be published in print, or to come abrode. Thus by these meanes, they hope wel, that the tumults, errorrs, and offenses among the people, shal cease, especially if the Popes holinesse himselfe shall begin with an orderly & due reformation, in the foresaid greuances aboue mentioned, and wil procure such a free and Christian Councel as hath bene sayde, and so shall the people be well contented and satisfied. Or if the tumult shall not so fully be calmed, as they desire, yet the greater parte thus will be quieted, for all such as be honest and good menne, no doubt, will be in great expectation of that generall Councell, so shortly and now ready at hand to come.

*Finally, as concerning priests which contract matrimonie, & religious men leauing their cloisters, wherof intimation was also made by the Apostolicall Legate, the foresaid princes do consider, that forsomuch as in the ciuile lawe there is no penaltie for them ordeined, they shalbe referred to the Canonick constitutions, to be punished thereafter accordingly: that is, by the losse of their benefices, and priuiledges, or other condigne censures: and that the said Ordinaries shall in no case be stopped or inhibited by the seculer powers, from the correction of such: but that they shal adde their helpe and fauour to the maintenance of ecclesiasticall iurisdiction, and shal direct out their publike edicts and precepts, that none shal impeach or prohibite the said ordinaries in their ecclesiasticall castigation, vpon such transgressors to be administred.

To conclude, the redoubted prince L. Lieutenaunt and other princes, estates, & orders of the publike Empire, vehemently and most heartily do pray and beseech, that the Popes holinesse, & the reuerend Lord his legate will accept and take all the premisses to be no otherwise spoken and meant, then of a good, free, sincere, & a Christian minde. Neither is there any thing, that al the aforesaid princes, estates, and nobles do more wish and desire, then the furtherance and prosperous estate of the holy Catholique church of Rome, and of his holinesse. To whose wishes, desires, & obedience they offer and commend themselues most ready, and obsequious, as faithfull children. Ex Orth. Grat.

Thus hast thou (louing reader) the full discourse both of the popes letter, and of his Legates instructions, with the aunswere also of the states of Germanie to the sayde letter and instructions, to them exhibited in the diete of Norenberge. In the which diet, what was concluded, and what order and consultation was taken, first touching the greeuances of Germanie, whych they exhibited to the Pope, then concerning a general councell to be called in Germanie, also for printing and preaching, & for priests mariage, hath bene likewise declared.*&c.

The occasion of this matter mooued against priests mariage, came first by the ministers of Strausburgh, which about this time began to take wiues, and therefore were cited by the bishop of Strausburgh to appeare before him at a certaine day,* as violaters of the lawes of holy Church, the holy fathers, the Bishops of Rome, and of the Emperours maiestie, to the preiudice both of their owne order of priesthood, and maiestie of almighty God: But they referred theyr cause to the hearing of the magistrats of the same citie, who being suiters for them vnto the Bishops, labored to haue the matter either released, or at least to be delaied for a time.*

Long it were to recite all the circumstances following vpon this diete or assemble of Norenberge, howe their decree was receiued of some, of some neglected, of diuers diuersly wrasted and expounded. Luther wryting his letters vpon the same decree, to the Princes, thus made his exposition of the meaning thereof, that where as the preachers were commanded to preach the pure Gospel, after the doctrine of the church receiued, he expounded the meaning therof to be, not after the doctrine of Tho. Aquine, or Scotus or suche other late schoole wryters, but after the doctrine of Hilarie, Cyprian, & Austen, and other ancient doctors, and yet the doctrine of the said aunciters no farther to be receiued, but as they should agree with the Scripture.

Secondly, as concerning new bokes not to be sold nor prin•ed, he expounded the meaning therof to extend no farther, but y^e text of the Bible and bookes of the holy Scripture might be Printed notwithstanding, and published to all men.

And as for the prohibition of Priestes mariage, he wryteth to the Princes, and desireth them to beare wyth the weakenes of men, declaring that braunch of their decree to be very hard, which though it stand with the Popes law, yet it accordeth not with the Gospell, neither conduceth to good maners, nor to honestie of life. &c.

Furthermore, where as in the same session of Norenberge, mētion was made before of certaine greuances collected to the number of an hundreth,*and exhibited to the Bishop of Rome, it were tedious likewise to inserte them all: yet to geue some tas• of a few, I iudge it not vnprofitable: to the entēt, that the world may see and iudge, not only what abuses and corruptions moste monstrous and incredible, lay hid vnder the glorious title of the holy church of Rome: but also may vnderstand, with what hipocrisie & impudēcie the pope taketh vpon him so greuously to complaine vpon M. Luther, and other: when in all the vniuersall Church of Christe, there is none so muche to be blamed all manner of wayes, as he himselfe, according as by these hainous complaints of the Germain princes, here folowing against the popes intolerable oppressions & greuances may right well appeare. Which greuances• being collected by the Princes of Germanie at Norenberge, to the number of an hundreth, I wish might be fully and at large setfoorth to the studious Reader, whereby might appeare the subtile sleightes and intolerable fraudes of that pretended Church. But for somuch as it were to long to comprehend the whole, I haue thought good to exhibite some part therof for example, as geuing only a certain tast, wherby thou mayest more easely conceiue, what to thinke and esteeme of all the residue, which both to me wold be tedious to write, and perhaps more greuous to thee, to heare.

Certaine greuances or oppressions of Germanie, against the courte of Rome, collected and exhibited by the Princes, at the councel of Norenberge, to the number of an C. wherof certaine specialties here folow.

AMongest other burthens & greuances, this is not least to be regarded: y^t many things are prohibited by mens constitutions, & many things exacted, whiche are not prohibited or commāded by any precept of God: as the innumerable obstacles of matrimonie inuēted and brought in,* wherby mē were forbid to mary in cases of kindred, which stande vpon diuers degrees: as vpon affinitie, publike honesty, spiritual kindred, kindred by law, & kindred in blud. &c. and likewise in forbidding y^e vse of meates, which God hath created for mans necessitie, and taught by the Apostle indifferently to be receiued with thanks geuing.* By these and many other such humane cōstitutions, men are yoked in bondage, vntil by mony they obtained some dispēsation of those lawes, at theyr handes which made them: so y^t money shall make that lawfull for rich men, which is clearely prohibited vnto the poore. By these snares of mens lawes & constitutions, not onely great summes of money are gathered out of Germanie, & caried ouer the Alpes, but also great iniquitie is sprong vp amongst christians: many offences and priuie hatreds do rise, by reason that poore men do see themselues intangled with these snares, for no other cause, but for that they doe not possesse the thornes of the Gospel, for so Christ doth often call riches.

Times forbidden.

THE like practise also is to be sene in the times restrained from Mariage, by the heades of the Church of Rome,* from the Septuagesima Sunday, somewhat before Lent: when as notwithstanding bothe the Clergye and the seculars in the meane time wil liue licentiously, and that openly in the face of all the world. But this interdict proceedeth to this effect: if a man shal presume so to do vpon his owne liberty, without compounding. But otherwise if there be any hope of money, then that which was before vnlawful, is now made lawful for euery man to do frely. And this is Page 860 also an other drawing net, wherby great summes of mony are dragged out of the Germanes purses. Wherupon also hangeth an other greuance as great as thys, that in|suing out a dispēsation, the state of the poore and of the rich is not indifferently weyed: For where the rich escapeth many times for little or naught, & goeth cleare away, the poore man shalbe sure to pay for the shot.

A complaint for selling remission of sinnes for money.

BUT especially the burden and greuaunce of the Popes Indulgences and Pardons be most importable: when as the Bishops of Rome, vnder pretēse of building some church in Rome, or to warre against the Turke, do make out their indulgences with their bulles: perswading and promising to the simple people, straunge & wonderfull be•i•es of remission a Poena & culpa, that is, from all theyr sinnes, and punishment due for the same, and that not in this life onely, but also after this life, to them that be deade burning in the fire of purgatorie. Through the hope and occasion whereof, true pietie is almost extinct in all Germanie, while euery euill disposed person promiseth to him self for a litle money, licence and impunitie to do what him lusteth: Wherupon foloweth fornication, incest, adulterie, periurie, homicide, robbing and spoyling, rapine, vsurye, with a whole floud of all mischiefes. &c.

A complaint against the Immunities of Clergie men.

Item, whosoever hee be that hath receiued any Ecclesiastical orders, great or small, thereby he doth contende to be freed from al punishmēt of the secular magistrate, how great offēce soeuer he do: neither doth he vnaduisedly presume therupon, but is mainteined in that liberty to sinne, by the principal estates of the clergy. For it hath often ben seene, that whereas by the canonicall lawes, priestes are forbidden to marry, afterward they diligently labour and go about day and night to attempt and try the chastitie of matrones, virgines, and of the wiues, daughters and sisters of the lay men: and through their continual instance and labour, partly with gifts and rewards, and flattering wordes, partly by their secrete confessions (as they cal thē) as it hath bene founde by experience, they brynge to passe that many virgins and matrones, which otherwise wold be honest, haue beene ouercome and mooued to sinne and wickednesse: and it happeneth oftentimes, that they do detaine and keepe away the wiues, and daughters frō theyr husbands and fathers, threatning them wyth fire & sword that do require them againe. Thus through theyr raging lust, they heap & gather together innumerable mischieues and offences. It is to be maruailed at, howe licentious wythout punishmente they daile offende in robberyes,* murther, accusing of innocents, burning, rapine, theft, and counterfaiting of fals coyne, beside a thousand other kinds of mischieues, contrary and against al lawes both of God and manne, not wythout great offence of others, trusting onely vppon the fredome and liberty of sinne, whych they vsurpe vnto themselues by the priuiledge of their canons. For when as they once perceiue that it is lawfull for them to doe what they lust without controlment, then they doe not onely contemne the ciuill Magistrates, but also theyr Bishops and superiors, whatsoever they either cōmaund or forbid them to do.

And moreouer, to y^e intent they may be the more mayntained in their mischiefe & wickednes, contrary to all reason and equitie, it is partly forbidde the Archbishops and Bishops, to condemne these malefactours openly, except they be first disgraced, which must be done with sumptuousnes and pompe: wherby it hapneth very seldome, that those annoynted naughty packes, do receiue condigne punishment. Besides that, the bishops are so bound by theyr chapters, that they dare not punish any person which hath taken orders by the Canonicall lawes, be the punishment neuer so light or smal. By reason wherof the matter so falleth out, that through this vnequall partiality betwene the laitie and the Clergie, great hatred, discord, and dissention is sprong and risen. It is also not a litle to be feared, that if the Clergie which are the cause of this greuance, and of other mischiefes, (whych daily they doe proceede to perpetrate) haue not like lawes, equall iudges, and like punishment, their offensiue life will mooue & stirre vp some great tumults and sedition amongst the cōmon people, not only against the Clergie themselues, but also against the superiours and magistrates, for that they leaue so notorious offences vnpunished.

Wherefore necessity & iustice doth require, that the sayde preiudiciall priuiledges of the Clergie shoulde be abrogate and taken away, and in their place bee prouided, ordained and decreed, that the Clergy, of what order or degre soeuer they be, shal haue like lawes, like iudgement, and punishment as the laitie haue:* so that they shal pretend no prerogatiue or fredome in like offence, more then the lay mā, but that euery one of the Cleargie offending vnder the iudge, where the offence is committed, shall be punished for hys fact, according to the measure and equalitie of his offence, in such like maner as other malefactours are, with the punishment apoynted by the common lawes of the Empire: which thing (without doubt) wil please the true ministers of the church, such as are honest and learned, that they will not thincke their power and authoritie thereby in any case diminished. By this meanes it shall be brought to passe, that suche as are of the Clergie onely by name, and otherwise, naughty wicked men, through the obedience due vnto their magistrates, shalbe compelled to liue more honestly: and al sedition and priuie hatred betwene them and the laitie shall be put away, and finally thereby the laitie shall be the more moued and stirred to loue and reuerence such of the Clergie as be of a sounde life.

¶Complaint of excommunication abused.

Item, at Rome and in other places many Christiāns are excōmunicate by the Archbishops, Bishops, or by their Ecclesiastical iudges, for prophane causes, through the desire and couetousnes of money, & lucre.* The cōsciences of men which are weake in fayth, thereby are burthened and brought vnto desperation: and finally, for money & luke, a matter of no importaūce is made to tend to the destruction both of body & soule, contrary both to the law of God and mā, for somuch as no mā ought to be excommunicate but onely for heresie, or for some haynous fact perpetrate, nor to be counted as separate frō the Christian Catholicke Church, as the Scriptures do witnes: Therefore the princes, nobles, states, & layty of the Sacred Empire, desire & require the Popes holynes, that as a faythful Christian & louyng father, he will remoue the sayd burthen of excommunication vsed both in the sea of Rome, & also in the seas of all other Archbishops and Ecclesiasticall iudges: and finally, decree that no man shall hereafter be excommunicate, but onely for a manifest conuict crime of heresie. For it is to wicked a thyng, that faythfull Christians for euery light offence, touchyng any temporall goodes or gayne, or for any other worldly matter, but onely for obstinacie of heresie or some great enormitie, should be excluded from almighty God, and the Catholicke congregation.

¶The Church burdened with number of holy dayes.

Moreouer, the common people are not a litle oppressed with the great nūber of holy dayes, for that there are now so many holy dayes, that the husbādmē haue scarcely tyme to gather y^e frutes of y^e earth which they haue brought forth with so great labour & trauayle,* beyng often in daūger of hayle, rayne, and other stormes: which fruites notwithstanding, if they were not letted with so many holy daies, they would gather & bring home without any losse. Besides that, vpon those holy daies, innumerable offences are committed & done, rather then God honoured or worshipped. Which thing is so manifest, that it nedeth no witnes. For that cause the estates of the sacred Empire thinke it best & most profitable for the Christian common wealth, that this great nūber of holy dayes, should be diminished, whych ought rather to be celebrate in spirite & veritie, then wyth the externall worship, and be better kept with abstinence from sinne.

Suspending and halowing of Churchyardes gainfull to the Pope, and chargeable to the people.

Furthermore, if it happē that 2. or more do fight without any weapon in a Churchyard, onely with their fists,* or by the heare, that there be neuer so litle bloud shed, by & by y^e clergy haue recourse to enterdiment, & doe not suffer any more Christen burials there to be done, before that all the citizens with great pomp & expenses do cause it to be consecrated & halowed againe with no lesse charge, then when at the first, of a prophane place, it was halowed for burial: all which things do redound to the charges & costes of the laity. And though the churches or chapels be neuer so litle Page 861 which are so hallowed: yet the suffraganes do burden and oppresse the simple poore housholdes, be they neuer so bare or nedy, with superfluous expenses, and require moreouer gifts of the people, which is not for theyr ease to geue.

Also the suffragans haue inuēted that no other, but only themselues may baptise belles for the lay people.* Wherby the simple people, vpō the affirmation of the suffragans do beleue, that such belles so baptised, wil driue away euill spirits and tempests: wherupon a great number of godfathers are appoynted, especially such as are riche: which at the time of the baptising, holding the rope wherwithal the bel is tied, the suffragan speaking before them, as is accustomed in the baptising of young children, they altogether do answer,* & geue the name to the bell. The bell hauing a new garment put vpon it, as is accustomed to be don vnto the Christians, after this they go vnto sumptuous bākets, wherunto also the gossips are biddē, that therby they might geue the * greater reward, and the suffraganes with their chaplaines and other ministers, are sumptuously fed. Yet doth not this suffice, but that the suffragane also muste haue a rewarde which they doe call a small gifte or present: whereby it happeneth oftentimes, that euen in small villages, a 100. florens are consumed and spent in such christnings: which is not onely superstitious, but also contrary vnto Christian religiō, a seducing of the simple people, and mere extortion. Notwithstanding the Bishops, for to enriche their Suffraganes, doe suffer these things and other farre worse: wherefore such wicked and vnlawfull things ought to be abolished.

Complaint against Officials and other Ecclesiasticall iudges.

THE Officials also of Archbishops for the most part, are vnlearned & vnable men,* besides that, men of euil conditions, taking thought for nothing but onely for money. Also, howe corruptly they liue and continue in notorious crimes & transgressions, it is daily sene. Wherby the laity, whom they ought to correct and punish for their offences, & instruct in Christian godlinesse, are not in any poynt, by them amēded, but rather by them encouraged and confirmed in their offences. Besides this, the laitie are miserably robbed & spoiled of their goodes, by these light & vile officials. In whose conscience there is no sparke of christian pity and godlines, but only a wicked desire, & couetousnesse. Which thing the archbishops and bishops, if they were in dede such as they are called, that is to say, the pastours and shepheards of Christ, without doubt, they would no lōger suffer, or commit Christes flocke, to such wicked and offensiue pastors to be fed and nourished.

Howe the Ecclesiasticall iudges do annexe certaine special causes, being lay matters vnto their owne iurisdiction, and will by no meanes, release the same.

WHensoeuer any causes are pleaded in iudgement before an Ecclesiasticall iudge,* either for rauishyng of virgins, or for children vnlawfully borne out of wedlocke, or for seruants wages, or any other matters touching widowes, the Ecclesiasticall iudges being called vpon by the superiors of the laitie which do contend, they will neyther deferre that iudgement, or by any meanes wil be intreated to remit them to theyr ordinarie iurisdiction.

The gaine that riseth to the Clergie, by false sclaunders and rumours.

*IT happeneth oftentimes, that men and women, through sinister and false reports & sclanders, are brought before the Official or Ecclesiasticall iudge, as men guilty, and shall not be declared innocēt, before they haue cleared thēselues by an othe. Whych purgation so made, they are restored again to their former estimation. And albeit that the damages & costes ought to be repaide againe, vnto such as be so falsly accused, yet notwithstanding the innocents thēselues, are forced to pay two gildernes and a quarter, for their letters of absolution. And this is the cause, why that the Officials & other Ecclesiasticall iudges, do so greedely folowe the action of such vnlawful, false, & slanderous accusatiōs, chalenging the hearinge thereof onelye vnto them selues: which thyng (no doubt) redoundeth to the great and most singular hurt and detriment of all men: For oftentimes it happeneth that women falling together in cōtention thorowe anger, hatred, or some other affection, do speake euill or slaunder one an other, and outrage somuch, that the one oftentimes accuseth the other, either of adoultry or witchery. Which thinge being brought before the Officiall, shee which throughe her anger had so slaundered the other, is forced by an othe to excuse and purge her selfe, that whatsoever iniurious or slanderous word she had spoken, came not of any deliberate purpose or intent, but through wrath and displeasure. In like maner the other whiche is accused either of adoultrie or sorcerie, is commaunded by an othe to declare her innocencie, that shee is not guiltie of those factes, so that it is euident vnto all men, that in such cases, whether they be guiltie or not guiltie, they must sweare, if they will keepe theyr good name and fame. Whereby not onely the vnlawfull luker of gaine and money is soughte, but also wilful periurie forced, and the seculare power and iudges letted from the punishment therof, so that contrary to all reason, offences do remaine vnpunished.

Complaint against spirituall iudges, taking Seculare causes from the Ciuile Magistrate.

ALL be it there be many causes so indifferent to both iurisdictions,* that they may be pleaded and punished as wel by the ciuill Magistrate, as ecclesiasticall iudge: notw^tstanding it happeneth oftentimes, that when as the ciuill Magistrates would exercise their office and iurisdiction in this behalfe, they are forbidden and letted by the Ecclesiasticall iudges vnder paine of excōmunication. Which thing if it should long continue, and be suffred, the Ecclesiasticall iudges would shortly take away all maner of causes from the ciuil Magistrate & his iurisdiction, which is vntolerable and derogatorie both vnto the Emperors maiesty, and other states of the Empire. And albeit that by the common lawes, manifest periuries, adulteries, withcrafts and such other like, may indifferently be punished by Ecclesiastical, or ciuil iudges for the time being, so that preuention in this behalfe taketh place: notw^tstanding the Ecclesiasticall iudges goe about to vsurpe vnto themselues and theyr iurisdiction, all suche maner of causes: which burthen and greuance the ciuill iurisdiction and power ought not to suffer.

A complaint against Ecclesiastical iudges, intermeddling with cases of the secular Court: but will not suffer their cases once to be touched of the other.

MOREouer, the Ecclesiasticall iudges saye,* that in suche case it is lawful for them to take prophane matters in to their hands, if the ciuil magistrate be found negligent in executing of iustice: but contrariwise they will not suffer y^t the like order shoulde be kept with them, neither will they permit that in Ecclesiasticall matters, any man may complaine vnto the ciuil Magistrate, for lack of iustice, and require the administration of iustice at his hand. Albeit, they do define all lawes generally common, & determine howe the Canon lawes may help and assist the ciuil, and contrariwise the ciuil lawes, the Canon.

Complaint against certaine misorders of the Cathedral Churches, for vsing double punishment for one offence, against the lawe.

FOrsomuch as it is forbidden both by gods law & mans,* y^t no man shuld be beaten with 2. rods, that is to say, be punished with 2. kinds of torments: worthely therefore do all wise men detest & abhorre the odious statutes of diuers cathedral churches, wherby murtherers, both men & women, & other, as wel light as greuous offenders, haue ben hetherto vexed & tormented: for hetherto it hath bene accustomed y^t such as wer guilty of murther & such other crimes (which they cal cases reserued vnto the bishops) after they had made their auricular confession, were cōpelled (to their great ignominy & shame) to do penance in the sight of all the people: which penāce were not so much to be disallowed, hearing some semblance of the institution of the primatiue churche, if so be it these busie officials, being contente therew^t, wold not extort more, and greater summes of money, then were right and lawful, and so punish those offenders with double punishment: wherew^tall it is to be marueiled, how many be offended and greeued. Howe wicked a thyng thys is, and howe farre it differeth from Christes institution, we will referre it to euery good conscience to iudge.

FUrthermore, the Officials being allured thorough the greedy and vnsatiable desire of money, do not only not Page 862 forbid vnlawful vsuries and gaines of mony, but also suffer and maintaine the same. Moreouer, they taking a yerely stipend and pension, do suffer the Clergy and other religious persons vnlawfully to dwel with their concubines and harlots, and to beget children by them. Bothe whych things, howe great pearil, offence and detriment they doe bring bothe vnto body and soule, euery man may plainely see (so that it neede not to be rehearsed) except he wil make himselfe as blinde as a mole.

Complaint of Officials permitting vnlawfull cohabitation with other, when the husband or wife are long absent.

FUrthermore, where it so happeneth (as it doeth oftentymes) that either the good manne or the good wife, by meanes of warre or some other vowe, hath taken in hande some long iourney, and so tarieth longer then serueth the appetite of the other, the Officiall taking a rewarde of the other, geueth licence to the party to dwell wyth any other person, not hauing first regard or making inquisitiō whether the husbād or wife being absent, be in health or dead: and because these their doings shoulde not be euill spoken of, they name it a tolleration or sufferance, not without greate offence vnto all men, and to the great contempte of holy matrimonie.

Complaint of Canons in Cathedrall Churches, which haue their B. sworne vnto them, before he be chosen.

*THis is also vnlawfull and plainly wicked, that tho Canons of Cathedrall Churches, in whose hand the principal part of Ecclesiastical iudgements, Sinodes, and censures do consist, and the Canons of other collegiate churches, which haue power and authoritie to chuse theyr Superiour and Bishop, will chuse none to their Bishop, except he binde himself first with an oth, and plainly sweare, yet and oftentimes is bound by bond and instrumēt̄s sealed wyth their seales to them and their Ecclesiasticall iudges, y^t in no matter, be it neuer so greuous, intollerable, or dishonest, he shall not be against them: and if it happen at any time that they doe offend, they may do it also wythout punishment for him.

Complaint against incorporations or impropertions and other pilling of the people, by Churchmen.

MAny parish churches are subiect vnto monasteries, & to the persons of other churches, by meanes of incorporations (as they call them) or otherwise,* whych they are bound also, according to the canon lawes, to foresee & looke vnto, by themselues, when as they do put them foorth vnto others to be gouerned, reseruing for the moste parte vnto themselues, the whole stipende of the benefices and tithes: and moreouer, aggrauate & charge the same wyth so great pensions, that the hireling priestes and other ministers of the Church, can not haue thereupon a decent or competent liuing: whereby it commeth to passe, that these hirelynge priestes (for that they must needes haue wherupon to liue) doe with vnlawfull exactions, miserably spoil and deuour the poore sheepe committed vnto them, & consume all theyr substaunce. For when as the Sacramentes of the aultare and of Baptisme are to be administred, or when the firste, the seuenth, the thirtie, and yere day must be kept, when auricular confession cōmeth to be heard,* the dead to be buried, or any other ceremony whatsoever, about the funerall is to be done: they will not do it freely, but extort and exact so much mony, as the miserable communalty is scarce able to disburse, and daily they do encrease and augment these their exactions, driuing the simple pouerty to the payment therof, by threatning them with excommunication, or by other waies, cōpelling them to be at charge: which otherwise through pouerty, are not able to maintein obsequies, yere mindes, and suche other like ceremonies, as to the funerals of the dead be appertaining.

Bying and selling of burials complained of.

IT is ordained by the Popes Canons, that buriall in the Church should be denied onely vnto them,* whych being known to be manifest & notorious offenders, haue departed this life w^tout receiuing of the sacrament. But the clergie not regarding those decrees, will not suffer suche as by chaunce are drowned, killed, slaine with falles, or fire, or otherwise by chance haue ended their liues, (albeit it be not euident, that they were in deadly sinne) to be buryed in the churches, vntill such time, as the wiues, children or friends of those men so dead, do with great summes of money purchase and buy the burial of them in the Churchyard.

Chaste and continent priestes compelled to pay tribute for concubines.

ALso in many places, the bishops & their Officials do not only suffer Priestes to haue concubines,*so that they paye certayne summes of money, but also compell continent and chaste Priestes, which liue without concubines, to paye tribute for concubines, affirming that the B. hath neede of money, which being payde, it shalbe lawfull for them, either to liue chaste or keepe concubines. Howe wicked a thing this is, euery man doeth well vnderstande and knowe.

These with many other burthens and greuances mo to the number of an hundreth, the secular states of Germanie deliuered to the Popes legate, hauing (as they sayd) many mo, and more greuous greuances besides these, which had likewise much nede of redresse: but because they would not excede the limites of reasonable breuity, they wold cōtent themselues (said they) with these aforesaid hundreth, reseruing the rest to a more apt and more conuenient oportunitie, stedfastly trusting & hoping, that when those hundreth greuances, already by them declared, should be abolished, the other would also decay, & fall with them. Of the which foresaid greuances and complaints here is moreouer to be noted, that a great part was offered vp before, to y^e Emperour, at the coūcel of wormes: but because no redresse therof did folowe, therefore the secular states of Germanie thought good to exhibiie the same now againe, with diuers moe annexed therunto, to Cheregatus the Popes Legate, in this present assēble of Norenberge,* desiring him to present the same to Pope Adrian. This was about the yere of our Lord 1523. Which being done, the assemble of Norenberge brake vp for a time, and was proroged to the nexte yeare following.

In this meane time Pope Adrian died. After him succeded pope Clemēt 7. Who the next yere folowing, whych was An. 1524. sent downe his Legate Cardinall Campeius, vnto the Councel of the Germane Princes assembled againe at Norenberge, about the moneth of March, with letters also to duke Friderick, full of many faire petitions, and sharp complaints. &c.* But as touching the greuances aboue mentioned, no word nor message at al was sent, neither by Campeius, nor by any other. Thus, where anye thing was to be complained of againste Luther, eyther for suppression of the liberty of the Gospel, or for vpholding of the Popes dignity, the Pope was euer ready with al diligence, to cal vpō the Princes: but where any redresse was to be required, for the publicke wealth of Christen people, or touching the necessary reformation of the church, herein the Pope neither geueth eare, nor answer.

And thus hauing discoursed such matters occurēt betwene the Pope & Princes of Germany, at the Synode of Norenberge, let vs now proceede, returning againe to the story of Luther: of whō ye heard before, howe he was kept secret & solitarie for a time, by the aduise and conueiance of certain nobles in Saxonie, because of the Emperours Edict, aboue mentioned. In the meane time, while Luther had thus absented hymselfe out of Wyttenberge,* Andraeas Carolostadius proceeding more roughly and egerly in causes of Religion, had stirred vp the people, to throw downe Images in the temples, beside other thinges moe. For the which cause, Luther returning again into the city, greatly misliked the order of their doings, and reprooued the rashnesse of Carolostadius, declaring,* that theyr proceedynges herein were not orderly: but that pictures & images ought first to be throwen out of the harts and consciences of men & that the people ought first to be taught: that we are sauēd before God, and please him onely by faith, and that Images serue to no purpose: this done, and the people well instructed, there was no danger in Images, but they would fall of their owne accord. Not that he repugned to the contrary (he saide) as though he would mainteine Images to stand or to be suffered: but that this ought to be done by the magistrate, and not by force, vppon euery priuate mannes head, without order and authority. Ex Ioan. Sled. lib. 3.

Furthermore, Luther wryting of Carolostadius,* affirmeth that he also ioyned with the sentēce of them, which began then to spread about certaine parts of Saxony, saying that they were taught of God, that al wickednes being vtterlye suppressed, and all the wicked doers slaine, a newe full perfection of all thyngs must be sette vp, and the innocent onely to enioy all things. &c.

Page 863The cause why Luther so stode against that violente throwing downe of Images, and against Carolostadius, seemeth partly to rise of this, by reason that Pope Adrian in his letters sent to the Princes and states of Germany, doth greuously complaine, and charge the sect of Luther, for sedition and tumultes, and rebellion against Magistrates, as subuerters and destroyers of all order and obedience, as appeareth by the words of the Popes letter before expressed, pag. 854. therefore M. Luther, to stoppe the mouth of such slanderers, and to preuent such sinister suspitions, was enforced to take this way, as he did: that is, to proceede, as much as he might, by order and authoritie.

¶Wherein are to be noted by y^e way two speciall points, touching the doctrine and doings of M. Luther especially for all such who in these our dayes, now abusing the name & authoritie of Luther, thinke themselues to be good Lutherians,* if they suffer Images stil to remaine in temples, and admit such things in the Church▪ which themselues do wish to be away. The first is the maner how and after what sort Luther did suffer such Images to stand. For although he assented not that the vulgare and priuate multitude tumultuously by violēce should rap them downe: yet that is no argument now for the Magistrate, to let them stand. And though he allowed not the Ministers to stirre vp the people, by forceable meanes to promote Religion: yet that argueth not, those magistrates to be good Lutherians, which may and should remoue them, and will not.

The second point to be noted is, to consider the cause why that Luther did so stand with standing of Images, which cause was time, and not his owne iudgement. For albeit in iudgement he wished them away, yet time so serued not therunto then, as it serueth now. For then the doctrine of Luther first beginning to spring, and being but in the blade, was not yet knowne whereto it tended, nor to what it would grow: but rather was suspected to tend to disobedience & sedition: and therefore the Pope hearing of the doings of Carolostadius in Wittenberge, and of other like, tooke his ground thereby to charge the sect of Luther with sedition, vprores, and dissolute libertie of life. And this was the cause, why Luther cōpelled then by necessitie of time, to saue hys doctrine from sclaunder of sedition and tumulte, beyng layd to hym by the Pope (as ye haue heard) was so much offended with Carolostadius and other, for their violence vsed against Images. For otherwise, had it not bene for the Popes accusations, there is no doubt, but Luther would haue bin as well cōtented with abolishing of Images and other monuments of Popery, as he was at the same time,* contented to write to the Friars Augustines for abrogating of priuate Masses. And therefore as Luther in this doing is to be excused,* the circumstances considered: so the like excuse perhaps will not serue the ouermuch curious imitation of certeine Lutherians in this present age now: which considering only the fact of Luther, do not marke the purpose of Luther, neyther do expend the circumstances and time of his doings: being not much vnlike to the ridiculous imitatours of King Alexander the great, which thought it not sufficient to follow him in his vertues, but they woulde also counterfeite him in his stouping and all other gestures besides:* but to these liuing now in the Church, in another age then Luther did, it may seeme (after my minde) sufficient to follow the same way after Luther, or to walke with Luther, to the kingdome of Christ, though they iumpe not also in euery foote steppe of his, and keepe euen the same pase, and turnings in all points, as he did.

And contrarywise of the other sorte, much lesse are they to be commended,* which running as much on the contrary string, are so precise, that because of one small blemish, or for a little stouping of Luther in the Sacrament, therefore they giue cleane ouer the reading of Luther, and fall almost in vtter contempt of his bookes. Whereby is declared not so much the nicenes and curiousnes of these our daies,* as y^e hinderance that cōmeth thereby to the Church, is greatly to be lamented. For albeit the Church of Christ (praised be the Lord) is not vnprouided of sufficient plenty of worthy and learned writers, able to instruct in matters of doctrine: yet in the chiefe points of our cōsolation, where the glory of Christ, and the power of his passion & strength of faith is to be opened to our conscience, & where the soule wrasteling for death and life, standeth in neede of serious consolation, the same may be sayd of Martin Luther, amongst all this other varietie of writers, that S. Cyprian was wont to say of Tertulian Da magistrum, geue me my maister. And albeit that Luther went a little awry, and dissented frō Zuinglius in this one matter of the Sacrament: yet in all other states of doctrine they did accord, as appeared in the Synode holdē at Marpurg, by prince Philip Lautgrauē of Hesse, which was in the yeare of our Lord. 1529. where both Luther, and Zuinglius were present, and conferryng together, agreed in these Articles:

1. On the vnitie, and Trinitie of God.* 2. In the Incarnation of the word. 3. In the passiō and resurrection of Christ. 4. In the Article of Originall sinne. 5. In the Article of Fayth in Christ Iesu. 6 That this fayth commeth not of merites, but by the gift of Cod 7. That this fayth is our righteousnesse. 8. Touchyng the extreme word. 9. Likewise they agreed in the Arricles of Baptisme. 10. Of good workes. 11. Of cōfession. 12 Of Magistrates. 13. Of mens traditiōs. 14. Of Baptisme of infantes▪ 15. Lastly concernyng the doctrine of the Lordes Supper, this they did beleue and hold, first that both the kyndes therof are to be ministred to the people accordyng to Christes institution and that the Masse is no such worke for the which a mā may obteine grace both for the quick, and the dead. Item, that the Sacrament (which they call of the altar) is a true Sacrament of the body and bloud of the Lord. Item, that the spirituall manducation of his body and bloud is necessary for euery Christen man. And furthermore, that the vse of the Sacrament tendeth to the same effect, as doth the word, geuē and ordeyned of the almightie God, that thereby infirme consciences may be stirred to belefe, by the holy Ghost. &c. Ex Paral. Abbat. Vrsp.

In all these summes of doctrine aboue recited. Luther and Zuinglius did consent and agree. Neither were their opinions so differēt in the matter of the Lordes Supper, but that in the principall pointes they accorded. For if the question be asked of them both, what is the materiall substaunce of the Sacrament, which our outward senses doe behold and feelee: they will both confesse bread, and not the accidents onely of bread. Further if the question be asked whether Christ be there present:* they will both confesse his true presence to be there, onely in the manner of presence they differre. Agayn, aske whether the materiall substaūce layd before our eyes in the Sacrament, is to be worshypped: they will both deny it, and iudge it Idolatry. And likewise for transubstantiation, and for the sacrifice of the Masse, they both do abhorre, and do deny the same: As also the Communiō to be in both kyndes administred, they do both assent and graunt.

Onely their difference is in this, concernyng the sense and meanyng of the wordes of Christ:* Hoc est corpus meum: This is my body: &c. Which wordes Luther expoundeth to be taken nakedly and simply, as the letter stādeth, without trope or figure, and therefore holdeth the body and bloud of Christ truely to be in the bread, and wine, and so also to be receaued with the mouth. Uldricus Zuinglius, with Ioannes Oecolampadius and other moe, do interprete these wordes otherwise, as to be taken not litterally, but to haue a spirituall meanyng, & to be expounded by a trope or figure, so that the sense of these wordes: This is my body, is thus to be expōūded: this signifieth my body and bloud. Ex Ioan. Sled. Lib. 5. With Luther cōsented the Saxōs.* With the other side of Zuinglius, went the Heluetians. And as tyme did grow, so the diuision of these opinions increased in sides, & spread in farther Realmes and countreys: the one part beyng called of Luther Lutheriās,* the other hauyng y^e name of Sacramentaries. Notwithstādyng in this one vnitie of opinion, both the Lutherians, & Sacramentaries do accorde & agree,* that the bread & wine there present is not trāsubstantiate into the body & bloud of Christ (as is sayd) but is a true Sacrament of the body & bloud.

But hereof sufficient, touchyng this diuision betwene the Lutherans and Zuinglians. In which diuisiō, if there haue bene any defect in Martin Luther: yet is that no cause why either the Papistes may greatly triūph, or why the Protestantes should despise Luther. For neither is the doctrine of Luther touchyng the Sacramēt, so grosse that it maketh much with the Papistes: nor yet so discrepaunt frō vs, that therfore he ought to be exploded. And though a full reconciliation of this difference cā not well be made (as some haue gone about to do) yet let vs geue to Luther a moderate interpretation, & if we will not make thinges better, yet let vs not make them worse thē they be,* & let vs beare, if not with the maner, yet at least with the tyme of his teachyng: and finally let it not be noted in vs, that we should seeme to differre in Charitie more (as Bucer sayd) then we do in doctrine. But of this hereafter more (Christ willyng) when we come to the history of Iohn Frith.

They which write the lyfe of Saintes, vse to describe and to extoll their holy lyfe & godly vertues, and also to set forth such miracles as be wrought in them by God: Wherof there lacketh no plenty in Martin Luther, but rather time lacketh to vs and oportunitie to tary vpon them, hauyng such hast to other things. Otherwise what a miracle might this seeme to be, for one man, & a poore Frier, creepyng out of a blynd cloyster, to be set vp agaynst the Pope, Page 864 the vniuersall Bishop and Gods mighty Uicare in earth: to withstand all his Cardinals: yea and to susteine the malice and hatred almost of the whole worlde, being set against him: and to worke that against the said Pope, Cardinals and Church of Rome,* which no King nor Emperour could euer do, yea durst neuer attempt, nor all the learned men before him, could euer compasse. Which miraculous worke of God, I recount nothing inferiour to the miracle of Daud ouerthrowing great Goliath. Wherfore if miracles do make a Saint (after the Popes definition) what lacketh in Martin Luther but age and tyme only to make him a Saint? who standing openly against the Pope, Cardinals, and prelates of the Church, in number so many, in power so terrible, in practise so craftie, hauing Emperours, and all the Kings of the earth against him, who teaching and preaching Christ the space of nine and twenty yeares, could without touch of all his enemies so quietly in his owne countrey, where he was borne, die and sleepe in peace.* In the which Martin Luther, first to stand against the Pope, was a great miracle: to preuaile against the Pope, a greater: so to die vntouched, may seme greatest of all, especially hauing so many enemies as he had. Againe, neither is it any thing lesse miraculous, to consider what manifold dangers he escaped besides, as when a certeine Iewe was appointed to come to destroy him by poison, yet was it so the will of God, that Luther had warning thereof before, and the face of the Iewe sent to him by picture, whereby he knew him, and auoided the perill.

Another time as he was sitting in a certaine place vpon his stoole,* a great stone there was in the vault, ouer hys head where he did sit, which being stayd miraculously, so long as he was sitting, as soone as he was vp, immediatly fell vpon the place where he sate, able to haue crushed him all in peeces if it had light vpon him.

And what should I speake of his praiers, which were so ardent vnto Christ, that (as Melancthon writeth) they which stooode vnder his windowe, where he stood prayeng, might see his teares falling and dropping downe. Againe, with such power he prayed, that he (as himselfe confessest) had obtained of the Lord, that so long as he liued, the Pope should not preuaile in his countrey: after his death (sayd he) let them pray who could.

And as touching the maruelous workes of the Lorde, wrought heere by men, if it be true which is credibly reported by the learned, what miracle can be more miraculous, then that whiche is declared of a yong man aboute Wittenberge, who being kept bare and needy by his father, was tempted by way of sorcery, to bargaine with the Diuell, or a familiare (as they call him) to yeeld hymselfe body and soule into the Diuels power, vpon condition to haue his wish satisfied with money: So that vpon the same, an obligation was made by the yong man, written with his owne bloud, and geuen to the Diuell. This case you see, how horrible it was, and how damnable: now heare what followed. Upon the sodeine wealth and alteration of this yong man, the matter first being noted, began afterward more & more, to be suspected, and at length, after long and great admiration, was brought vnto Martin Luther, to be examined. The yong man, whether for shame or feare, long denied to confesse, and woulde bee knowne of nothing. Yet God so wrought, being stronger then the Diuell, that he vttered vnto Luther the whole substance of the case, as well touching the money, as the obligation. Luther vnderstanding the matter, and pitiing the lamentable state of the man, willed the whole congregation to pray: and he himselfe ceased not with hys praiers to labour, so that the Diuell was compelled at the last to throw in his obligation at the window, and bade him take it againe vnto him. Which narration, if it be so true as certainly it is of him reported, I see not the contrary, but that this may well seeme comparable wyth the greatest miracle in Christes Church, that was since the Apostles time.

Furthermore, as he was mighty in his prayers: so in his Sermons God gaue him such a grace, that when hee preached, they which heard him, thought euery one hys owne temptations seuerally to be noted and touched. Whereof, when signification was geuen vnto him by hys frends, and he demaunded how that could be: mine owne manifold temptations (said he) and experiences are the cause thereof.* For this thou must vnderstand (good reader) that Luther, from his tender yeares, was much beaten and exercised with spirituall conflicts, as Melancthon in describing of his life, doth testifie. Also Hieronymus Wellerus, scholer and disciple of the sayd Martin Luther, recordeth, that he oftentimes heard Luther his maister thus reporte of himselfe: that he had bene assaulted and vexed with all kindes of temptations, sauing onely one,* which was, with couetousnes. With this vice he was neuer (said he) in all his life troubled, nor once tempted. And hetherto concerning the life of Martin Luther: who liued to the yeare of his age 63. He continued writing and preachyng, about 29. yeares. As touching the order of his death, the words of Melancthon be these.

In the yeare of our Lord 1546. and the 17. of February, Doctour Martin Luther sickened a little before supper, of his accustomed maladie, to wyt, of the oppression of humours in the orifice or opening of his stomacke, whereof I remember I haue seene him oft diseased in this place.* This sickenes tooke him after supper, with the which he vehemently contending, required secesse into a bye chamber, and there he rested on his bed two houres, all whych time his paynes encreased. And as Doctor Ionas was lieng in his chamber, Luther awaked, and praied him to rise, and to call vp Ambrose his childrens scholemaister, to make fire in another chamber. Into the which, when he was newly entred, Albert Earle of Mansfield,* with hys wife and diuers other (whose names in these letters for haste, were not expressed) at that instant came into hys chamber. Finally, feeling his fatall houre to approche, before nine of the clocke in y^e morning, the xviii. of February, he cōmended himselfe to God, with this deuour praier.

¶The Prayer of Luther at his death.

MY heauenly father, eternall and mercifull God, thou hast manifested vnto me thy deare sonne, our Lorde Iesus Christ.* I haue taught him, I haue knowne him, I loue him as my life, my health, and my redemption▪ whome the wicked haue persecuted, maligned, and with iniurie afflicted. Draw my soule to thee. After this, he sayd as ensueth, thryse.

I commend my spirit into thy hands, thou hast redeemed me, O God of truth. GOD so loued the world, that he gaue his only sonne, that all those that beleue in him, shoulde haue life euerlasting. Iohn. iij▪

Hauiug repeated oftentimes his prayers, he was called to God, vnto whome so faithfully he commended his spirit, to enioy, no doubt, the blessed societie of the Patriarks, Prophets, and Apostles in the kingdome of God the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. Let vs now loue the memory of this man, and the doctrine that he hath taught. Let vs learne to be modest and meeke. Let vs consider the wretched calamities, and marueilous chaunges that shall follow this mishap and dolefull chance. I beseech thee, O sonne of God, crucified for vs, and resuscitated Emanuell, gouerne, cōserue and defend thy Church. Haec Melancthon.

Fridericus Prince Electour died long before Luther, in the yeare of our Lord 1525. leauing no issue behind him,* for that he liued a single life, and was neuer married: wherfore after him succeeded Iohn Fridericke, D. of Saxony.

Mention was made a little before, page 859. of the Ministers of Strausburgh, which because of their Mariage,* were in trouble and cited by the Bishop, to appeare before him, and thereto be iudged without the precinct of the Citie of Strausburgh: wheras there had bene a contrary order taken before betweene the Bishop, and the Citie, that the Bishop should execute no iudgement vpon any, but vnder some of the Magistrates of the said City of Strausburgh. Whereupon the Senate and Citizens taking into their hands the cause of these married Ministers, in defence of their owne right and liberties, wrote (as is sayd) to their Byshop of Strausburgh, and caused the iudgement thereof a while to be stayed. By reason whereof the matter was brought at lēgh, before Cardinall Campeius Legate, sent by Pope Clemēt to the assemble of Norenberge, an. 1524.

The chiefe doer in this matter was one Thomas Murnerus, a Franciscane Frier, who had commenced a grieuous complaint against the Senate and Citie of Strausburgh, before the foresayde Cardinall Campeius.* Wherefore the Senate, to purge themselues, sent their Ambassadors, thus clearing their cause, and aunswering to theyr accusation: That they neither had bene, nor would be any let to the Byshop, but had signified to him before by theyr letters, that whatsoeuer he could lay against those married Priests, consonant to the lawe of God, they woulde be no stay, but rather a furtherance vnto him, to proceede in hys action. But the Senate heerein was not a little greeued, that the Bishop, contrary to the order and compact, which was taken betweene him and them, did call the sayde Ministers out of the liberties of their Citie: For so it was betweene them agreed, that no Ecclesiasticall person should Page 865 be adiudged, but vnder some iudge of their owne Citie. But now contrary to the said agreement, the Bishop called those Ministers out of their liberties,* and so the Ministers claiming the right and priuiledge of the Citie, were condemned, their cause being neither heard nor knowne. And now if the Senate should shew themselues any thing more sharpe or rigorous vnto those Ministers, in claiming the right of the Citie, the people; no doubt, woulde not take it well, but happely woulde rise vp in some commotion against them, in the quarell and defence of their fraunchises and liberties.

And where it is obiected, that they receaue Priests and men of the Clergy, into the fredome and protection of their Citie, to this they answered, that they did nothing herein, but which was correspondent to the auncient vsage and maner of the Citie before: and moreouer, that it was the Byshops owne request & desire, made vnto them so to do.

To this the Cardinall againe aduising well the letters of the Bishop,* & the whole order of the matter, which was sent vnto him, declared that he right wel vnderstood by the letters sent, that the Ministers in deede (as the Ambassadors sayd) were called out from the freedome, & liberties of the Citie, and yet no order of law was broken therein: for as much as the Bishop (said he) had there no lesse power and authoritie, then if he were his owne Uicare delegate, and therefore he desired them, that they woulde assist the Bishop in punishing the foresayd Ministers, &c.

After much other talke and reasoning on both partes, wherein the Ambassadors argued in defence of their freedome, that the iudgement should not be transferred out of the Citie: among other cōmunication, they inferred moreouer and declared, how in the Citie of Strausburgh were many, yea the most part of the Cleargy, which liued viciously and wickedly with their strumpets & harlots, whom they kept in their houses,* to the great offence of the people, shame to Christes Church, and pernitiuous example of other: and yet the Bishop would neuer once stirre to see any punishing or correction thereof. Wherefore if the Senate (said the Ambassadors) should permit the Bishop to extend his crueltie and extremitie against these married Ministers, for not obseruing the Bishop of Roomes law, and leaue the other notorious whoremaisters, whiche brake the law of God, to escape vnpunished, doubtles it would redound to their great danger and perill, not onely before God, but also among the commons of their Citie, readie to rise vpon them.

To this Campeius aunswered, what composition or bargaine was betwixt the Bishop and thē,* he knew not: but surely the Acte of the one was manifest, and needed no great triall in law of prouing and confessing, and therefore they were sequestred and abandoned from the communion of the Church, ipso facto. As for the other sorte of them, which keepe harlots and concubines

although (said he) it be not well done: yet doth it not excuse the enormitie of their Mariage. Neither was he ignorant, but that it was the maner of the Bishops of Germany, for money to winke at Priests lemans, and the same also was euil done in deede: and farther, that the time should come, when they shall be called to an accompt for the same: but yet neuerthelesse it is not sufferable that Priestes therefore shoulde haue wiues. And if comparison should be made (sayd he) much greater offence it were, a Priest to haue a wife, then to haue and keepe at home many harlots. His reason was this: For they that keepe harlots (sayd he) as it is naught that they do, so do they acknowledge their sinne: the other perswade themselues to do well, and so continue stil without repentance, or conscience of their fact. All men (said he) can not be chaste, as Iohn Baptist was: yet can it not be proued by any example, to be lawfull for Priests professing chastitie, to leaue their single life, and to marrie: no not the Greekes themselues, which in rites be differing from vs, do geue this libertie to their owne Priestes to marry: wherefore he prayed them to geue their ayde to the Bishop in this behalfe.

Whereunto the Ambassadors replied againe, sayeng, that if he would first punish the whoremasters, then might the Senate assist him the better in correcting the other. But the Cardinall was still instaunt vpon them, that first they shoulde assist their Bishop, and then if the Bishop woulde not punish whoredome, he woulde come thyther himselfe, and see them punished accordingly.

This Cardinall Campeius, how he was sent by Pope Clement the sixt, to the second assemble or diet of Norenberge, ann. 1524. and what was there done by the sayde Cardinall, is before signified, page 862. After this Councell of Norenberge, immediately followed another sitting at Ratisbone, where were present Ferdinandus, Campeius, the Cardinall of Salisburge, the two Dukes of Bauaria, the Byshops of Trêt and Ratisbone: also the Legates of the Byshops, Bamberge, Spire, Strausburgh, Ausburgh, Constance, Basill, Frising, Passame, and Brixine. By whom in the sayd assemble was concluded: That for somuch as the Emperour, at the request of Pope Leo, had condemned by his publicke Edict set forth at Wormes, the doctrine of Luther, for erroneous and wicked, and also it was agreed vpon in both the assembles of Noremberge, that the sayd Edict should be obeyed of all men: they likewise at the request of Cardinall Campeius, do will, and commaund the foresayd Edict to be obserued through all their fines and precinctes: That the Gospell, and all other holy Scriptures in Churches should be taught accordyng to the interpretation of the auncient forefathers: That all they which reuiue any old heresies before condēned, or teach any new thyng contumelious, either against Christ, his blessed mother, and holy Saintes, or which may breede any occasion of sedition, the same to be punished accordyng to the tenour of the Edict aboue sayd: That none be admitted to preach without the licence of his ordinary: That they which be already admitted, shall be examined how, and what they preach: that the lawes which Campeius is about to set forth for reformation of maners, shalbe obserued: That in the Sacraments, in the Masse, and all other thynges, there shalbe no innouation, but all thynges to stand, as in foretyme they did: That all they which approach to the Lordes Supper without cōfession and absolution, or do eate flesh on dayes forbidden, or which do runne out of their order: also Priestes, Deacons, and Subdeacons, that be married, shal be punished: That nothyng shall be Printed without cōsent of the Magistrate: That no booke of Luther, or any Lutheran shall be Printed or sold: That they of their iurisdictiō which study in the Vniuersitie of Wittēberge, shall euery one repayre home within three monethes after the publishyng hereof, or els turne to some other place free frō the infectiō of Luther, vnder payne of cōfiscating all their goodes, and loosing their inheritaunce: That no benefice, nor other office of teachyng, be geuē to any student of that Vniuersitie. Item, that certaine Inquisitours fit for the same, be appointed to inquire and examine the premisses: Item, least it may be sayd that this faction of Luther taketh his origine of the corrupt lyfe of Priestes, the sayd Campeius, with other his assisters in the sayd conuocation of Ratisbone, chargeth and commaundeth, that Priestes liue honestly, goe in decent apparell, play not the marchauntes, haunt not the tauernes, be not couetous, nor take money for their ministration: Such as keepe concubines to be remoued: The nūber also of holy dayes to be diminished. &c.

These thynges would Campeius haue had enacted in a full Councell & with the cōsentes of all the Empire: but when he could not bryng that to passe,* by reason that the myndes of diuers were gone frō the Pope, he was fayne therfore to get the same ratified in this particular conuenticle, with the assentes of these Byshops aboue rehearsed.

These thynges thus hetherto discoursed, whiche fully may be sene in the Cōmentaries of Ioh. Sledan, it remaineth next after the story of Martin Luther, somewhat to adioyne likewise touchyng the history of Zuinglius & of the Heluetiās. But before I come to the explicatiō of this story it shal not be incōueniēt, first to geue some litle touch of the townes called pages, of these Heluetians, & of their league and confederation first begon amongst them.

¶The history of the Heluetians or Suitzers, how first they recouered their libertie, and after were ioyned in league together.

The Heluetiās, whom otherwise we call Suitzers,* are deuided principally into xiiij. pages. The names of whō are, Tigurini, Bernates, Lucernates, Urani, Suicenses, Unterualdij, Tugiani, Glareanti, Basiliēses, Solodurij, Friburgij, Scafusiani, Apecellēses. Furthermore, to these be added vij. other Pages, albeit not with such a full bond, as the other, be together conioyned: whiche be these, Rheti, Lepontij, Seduni, Ueragri, Sangalli, Mullusiani, Rotulenses. Of these xiiij. confederate Pages aboue recited, these three were the first, to witte, Urania, Suicenses, and Siluanij (or as some call them Unterualdij) which ioyned themselues together.

If credite should be geuen to old narrations, these iij. pages * or valleyes first suffered great seruitude & thraldome vnder cruell rulers or gouernours: In so much that the gouernour of Siluania * required of one of the inhabitaūtes, a yoke of his Oxen: which when the townes man denyed to geue him, the ruler sent his seruaunt by force to take his Oxen frō him. This whē the seruaūt was about to do, cōmeth the poore mans sonne, & cutteth of one of his fingers, & vpō the same auoyded. The gouernour hearing this, taketh the poore man, and putteth out his eyes.

Page 866 Another time in the sayd Syluania, as the good man of the house was absent abroad,* the gouernour which had then the rule of the towne, entring into the house, cōmandeth the wife to prepare for him a bath, and to let him haue his pleasure of her. Wherunto she being vnwilling, differred the bathe as long as she might, till the returne of her husband.* To whome then she making her complaynt, so moued his mind, that he with his axe or hatchet which he had in his hand, flew vpō the adulterous ruler & slue him.

Another example of like violence is reported of the ruler of Suicia,* and Siluania, who surprised with like pride and disdaine against the poore vnderlings, caused his cap to be hanged vp vpon a pole, charging and commanding by his seruant, all that passed by, to do obeysance to the cap. Which,* when one, named William Tell, refused to do, the tiraunt caused his sonne to be tied, with an apple set vpon his head, and the father with a crossebow, or a like instrument, to shoote at the apple. After long refusing, whē the wofull father could not otherwise choose, by force constrained, but must leauill at the apple, as God would, he mist the child, and stroke the marke. This Tell, being thus compelled by the tirant to shoote at his sonne, had brought with him two shaftes, thinking that if he had stroke the child with the one, the other he would haue let driue at the tyraunt. Which being vnderstand, he was apprehended, and led to the rulers house: but by the way escaping out of the boate, betweene Urania and Brun, and passing thorough the mountaines with as much speede as he might,* he lay in the way secretly as the ruler should passe, where he discharged his arow at the tyraunt, and slue him.

And thus were these cruell gouernours vtterly expelled out of these three valleyes or pages aforesayd, and after that, such order was taken by the Emperour Henricus 7. and also by the Emperours Ludouicus duke of Bauaria, that henceforth no iudge should be set ouer them, but only of their owne companie,* and towne dwellers. Ex Seb. Munst. Cosmog. lib. 3.

It folowed after this, in the yeare of our Lord 1315. that great contention and war fell betweene Fridericke Duke of Austria, and Ludouicke Duke of Bauaria, striuing and fighting the space of eight yeares together about the Empire. With Ludouicus held the three pages aforesayd: who had diuers conflicts with Lupoldus, brother to the forenamed Fridericke Duke of Austria, fighting in his brothers quarell. As Lupoldus had reared a mighty army of twenty thousand footemen and horsemen, and was come to Egree, so to passe ouer the mountaines to subdue the pages: he began to take aduise of his counsaile, by what way or passage best he might direct his iourney toward the Suitzers. Whereupon, as they were busy in consulting, there stode a foole by (named Kune de Stocken) which hearing their aduise,* thought also to shoote his bolt withall, and told them that their counsaile did not like him. For all you (quoth he) consult how we should enter into yonder countrey: but none of you geueth any counsaile how to come out againe, after we be entred. And in conclusion, as the foole said, so they found it true. For when Lupoldus, with his hoste had entred into the straites and valleys betweene the rockes and mountaines, the Suitzers wyth their neighbours of Urania, and Siluania, lieng in priuie waite, had thē at such aduantage, & with tumbling downe stones from the rockes, and sodeine comming vpon theyr backes in blinde lanes, did so encomber them, that neither they had conuenient standing to fight, nor roome almost to flie away. By reason whereof, a great part of Lupoldus army there being enclosed about y^e place called Morgartē, lost their liues, & many in the flight were slaine. Lupoldus with thē that remained, retired and escaped to Thurgoia. This battaile was fought, anno. 1315. Nouember 16.

After this, the burgers of these three villages, being continually vexed by Fridericke Duke of Austria,* for that they would not knowledge him for Emperour, assembled them selues in the towne of Urania, an. 1316. and there entred a mutuall league and bond of perpetuall societie and coniunction, ioining and swearing themselues, as in one bodie of a common wealth, and publike administration, together. After that came to them Lucernates, then Tugiani, after them the Tigurines, next to them folowed Bernates, the last almost of all, were the Basilians, then followed after, the other seauen pages aboue recited.

And thus haue ye the names, the freedome, and confederatiō of these Suitz•rs, or Cantons or pages of Heluetia, with the occasions & circumstāces therof briefly expressed. Now to the purpose of our story intended, which is to declare the successe of Christes Gospel and true Religion receaued amōg these Heluetians: also touching the life & doctrine of Zuinglius, & order of his death, as heere insueth.

¶The actes and life of Zuinglius, and of receauing the Gospell in Zuitzerland.

IN the tractation of Luthers story, mention was made before of Uldricus Zuinglius,* who first abiding at Glarona, in a place called then our Lords Ermitage, from thence remoued to Zuricke, about the yeare of our Lorde 1519. and there began to teach, dwelling in the Minster among the Canons or Priestes of that close, vsing with them, the same rites and ceremonies during the space of ij. or iij. yeares, where he continued reading and explaining the Scriptures vnto the people with great trauaile,* and no lesse dexteritie. And because Pope Leo, the same yeare, had renued his pardons againe through all countreys (as is aboue declared) Zuinglius zelously withstood the same, detecting the abuses thereof by the Scriptures, and of other corruptions reigning then in the Church, and so continued by the space of two yeares and more, till at length Hugo Bishop of Constance (to whose iurisdiction Zuricke then also did belong) hearing thereof,* wrote his letters to the Senate of the said Citie of Zuricke,* complayning greeuously of Zuinglius, who also wrote another letter to the colledge of Canons, where Zuinglius was the same time dwelling, complaining likewise of such new teachers, which troubled the Church, and exhorted them earnestly, to beware and to take diligent heede to themselues. And forsomuch as both the Pope and the Emperours Maiestie had condemned all such new doctrine by their decrees and Edicts, he willed them therefore to admit no such new innouations of doctrine, without the cōmon consent of them, to whome the same did appertayne. Zuinglius hearing therof, referreth his cause to the iudgemēt and hearing of the Senate, not refusing to render vnto them accompt of his faith. And forsomuch as the Byshops letter was read openly in the colledge, Zuinglius directeth another letter to the Bishop againe, declaring that the sayd letter proceeded not frō the Bishop, nor that he was ignoraunt who were the authors thereof, desiring him not to follow their sinister counsailes, for that truth (said he) is a thing inuincible, and can not be resisted. After the same tenour, certaine other of the Citie likewise wrote vnto the Bishop, desiring him that he would attempt nothing, that should be preiudiciall to the libertie and free course of the Gospell: requiring moreouer, that he would forbear no longer the filthie and infamous life of priests, but that he woulde permit them to haue theyr lawfull wiues, &c. This was in the yeare of our Lord 1522.

Besides this,* Zuinglius wrote also another letter to the whose nation of the Heluetians, monishing them, in no case to hinder the passage of sincere doctrine, nor to inferre any molestation to Priests that were married. For as for the vowe and coaction of their single life, it came (sayd he) of the diuell, and a diuelish thing it is. And therefore,* whereas the said Heluetians had such a rite and custome in their townes and pages, that when they receiued anie new Priest into their Churches,* they vsed to premonish him before to take his concubine, least he should attempt any misuse with their wiues and daughters: he exhorted them that they would no lesse graunt vnto them to take their wiues in honest matrimonie, then to take concubines and harlots, against the precept of God.

Thus as Zuinglius continued certaine yeares,* labouring in the word of the Lord, offence began to rise at thys new doctrine, and diuers stept vp, namely the Dominicke Friers on the contrary side, to preach & inuey against him. But he keping himselfe euer within the Scriptures, protested that he would make good by the word of God, that which he had taught. Upon this the Magistrates and Senate of Zuricke, sent forth their cōmandemēt to all priests and ministers within their dominion, to repaire to the citie of Zuricke,* against the xxix. day of Ianuary next ensuing (this was anno. 1523.) there euery one to speake freely, and to be heard quietly, touching these controuersies of religion, what could be said, directing also their letters to the Bishop of Cōstance, that he would either make his repaire thether himselfe, or else to send his deputie. When the day appointed came, and the Bishops vicegerent, which was Ioannes Faber, was also present:* the Consull first declaring the cause of this their frequencie and assemble (which was for the dissention newly risen about matters of Religion) required, that if any there had to object, or inferre against the doctrine of Zuinglius, he should freely and quietly vtter and declare his minde.

Zuinglius had disposed his matter before,* and cōtriued al his doctrine in a certaine order of places, to y^e number of lxxvij. Articles: which articles he had published also abroad before, to the ende that they which were disposed, might Page 867 resort thether better prepared to the disputation. Whē the Consull had finished that which he would say, and had exhorted other to begin: then Faber first entring the matter, begā to declare the cause of his sending thether, and afterward wold perswade, that this was no place conuenient, nor time fit for discussing of such matter by disputation,* but rather that the cognition and tractation thereof belonged to a generall Councell, which he saide, was already appointed, and now neere at hand. Notwithstāding, Zuinglius still continued vrging and requiring him, that if he had there any thing to say, or to dispute, he would openly and freely vtter his minde. To this he aunswered againe, that he would cōfute his doctrine by writing. This done, with a few other words on both sides had to and fro, whē no man would appeare,* there to offer any disputation, the assemble brake and was discharged. Whereupon the Senate of Zuricke incōtinēt caused to be proclaimed through all their dominion and territorie, that the traditions of men should be displaced and abandoned, and the Gospell of Christ purely taught out of the old and new Testament an. 1523. Ex Ioan. Sled. lib. 3.

When the Gospell thus began to take place, and to florish in Zuricke and certaine other places of Heluetia, the yeare next following, ann. 1524. another assemble of the Heluetians was conuened at Lucerna, where this decree was made on the contrary part: That no man should deride or contemne the word of God, which had bene taught now aboue a thousand & four hūdreth yeares heretofore: nor the Masse to be scorned, wherein the body of Christ is consecrated, to the honour of God, and to the cōfort both of the quicke, & the dead.

That they which are able to receiue the Lords body at Easter, shall confesse their sinnes in Lent to the Priest, and do all other things, as the vse and maner of the Church requireth.

That the rites and customes of holy Church be kept.

That euery one obey his owne proper pastor and curate, and to receaue the Sacramēts of him, after the maner of holy Church, and to pay him his yearely duties.

That honour be geuen to Priests.

*Item, to absteine from flesheating on fasting dayes, and in Lent to absteine from egges and cheese.

That no opinion of Luther be taught priuely or apertly, contrary to the receaued determination of holy Church, and that in tauernes and at table, no mention be made of Luther, or any new doctrine.

That Images and pictures of Sainctes in euery place be kepte inuiolate.

That Priests and Ministers of the Church be not compelled to render accompt of their doctrine, but only to the Magistrate.

That due ayde and supportation be prouided for them, if anie commotion do happen.

That no person deride the reliques of the holy spirit, or of our Lady, or of Saint Anthony.

Finally, that all the lawes and decrees set foorth by the Byshop of Constance, be obserued.

These constitutions whosoever shall transgresse, let them be presented to the Magistrate, and ouerseers be set ouer them that shall so transgresse.

After these things concluded thus at Lucerna, the Cantons of Heluetia together direct their publicke letter to the Tygurines or men of Zuricke,* wherein they do much lament and complaine of this new broched doctrine whych hath set all men together by the eares, through the occasion of certaine rash and newfangled heads, which haue greatly disturbed both the state of the Church, and of the common wealth, and haue scattered the seedes of discorde: whereas before time, all things were well in quiet. And although this sore (sayd they) ought to haue bene looked to by time, so that they should not haue suffered the glory of Almighty God, and of the blessed Uirgine and other Saints so be dishonored, but rather should haue bestowed their goodes and liues to mainteine the same: yet notwithstanding they required them now to looke vpon the matter: which otherwise would bring to them destruction both of body and soule: as for example, they might see the doctrine of Luther, what fruit it brought. The rude and vulgare people now (sayde they) coulde not be holden in, but woulde burst foorth to all licence and rebellion, as hath appeared by sufficient proofes alate: and like is to be feared also among themselues, and all by the occasion of Zuinglius, and of Leo Iuda, which so take vpon them to expound the word of God,* after their owne interpretation, opening thereby whole doores and windowes to discord and dissention. Albeit of their doctrine they were not certaine what they did teach: yet what inconuenience folowed vpon their doctrine, they had to much experiēced. For now all fasting was layd downe, and all daies were alike to eate both flesh & egges, as well one as an other: Priests & religious persons both mē & women brake their vowes ranne out of their order, and fell to marying: Gods seruice was decayed, singing in the church left, and prayer ceased: Priests grewe in contēpt: Religious men were thrust out of their cloisters: Confession, and penance was neglected: so that men woulde not sticke to presume to receaue at the holy aultar, without any confession made to the Priest before. The holy masse was dirided and scorned: Our blessed Lady, and other saintes blasphemed: Images pluckte downe & broken in peeces, neither was there any honour geuen to the Sacraments. To make short, men now were growen vnto such a licence and liberty that vnneth the holy host could be safe within the Priests hands. &c.

The disorder of all which thinges, as it is of no small importaunce, so it was (sayd they) to them so greuous and lamētable, that they thought it their part to suffer the same no lōger. Neither was this the first time (they said) of thys their complaining, when in their former assemble they sent vnto them before, the like admonition wryting to them by certaine of the Clergye, and crauing their aide in the same. Which seing it is so, they did now againe earnestly cal vpō them touching the premisses, desiring them to surcease frō such doings, and to take a better way, cōtinuing in the religion of their old aunceters, which were before them. And if there were any such thing, wherein they were greeued & offended against the Bishop of Rome, the Cardinals, Bishops, or other Prelates, either for their ambition, in heaping, exchanging, and selling the dignities of the Church, or for their oppressiō in pilling mens purses with their indulgences, or els for their vsurped iurisdiction, and power which they extend too farre, & corruptly apply it to matters externe & politicall, which onely ought to serue in such cases as be spirituall: if these and such other abuses were the causes, wherewith they were so greeuously offended, they promised that for the correction & reformation therof, they would also themselues ioyne their diligence and good will thereto, for somuch as themselues also did not a litle mislike therewith, & therefore would conferre their counsailes together with them, how & by which way, such greuaunces might best be remoued.

To this effect were the letters of the Heluetiās written to the Senate & Citizens of Zuricke. Whereunto the Tigurines made their aunswere agayne, the xxi. day of March, the same yeare, in maner as here foloweth.

¶An answere agayne of the Tygurines to the Letter aforesayd.

First, * declaring how their Ministers had laboured and trauailed amongst them, teachyng and preachyng the word of God vnto thē the space now of v. yeares. Whose doctrine at the first, seemed to them very straunge and nouelle, because they neuer heard the same before. But after that they vnderstoode and perceiued, the * scope of that doctrine onely to tende to this, to set forth Christ Iesus vnto vs to be the pillar and refuge of all our saluation, whiche gaue his life and bloud for our redemption and which onely deliuered vs also sinnefull misers from eternall death, and is the onely Aduocate of mankynde before God: they could no otherwise do, but with ardent affection receaue so wholesome and ioyfull message.

The holy Apostles, and faythfull Christiās, after they had receaued the Gospell of Christ, did not fall out by and by in debate and variunce, but louyngly agreed and consented together: and so they trusted (sayd they) that they should doe, if they would likewise receaue the worde of God, setting aside mens doctrines and traditions dissonant from the same.

Whatsoever Luther, or any other mā doth teach, whether it be right or wrong, it is not for the names of the persons, why the doctrine whiche they teach should be either euill or well iudged vpon, but onely for that it agreeth or disagreeeth from the rule of Gods word: for that were but to goe by affection, and were preiudiciall to the authoritie of the word of God: which ought to rule man, and not to be measured by man.

And if Christ onely be worshipped, and mē taught, soly to repose their confidence in him, yet neither doth the blessed Uirgine, nor any Saint elles receaue any iniurie thereby, who beyng here in earth receiued their saluation onely by the name of hym.

And where as they charge their Ministers with wrastyng the Scripture after their owne interpretation, God had styrred vp such light now in the hartes of mē, that the most part of their Citie, haue the Bible in their hand, and diligently peruse the same: so that their Preachers cā not Page 868 so winde the Scriptures awry, but they shall quickly be perceaured.* Wherefore there is no danger, why they should feare any sectes, or factions in them: but rather such sectes are to be objected to those, who for their gaine and dignitie, wrast the word of God after their owne affections and appetites.

And where as they and other haue accused them of errour,* yet was there neuer man, that could proue any errour in them: Although diuers Byshops of Constance, of Basill, of Curiake, with diuers Uniuersities besides: also they themselues, haue bene sundry times desired so to do, yet to this present day, neither they, nor euer any other so did, neither were they, nor any of all the foresayd Bishops, at their last assemble, being requested to come, so gentle to repaire vnto them, saue only the Schashusians, and Sangallians. In the which foresayd assemble of theirs, all such as were then present, considering throughly the whole case of the matter, condescended together with them.

And if the Byshops happely will object againe and say: that the worde of God ought not so to be handled of the vulgare people: they aunswered the same not to stand with equitie and reason. For albeit it did belong to the Bishops office, to prouide that the sheepe should not go astray, and most conuenient it were, that by them they should be reduced into the way againe:* yet because they will not see to theyr charge, but leaue it vndone, referring all things to the fathers, and to Councels, therefore right and reason it is, that they themselues should heare and learne, not what man doth determine, but what Christ himselfe doth commaund in his Scripture. Neither haue their Ministers geuen any occasion of this diuision, but rather it is to be imputed to such, which for their owne priuate lucre and preferments, contrary to the word of the Lord, do seduce the people into errour, and greuously offending God, do prouoke him to plague them with manifolde calamities. Who, if they would renounce the greedines of their owne gaine, and would folow the pure doctrine of his word, seeking not the will of man, but what is the will of God, no doubt but they should soone fall to agreement.

* As for the eating of flesh and egges, although it bee free to all men, and forbidden to none by Christe: yet they haue set forth a lawe, to restreine rash intemperance, and vncharitable offense of other.

And as touching matrimonie, God is himselfe the author thereof, who hath left it free for all men. Also Paule willeth a Minister of the Church to be the husband of one wife.

And seeing that Byshops for money permitte theyr Priestes to haue concubines, which is contrary both to Gods law, and to good example: why then might not they as well obey God in permitting lawfull matrimony, which he hath ordeined, as they to resist God in forbidding the same? The like is to be said also of women vowing chastitie: of whome this they iudge and suppose, that such kind of vowes and coacted chastitie, are not auaylable nor allowed before God: and seeing that chastitie is not all mens gift, better it were to marrie (after their iudgemēts) then filthely to liue in single life.

As for Monasteries, and other houses of Canons, they were first geuen for reliefe onely of the poore and needie,* where as now they which inhabite them, are wealthy and able to liue of their owne patrimonie, in such sort, as manie times some one of them hath so much, as well might suffice a great number: Wherefore it seemeth to them, not vnconuenient that those goodes should be conuerted agayne to the vse of the poore: Yet neuerthelesse they haue vsed heerein such moderation,* that they haue permitted the inhabitants of those monasteries to enioy the possessions of their goodes, during the tearme of their naturall life, least any should haue cause of iust complaint.

Ornamentes of Churches serue nothing to Gods service: but this is well agreeing to the will and service of God,* that the poore should be succoured. So Christ commaunded the yong man in the Gospell, that was rich, not to hang vp his riches in the temple, but to sell them, and distribute them to the needy.

The order of priesthode they do not contemne. Suche priests as will truly discharge their dutie,* & teach soundly, they do magnifie. As for the other rable, which serue to no publike cōmoditie, but rather damnifie the cōmon wealth, if the number of them were diminished by little and little, & their liuings put to better vse, they doubted not, but it wer a seruice well done to God. Now whether the singing and praiers of such Priests be auaylable before God, it may be doubted, for as much as many of thē vnderstād not what they say or sing, but onely for hyre of wages do the same.
